years ago. Disher reveals that Robey spent part of his childhood near Birkenhead, England. His father was the engineer who supervised the laying of some of the London lines for "horse-drawn trams"—which Americans used to call "horse cars," in the days that preceded electrically operated street vehicles. The family went to Dresden, Germany, probably because of some of the elder Robey's engineering engagements, and George Edward prepared to become a doctor of science. Before that happened the family returned to England and George became a Cambridge undergraduate, then followed his father's example as an engineer and laid out the tram-line in the City of Birmingham. He was an accomplished mandolin player and he and a friend gave mandolin and guitar duets at charity concerts. He then met Kennedy the hypnotist at the Aquarium Music Hall, on the site of which Central Hall was afterward erected, opposite Westminster Abbey. Robey talked Kennedy into engaging him as his assistant, with the understanding that he would be used as a "horse"—that is, a pretended victim of mesmerism. Robey himself afterwards recalled:

"At a certain point in the program the mesmerist glared at me, projected his arms, and executed a few rapid passes. Like a person in a dream I rose. My face slipped, my eyes grew vacant. Then, apparently obeying his command, I groped my way up to the stage amid a general hush that could be felt. The other 'subjects' on the stage—old hands at the game—looked on with interest. I walked up to the platform, closed my eyes, and waited. He began to make 'passes' over me. 'Don't forget,' I whispered to him through lips almost closed like a ventriloquist's. 'I am a comic singer!' I heard him breath deeply. Then he exclaimed in a loud voice. 'Young man, you are now under my power. You will do whatever I tell you. You are a comic singer.'"

Robey went on to recall that everybody laughed when he sang "A Little Peach in an Orchard Grew," but finally one of Kennedy's other "subjects" became jealous and kicked the "entranced" comedian over the footlights. George stood up, pretended to be hypnotized all over again, and went on with his song. Eventually, he was given a trial in an Oxford Music Hall matinee, and that resulted in his accepting a year's contract. By that time he was already wearing the enormous "property" eyebrows that later became something of a trademark, but the remainder of his costume consisted of a brown derby, a high collar, a huge pale blue necktie, a yellow vest and a vermillion coat. A little later he dressed himself as a parson to sing a comic song called "The Simple Pimple." Disher says, "There was a simper on his face, and he had a high, bald forehead, which a long lock of hair, rooted just above one ear, tried vainly to cover. That was the origin of the round-faced, impudent-eyed decollete curate, wearing a very flat hat and swishing a vertebrate cane, we see in imagination whenever we hear the words, 'Prime Minister of Mirth.'"

In addition to his familiar curate impersonation, Robey acted scores of other characters. He was especially popular as "Oliver Cromwell," when he sang a song by that name composed for him by two of the best English writers of music hall productions, A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott.

OLD TIME RECORDS

of all kinds in excellent condition. Operatic and classical, vocal and instrumental, all the Cohans, Cal Stewartis, stage stars all the way back to the 1900's. Send me your wants.

AL McREA, Sr.

Box 182

Westville, N. J.

Another brief quotation or two from "Music Hall Parade" may be appropriate:

You have seen him as the bland, self-satisfied professor of music from Germany, shaking a collar of sleigh bells, twinking a triangle, banging a drum, and carefully avoiding more difficult instruments in the formidable array set on the stage to proclaim his virtuosity. Then there is Sir Walter Raleigh, with his story of being on the shore waiting to receive Columbus when he discovered America; also the auctioneer, with his offer to the woman who wants a hen that would eat sawdust and lay firewood, of a love-bird which "eats feathers and lays down." At one time he transformed himself into Cupid and at another into Shakespeare. . . .

His zenith seemed to have been reached during the long run, lasting well over a year, of "The Bing Boys Are Here," at the Alhambra during the War. As village boys looking for life in London, he (the devilish one) and Alfred Lester (the mournful, misgiving one) were let loose in a night club where chorus girls sat on their knees, drank their champagne and went off without granting them a look or a word. Lucifer Bing's emotions were such that while a bishop and a general published protests . . . audiences shouted with laughter night after night. After raising a quarter of a million for war charities by organizing concerts and holding auctions on the stage, he joined the

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

LARGEST ASSORTMENT of all sizes and types for sale. EVERY mechanism completely overhauled and GUARANTEED. Send for free lists. EXPERT REPAIRING of all music boxes - original factory methods and materials. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. No charge for Estimates & Appraisals.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham, N. Y.

Pelham 8-1506

(Originally established in Switzerland in 1925.)

tfc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that I know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

BRASS TUNING ARM FOR MILLS VIOLANO

$10.00 EACH

FOR SALE: Mills Violanos and other types coin-operated musical instruments. ALSO, WANTED: All types of this equipment and rolls for same.

WALBOX DISTRIBUTING CO.

3909 Main St. — Dallas, Texas — Tel. Victor 1671

Jly75c

Motor Transport Volunteers. At the end of the war, the O. B. E. was conferred upon him.

For a while he tried his hand at films. Next he went into management with the revue, "Bits and Pieces," which he took on tour into the provinces, South Africa and Canada, in between seasons in the West End. We thought he was settling down in to the usual groove of successful comedians, before he took us by surprise as Sancho Panza to the Don Quixote of Chappin on the films. But this was nothing compared to the news, proclaimed by newsboys' bills all over London, of his intention to play Falstaff in "Henry IV, Part II." Great expectations filled His Majesty's Theatre in the spring of 1935, and he lived up to them . . .

Sir George married an actress whose stage name was Blanche Littler. They had a son, Edward G. Robey, who became a metropolitan magistrate in London.

III The Robey Gramophone Records

It is out of the question to give a comprehensive discussion in this sketch of George Robey's recording career. There are too many gaps in my collection of old English record catalogs to make such an achievement possible. Since his theatrical work began in 1891, it's not at all unlikely that he made wax cylinders before or shortly after 1900.

The first mention I have been able to find of a George Robey record appears in a list of Gramophone Company offerings published in the Talking Machine News for October, 1907. This is not to say he may not have sung earlier for Gramophone records, but that company didn't regularly supply T. M. N. with review copies prior to 1910, and the latest Gramophone lists were omitted more often than not. The number of the single-faced disc was 0-2104 and the title, "What Are You Looking At Me For?"

Sir George-to-be Robey was an exclusive Gramophone artist for years. The August, 1911, Talking Machine News contained a self-drawn humorous likeness of himself, similar to the one he sent me, with this commentary by the editor:

"... In the above sketch there is just a faint idea as to the comic effect this hilarious artist has upon one. The sketch is by George Robey himself, and though he is not as great an artist as he is an artiste, yet there is the making of the former in him. Mr. Robey, by the bye, adds another splendid number in the August Gramophone series. It is an exceedingly humorous piece entitled 'It's a Very Deserving Case.' His wicked humor is unbeatable, and it makes our sides ache so with laughing that afterwards—not that we want to take up another deserving or undeserving case—we feel as if we could send him to Coventry."

That reference to Coventry is a sly dig at George's legal entanglement with the "Robeyphone," which will be explained shortly. The magazine's reviewer described the record (02-335) in these terms: "This artiste is always comic, but it is seldom that his humour reaches to the extent of the drollness that it does in this funny song. We will not spoil the comedian's song by explaining it."

IV Annoyance With The "Robeyphone"

It was while he was making Gramophone records that George Robey suffered serious annoyance from the activities of a swindler who set himself up in business in the city of Coventry (hence the T. M. N. editor's teasing reference to Coventry in the foregoing quotation) under the name of "George Robey, the World's Provider." Obviously with the intention of persuading the public that the great music hall and recording comedian, George Robey, was at the head of the business, the tricky merchant, a man named Francis Salmon O'Brien, placed on the market what appears to have been a terrible talking machine which he called the "Robeyphone." It was one of the cheap made-in-Germany affairs with which the British Isles were bombarded for a few years before World War I.

In establishing the firm of "George Robey, Limited," O'Brien and his wife, Ada O'Brien, who were bicycle dealers before they went into the gramophone business, engaged the part-time services of an illiterate young Coventry man whose legal name was George Robey. He became the nominal head of the concern, but was discharged after five months. Then, when the comedian brought suit to end the nuisance of having his stage name associated with a devious operation, the Coventry Robey was rehired. For a short time, the Talking Machine News accepted the advertising of "The World's Provider," but discontinued it after Robey began to protest the ill treatment he was receiving.

When the comedian appeared in court with his complaint, the reception he was given by the judge, Mr. Justice Darling of the King's Bench division, was not entirely sympathetic. The case went to trial on March 28, 1911, and Robey himself testified. He said the only association he had with the gramophone industry was having entered into a contract to make records for the Gramophone Company. He quoted the defendant firm's advertising as offering to send "the world-famed Robeyphone, terms to suit yourself, at half shop cash price." He also insisted that the advertising slogan, "George Robey, the World's Provider," was copied from his music hall catch phrase, "The Fun Provider," and that characters appearing in the Robeyphone advertisements were drawn and dressed to resemble some of those he impersonated on the stage.

Robey testified to having been educated as a civil engineer and said he attached great value to the importance of his theatrical name. He told of having received letters addressed to "George Robey, England," from indignant buyers of the Robeyphone, and said he was annoyed by persons in his audience shouting at him, "George, your gramophone is rotten!" and "What price gramophones?"

Asked what he did when these outbursts occurred he said he passed them over as well as he could until he decided to go to law to abate the nuisance.

Attorneys for the defense took the ingenious tact of maintaining the O'Briens were within their rights in using the name of George Robey, inasmuch as they had nominally placed at the head of their business the young man by that name who could neither read nor write and who made an "x" to sign contracts. On cross-examination they brought out that the comedian's real name was Wade and that he had taken his stage name from a friend. They ridiculed his contention that he used an assumed name to preserve the "dignity" of his lawful patronymic, and asked why it hadn't occurred to him that he was impairing the value of his school fellow's name when he appropriated it. In effect, the defense contention was that Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien and their feeble-witted stooge had more right to the use of the name of George Robey than the comedian who had made it famous by his many years on the stage. They asked if he would consent to the O'Briens carrying on the business under the name of G. W. Robey, and the future knight of the realm said he certainly would object. He said in reply to more cross-examination that he wouldn't mind if it were operated under his real name of Wade because the public didn't know him by that name and his stage career wouldn't be adversely affected.

The defense contention of course was flimsy and specious, but the presiding justice seemed unaccountably sympathetic to it. However, the jury awarded Robey 100 pounds damages. O'Brien appealed, but on July 28th decided not to press the action after counsel for Robey withdrew a portion of his bill of complaint which charged that the Coventry couples' operations were in some degree fraudulent. Robey, through his attorneys, conceded that the people who bought the Robeyphone might have got as good a machine as they could expect for the price they paid and said his only objection to the business was the use of his assumed name. It was brought out that O'Brien was in extreme ill health and could no longer carry on his tricky business.

George Robey, at the age of 83, drew this caricature of himself and sent it to Jim Walsh.

George Robey as himself, looking at a dummy of himself as he appeared in his stage clerical costume. The inscription says: "Won't Willy Clarkson be wild when he sees that I am not wearing one of his wigs but am using my own hair."

And so, to George Edward Wade's relief, the Robeyphone nuisance was "abated."

V Robey's Columbia Records

In January, 1916, the English Columbia Company announced that Robey, who had been making Gramophone (H.M.V.) records for almost ten years had signed an exclusive Columbia contract. His first Columbia disc was a double-faced 12-inch containing two of his specialties, "Where's the Butler?" and "What Was There Was Good," No. 581, described as "a feast of song and patter in the comedian's richest vein." A month later the Talking Machine News, on which I must depend for information concerning the Robey records, said:

Columbia has two more first-rate George Robey records on the February list. As was announced last month, the popular comedian is exclusively engaged by this company for record purposes, and we understand that he is going strong. The two fresh records are the famous "Family Ghost" and "The Best Man at the Wedding." On glancing at the list again we find he is actually down for more on a 10-inch disc, "The Barrister" and "The Pro's Landlady." It is impossible to have too much of the irrepressible George. By the way, we hear there is great competition on the part of the music-hall proprietors to book George Robey for revue. It is said he has the choice of four big West End halls open to him. Mr. Oswald Stoll is understood to be particularly anxious to get "The Prime Minister of Mirth" for the Alhambra. The difficulty, we are told, is not so much arranging Robey's salary, which would be a considerable item, but fixing up with the people who hold him in contract."

Columbia took a two-page ad in the February issue to publicize the exclusive Robey engagement. The magazine's critic, who usually lavished praise upon virtually any record, good or bad, was downright lyrical in what he said about the 12-inch, No. 583:

One of the biggest things the Columbia has ever done was the exclusive engagement of England's greatest mirth-maker for records. This month he is giving us the excruciating bit of foolery known as "The Family Ghost." If this phantom does not compel you to burst every button on your waistcoat, we'll eat it, together with all the buttons there may be left. As "The Best Man at the Wedding," George is also inimitable. There is only one Robey, and the Columbia has got him. Long may he flourish.

And consider the following, anent 10-inch record No. 2639:

Two more of George Robey's rib-ticklers. "The Barrister" is a characteristic bit of work by the great comedian. In his speech to the jury in a breach of promise case George is the barrister to the life, and the comic element is of the super-abundant sort that draws tears of laughter from the listener. Nothing could possibly be more irresistibly humorous. "The Pro's Landlady" relates the experiences of a whilom actress who has turned landlady of a professional boarding house . . . These records will aid immensely to Robey's reputation as a laughter-provoker, and also as a record-maker, for every word is heard with a clearness which is beyond cavil.

Mention has already been made of the great success Robey and Alfred Lester scored in "The Bing Boys Are Here." The June, 1916, T. M. N. contained another double-spread Columbia ad, this time featuring records by Robey, Lester and Violet Loraine from that popular production. Those in which George took part were both 12-inch—L1034, which combined "Another Little Drink Won't Do Us Any Harm," sung as a trio by Robey, Lester and Loraine, with "I Stopped, I Looked, I Listened," as a Robey solo; and L1035, "If You Were The Only Girl in the World and I Were the Only Boy," a duet by Miss Loraine and Robey, and another Robey solo, "In Other Words." The reviews were flattering, and the records stayed in the Columbia catalog until 1930.

One double-faced 12-inch H.M.V. Robey record also remained in the Gramophone catalog through 1929. It was C546, coupling "And Very Nice Too!" with "Archibald — Certainly Not." The catalog was careful to point out the second side should be played at a speed higher than 78.

I don't have the 1917 volume of the News, but in January, 1918, there was a brief item indicating that Robey by that time was appearing in a musical production called "Zig-Zag," and had recorded two of its songs: "A Deed That Spoke Louder Than Words" and "She Spoke To Me First." The April number revealed that a new version of the Bing Boys was being produced at the Alhambra as "The Bing Boys on Broadway," and Robey was scoring another great hit. An elaborately illustrated article reproduced the labels of four record sides George had just made for Columbia and on which he had drawn caricatures of himself. These records were presented to "a young royal personage" who had called at his dressing room. My guess is the "personage" was the then Prince of Wales, now the Duke of Windsor.

The review of record No. 1236, "First Love, Last Love, Best Love" and "Day After Day," is rather less flattering than the usual fulsome Talking Machine News type:

England's own vocal comedian, as we may call the indefatigable George Robey, has undoubtedly scored one of his biggest hits in "The Bing Boys on Broadway." As a vocalist pure and simple we cannot, of course, take George seriously. His singing voice is not of the range that "lifts the roof off," nor is it of that depth which is sometimes described as "coming out of his boots," yet he contrives to get along pretty well with it, and one must remember it's the only voice he's got, so we must e'en be content with it or go further and fare worse. In the two duets under notice he exercises it as well as he can and that is something to be thankful for. On the other hand, Miss Clara Evelyn, although she is not a Violet Loraine, sings very nicely indeed and the pair make a very creditable show.

The Columbia list that month also contained two "Bing Boys" solos by Robey on record No. 1237, "Shurr-Up!" and "The Fact Is—". The music of all the "Bing Boy" productions was written by an American song writer, Nat. D. Ayer, who went to England and had such success he spent the remainder of his life there. He is best remembered today as the writer of the music of one of the great all-time hits, "Oh You Beautiful Doll."

In August, 1918, The Talking Machine News contained an article on "George Robey as Money Extractor," which deserves reprinting in part as a graphic example of how the great comedian was working to help win the war then only a few months from its close. It may also serve fittingly to conclude this article:

George Robey cannot be allowing himself an undue amount of leisure these days. It is difficult to see how he can even find time for the rest necessary to keep himself fit over his strenuous work, for the comedian with two shows to do a night, rehearsals and other calls, has a more strenuous life than outsiders would imagine. He has worked day and night in the cause of war charities and revels in

(Continued on page 37)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 33)
it. Although a humorist of the first water both on and off the stage, his war work is the one thing he does not joke about in conversation. It is a serious affair with a serious object, and George tackles it as he tackles his profession—thoroughly and completely. . . .

His last effort of the kind was at the Coliseum on July 14th, when George set himself to collect 10,000 pounds for the French Red Cross in honor of France's Day. Seeing that by dint of hard work he had secured his 10,000 pounds the day before the concert one might reasonably have left the affair to run itself, but that is not George Robey. Having set his goal, the next thing was to see how far he could surpass it. These are some of the things he did to achieve it:

He auctioned Arnold Bennett's manuscript of his Message to the Audience, and with bidding starting at 100 pounds brought it up to 300 pounds. . . . The signature of "The Tiger," M. Clemenceau, realized five pounds, and the original painting of "Les Foulards Rouges," given by the Daily Graphic, went at 275 pounds. An American sailor had given a dollar note to the French Red Cross. Mr. Robey produced it and offered it for sale. Bidding started at 32 pounds and finished at 400 pounds. A polliu's wife in the gallery threw on the stage a 20-franc piece taken from her bracelet: George sold it for 140 pounds. A polliu thereupon offered a 50-franc piece: George realized 50 pounds and handed the 50-franc back to the polliu. A lady in the stalls sent up a gold ring that brought 40 pounds.

Over 50,000 pounds to war funds is George's proud record. Small wonder that he is the idol of the boys out there, for they know what he thinks of them! Bravo, George!

And we Americans may add, even at this remote date, small wonder that George Edward Wade received the O. B. E., was knighted by his queen and died as Sir George Robey. He deserves to be lovingly remembered by the British people.

WANTED

EARLY or unusual clocks and watches.—J. E. Nevil, 234 East Fourth, Cincinnati, Ohio. jly6833

WANTED: by collector, old and unusual American clocks.—W. Harding, 5729 North Capitol, Washington, D. C. f3042

REPAIRS

SPECIAL SERVICE, hand painted clock tablets for clocks and mirrors. Clock dials restored and reproduced. Replacement of missing parts. Design and construction consultant on mirrors and clocks. Guaranteed service since 1921.—Hy Parks, 54 Charles St., Boston 14, Mass. Cap. 7-7005 o124262

ANTIQUE CLOCKS any age restored to working order.—Billy Amthor, 10 James St. Walden, N. Y. je124201

ANTIQUE CLOCKS RESTORED. Movements completely rebuilt. Wheels and pinions cut to order. Missing parts calculated, designed and replaced.—Stanley Prokop & Associates, 5524 East Colfax Avenue, Denver 20, Colorado s124872

EARLY AMERICAN clock dials, tablets, stenciled pillars & splats painted by hand in the old manner.—Vander-vorts', 308 Bertley, Moberly, Missouri. my6656

CLOCKS - Antique - Complicated - Repairs or supply whole movements, parts, dials, cases in rough or refinished condition.—Old Time Shop, Box 126, Poland, Ohio. f3263

$5.00

THE ARTS of

$5.00

THE TIFFANYS

BY GERTRUDE SPEENBURGH

The story of that fabulous art family which has had a powerful influence on the character and development of AMERICAN ART

How Can I KNOW It Is TIFFANYS?

What ARE The TIFFANY ARTS?

What KINDS of GLASS Did TIFFANYS CREATE?

Are TIFFANY Pieces Marked?

These and many other questions are answered by Gertrude Speenburgh in her book THE ARTS OF THE TIFFANYS.

ORDER BLANK

THE ARTS OF THE TIFFANYS $5.00
FIRST EDITION AUTOGRAPHED

Order from Lightner Pub. Co., 1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Please send me ..... copies postpaid

Check $..... or money order for $.....

Name .....

Street ..... City .....

Zone ..... State .....

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Gene Austin

By JIM WALSH

Gene Austin comes closer than any other performer about whom I've so far written to getting into Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists barely by the skin of his teeth. In fact, it is only by a liberal stretching of the rules governing this department that I can conscientiously include him.

Not that I consider this world-famous singer unworthy of such "distinction." Without question he has been one of the most popular vocalists who ever made records and I have had many requests to tell his life story. But, by a strict application of standards, the genial curly-haired "crooner" isn't a pioneer recording artist. His largest selling numbers were all placed on the market after electric recording supplanted the "hammer-into-the-horn" system. Nevertheless, he made a fair number of discs by the old acoustic method, so I have decided that, after all, Gene Austin belongs in these pages. And it is a pleasure to write about the handsome, affable man whom I greatly like and admire on the strength of my one meeting with him—a meeting he probably doesn't recall since it occurred 17 years ago.

In the late 1920's, the new-fangled electrical techniques of recording and reproducing had redeemed the phonograph from the slow death to which radio was believed to have consigned it, and records were selling merrily. Undisputedly, the king of record makers for the first half dozen years of the electric era was Gene Austin. He "blanketed" competition to an extent that none of his competitors and successors—Vallee, Crosby, Sinatra and the like—achieved. And today, at the age of 56, he is still far from a has-been. A few months ago he appeared as a guest on the "Golden Records" program with a good many present-day recording "stars," and the critics were virtually unanimous in saying Austin "stole the show" and was the only performer who displayed real personality and sang effectively. It was announced that 85,000,000 copies of his records have been sold. I have no doubt that if the 1929 depression hadn't hit the record business harder even than radio had and for a decade almost put an end to the sale of "platters," Gene Austin would have stood a good chance of being the all-time best selling recording artist.

This article isn't scheduled to appear until February, 1957, but is being written on June 16. Just 12 days ago the New York Times published the following:

GENE AUSTIN LIFE PLANNED AS FILM. Story of Popular Crooner of Twenties Will Be Made by Case Productions . . . Hollywood, Calif., June 4.—The life of Gene Austin, Texas-born blacksmith and cowboy who helped to establish the singing vogue called crooning in the early Twenties, will be portrayed in a motion picture.

"The Lonesome Road" is the tentative title for the film, based on a story by Larry Marcus. It will be made by a new company known as Case Productions.

Mr. Austin . . . started his singing career in New Orleans and became popular with his recording of "Yes, Sir, That's My Baby." His most famous recording, however, was of "My Blue Heaven." The partners plan to make the film after the fashion of "The Jolson Story," with Mr. Austin singing while an actor portrays him.

"The Jolson Story" rescued Al Jolson from near oblivion and caused young people to develop a vogue of collecting his records which persists today. It is possible that "The Lonesome Road," which should be well into production or even completed by the time you read this, will touch off a new fad among the teenagers for collecting Austin—in my opinion a better singer than Jolson.

II Early Biographical Sketches

In 1929, when the Gene Austin enthusiasm throughout the nation was at its peak (I knew several teenagers who prided themselves on buying no records other than Austin's), and he was Victor's most valuable "property," the Victor record catalog published the following elaborate biographical sketch, perhaps unprecedented in the space it gave to a popular recording artist:

GENE AUSTIN. Tenor—The tremendous success that has marked the Victor career of Gene Austin seems phenomenal, and yet, considering his remarkable gifts, his warm and genial personality, and the romantic details of his life, someone with a prophetic gift might have forecast for him the popularity that is his.

Gene Austin was born in 1900 at Shreveport, Louisiana. He was the typical American boy, mischievous and lovable, always happy and often with a song on his lips. At 15, he ran away from home and joined a circus, after his parents had laughingly vetoed his desire to go on the stage. His circus jobs ranged from playing the calliope to selling peanuts, but he was satisfied, he says, because the work kept him out of school.

At 16, Gene, being large for his age, beguiled a recruiting officer to accept his services for Uncle Sam's army, and he was sent to the Mexican border with the famous punitive expedition. But Gene's parents objected so vigorously to this "job" that the boy was released and sent to school. But not for long. On the day the United States entered the war, Gene joined the army again, and was sent to France, where he served as a bugler during 1917 and 1918. On his return from the war he went to school in Baltimore, and later to Baltimore University. During this time he still managed to exercise his interest in music, managing a dance orchestra which later was taken on a "round the world" tour. In 1923 he joined with a friend in a piano and song vaudeville act, and in April, 1925, made his first Victor record—"The Only, Only One for Me" and "I Never Knew How Much I Loved You."

From that time to the present Gene Austin's career has been a series of successes. His delightful mellow tenor voice, his intimate style of singing, his pleasant, soft, Southern intonation, and above all the magnetic personality which he somehow projects through his Victor records have endeared him to countless admirers the country over, and have caused the sale of his records to reach the millions.

There is one misstatement in that Victor biography. Gene was born in Gainesville, Texas, rather than Shreveport. Incidentally, I believe the singer's family name was Lucas, but that, because of the prestige of his stage name, he had Lucas changed to Austin.

The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary, published by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, also contains a biography of Gene, mentioning that he was born in Gainesville on June 24, 1900, and joined ASCAP in 1925. After giving much of the information contained in the Victor write-up, it relates that he appeared in the New York stage productions, "Broadway Rhapsody," in 1933, and "Going Places," 1935. Among songs which he had a hand in writing are "Whippoorwill," "Go Tell My Honey That I Love Her," "The Lonesome Road," "Please Come Back To Me," "How Come You Do Me Like You Do," "When My Sugar Walks Down The Street," and "Ridin' Around In The Rain."

III Newspaper Interview

Earlier, I mentioned that I once met Gene Austin. That was on Thursday, April 27, 1939, when the tenor appeared in Johnson City, Tenn., with a "tent show," the Star-O-Rama Canvas Theater. By that time the record business had begun climbing out of its near fatal slump of the '30's and Austin was again making discs, but for Decca instead of Victor. A young woman reporter, Lucia Burbage, who worked for the Press, (I was its top reporter, feature writer, editorial commentator and columnist!) had been assigned to interview the singer, but when I learned about it, I persuaded her to let me go to see him instead. And a very good time, the still famous crooner, and I had in his John Sevier hotel room. In fact, we got along so well together from the moment he extended his hand and his blue eyes smiled in a quizzical way that when I left, proudly carrying an autographed photo, he asked me to come back and spend the afternoon. He explained that he seldom met in his travels anyone with whom he had so much in common or so many common friends. Unfortunately, "pressure of official duties" kept me from returning, but I did attend the show that night and reviewed it the next day.

Gene Austin presented this autographed photo to Jim Walsh when they met in Johnson City, Tenn.

A couple of nights ago I hunted up the scrapbook in which I pasted my interview with Gene Austin and re-read it for the first time in 17 years. It still strikes me as a good job, to have been written in haste with a deadline just ahead, and is so inclusive that I have decided to copy it and let it give much of the information I would otherwise be at the trouble of looking up. So here goes, for another "six-point, indent" quotation:

POPULAR TENOR AND REPORTER GET TOGETHER—Gene Austin Finds Much to Talk About With Record Collector. By Jim Walsh—When one of the world's most popular recording, radio and vaudeville singers meets a record collector who has been keeping tab for years of the artist's career, they find plenty to talk about.

That was the case this morning when I dropped in at the John Sevier to chat with Gene Austin, tenor headliner of the Star-O-Rama.

Knew Background

Since I have been collecting records almost all my life, I knew the salient points of Gene's career: That he was born in Gainesville, Texas, but grew up in Shreveport, La.; joined a circus at the age of 15; while still a boy saw service with the AEF, and later became a noted vaudevillian. I also knew more than 35,000,000 copies of his records had been sold. I was even able to tell him that he started out as a singer of hill-billy numbers for the Vocalion and Edison companies; made his first record (issued in April, 1925), as an assisting artist to Aileen Stanley, and scored a memorable success a month later with "Yearning," "No Wonder" and "The Only, Only One for Me."

But I didn't know how he happened to get started at record-making and to move up, within a year or two, to undisputed leadership of the popular vocal field, so I asked him.

Once Was Writer

The tenor with the silvery voice chuckled. "I was a song writer in those days," he said, "so I often dropped around to the studios to give our songs a boost for recording purposes. One day Cliff Hess, recording manager at Vocalion (and himself the composer of "Treckles" and other song hits), told me he was worried. It seemed a Knoxville firm had sent George Reneau, known as 'The Blind Musician of the Smoky Mountains,' to New York in the belief he could make a series of hill-billy records that would be a big success. However, while Reneau's mouth harp and guitar playing were all right his voice didn't record well, and he lacked a sense of timing. Several singers had been tried as his partner but they didn't seem to have the Southern style needed for that type of recording. So I was asked if I'd have a try.

Worked Together

"I would, and did. Reneau, who was quite a character, and I did a lot of work together, at first for Vocalion but later also for Edison. I remember he had an idea he could 'clean up' if he could only play the guitar and sing on the streets of New York, as he had in Knoxville, so I took him to Broadway and 42nd and sat him down. I kept a watchful eye for the cops, of course. He made something over three dollars in a little while and thought he had struck a gold mine. Edison paid him so much ($1,000) to make a series of records he returned to Tennessee, got married and is still, I hope, living happily.

"I got in with Victor when I wrote a song, 'When My Sugar Walks Down the Street,' which Aileen Stanley was chosen to sing. She needed some assistance, so I was called in to help her. The record went over so well the company decided I was worth a trial as a soloist. And my career as a recording artist has continued to the present day."

Gene's biggest seller was the double-faced record of "Ramona" and "Girl of My Dreams," which had the good fortune to combine two great hits. His sales graph also soared into the millions with "My Blue Heaven" (he used to own a huge yacht which he named "Blue Heaven") "Lonesome Road" (his own composition) and a good many others. Of recent years he has made a number of Decca records and now has ready for release a Victor of "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" and another old-time hit, in which he is assisted by Candy and Coco, who appear with him tonight. He also makes many transcriptions for broadcast use and was with Joe Penner for two seasons in California on his nationally-broadcast program.

"I'm enjoying traveling with the Star-O-Rama," the singer said. "Of course people ask me what I'm doing traveling with a tent show, but I expect that. My answer is that our show seats about 5,000 people and brings to a place like Johnson City an entertainment of high quality that couldn't be duplicated under any other system. I think the whole tent idea is swell—I've always wanted to have a try with a show of this type, anyway—and the crowds we've been attracting seem to indicate the public shares my enthusiasm."

This Victor folder was issued in 1927 when Gene Austin's records were the sensation of the day.

IV More Reminiscences

The review I wrote after that night's performance makes it clear I agreed with the enthusiasm. Here are the parts I wrote dealing with Gene's share of the show:

"The Star-O-Rama canvas theater, which is showing tonight at Kingsport, last night played to an audience of nearly 5,000 persons at the East Main Street circus grounds.

"Gene Austin, recording and radio star, who recently concluded a successful engagement in the Broadway smash hit, 'Helzapoppin', with his comedy team of 'Candy and Coco,' was the stellar attraction of the excellent program. He sang 'My Blue Heaven' (a copy of his 1927 record of this number has been placed in the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., so that future generations may judge what popular music of the present day is like), 'My Melancholy Baby,' 'Forsaken,' 'You Must Have Been A Beautiful Baby,' and one of his latest record best-sellers, 'I Cried For You.' The audience gave Austin an ovation and burst into applause as he began each of his familiar numbers. There was general agreement he had never been heard in better voice."

Naturally, I didn't have time or space, in writing an interview at breakneck speed, to set down all the things about which Gene and I talked. But my memory of the conversation is still vivid and since HOBBIES readers are avid for any information about their favorite recording stars I shall jot down some more reminiscences.

Gene told me that when his recording career was zooming and it ap-

(Continued on page 55)

it is today for those who fancy reproductions on LP — their collections expand by leaps and bounds with each new acquisition.

It is very evident that FRP is now much more painstaking in the pitching of 78 r.p.m. discs on LP (I assume that the hill-and-dale have previously been transferred on 78). That is most laudable. In this batch the majority are in perfect pitch, some edge more or less around it, but four are off — two unquestionably so. These are: Ruffo's "Siberia" (must be in D-flat Major, is half tone too low in C); Calvé's "Vivandière" (should be in F Major, is half tone too high in F-sharp); Butt's "Sosarme" (should be in F-sharp Major, sounds half tone too low in F); and Navarrini's "Borgia" (must be in A-flat Major, is one whole tone too high in B-flat; which is much too much — the poor basso has been practically emasculated). If you will notice, I gave the benefit of the doubt to the Calvé and Butt recordings, as the first, a mezzo part, could have possibly been transposed upward by the soprano; and the second could have been sung in any key by the unpredictable Butt. However, upon studying the voice positions of both the ladies in these selections, it becomes quite obvious that Calvé sang her piece in the original: first, because her voice here comes through better placed in the key of F, and second, because had she raised the tonality, her repeated high F-sharp would be in the third register and not in the second, as she has them on this band. To allay any doubts about the Butt number, if a changeable speed LP machine is available, all one has to do is play her band one half tone higher to find how much more natural, and less as if coming from a butt (ouch!) her voice sounds in F-sharp. Neither Ruffo nor Navarrini, of course, would have had any reason to transpose the selections they sing here.

The re-recording job is good throughout, with a minimum of surface noise and a maximum of the original voice quality left in.

These are very fine L'Ps, and with just a little more attention to the pitch problem, the future FRP releases should lack nothing in excellence.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

peared Victor records by Gene Austin could never quit selling, he was virtually a millionaire—on paper. But he admitted he didn't invest his money wisely and was "a plain sucker for anybody who came along with a plausible scheme. 'I had a big automobile agency in New York,'" he said, "but the guys who were 'managing' the outfit could spend money even faster than I was making it." He also took a beating, like millions of other more or less affluent citizens, from the 1929 stock market swoon.

I was surprised to learn that, just after World War I, Gene had a phonograph and record store—in Shreveport, I believe—and he convulsed me by his account of how one of his sales "pitches" backfired. He had the agency for Edison and Pathé instruments and records. Because he considered the Diamond Disc superior to the Pathé he made little effort to sell the latter, and his Edison sales outnumbered Pathés ten to one. One of his principal demonstration points was dropping a stack of Edison records to the floor to show they were so thick and strong it was almost impossible to break them.

"One day," he laughed, "I was showing a Pathé to somebody who wanted a cheaper machine than the Edison. As I neared the point where I hoped to close the sale, my mind must have fogged, for I said, 'And the beauty of these records, aside from their perfect reproduction, is the fact that you can't break them!' So I picked up a couple of dozen Pathé records, slammed them to the floor—and they all broke! I suppose nobody has ever looked any sillier than I did then—or anybody more surprised than my customer!"

Gene discovered that I knew more about the whereabouts of many of his fellow recording artists than he did, and plied me with questions. Mentioning Vernon Dalhart, he said: "What's become of old Dalhart? I haven't heard anything from him in years. I told him Dalhart was again making records, with his 'Deep Cypress Boys,' for Victor's low priced label, Bluebird. Gene recalled that his Edison record of one of his own songs, 'I've Got the Railroad Blues (But Haven't Got the Railroad Fare)' was coupled with Dalhart's version of the comic song classic, 'Casey Jones.' He then told me something I didn't know that Dalhart's real name was Slaughter—Marion Try Slaughter, to be exact.

I mentioned that Billy Murray had come, with Billy's beloved pal (and mine), Jimmy Martindale, to visit me in Johnson City a few months before, and he spoke in high esteem of Billy, terming him "a good comedian and a fine singer." "In fact," he said, "Billy would be a great attraction for this show, and if I could get him away from New York, I'd pay him a big salary to get him to join us. Everywhere I go people ask me about Billy Murray, whether he's still living and what he's doing. There never was a singer with a greater following." Gene spoke in a friendly way of all his recording associates except one singer, who shall be nameless here, whom he compared to "a grouchy old country storekeeper with the hives." And he recalled that he and my good friend, Carson Robinson, joined talents in a Victor record of pseudo-hill-billy number, "Way Down Home."

I recalled having a clipping from an August, 1924 issue of The Bill (Continued on page 64)

CIRCUSIANA

By DANA STEVENS

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Q: Can you give me some information concerning the Circus Saints and Sinners organization?

A: The full title of this organization is Circus Saints and Sinners Club of America. It was organized in 1927. F. Darius Benham, a circus enthusiast was the original founder of the club, and he started it for the purpose of establishing a home for indigent circus people. At the time he was a reporter on the old New York World. He was assisted in his efforts by Frank Baldwin, a banker from Richmond, Va.; Fred Pitzer, an insurance man; Charles Tremaine, a salesman from Bradford, Pa., and Chalmers Pancoast, a hotel executive. All of the men were living in New York at the time. The New York Chapter is known as the "Dexter Fellows Tent." Lowell Thomas, the famous news analyst and world traveler, was its first president.

Total membership in the organization numbers well over 3,000. Whenever a group organizes locally, under the banner of Circus Saints and Sinners, they establish what is called a Tent. Each tent carries the name of some famous personality from the world of the big top, and each tent carries on charity work of its own choosing.

The first national convention was held in Richmond, Va., on October 11 and 12, 1929, at the William Byrd Hotel. Dr. Clifford Rudd of Richmond was elected the first national president.

Q: Do circus elephants eat much?

A: It is estimated that a full-grown elephant eats 125 pounds of hay daily, half a bushel of oats, seven pounds of bran and all the peanuts that fans will feed him. He will drink fifty gallons of water daily.

Q: Do elephants have a special ointment used on their skins?

A: Neatsfoot oil is used to oil their skin to keep it from cracking. An elephant's skin is tender and not "bullet-shedding" tough.

Q: Do elephants sleep?

A: Often like babies. They lie down to sleep, some snore, others do not. They are not tireless animals but, on the contrary, after a day's work need and require rest.

Q: Where is the winter quarters of the Al G. Kelly and Miller Bros. Circus?

A: In Hugo, Okla., in Choctaw County.

ANTIQUES WANTED

MECHANICAL Banks, old coins, Indian relics, old buttons, old letters.—Romey, 112 Washington, Bluffton, Indiana. my120441

WHALING ITEMS: Books, pictures, ship's log and implements, pertaining to whaling.—Dr. E. Lee Dorsett, 120 Orchard Ave., Webster Groves 19, Mo. mh6407

IVES, IVES-BLAKESLEE, Carpenter, Kenton, Hubley, N.N. Hill Brass Co., Gong Bell Manufacturing Co., Shepard Hardware Co., J. & E. Stevens Co., and Wilkins. Especially want any catalogs issued by these companies. See my large ad in the Old Mechanical Banks Department of this issue.—F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

WANTED: Old iron hitching posts and old tin tobacco tugs.—R. F. French, 507½ Highland Drive, Marshalltown, Iowa. au122511

FLEXIBLE FISH, handkerchief holders, bouquet holders, metal animal paper clips, animal penny banks.—The Curiosity Shop, Curwensville, Pa. f1441

WANTED TO BUY: Atlases, Geographies. Maps before 1803, also Maps of Western States before 1860.—Tenney 152 Woodland Ave., Lexington, Ky. ap6278

CIVIL WAR naval cutlasses, pistols, belt plates, medals, insignia, cannon models, small porcelain and metal cabinet pulls.—Harry Stewart, 4010 Princeton Ave., Philadelphia 35, Pa. f3004

WANTED Caramel Slag pieces.—Alice Gordon, St. Johns, Ohio. f3612

WANTED: Fine old fans. Also signed Lalique.—Mrs. Frank Sanchez, 77 Longview Ave., White Plains, N. Y. ol28531

SHAVING MUGS with picture, owners' occupation and name. Liberal prices.—Fred Patterson, P.O. Box 1730, Atlanta, Georgia. f122511

WANTED: U.S. coin imprint glass, and colored toothpick holders.—Pauline Myers, Box 633, Dodge City, Kansas. Je6445

WANTED TO BUY—Old Penny Banks by collector - advise condition and quote best price. Also want old jewelry, even if broken - send on approval & receive check by return mail - will hold jewelry pending your acceptance.—M. C. Carl, 1 Ridgeway St., Salem, Mass. ap3233

SHAVING MUGS, vases in pairs, Mary Gregory items and toys.—Walter J. Henry, Adamsburg, Pa. ja12069

PLEASE NOTE my display ad in Mechanical Bank Department of this issue, listing various wants.—F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

COLLECTOR WANTS: Early Pewter of all kinds, including mugs, tankards, Primitive paintings.—Oliver Deming, Westfield, Mass. f6215

WANTED: Tintype and daguerreotype cameras.—W. E. Musick, 12007 Yale, Chicago 28, Illinois. tfx

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs and records, reproducers, horn type phonographs. Kindly describe fully, size, type, condition, etc.—Pollard, 4109 Soquel Drive, Soquel, California. f3863 board, which I had picked up in a second-hand store, containing a paragraph about his song writing activities. The clipping is still safely affixed in a scrapbook, so I'll quote it here. It refers to Austin as a recording artist. Since he hadn't then started singing for Victor, the reference is probably to the records he and Reneau had made for Vocalion and Edison:

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 55)

Gene Austin, vaudeville artist, record star and songwriter, has been signed by Jack Mills, Inc., and will now devote himself to writing exclusively for that concern. He is acknowledged to be an authority on the native and characteristic type of Southern Negro songs, especially blues. His first contribution to the Mills catalog are "Charleston Charlie" and "I've Got the Railroad Blues."

(To be continued in the March issue)

DICK DAVIS REPRINTS

Another Edison Booklet

Dick Davis, an enthusiastic California collector of cylinder phonographs and records, has taken on a sideline — making exact reprints of early Edison advertising booklets. The latest is the 32-page Edison instrument catalog for 1905. It is attractively presented with a brown cover and is a fitting companion to the 1901 Edison phonograph reprint of the same size issued several months ago.

The catalogs are not a money-making proposition, but Davis is obliged to charge $1.50 per copy, to cover the cost of production and distribution. Every cylinder phonograph enthusiast and all others interested in early sound recording history should obtain them. Address: Dick Davis, 1456 Soffel Avenue, Mentone, California.

—Jim Walsh

WANTED: American silver and bronze president portrait medallions, reverse showing clasped hands; Early military buttons; American Indian beaded items, Metal Tomahawks, axes, drums, quiver with arrows, swords, send list and price.—Irving Browning, 1845 Broadway, New York 23. f66112

SILVER by St. Louis or Kentucky Silversmiths. Give description and price 1st letter.—Margo Antiques, 4430 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo. mh3633

WANTED: Currier and Ives lithographs—Hunting, Fishing, Western, Racing, Fruits, Flowers, Rivers, Boats, Scenes, Railroads. All correspondence answered. Free list of prints for sale.—A. R. Davison, East Aurora, New York. Je6299

CAMERAS. Anything pre-1915 in photographic equipment. Plate, wet-plate, Daguerreotype, box cameras, darkroom equipment, etc.—J. W. Baldwin, P.O. Box 123, Des Moines, Iowa. al24661

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

DEATHS

BENJAMIN PLATT THOMAS, well known historian and biographer of Abraham Lincoln, at his home in Springfield, Ill.

Thomas was born February 22, 1902, at Pemberton, N. J. He graduated from Johns Hopkins University in 1924 and received a Ph.D. from there in 1929. He was awarded honorary degrees from Northwestern University and Knox and Lincoln colleges.

The most impressive of his writings was considered to be his 1952 book entitled "Abraham Lincoln", which was widely acclaimed by experts and scholars as the outstanding one volume biography of the Civil War President. His other books include: "Lincoln's New Salem", 1934; "Lincoln 1847-1853", 1936; "Portrait for Posterity; Lincoln and His Biographers", 1947; "Theodore Weld, Crusader of Freedom", 1950, and "Three Years with Grant, as Recalled by War Correspondent Sylvanus Cadwallader", 1955, which Thomas edited.

Thomas also lectured and was active in a number of organizations associated with Lincolniana. He served as executive secretary of the Abraham Lincoln Association from 1932 to 1936, was associate editor of the Abraham Lincoln Quarterly from 1940 to 1953, and was a trustee of the Illinois State Historical library.

—o—
MRS. ELMER HIGGS, Texas City, Tex., president of the Texas City Hobby Club.

—o—

MARION GIBSON of Flora, Ind., passed away recently. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson maintained a shop at their home for many years. He had a personal collection of covered hen dishes and Victorian art glass. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gibson were active in local study groups relating to antiques and collecting.

—o—

MRS. FRANK H. PILLSBURY of Grants Pass, Ore., passed away a few weeks ago.

She and Mr. Pillsbury shared a love for antiques and collectors' items, and they had a joint interest in reading HOBBIES Magazine.

ANTIQUES FOR SALE MISCELLANEOUS

WEEDEN TOY electric steam engine on 9"x6" wooden base. Runs O.K. $22.50.—A. F. & R. L. Foulk Antiques, 1617 S. Tuxedo Ave., Stockton, California f1002

BLUE CLOISONNE ball watch; honey Amber and Amber square Hobnail master salts; 6" Tiffany vase not signed; iron Still banks; mechanical banks; patchwork quilt top; Cut glass; Milk glass crucifix candle holders; child's carpet rocker, perfect.—Helen's Antiques, 926 State St., Racine, Wis. f1443

FOR SALE: White shell knitted bedspread 8½ - 7½ ft. Authentically 150 yrs. old in good condition. $50.—Marie Elick, Box 3895, Miami, Fla. f1671

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Gene Austin

(Continued from the February Issue)

By JIM WALSH

V The Austin Recordings

I don't intend to discuss the Austin recordings in detail. There are so many of them, following for the most part the same pattern, that extensive analysis would be useless. Neither is there space to publish a complete list of his recordings. However, George Collings, editor of an attractive quarterly publication, The International Discophile, tells me an Austin "discography" will appear in the autumn issue, and it may be available by the time this article sees print. The Discophile costs $2 per year and may be obtained from Mr. Collings, of 1227 North Jackson Street, Fresno 2, California.

I have few Vocalion record lists for the mid-1920's and am unable to give the numbers and titles of the Austin-Reneau duets. Fortunately, I can do better with their four double-faced Edison Diamond discs. The first, No. 51422, appeared in the Edison list for December, 1924. It combines "Arkansas Traveler," with Gene calling the square dance figures in true back country style, and an infectious rendition of "Little Brown Jug."

Next came, in March, 1925, No. 51498, "Life's Railway to Heaven," and a hill-billy sob song which a "Georgia Cracker," "Fiddlin' John" Carson, had already made famous on an Okeh record, "You Will Never Miss Your Mother Till She's Gone." Gene succumbs to the temptation to kid the red-brush lingo a bit in "Life's Railway," when he pronounces "falter" not as "fawl-ter," but with a short a.

In April, 1925, just when Gene's Victor recording career was getting under way, came No. 51502, "Turkey in the Straw—Breakdown" and "Susie Ann." Finally, in May, Edison issued "The Lonesome Road Blues" (with Austin and Jack Mills credited as composers) coupled with "The Blue Ridge Blues." This was No. 51515.

Gene made one more appearance—this time without Reneau—in the November, 1925, Edison supplement when the already mentioned "Got the Railroad Blues" was issued on 51611, combined with the Dalhart "Casey Jones." The Austin side, a catchy number in typical blues vein, has a piano accompaniment by Charles Bates. It's a mystery why Edison let a singer with Austin's unmistakable gifts get away. But then, many artists more or less "discovered" by Edison went over to Victor, for "better money," as soon as they became popular. All the Austin and Reneau Diamond discs were dubbed onto Blue Amberol cylinders.

It will be interesting to trace the young crooner's progress during the first few months of his Victor career through the monthly supplements. In April, "When My Sugar Walks Down The Street" was combined with "I Ain't Got Nobody To Love," both sung by charming Aileen Stanley. Editor Jim Richardson, one of the most accomplished literary stylists of his day, said: "Two highly popular numbers in a manner which is the contemporary outgrowth of the 'blues.' The first one introduces one of its composers, Gene Austin, as an assisting artist. It has a catchy melody and rhythm, and has dicky-bird effects and queer vocal ululations."

Gene appeared as a soloist for the first time in May with two double-faced records that headed the month's popular list. The bigger seller of the two turned out to be 19625, "Yearning (Just for You)" and "No Wonder (That I Love You)." Here is what Mr. Richardson wrote:

"This and the following record introduce Gene Austin, composer and singer of popular songs, as a Victor solo artist. A month ago he appeared, as you may recall, as assisting artist to Aileen Stanley. The two numbers here given are fox trot songs to the guitar, the ukulele and the violin or the viola. They are serio-comic in style and remarkably well sung."

Of record No. 19599, the supplement said:

Gene Austin "repeats" here with a couple of fox trot songs, sentimental in theme, with the full orchestra. Pathos and humor combine in them, with half-spoken passages and other bits "from life." You will find in the artist, we think, a distinct and striking personality in popular song.

Austin's only contribution in June was the quasi-hill-billy number, "Way Down Home," made with Carson Robison, and combined with "The Time

Will Come," by Dalhart. The supplement said "Way Down Home" has good harmony, introduces "Home, Sweet Home," and cleverly introduces some Grieg melody into a late stanza." In July, a photo of Gene was shown together with a black animal (I can't be sure whether dog or cat), and his titles were "Let It Rain" and "What a Life." The editor commented: "Gene has some sentimental moments in these two records, though, toward the close . . . he lets a wink . . . slip into his voice. If Gene is disposed to be serious, it is for the first time in his Victor life, and he gets over it promptly enough."

That same month saw Gene Austin move into the "smash, best-seller class" when Victor combined "Everything is Hotsy-Totsy Now" with an even bigger hit, "Yes, Sir, That's My Baby." Here is a typical example of James E. Richardson's graceful style:

Gene Austin, in these two numbers, is aided and abetted by an artist new to Victor records—Billy Carpenter, known to the profession as "Uke." Gene sings, and Uke produces other vocal and instrumental sounds—new combinations to the uke and the human larynx to bring joy to the irrepressible heart. Both records are good strong ones, for both artists are men of energy . . . Half the country will be trying to imitate Gene and Uke before these records are 24 hours old.

By this time, it may be mentioned, electrical recording had replaced the horn method through which Gene had made his first records.

No more Victor records by Gene were issued until February, 1926. All three of his February numbers are now regarded as "standards." Record No. 19899 combined "Sleepy Time Gal" with "Five Foot Two, Eyes of Blue," and he occupied the B side of 19864, singing "I Never Knew," while Henry Burr and Billy Murray, assisted by Carl Mathieu and with Frank Banta at the piano, held down the A face, with "I Wonder Where My Baby Is Tonight"—a side that is memorable because Billy had the flu when it was made and was so hoarse his admirers feared he had lost his voice.

There seems no need of quoting much further. By mid-1927, Victor was issuing a special folder listing Gene Austin records and offering an autographed photo with each record. He was the singing sensation of the day. However, the company was guilty of a bad "goof" by including No. 20964, "My Blue Heaven" and "Are You Lonesome Tonight," among the "also rans," in December, 1927, without even a word of comment.

Although "Blue Heaven" seems ac-

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Rare Pieces For Sale

ALL SIZES AND TYPES

Expert Repairing

Original Factory Methods—All Work Guaranteed
(ESTIMATES AND APPRAISALS FREE)

BORNAND MUSIC BOX COMPANY

139 4th Ave. (Po. 8-1506)—PELHAM, N. Y.

(Originally Established in Switzerland, 1825)

cepted nowadays as the all-time Gene Austin best seller, its immediate sales were outdistanced by "Ramona" and "Girl Of My Dreams," placed back-to-back on 21334, in June, 1928. "Tomorrow" and "So Tired" were also combined on one record that month. Mr. Richardson, who died shortly after they were issued, commented:

The place of Gene Austin is firmly established in American popular song, where it has been won in fair and open competition, by public acclaim, without prejudice or favoritism of any kind. He here contributes two records which are among the best he ever has done. The first-mentioned is the theme song from the recent filmplay, "Ramona," based on Helen Hunt Jackson's American fiction classic. The other numbers are just as good musically, and they will appeal to many thousands of listeners. The artist himself needs no reintroduction.

For another year and a half the record business continued good. Then came the stock market crash, and millions of people who had formerly bought the new popular records began to wonder how they were going to eat. Disc sales skidded to almost nothing by the end of 1930, but Victor continued to issue a large number of Austin titles until the first of 1932. What looked at the time to be his final appearance was made in November, 1931, when record No. 22806 combined "Blue Kentucky Moon" and "Love Letters in the Sand." Where other Austin records had sold in the millions, this one probably didn't reach 10,000. As late as 1935, the Association of Recording Artists issued a public statement complaining that not even the biggest "hit songs" of the day were selling 20,000 record copies. "Satiety" caused by tunes being played over and over on radio was blamed.

But Gene was not entirely through

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 476

Vinton, Va.
tfx

with Victor. The record business began slowly to improve in 1933 (the year before was the worst in its modern history), and in August, 1934, two double-faced Austin records were issued. No. 24640 combined what I take to have been new recordings of "After You've Gone" and "My Melancholy Baby," both of which were already in the Austin list, and 24663 doubled "Ridin' Around in the Rain" with "All I Do Is Dream Of You." All these songs except "Melancholy Baby" were listed as having been introduced in the movie, "Sadie McKee,"

18th SEASON DIXIE RECORD CLUB 1635 duPont Building Miami (32), Florida

OCCASIONAL RECORD AUCTIONS - Operatic & Concert VOCAL Selections by Great Singers of the Past and Present. Rarities of early vintage to recent cutouts. The bidder makes to price. List of realized prices sent to each bidder after the sale. Write for lists. ttc

THOUSANDS OF RECORDS

by Toscanini

with New York Philharmonic and other orchestras. Many George M. Cohan mostly by Billy Murray. Charles A. Lindbergh records on hand also. Why don't you send for my lists of them as well as other rare items of the past in any field or class.

AL McREA, Sr.

Box 182 Westville, N. J. mhc

1000 AMPICO MUSIC ROLLS

$75.00 per 100 or $600.00

For Entire Collection

K. & G. MUSIC HOUSE
1209 West North Avenue
Baltimore 17, Md. mhp

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHON CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.)
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIAVTE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York tfr

"F. R. P."

Famous Records of The Past
2060 1st Ave., New York, N.Y.

Jack L. Caidin

and true reproduction. 12" long playing records $5.95 each. Tax and postage prepaid.

Re-issues and re-recordings or rare and unusual phonograph records. Operatic, Theatrical Political, Instrumental. The finest in quality
SEND FOR FREE BULLETINS! tfo

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that I know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

BRASS TUNING ARM FOR MILLS VIOLANO

$10.00 EACH

FOR SALE: Mills Violanos and other types coin-operated musical instruments. ALSO, WANTED: All types of this equipment and rolls for same.

WALBOX DISTRIBUTING CO.

3909 Main St. — Dallas, Texas — Tel. Victor 1671

jl75c

in which I believe Gene appeared.

Even earlier, in May, 1934, "My Blue Heaven" had been coupled with "Ramona" on 24573. I'm not sure whether these were re-makes of the old favorites or whether Victor had decided there would be a good sale for a doubling of the tenor's two biggest hits. In November came an unmistakably new recording, No. 24725, which combined "Blue Sky Avenue" with "When the Roll is Called by the Fireside"—two unsuccessful numbers.

Gene also made records for some of the smaller companies which catered to the five-and-ten-cent store trade and, when I talked with him, he was recording for Decca. His records were selling very well, by the standards of 1939. He was pleased with the success of his coupling of "I Cried For You" and a 1914 hit tune, "If I Had My Way," but was annoyed that Decca had also allowed Bing Crosby to record the former, thus cutting into the Austin sales. As far as I can find, the record of "I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby," which he, Candy and Coco had made for Victor, never was issued.

In the years that followed, Gene has recorded for other minor companies, but in view of the International discophile listings, I shall not go into details of these "off brand" efforts.

VI In Conclusion

As I approach the end of this article, written at one five hour sitting, and prepare to put away my notes, I find a couple of other items that should have a passing glance. One is a New York Herald-Tribune story telling of Gene's becoming a member of the Joe Penner radio show. It ends with the statement that he "credits his voice to the removal of his tonsils as a young man. As a boy he had a fine voice, he said, but when it changed, something seemed to go wrong. He had his tonsils out and his present voice was the result."

Then I find this clipping from an October, 1952, issue of the Richmond Times-Dispatch:

"GENE AUSTIN'S DAUGHTER IN FILM HERE—Beauty has role in Capitol Movie—The Charlotte Austin who will be at the Capitol this week in 'Rainbow Round My Shoulder' is the daughter of singer Gene Austin, and a pretty thing she is, too."

Which reminds me that Gene has appeared as a character actor in a good many movies besides doing extensive entertaining, in recent years, as a night club feature. I recall his telling me he had a supporting role in some film, but when the picture came out all that was seen of him was a shot of the back of his head as he played a piano, supposedly in a Western saloon. I believe he said he was paid $15,000 for that stint.

And now Our Hero, one of the most popular singers of his time, not only has a daughter doing well in the flickers but is to have his own life story told. I predict that we have not yet heard the last of Gene Austin on records. If the picture does well, there undoubtedly will be demands that he exercise that tenor voice again for the pleasure of "platter fans." That will be all to the good. Gene Austin is a fine fellow and a fine singer, and I wish him the best of luck in everything he does.

—o—

Since the foregoing article was written, Gene Austin, on the strength of the filmed story of his life, has been once more signed as a Victor recording artist. And 1957 bids fair to be a busy year for the veteran tenor, judging by the following news story in the December 26, 1956 issue of Variety:

GENE AUSTIN'S "COMEBACK TIME"
Kansas City, Dec. 25.

Singer Gene Austin has a heavy schedule ahead of him going into 1957. Here for a night club engagement in the Terrace Grill of the Hotel Muehlebach, Austin revealed he has upcoming a TV dramatic show, a film in the making, and a book in the background. Meanwhile he is keeping up a string of nitery dates, following the Muehlebach with the Key Club, Dallas.

Music is virtually completed for the story which will be presented on the "Alcoa Hour" on NBC-TV Feb. 15. Story is a page from Austin's life as a vaude headliner, recording star and night club performer, with incidental music. He has written the score entwining some of the hits with which he is identified with two new songs, "It May Be Too Late" and "What Do You Think I'm Made Of."

Story outline has been set and arrangements made in Hollywood for shooting of the picture dramatizing his career. Many details remain to be worked out on this, however, he said. The book, recently suggested by cartoonist Walt (Pogo) Kelly, has progressed to outline form. As an extra filip, he'll go to England in the spring to re-do the TV show on BBC.

MORE RECORDS BY TAURINO PARVIS AND GEORGE ROBEY

By JIM WALSH

Since my articles on the Italian baritone, Taurino Parvis, and the English music hall comedian, George Robey, were published I have learned of more records by both, which I feel should be mentioned.

Aida Favia-Artsay says she was surprised to find in her collection a copy of 10-inch record No. 42934, issued by the Societa Fonografica Napoletana of Italy, on which Parvis and the tenor, G. Martinez-Patti, sing "Solenne in ques' ora" from "La Forza Del Destino."

The other side (42935) is "Pace, mio Dio," from the same opera, sung by Appendin, a soprano. After saying the record should be played at a speed of 88, Aida remarks: "Your hero indeed does nobly by himself in this cut, hurried version of the duet; but the tenor may at best be classified as mediocre. Not forgetting Appendin—the poor girl, beautiful voice and all, can do no more than produce a patch-up job with a badly slashed adaption of Leonora's lengthy piece."

Marvin Smissman of St. Louis points out a Zon-o-phone Parvis record I missed: No.1 2585, Faust—Dio Possente, which appears in the February, 1908, Spanish Zon-o-phone catalog and presumably was made for the South American market.

Also mentioned by Mr. Smissman are the following 12-inch Parvis records in the British Pathé catalog for September, 1920:

5256—Otello—Credo, parts 1 and 2.
5257—Pagliacci—"So ben che lo schermo";
Re di Lahore—"O casto fior."
5258—Cavalleria Rusticana—"Sortito di Alfio"; Amleto—Brindisi.

In the January HOBBIES I said I had found no George Robey records listed prior to 1907. Since then I have discovered he made several two-minute Edison cylinders in 1904 and 1905. They were recorded in London and are:

November, 1904—13090, "What

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Large collection tune disc for Imperial Symphonion music boxes. 13½" size. Write for list of titles at reasonable prices.—Herbert Hulse, Cuddebackville, New York. je6238

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15½", 20¾", 27", 32" Criterion 2½"; Mira 6¾", 9¾", 18½"; Monarch 15½"; Orphonon 16½"; Stella 14"; Thorens 4½". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. mh3806

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. apl2461

FOR SALE: Ampico, Duo Art, Welte reproducing rolls, Mills Violano rolls.—A. Mueller, 109 Briar Lane, Rochester 9, New York. mhl861

26 WALTZ MELODIES
from Rare Old Music Boxes
ON 12" Hi-Fi 33½ Microgroove Record

The ORIGINAL - AUTHENTIC
"OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES"
HEAR — Skater's Waltz, Merry Widow,
Invitation to the Dance, Danube,
After the Ball, A Sunday Afternoon,
Treasure Waltz, etc., etc. from 5 rare old music boxes on this record:

RCB-4 $3.95 Postpaid

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham, N. Y.

PELHAM 8-1506

Free lists other recordings, all types of
music boxes.
(Originally established in Switzerland 1825)
myc

Funny Things You See"; 13098—"A Very Deserving Case"; 13104—"Cruel To Be Kind"; 13017—"I Bow To Superior Knowledge"; 13109—"The Idea"; and 13110—"Poor Thing."

(Robey evidently had made other records, for the Talking Machine News commented, "This popular music hall humorist has certainly advanced in the art of record making.")

March, 1905—13164, "The Roman Gladiator"; 13165—"Say No More About It"; 13167—"The Mayor of Mudcumdyke"; 13179—"As a Friend"; and 13182—"The Prehistoric Man."

April, 1905—13203, "I Said 'Oh!'", and 13208, "Salad, Substantial and Thick."

Mr. Smissman also lists the following which appeared in the 1917 His Master's Voice catalog:

10-inch

B-465—The Prehistoric Man; Not That I Wish To Say Anything.
B-466—The Mormon's Song; Wait Till The Work Comes Round (sung by Gus Elen).

12-inch

C-426—The Servants' Registry Office; The Editress.
C-546—And Very Nice, Too!; Archibald, Certainly Not!
C-547—Bang Went The Chance of a Lifetime; Good Queen Bess.
C-548—Hey, Ho, What Might Have Been! More In Sorrow Than In Anger.
C-549—I Think I Shall Sleep Well Tonight; Mrs. B.
C-550—Tempt Me Not; the Barrister.
C-551—The Manager of the Splitz Hotel; The Mayor of Mudcumdyke.
C-552—The Pro's Landlady; President of the Republic.
C-553—The Witness; You've a Very Nice Day For It, Too.
C-570—Worse, Much Worse; Robin Hood.
C-571—I Don't Think It Matters; We Parted The Best Of Friends.
C-617—And That's That; Cohen Rings Up His Tailor (Tom Clare).

ELISABETH SCHUMANN

(Continued from page 29)

mann, nevertheless, did build for herself an enviable reputation, but chiefly as an interpreter of classical songs, and particularly of Mozart's works. On the strength of what her records disclose, hers was an outstanding voice, not large but of lovely quality, backed by artistic perception of wide scope. Despite claims to perfectionism, however, her singing was not entirely free from blemish. While such things as occasional tonal insecurity and a broken word in difficult passages are understandable, there is no explanation for the absence of chest support in her low register, nor for the persistent failure to close trills with the required turn—the first a vocal and the second a musical fault, and both quite undesirable in a finished singer's makeup.

Side 1 of Roco R6 opens with two selections from "Don Giovanni," Vedrai carino and Batti, batti, both sung in German, as are all other recordings on this LP with the exception of the Mozart Motet, which is done in Latin. Schumann's is a classical Zerlina, a refined and dignified peasant wench, even when she urges her Masetto to administer her a thrashing for the escapade with the irresistible Don of which he suspects her. Mozart is well treated here, for all three parts of his Motet (Kochel's No. 165) are given, which is certainly welcome because most of the time all one hears of this magnificent work is the third and last part, the Alleluja.

On Side 2, first comes a virginal rendition of the Jewel Song, followed by an expressively and beautifully sung Quel bonheur ie respire from "Fra Diavolo." The spiritedness of "Der Wildschütz" is succeeded by the playful mood of "Hansel und Gretel," and the disc is happily concluded with Richard Strauss' gentle tonal scene, portraying the three Kings in quest of Bethlehem.

—A.F.A.

WILLIAM DUPREE

Everyone who attended the September, 1948, John Bieling Day observance at the Garden City Hotel, Garden City, New York, will recall the 18-year-old Roanoke, Virginia, boy, William Dupree, who sang for the guests. In December, 1948, HOBBIES Jim Walsh quoted the late Reinald Werrenrath as saying Dupree had "a naturally sweet voice and a true feeling for singing and with proper training should go far as a concert artist." The prediction has come true. For the past several years, Dupree, now 27, has been a member of the Singing Sergeants unit of the American Air Force. He has toured almost a score of countries and has sung as soloist for the Queen of The Netherlands. And, within recent months he starred in the Oscar Hammerstein production of "Carmen Jones" at the City Center, New York. Critics for New York papers termed his singing and acting sensational. This photo was taken about eight years ago, before Dupree's military service, when he was employed by Radio Station WSLs in Roanoke. Dupree's father is a barber and his mother a school teacher.

William Dupree

CIRCUSIANA

By DANA STEVENS

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Q: What is a rosin-back horse?

A: The jockey-act horses are known as rosin-backs, and of all circus horse-folk they are most docile, the most loveable, and certainly the most romantic. Usually they are the Percherons and the Belgians with broad and roomy backs, but they may be anything. Any horse with a well-rounded croup, not too heavy, but with a spacious back will make a rosin-back. Sometimes they are called bareback horses because they do not have saddles upon their backs when they perform.

Q: One night I watched a bunch of horses in what was called a Liberty Act. What was it?

A: "Liberty Act" is circus jargon for mass horse drills, and is so named because the horses are riderless and seem to perform at liberty. Whip cues, or a ringmaster's voice, take the place of a rider. Kentucky-bred horses are usually used in this kind of an act.

Q: Do you know of the origin of the famous Lion and Gladiator wagon?

A: The origin of this wagon is obscure. It was used by Hagenbeck-Wallace in parades until 1934, and made its final appearance in the 1945 Ringling spectacle. It is now housed in the Museum of the American Circus at Sarasota, Fla.

Q: Where are circus horses bought?

A: Circus horses are bought today just as the wagon shows bought them a hundred years ago. They get them wherever they find them. However, the circus scouts sometimes attend the major sales in search for just the individual or type they want.

Q: Has there been more than one Madison Square Garden?

A: Yes. The original Madison Square Garden was located at 26th Street and Madison Avenue. P. T. Barnum opened here in 1873. The second Madison Square Garden was erected on the same site in 1890. The present Madison Square Garden, at 49th Street and Eighth Avenue, was opened in 1925.

Q: Who was James McSorley?

A: James McSorley once had a world-wide reputation for training chimpanzees. He is said to have first trained a chimpanzee to ride a bicycle while wearing shoes. Mr. McSorley also had the reputation for keeping his chimps alive in captivity longer than any other trainer in the business. His circus career started sometime in 1897. He passed away in 1954.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

THE RECORD MAKERS GIVE A CONCERT IN PULASKI, VIRGINIA, 40 YEARS AGO

By "Q. X. Z."

"Guest conducting" for JIM WALSH

(Note by Jim Walsh.—I am proud to present this month what I think is one of the most interesting articles ever to appear in Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists. The article was submitted by a woman who lived as a girl in Pulaski, Virginia, where the troupe which became known afterward as the Eight Famous Victor Artists gave a concert in April, 1917—40 years ago.

The article came to me as a letter in long-hand and was supplemented at intervals by other handwritten notes jotted down as more facts of that long-gone concert by eight fine artists, all now dead, surged upward in the lady's memory. This mass of material was sent with only one stipulation—that no clue be given as to the writer's identity, "because," as she put it, "I don't want the people in the place where I live now to know I'm old enough to have attended a concert 40 years ago." For reasons known best to herself, my correspondent asked that she be given the "pen-name" of Q. X. Z.

I think you will agree that "Q. X. Z." has achieved a near miraculous feat of almost total recall in setting down the details of a musical event that occurred considerably more than half a life time ago. In an effort to supplement the few spots in which her memory has proved defective, I went to Pulaski, about 60 miles from Vinton, where I live, and asked for permission to examine the Southwest Times' bound volume for 1917. The request was courteously granted, but I experienced frustration when I discovered the volume contained the files for every month except April! I had hoped to find a review of the concert, which would fill in the gaps in my correspondent's recollection of what happened 40 years ago, but it was not so to be! The only way I can account for the omission is by recalling that the United States entered the First World War in April, 1917, and surmising that copies of the paper sold so briskly that month none were left for the files. But even without the background material which I had hoped to supply, Q. X. Z.'s remarkable article is well able to stand on its own feet.

In addition to editing the manuscript and reducing it to chronological order, I have also inserted some information unknown to Q. X. Z. about the artists and their personalities. I have done this as a part of the narrative and have not considered it necessary to differentiate my own contributions from hers.

So, with a deep bow of appreciation to a lady with a marvelous memory, here is Q. X. Z.'s account of the events preceding the concert given by the Record Makers 40 years ago, and of the concert itself.

J. W.

II "You Know These Boys!"

My dear Mr. Walsh: I have read HOBBIES for many years and your Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists has always been my favorite department. You have so often mentioned your admiration for the singers and musicians who became known as the Eight Famous Victor Artists and have referred so frequently to your friendship with some of them in their later years that I wonder if you would be interested in my recollections of a concert which the original group gave in my old home town of Pulaski, Virginia, as long ago as 1917. I still consider the night on which I heard those peerless performers sing and play to have been the greatest event of my life, and most of the details of the concert are as clear to me as if they had happened week before last. In the hope that you will be interested I shall set down my memories from time to time and, when I have done all the "damage" I can do, possibly you will consider making a HOBBIES article from them, as a tribute to something wonderful that happened in the little town of Pulaski 40 years ago.

One afternoon in early spring, school being out for the day, I was walking down Main street in Pulaski on my way home. I had just become 16 the week before and I remember feeling very grown-up. Suddenly I saw a large poster, with blue letters on a white background, which had been pasted to a wall since the last time I had walked along there. As I read that poster, my head almost swam from excitement and I could hardly believe my eyes. It read very much like this:

Look! You Know These Boys!

They positively appear!

(Not a moving picture)

HENRY BURR, tenor
ARTHUR COLLINS, baritone
ALBERT CAMPBELL, tenor
THEODORE MORSE, pianist
THE STERLING TRIO
BILLY MURRAY, tenor
BYRON G. HARLAN, tenor
JOHN H. MEYER, basso
VESS L. OSSMAN, banjoist
THE PEERLESS QUARTET

At the bottom of the poster was the statement, in large letters, that the "boys" (I thought that an undignified way of referring to such a galaxy of sparkling stars) would appear in the Elks Theater at 8 p.m., Thursday, April 12, 1917. In much smaller type was the statement that they were managed by L. C. Mountcastle. (Incidentally, when Henry Burr became director of the Columbia Broadcasting System's Artists Bureau in 1929, he took Mountcastle with him as his assistant. Burr was really the organizer and manager of the troupe, and Mountcastle was its booking agent).

I could hardly get home fast enough to tell my mother about the wonderful thing that was going to happen. When my father came home from his work at the General Chemical plant of course we told him, too. About half an hour after I dashed in breathless to break the great news, my twin 12-year-old brothers came running in all excited. We were really a phonograph family. The big Brunswick with the Ultona reproducer that played both Pathé and needle cut records, which we had bought from S. B. Steger, was almost our family altar, and all of us regarded the leading popular record stars of the day as personal friends, virtually members of our home. Of course we had our individual preferences among the artists. My mother was a bit unhappy because her favorite, Ada Jones, was not to visit Pulaski, but was consoled by the knowledge that the runner-up in her affections, Billy Murray, would. My father's favorites were the Collins and Harlan duet team, but he was also extremely fond of Billy Murray and the banjo records of Ossman and Fred Van Eps.

As for the twins, both had a fierce and unswerving loyalty to Billy, whom they considered the funniest man in the world, but they also shared my father's love of banjo music. One boy insisted Van Eps was better than Ossman and pointed triumphantly to

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Rare Pieces For Sale

ALL SIZES AND TYPES

Expert Repairing

Original Factory Methods—All Work Guaranteed
(ESTIMATES AND APPRAISALS FREE)

BORNAND MUSIC BOX COMPANY

139 4th Ave. (Po. 8-1508)—PELHAM, N. Y.

the fact that Van Eps had made many Pathé records but Ossman hadn't made any. The other twin, an Ossman fan, was hilarious at the knowledge that Ossman was a member of the troupe that was coming to town, and shouted gleefully that "ol' Van Eps wasn't good enough to get in!" The other sturdily maintained: "Fred could-a got in if he wanted to! He jes' didn't want to!"

The choice of Big Sister—me—was first, last and always Henry Burr with Albert Campbell second, and Murray, third. I was at a very romantic stage of my girlhood, when I made up all sorts of romances in my mind about dream princes and that sort of thing, and in my imagination Henry Burr—tall, slender, black-haired, youthful and dashing—had long been my "fairy prince." That silvery tenor voice of his did amazing things to my emotions and I often told myself he was the man I was going to grow up and marry. I had no idea he was already married and his wife usually traveled with the troupe. Campbell's voice also stirred my romantic impulses, but, beautiful lyric tenor though it was, it somehow lacked the heart-stirring effects of Burr's. As for Billy Murray, I admired him extravagantly and could always laugh at his inimitable comic songs, but, like most girls of my generation, I preferred sentimentality in my popular music to humor.

Father summed up our sentiments when he said: "This family's got to go to that show even if we all sit in 'peanut heaven' (the gallery)." "You know," he added soberly, "this is most likely the only chance any of us will ever get to see these fellows. They're the greatest of their kind in the world, and I wouldn't miss it for a mint of money!"

III Preliminary Advertising and Anticipation

Within a few days an advertisement that seemed to echo my excited father's comment appeared in the Southwest Times. It was headed "World's Greatest Singers To Visit Pulaski," and began something like this: "Some of the world's greatest singers will visit Pulaski and appear in the Elks Theater on the night of April 12. Included are ----" then followed a list of the performers and a brief description of their outstanding talents. The ad had the effect of increasing my interest in Theodore Morse, who was described as one of the nation's foremost writers of popular songs, as indeed he was. I examined the labels of our hundreds of records and found that Mr. Morse had written many of the songs I liked best. So, although he was not a recording artist (he appears to have made only one record—a 1918 Pathé piano duet of "Jazzin' Around," with Abe Frankel as his partner), I was eager to see him. Although I understand that the Eight was known at that time as the Record Makers—later, as the Victor Record Makers

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS
Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

18th SEASON DIXIE RECORD CLUB 1635 duPont Building

Miami (32), Florida

OCCASIONAL RECORD AUCTIONS - Operatic & Concert VOCAL Selections by Great Singers of the Past and Present. Rarities of early vintage to recent cutouts. The bidder makes to price. List of realized prices sent to each bidder after the sale. Write for lists.

"F. R. P."

Famous Records of The Past
2060 1st Ave., New York, N.Y.
Jack L. Caidin

and true reproduction, 10" LP—$2.98, 12" LP—$3.98. Tax and postage prepaid.

Re-issues and re-recordings or rare and unusual phonograph records. Operatic, Theatrical, Political, Instrumental. The finest in quality
SEND FOR FREE BULLETINS!

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 476

Vinton, Va.
tfx

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that I know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

BRASS TUNING ARM FOR MILLS VIOLANO

$10.00 EACH

FOR SALE: Mills Violanos and other types coin-operated musical instruments. ALSO, WANTED: All types of this equipment and rolls for same.

WALBOX DISTRIBUTING CO.

3909 Main St. — Dallas, Texas — Tel. Victor 1671

Jly75c

This photo of the Record Makers was taken on the stage of Orem Temple in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., in April, 1917, the same month they gave their concert in Pulaski, Va. From left to right; Morse, Ossman, Campbell, Collins, Burr, Meyer, Murray and Harlan.

when Victor dealers began to sponsor their concerts—I do not recall that either the poster or the newspaper advertising referred to them by any group name. They became known as the Eight Famous Victor Artists when they signed an exclusive Victor contract in 1920.

A day or two before the concert, the Victor Company inserted an ad in the paper, headed something like "Famous Victor Artists to Visit Pulaski," and urging the public to go hear them "and learn for yourself how the Victrola reproduces their singing and playing with absolute fidelity." The ad continued, "Caruso (and a long list of other Red Seal artists) have no engagement in Pulaski, but through the Victrola you can hear them whenever and wherever you wish." A list of the Eight's latest Victor records was included (I remember Murray's was "Napoleon" and Burr's "Rolling Stones (They All Come Rolling Home Again)") and the readers were urged to go to Heuser-Patterson's, Jewelers, and hear them.

The great day itself came, to the mounting excitement of my family, although I got the impression the rest of Pulaski was able to take the event of the ages, as we regarded it, in stride. I remember my father's saying he had met Mayor E. W. Calfee and expressed surprise that so famous a group of entertainers would play as small a town as Pulaski. Mr. Calfee had replied the Pulaski engagement was primarily to break a "jump" from Atlanta to New York, where the performers were headed for the opening of the Big League baseball season, and that the concerts were a form of advertising which Victor and possibly other phonograph companies were subsidizing.

As I went to school that morning, I saw photos of the artists displayed on easels in front of the Elks Theater. One of the twins told us that afternoon, a sly grin on his face, that he had walked past and seen the pictures unguarded. The temptation was strong upon him to take the one of Billy Murray, showing that happy-go-lucky comedian wearing an infectious smile and a big cap. (A copy of this photo appeared in the October, 1954, HOBBIES). One or two people were hanging around the entrance, so he decided to walk down the street, wait a few minutes, then, when the coast was clear, "hook" the picture. He did, but when he came back, although the other photos were still in place, the Murray picture was gone. No doubt somebody else who madly admired Billy had taken the picture.

As for the other twin, he was at the depot that afternoon when the eight notables descended from the train. He bubblingly told us how thrilled he was when he heard a man with a deep bass voice (undoubtedly John Meyer) point to the Maple Shade Inn and ask, "What building is that?" He was so carried away that when I asked him what Henry Burr looked like it was clear he had no idea which was Burr, and didn't care. Instead, he scornfully asked: "Aw, who gives a darn about that ol' love song guy?"

IV Waiting for the Curtain To Go Up

We five were in our seats that
(Continued on page 34)

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Large collection tune disc for Imperial Symphonion music boxes. 13½" size. Write for list of titles at reasonable prices.—Herbert Hulse, Cuddebackville, New York. je6238

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15½", 20¾", 27", 32" Criterion 20¾"; Mira 6¾", 9¼", 18½"; Monarch 15½"; Orpheon 16½"; Stella 14"; Thorens 4½". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. je3806

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 223 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap124661

MELODEONS

BEAUTIFUL restored instruments. Also buy and repair, reasonable.—C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. ap6806

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

MILLS VIOLANO Virtuoso, excellent condition - many extra rolls.—G. T. Merriken, Route 2, Silver Spring, Md. my3652

WANTED: Cornet - shaped instrument with name "Zobo" stamped on bell.—F. H. Moynahan, Harwich, Mass. ap3068

MUST SELL our duplicate musical antiques as we have many new items for display and need space. Fully restored melodeons, grind organs, nickelodeons, player pianos, phonographs, music boxes, paper roll organs.—Musical Museum, Deansboro, N. Y. au62611

WANTED: Barrel & Street organs, Mills, Seeburg, Calliopes, Mechanical Pianos, Swiss & Regina Music Boxes, Phonographs, horn type, Antique Musical Instruments, literature on phonographs & Mechanical Instruments.—Kugler Music Co., 7 So. 6th St., Minneapolis, Minn. je3675

WANTED: Harp and Melodeon reasonable. State condition, price.—Mildred Brown, 2829 Texas St., Albuquerque, New Mexico. ap1821

26 WALTZ MELODIES from Rare Old Music Boxes ON 12" Hi-Fi 33⅓ Microgroove Record

NOSTALGIC

"OLD MUSIC BOX MELODIES"

FOR EASTER & MOTHER'S DAY GIFTS

HEAR Skater's Waltz, Merry Widow.

Invitation to the Dance, Danube.

After the Ball, A Sunday Afternoon

Treasure Waltz, etc., etc. from 5 rare old

music boxes on this record:

RCB-4 $3.95 Postpaid

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham, N. Y.

PElham 8-1506

Free lists other recordings, all types of

music boxes.

(Originally established in Switzerland 1925)

evening almost an hour before the performance was to begin. As my father had jokingly said, we sat in "peanut heaven," having agreed that the front row seats, costing 75 cents, would let us hear as well as if we were in the main body of the theater and give a better view of the stage. My father was dressed in his "Sunday-go-to-meetin'" suit and I thought he looked young and handsome. My mother, also wearing her best, surprised me by looking so pretty and girlish. My parents had married young and were still young people by modern standards, he 38 and she only 35, but I had been in the habit of thinking of them as hopelessly middle-aged. Out sitting "on high" had only one disadvantage. Programs weren't distributed in the gallery, and I didn't think to get one as we left the theater.

I had an impression of the Elks, ordinarily a movie house, being more attractively decorated than usual, but was especially interested in the lineup of phonographs on the stage in front of the curtain. All the leading dealers had placed machines on display. The Victrola was exhibited by Heuser-Patterson; the Columbia Gramophone by the Seagle Furniture Company; the Brunswick by S. B. Steger, and a huge Chippendale Official Laboratory Model New Edison stood in the center and seemed to dwarf the others. It was displayed by the Stevens Furniture Company. I was proud that our Brunswick at home was exactly like the one Mr. Steger was displaying and was sure we had the best phonograph in the world. At that time I had never heard an Edison or an Edison record. When I did, my idolatry of the Brunswick was gone forever.

One of my father's fellow General Chemical workers came in and sat down beside him, and they talked while waiting for the curtain to rise. Although the United States had declared war on Germany only six days before, I don't remember hearing them mention the fighting in Europe. Instead, they talked baseball. The General Chemical Company had a string of plants throughout the country and each plant had its own ball team. Father and friend agreed that, thanks to Pulaski's having acquired a fine pitcher named Ralph Worrell, but always called "Jargo," the home team's prospects were good for winning the G. C. championship. And, to anticipate a few months, Pulaski did achieve the amazing feat—as the twins never grew tired of recalling—of going through the entire 1917 season without losing a game and finally defeating Bayonne, New Jersey, for the championship. Worrell was both the pitching and hitting star, batting .456 for the season—a percentage that the awe-stricken chatter of the twins has forever burned into my memory. When he was bought by the Baltimore Orioles, my brothers were sure he would go on to become one of the greatest stars in baseball history, but an unkind fate stepped in and poor "Jargo," after doing splendidly in his first season with Baltimore, died in the flu epidemic of 1918.

As the time for the concert grew nearer, we began to hear the tinkle of a piano played by Teddy Morse, and the sounds of voices uplifted in scraps of practice singing, with the deep basso tones of John Meyer being especially prominent. One of the twins expressed suspicion that "they are just goin' to use records an' the men won't be here," but the one who had seen them get off of the train rebuked him. His suspicions were deepened, however, when just after the footlights had been turned up, there came from behind the curtain a chorus of rich male voices singing "Carry Me Back To Old Virginny." I was thrilled at the thought that they were singing James Bland's dear old song just for us, their only Virginia audience. Then the curtain slowly went up, and we were in the presence of, as the ad had said, "some of the world's greatest singers"—the Record Makers themselves!

V A Few Reflections About the Troupe

Before describing the concert, I must pause a few moments to reflect on the miracle that for the low cost of 75 cents I was privileged to see and hear so much remarkable talent—in the case of some of the artists, genius, might not be too strong a word. I can't imagine that there has ever been any other concert unit featuring the lighter type of music which included so much individual ability. And it was ability of a specialized kind. These men were the leading record makers because their gifts were exactly adapted to the techniques of singing or playing into a recording horn. Had Edison not invented the phonograph, they all, with the exception of "Teddy" Morse, probably would have been at best only minor figures in the American musical scene. But as recording artists they were supreme.

Then, too, they were such a varied group. Consider their backgrounds—Billy Murray, born in Philadelphia, was the son of an Irish-born blacksmith. Arthur Collins, also born in Philadelphia, had a Quaker sea captain for a father. Byron G. Harlan was born in a prairie schooner at Paris, Kansas, while his parents were traveling to South Dakota. John Meyer, of German descent, and born in New York City, had traveled with a circus band before becoming a singer. Vess L. Ossman, also of German descent, was the son of a baker in Hudson, New York. Young Vess made his first instrument by placing banjo strings on a bushel basket, and went on to win a New York championship by the time he was 20. Albert Campbell, a native New Yorker, was Irish and had begun his working career as an employee of the Corning Glass Works. Henry Burr, a Canadian of Scotch-Irish descent, was a "child prodigy," singing with military bands at the age of 13. And Theodore Morse, from Washington, D. C., was an instinctive composer, who could read a newly submitted song lyric and beat out the tune on a table with his fingers, as he did when he wrote "Down In Jungle Town" while vacationing in Maine.

Six members of the troupe would be included in almost anybody's list of the 15 or 20 greatest pioneer recorders—Murray, Burr, Collins, Harlan, Campbell and Ossman—and the first four would almost automatically go into a list of the greatest half dozen, with Ada Jones and Len Spencer, or perhaps Cal Stewart, in place of Spencer, taking the other two places.

Some of the artists used their real names, while others had modified them or, as in the case of Burr, taken a new one altogether. His real name was Harry McClaskey, and he also made records both as McClaskey and as Irving Gillette. Albert Campbell's full name was Albert Charles Campbell, and Collins' was Arthur Francis Collins. Byron G. Harlan was christened George Byron Harlan, and Vess L. Ossman had begun life as Sylvester Louis Ossman. Billy Murray had shortened his original name of William Thomas Murray. John Meyer was John Henry Meyer, and Morse was using his real name.

If, as the dictionaries say, middle-age is the period between 30 and 60, then all these performers were middle-aged. Henry Burr, the youngest, was 35. Billy Murray and John Meyer were pushing, but had not quite reached, 40. Teddy Morse was 43; Albert Campbell, 44; Vess Ossman 48; Arthur Collins, 53; and Byron Harlan, the oldest, 55.

A curious pattern may be observed in the way these men died. Ossman, the banjoist, was the first to go in 1923, followed by Morse, the only other instrumentalist, in 1924. There was not another death among the troupe personnel until 1933, when Collins died. His partner, Harlan, followed in 1936. Burr died in 1941 and his tenor duet partner, Campbell, in 1947. The sole remaining member of the Sterling Trio and the Peerless Quartet—Meyer, passed on in 1949; and Billy Murray, the last of the Eight, in 1954. Morse died of pneumonia; Campbell, Burr and Meyer of lingering illnesses, and the others of heart attacks.

At the time the concert was given, all the performers appeared to be at their peak, but some were, or soon would be in a decline. Murray, Burr, and the Trio and Quartet went on to increasing popularity for several years, but the World War made a sharp change in public tastes, and the "coon songs" and ragtime numbers which Collins and Harlan had sung with such great success were soon on their way out, to be succeeded by jazz. (The first jazz record, by "The Original Dixieland Jazz Band," appeared less than a month after the concert was given, in the May, 1917 Victor supplement). After the end of 1918, Collins and Harlan never made another Victor or Columbia record, although they continued to sing several years longer for smaller companies. Ossman, who couldn't get along with Burr and didn't remain long as a member of the organization, being succeeded by Van Eps, had made about all the records he was to make, and Morse, though he wrote several fairly successful songs during the next few years, had already composed all his big hits. The influence of war and jazz was soon to make a drastic change in the American popular song scene.

But on that night of April 12, 1917, probably not a person in the audience had ever heard the word "jazz," and no one had any suspicion of the many other changes that were to occur.

So, having obliged with this brief overture concerning the performers, let's raise the curtain and let the concert begin.

On with the show!

(To be continued)

"MC CORMACK MEMORIAL"

(Continued from page 29)

fame, McCormack's was more of a steady, secure climb to glory on a ladder of faith, hard work and determination. Born in Athlone, on June 14, 1884, at the age of eighteen and without a lesson in singing, John won a gold medal at the Feis Ceoil, the yearly music festival in Dublin. Shortly after, in 1904, he was engaged to sing in the Irish Village at the St. Louis Exposition. By this time his ambition was to take up singing seriously. Recommended to Vincenzo Sabatini, in Milan, he was readily accepted by the Maestro. During this period his recording career began when on a visit to London he made eight cylinders for Edison and, later, ten for the Edison Bell. These were followed by his G & T's, Sterling "Special" cylinders, Pathé's, Odeon's, and, finally, Victor's and HMV's. In December 1905, McCormack made his operatic debut in "L'Amico Fritz," in Savona, a little town near Genoa. Well received, he was engaged to do ten performances of "Faust" at the Teatro Verdi, in Santa Croce sull'Arno. Here, by the way, he was known as Giovanni Fali (an Italian adaptation of Foley, Countess McCormack's maiden name) because of the difficulty for the Italians to pronounce his Irish surname. From there on, outlining sketchily John's career: On Oct. 15, 1907, he first appeared at the Covent Garden, as Turiddu in "Cavalleria Rusticana." During 1909: in the spring he bowed at the San Carlo in Naples, as the Duke in Rigoletto; went back to Covent Garden for "La Bohème" with Melba, "La Traviata" with Tetrizzini and Sammarco, an appearance as Cassio in "Otello" with Melba, Zenatello and Scotti; and then on to New York for the opening of the Manhattan Opera season on November 10, in "La Traviata," again with his colleagues Tetrizzini and Sammarco. In the course of the 1910-11 season, he sang with the Boston Opera: in "Cavalleria" (Dec. 2) with "Carmen Melis," "La Bohème" (Dec. 3) with Alice Nielsen, another "Bohème" (Dec. 15) with Melba and Sammarco; and with the Chicago Opera, of which he also made part later, in the 1915-16, 1917-18 and 1918-19 seasons. His debut at the Metropolitan took place on November 29, 1910, in "La Traviata" with Melba and Gelfi. There his name re-appeared in the roster from 1912 to 1914 and, again, from 1917 to 1919, when he did "La Bohème" (Nov. 16, 1917) with Alda, De Luca, Didur and de Seguroia, and "Madame Butterfly" (Feb. 4, 1918) with Farrar, Fornia and Scotti. Meanwhile, in 1911, he visited Australia with Melba's own operatic company. Also, that same year, McCormack became a member of the newly-formed Chicago-Philadelphia Opera (formerly Manhattan Opera but no longer under Hammerstein), where he had the distinction of creating the part of Lieutenant Paul Merrill in Victor Herbert's "Natoma," with Mary Garden, Lillian Grenville, Mario Sammarco, Armand Crabbé, Gustave Huberdeau and Hector Dufranne in the cast. Aside from the above operas, his repertoire also included leading tenor roles in "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Tosca," "Don Giovanni" and "La Fille du Régiment," among others.

Numerous were the honors conferred upon John McCormack during his brilliant career, but it was when he was made Papal Count that his devout Catholic heart was gladdened beyond words. After he died in Dublin, on September 16, 1945, John was buried, as he wished, in the resplendent scarlet and gold Papal uniform, of which he was so infinitely and humbly proud.

As McCormack's operatic activities lessened, his work in recital increasingly absorbed his interest, until he completely dedicated himself to the concert stage and, luckily for us, to making records. Of the many discs he made for Victor and HMV, a number for some reason remained unpublished. Amazingly enough, some of these escaped destruction and are now being presented in the AGS "McCormack Memorial" issue, along with several of his most sought-after discs. And what better way is there to honor the memory of one as dearly loved as John McCormack? Here we find him oozing youthful liquid gold in his acousticals, and follow his vocal development progressively in the electricals, up to the age 58. The smoothly carved, cameo-like phrasing for which he was justly famed is displayed to the best advantage in two Donaudy songs, and in the Lieder of Schumann, Schubert and Brahms. To me it is always a gratifying experience to hear him in Art Songs, for while retaining the needed severity of line, he invests them with a warmth of color, a "bite" they are often robbed of by an erroneously conceived "classical" handling which forgets that they are musical pictures in the highest degree and must be interpreted as such. Of the electricals, particularly impressive are "The Little Boats," "The Dawn Will Break," "Passing By," "Charm Me Asleep," "When I Awake," "The Blind Ploughman," "At the Mid Hour of Night," "An Chloe," "Under the Spell of the Rose" and "Fallen Leaf." In most of the electrical recordings the tenor's voice is fresh and lustrous; a few of the later ones betray his age but reveal how well he knew and practiced what every aging singer should always bear in mind, i.e., stricter application than ever of "the school" when vocal limitations arise; but in all discs without exception—he is the one and only John McCormack!

ANNIVERSARY RECORDS

In 1946 the Bormand Music Box Company of 139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y., began making their first phonograph recordings of old music box tunes. As the demand for these has grown the company has continued to improve them. For the tenth anniversary of the first recordings they have published some High Fidelity 33 1/3 Microgroove recordings of Christmas songs, old waltzes, folk songs, children's songs and others. They also have 78 rpm and 45 rpm recordings. We recently had the pleasure of hearing "Music Box Waltz Melodies." This disc has a total of 26 old waltz tunes which adds up to 45 minutes of delightful music. If these recordings don't bring back the old music boxes we don't know what will. Some of the tunes on this recording are: Merry Widow Waltz, On a Sunday Afternoon, After the Ball, Skaters' Waltz, Edelweiss Glide and many other popular songs of an earlier era. The music comes from two Swiss cylinder music boxes and four of the disc music boxes including the 20 disc Regina.

Perhaps it is poetic justice that the invention of the phonograph by Thomas A. Edison which caused the eclipse of the music box in the early part of this century may be the means of causing renewed interest in these fine old instruments.

—Virginia Ruth Smith.

—o—

Sentiment is the poetry of the imagination.

—Lamartine

—o—

Your sole contribution to the sum of things is yourself.

—Frank Crane

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

THE RECORD MAKERS GIVE A CONCERT IN PULASKI, VIRGINIA, 40 YEARS AGO

(Continued from the April issue)

By "Q. X. Z."

"Guest conducting" for JIM WALSH

VI. THE CURTAIN GOES UP AND THE CONCERT BEGINS

As the last strains of "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" died away, the curtain slowly ascended and revealed a group of men scattered informally about the stage. I tried hard to make myself realize that at last I was having an experience I had never, until a few weeks ago, had any idea of enjoying. I was seeing some of my favorite recording artists in the flesh. Although the names of most of these men had been familiar to me since I was a tiny girl, I had never really thought of them as ordinary mortals in spite of my dreams of growing up to marry Henry Burr. They had seemed like Olympian gods, remote and aloof and far removed from any chance of my ever beholding them. Yet here they were and here I was!

As I strove to realize my good fortune, one of the twins whispered indignantly: "Hey, they're cheatin'—ain't but seven guys on the stage!" I hurriedly counted and surely enough there were only seven, including Theodore Morse, already seated at the piano. While I was wondering who was missing, the group onstage started singing "Are You From Dixie?" (to my ears one of the best popular songs ever written) and I felt myself tingling, for they were singing it just like the Peerless Quartet did on our Pathe record at home. It WAS the Peerless Quartet singing and they were using the same arrangement as the one on the record.

A tenor voice began, "Hello there, stranger, how do you do?" and I gaspingly recognized it as Henry Burr's. A baritone replied, "You'll pardon me, but I don't know you," giving a sort of ragtime break between the last four words, and I knew it was Arthur Collins. They continued their duet until the chorus was reached, and Campbell and Meyer joined in. The song was concluded to hearty applause, and the seven seated themselves in front of the footlights.

During a brief pause I took occasion to collect my thoughts and find out how the artists compared in reality with the way I had imagined them. I was surprised at the sheer bulk of Collins and Harlan.

Both were tall, fat men, and Collins was dark and swarthy. When he sat down he blinked his eyes and gave what I thought a silly looking smile. It made me suspect that at some time he had been an end man in a minstrel show and had unconsciously fallen into his old-time black-face comedy grin. Albert Campbell had jet black hair and was a surprisingly little fellow, not much over five feet tall. John Meyer, whom I had recognized because of his bass voice, was tall, slender and getting bald. Teddy Morse, as best I could tell from his seated position, was short and wore glasses. He kept a smile on his face throughout the concert and seemed to be enjoying himself. That left only one man and I wasn't sure whether he was Billy Murray or Vess Ossman. Since he looked to me the youngest of the group and I had always imagined Murray a perpetual 25, in spite of the years he had been making records, I decided it was probably Billy.

But my idol, Henry Burr! One look at him and my dream picture was devastatingly demolished. Instead of the tall, slender, black-haired fairy prince of whom I had dreamed, my hero appeared as an unmistakably fat man of middle height. Whatever the original color of his hair, it was now almost entirely gray. His face was puffy, with bags under the eyes, and I thought his complexion appeared pasty. He looked to me to be over 50, whereas, as I have already said, he was only 35.

It was Burr who arose, with what seemed to me a look of mingled sadness and annoyance on his face. I wondered if he was provoked because the eighth man wasn't on stage. In a somber voice, he said: "Kate O'Donohue," sung by Mr. Albert Campbell," then sat down again. My romantic instincts got the best of me, and I decided from his seemingly sad bearing that he had been "disappointed in love," or as the teenagers would say today, "was carrying a torch." The thought was nonsense, since he was happily married, but that was something I didn't know. Whatever the reason for his expression, I can't remember seeing him or Al Campbell smile the entire evening, but I have been told Campbell was among the most cheerful of men.

Campbell walked to the center of the stage and in his exquisitely high lyric tenor voice began singing "Kate O'Donohue," which the program described as "an old Irish song." I imagine it was a number he had recorded on cylinders back in the '90's, but the only record I know of that he made of it was a Paroquette, for the Par-o-ket Record Company headed by Henry Burr. Nothing was said during the program to indicate that Burr, besides singing for virtually all other phonograph manufacturers, had a small (and short-lived) record company of his own.

The song had a pretty waltz tune and Campbell sang it beautifully, but it was not the sort of thing to warm up a Southwest Virginia audience and its reception was lukewarm. Little Al then sang an encore, which I'm ashamed to say I can't remember, but I have been told he ordinarily used "Little Mother of Mine" for that purpose.

Five of the Record Makers in the story of the J. H. Troup Music Co., Harrisburg, Pa., in April, 1917. Left to right: Morse, Harlan, Ossman, Collins and Campbell, Burr, Murray and Meyer were not present.

While he was singing, a short, rather stocky man, appearing to be perhaps five feet six, came in from backstage, and sat down. Once he coughed, but carefully put his hand over his mouth to keep the sound from carrying. When Campbell had finished and had taken his bow — for many days afterward I was fascinated by recalling the intent, unsmiling appearance of his face as he inclined his head — the late arrival arose, came up front and began to speak.

VII BILLY MURRAY TAKES OVER

As soon as a broad smile flashed across his face and words came from his lips I knew this was the twins' hero of heroes, Billy Murray! His speaking voice seemed a trifle husky and was a bit deeper than the one we were used to on records. One of the twins whispered: "Huh, this feller don't sound much like I thought he did!"

Billy began by saying he wanted to make an apology. Somewhere between Atlanta and Pulaski, he said, the trunks of two of the members of the troupe had been lost and they were compelled to appear in street clothes instead of the evening attire the other six were wearing. (Billy himself was one of the unfortunates, and the other was Ossman.) He then referred affectionately to Al Campbell as "the young fellow" (incidentally giving the wrong impression that Al, in spite of his coal black hair, was the oldest member of the outfit) and said: "When I first started in this business in 1897—"

That was another bit of disillusion. If Billy Murray had begun making records twenty years ago he couldn't possibly be the 25 my family had always imagined him. All of us thought he had begun about ten years before, at the age of 15. At once I overestimated his real age by half a dozen years by telling myself he might be forty-five, and the other twin said:

"Huh, this feller's older'n I thought he was!"

"When I first started in this business in 1897," Billy went on, "The Young Fellow" was at the height of his career, and judging by the way he sounds tonight he's still going good." It was also disillusioning to know that Al Campbell had been making records before 1897, even though he still appeared young.

Billy, as master of ceremonies, then introduced Henry Burr and John Meyer as a duet team, but I don't remember what he said about them. I'm sure he didn't repeat the crack he had made at an earlier concert. Observing that Burr was bow-legged and Meyer knock-kneed, he had told the audience: "When they stand side by side their knees spell OX." This had annoyed both Henry and John, just as Collins and Harlan had resented his jokingly calling attention to their weight by tagging them "the Half-Ton Duo."

Burr and Meyer sang Frederick F. Bullard's "Hunting Song from 'King Arthur,'" and in spite of the conventional black they were wearing I somehow got the impression they had on hunting costumes and were brandishing whips. My family didn't go in much for "high-brow music" and we afterwards agreed we considered this the poorest number of the program. It got scanty applause from an audience which, except for its appreciation of "Are You From Dixie?" hadn't yet warmed up. There was, of course, an encore, but again I don't remember what. For some reason, my recollection of the second half of the concert is much clearer than of the first. Why, oh why, didn't I save a program? What I'd give for one now!

Arthur Collins was next, and Billy confided to the listeners that Collins was known to the other troupe members as "Old Joe, the Pirate" — "Uncle Joe" from the success he'd had in singing one of Teddy Morse's songs, "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag On His Old Banjo," and the "pirate" because he was so dark and swarthy and his father had owned a ship.

Collins sang something — again

I can't recall what — and then Billy said that by special request, his encore would be what it always was, "The Preacher and the Bear," or "The Grizzly's Dessert," as we call it on Long Island." And then occurred one of the high spots of the program as Collins swung into the irresistible lilt of probably the most popular old-time comedy record ever made, with his fellow troupers, sitting in a semi-circle around him, joining in the chorus in a way that made the theatre reverberate. He was rapturously applauded, and the house warmed up and stayed warm from that time. At the conclusion all the members of the troupe filed off the stage.

Billy next appeared alone, walk-

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.).
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIAVENTE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York

ANNOUNCEMENT!

Shop will be closed from April 28th to June 1st. After June 1st, I can again be of service to you. Off to Europe.

GEORGE A. BIDDEN
Barrington, Rhode Island

myc

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Rare Pieces For Sale
ALL SIZES AND TYPES

Expert Repairing

Original Factory Methods—All Work Guaranteed
(ESTIMATES AND APPRAISALS FREE)

BORNAND MUSIC BOX COMPANY

139 4th Ave. (Po. 8-1506)—PELHAM, N. Y.

tlc

BRASS TUNING ARM FOR MILLS VIOLANO

$10.00 EACH

FOR SALE: Mills Violanos and other types coin-operated musical instruments.
ALSO, WANTED: All types of this equipment and rolls for same.

WALBOX DISTRIBUTING CO.

3909 Main St. — Dallas, Texas — Tel. Victor 1671

jlj75c

18th SEASON DIXIE RECORD CLUB 1635 duPont Building

Miami (32), Florida

OCCASIONAL RECORD AUCTIONS - Operatic & Concert VOCAL Selections by Great Singers of the Past and Present. Rareties of early vintage to recent cutouts. The bidder makes to price. List of realized prices sent to each bidder after the sale. Write for lists.

tlc

ing in time to something that Morse always played for his entrances. It sounded like a few bars from "Hail Columbia," but probably wasn't. He said "The Nickle-Plate - oh pardon me, the Sterling Trio" would be next heard from. I had been wondering who the members of the Sterling Trio were, since they were not identified in the record catalogs, and was interested to see that they were Campbell, Burr and Meyer — the Peerless Quartet with Collins dropped out.

Once more my memory doesn't function. I can't recall what they sang, but since "Georgia Moon," their first Victor record, had been highly popular, they probably began with it. I suspect, but again I can't be certain, that they concluded with "Indiana," which was to be their biggest selling record of the year. We acquired it a few months later on a Pathe disc and considered it one of the most beautiful records in our collection.

VIII VESS OSSMAN BRINGS DOWN THE HOUSE

Next occurred THE high spot of the evening. I can't remember what Billy said to introduce Vess L. Ossman, "The Banjo King," other than that he was known to his friends as "Plunks," but I observed my twin brother who adored Vess gazing at the stage with heaven in his eyes, while the Van Eps fancier tried to maintain a contemptuous indifference. Ossman, who as I have already said, looked surprisingly young, took a seat and tuned his banjo for what seemed an unconscionable time. But when he was satisfied with its condition, his fingers fairly flew across

MELODEONS

BEAUTIFUL restored instruments. Also buy and repair, reasonable.—C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. ap6806

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

MILLS VIOLANO Virtuoso, excellent condition - many extra rolls.—G. T. Merriken, Route 2, Silver Spring, Md. my3652

WANTED: Cornet - shaped instrument with name "Zobo" stamped on bell.—F. H. Moynahan, Harwich, Mass. ap3063

MUST SELL our duplicate musical antiques as we have many new items for display and need space. Fully restored melodeons, grind organs, nickelodeons, player pianos, phonographs, music boxes, paper roll organs. — Musical Museum, Deansboro, N. Y. au62611

WANTED: Barrel & Street organs, Mills, Seeburg, Calliopes, Mechanical Pianos, Swiss & Regina Music Boxes, Phonographs, horn type, Antique Musical Instruments, literature on phonographs & Mechanical Instruments. — Kugler Music Co., 7 So. 6th St., Minneapolis, Minn. je3675

MELODEONS. Fully restored Melodeons, reasonable. Stop in or write for list.—Chet's Shop, 91 Union St., Manchester, Conn. jly3882

the strings as he swung into the rollicking melodies of his biggest selling record, one which we had in our collection, the "Turkey in the Straw Medley."

He began with "Dixie" and that was enough to set an audience of Southwestern Virginia mountain people half wild. He followed with "The Sailor's Hornpipe," "The Arkansas Traveler," and, finally, with "Turkey in the Straw," just as on his Victor record. Before he had struck the last notes of the favorite "Turkey" tune, the men in the audience were on their feet, yelling their heads off, and the women were shrieking hysterically. I was among those who were screaming — perhaps very much as the kids today do about Elvis Presley. My father and his General Chemical friend were on their feet, shouting for all they were worth. I looked at the twins. They too were up and yelling. The one who preferred Van Eps and pretended to disdain Ossman was making as much noise as anyone else. For five minutes at least the Elks Theatre was a bedlam of shouting, shrieking and hand-clapping, while Ossman, perhaps somewhat surprised at the ovation he was getting, looked positively boyish as he smilingly took dozens of bows.

In most other parts of the country, a banjoist probably would not have scored the individual triumph of the concert, but the banjo was, and still is, the favorite instrument of Southwestern Virginians, and when a man who played as well as Ossman did led off with a medley of beloved Southern tunes — well, the sky was the limit. Finally, he again seated himself and obliged with his encore, "A Footlight Favorite." When he finally left the stage, it is likely he had received the biggest reception of his entire career with the Record Makers.

IX. I Hear My Hero

Billy Murray's smile was even broader as he emerged from the wings and said: "We will next hear from the 'matinee idol' of our troupe, Mr. Henry Burr." (Burr was also, of course, the organizer and manager, but Billy didn't mention that).

If the audience had shouted itself into a frenzy at the music of Vess Ossman's banjo, it gave Burr perhaps the greater tribute of almost unbroken silence. The puffy-faced gray-haired tenor began with "Somewhere a Voice is Calling." I have heard that song hundreds of times since, but never as my long-time idol, Henry Burr, sang it that night. The audience seemed to be holding its collective breath, although my father's friend did whisper, "He's got a perfect vocal chord!" The sweetness, the breath control, the expressiveness that the man who was to be known on radio many years afterward as "The Dean of Ballad Singers," put into that hackneyed ballad is something I shall never forget. When he finished there was sheer, trembling silence for a moment and then what seemed a burst of almost reverent applause. He followed with "My Dreams," a Tosti song that was one of the few approaches to "high-brow" music in the entire concert, and did it with equal beauty. This was a favorite song of Burr's, one of which he had made Columbia and Zonophone records at the beginning of his career. Some weeks later, I bought the Victor record of "Somewhere a Voice" which he had made under his real name, Harry McClaskey, but in recorded form it didn't seem half as beautiful as it had direct from his throat on that enchanted April evening.

Billy Murray's smile stretched from ear to ear as he again appeared. "Next," he said, "is the only Red Seal artist in our troupe—the one who is making John McCormack and all the other matinee idols head for the tall timber—Billy Murray." The twins, both of whom came away from the theater with the impression that the short Mr. Murray was the tallest and most commanding appearing member of the ensemble, were in ecstasies with this bit of mock-boastful humor from one of the most modest of men. We all listened with joy as he sang in his own inimitable way three numbers, "He May Be Old But He's Got Young Ideas," "I've Got the Sweetest Girl in Maryland," and "Here Comes the Groom." I noticed there was no trace of the nasal quality that phonographs sometimes put into his records.

Billy also got an ovation. As the uproar died down, he said: "I have two announcements to make. The first is, you people certainly haven't (Continued on page 34)

MUSIC BOXES

FOR SALE: Large collection tune disc for Imperial Symphonion music boxes. 13 1/2" size. Write for list of titles at reasonable prices.—Herbert Hulse, Cuddebackville, New York. je6238

FOR SALE: Tune discs for Regina 15 1/2", 20", 27", 32" Criterion 20 1/2"; Mira 6 1/2", 9 1/2", 18 1/2"; Monarch 15 1/2"; Orphonion 16 1/2"; Stella 14"; Thorens 4 1/2". State size wanted. Lists.—Insley C. Looker, South Maple Ave., Basking Ridge, N. J. je3806

FOR SALE: Regina Music Boxes, 15 1/2" disc, hardwood plain finish. Discs also available, include 10 discs, $125., including crating and shipping.—B. Shirar, 289 Divisadero, San Francisco, Calif. jly3844

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 223 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap124601

FOR SALE: Multiple-tune piano rolls for coin-operated pianos. Many styles, send wants. List and prices furnished. Also some home player rolls.—B. Shirar, 289 Divisadero, San Francisco, Calif. jly3844

ROLLS FOR SALE A. G. O. M. Clarke, Wurlitzer and many others. Price $5 to $15 each.—Dodge House Museum, 2208 W. Chestnut, Dodge City, Kans. je3004 got handcuffs on. The second is, there will now be a short intermission."

X. The Final Half Begins

During the ten-minute intermission, my father and his friend, after talking rapturously of Ossman's banjo playing and praising the troupe in general, resumed their discussion of the prospects for the Chemical baseball plant having a winning team. I sat twisting a handkerchief. I was happy, even if disillusioned in the appearance and ages of most of my demigods.

When the curtain went up again, Morse was back at the piano, and Billy walked over and laid a hand on his shoulder. "Next," he said, "we'll hear a medley of Teddy Morse's old song hits. This is Teddy," he added, and Morse turned and faced the audience, focusing a wide smile through his large glasses. Billy stood beside him and called out the titles of the songs as Teddy struck into the choruses. When he started "Dear Old Girl," Billy remarked: "He had to rehearse this one a week before he could play it." Of "Down In Jungle Town," he said: "This song made a big hit with the big game hunter, Theodore Roosevelt." "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag on His Old Banjo," brought the comment: "We ought to hear from Uncle Vess on this one," and, surely enough, Ossman, behind the scenes, played along with Morse. Other songs Teddy played were "A Little Boy in Blue," "Salvation Nell," "Arrah Wanna," "I've Taken Quite a Fancy to You," "Keep a Little Cozy Corner in Your Heart For Me," "Bobbins' Up and Down" and "Mo-t-h-e-r, a Word That Means the World to Me." I wondered why Burr hadn't sung the latter, since it had been one of his biggest selling records. The Morse medley was enough to convince the audience that Teddy had really written his share of big hits.

The program, I imagine, was beginning to run a little over schedule, for Billy contented himself on his next appearance with saying, "Campbell and Burr. Duets," Little Al and Big Henry first struck into "Where the Black-Eyed Susans Grow," which was their duet record in the April Victor list, and for an encore gave a number that was soon to sweep the nation, "For Me And My Gal." A few months later Pathé issued it sung by them. We bought the record and on listening to it on our Brunswick it seemed to me the reproduction was absolutely perfect—precisely as I had heard it coming from the black-haired little fellow and the bulky big fellow on the stage. A touch of comedy which I imagine few of the audience caught came when Campbell and Burr were walking off stage. Just before they disappeared, Campbell, walking behind his big partner, kicked him, and Burr reached down, picked him up and carried him behind the scenes. That was the only thing either did the whole evening that seemed to indicate a sense of humor.

XI. Billy Murray's Private Joke

When Billy Murray next appeared he was smiling as though at something funny that had just occurred to him. He said: "Next on the program is a bass solo by the only member of our troupe who has ever been able to go a week without taking a drink—Mr. John Meyer."

My mother gave a little gasp of disapproval. "I wouldn't have thought any of these fine singers drank!" she said to my father. I have no way of knowing whether the remark was one of Billy's stock witticisms or whether it was spontaneous, but from the broad smile long tall, bald John Meyer wore all the time he was singing, I suspect it was something he had just heard for the first time. (It occurs to me now that Burr and Meyer were the only members of the troupe who sang from music, although of course Morse had a stack of it on the piano). Meyer sang superbly what I have since learned was his standard lead-off number, "Keep the Home Fires Burning." Then in his deep, resonant voice, he announced: "Mr. Morse's latest success—'Love's Lullaby,'" pronouncing "lullaby" as if it ended with a short i, instead of a long i, sound.

"Sing Me Love's Lullaby," to give it its full name, was a beautiful, dreamy song, for which Teddy's wife had written the words under the pen name of Dorothy Terriss. She had met Morse as a girl of 15 or 16 when she brought him the words of a song, "Girlie, I Love You," and asked him to set it to music. He did, and it was recorded for Victor by his old friend, Billy Murray. (The first car Billy ever owned he bought from Morse). Within a few years they were married, and Mrs. Morse had since written the words of most of her husband's songs under the assumed names of D. A. Esrom and Dorothy Terriss. (Esrom was Morse spelled backward).

I understand that in succeeding concerts, Morse himself gave a talk, relating interesting anecdotes in connection with the composing of his song hits, but he didn't say a word on this occasion. He also could have surprised the audience if he had wished by giving a violin solo, for he was a skilled violinist as well as pianist. As for the remark about Meyers' being the only trouper who could go a week without a drink, that was just a sly dig and a private joke of Billy's. Most of the members, including Murray, I have since learned, were tee-totalers, and Meyer was the only one whose fondness for the bottle caused Burr any worry.

XII. The Last Part of the Concert

After Meyer came Byron G. Harlan, introduced by Murray as "a neighbor of Thomas A. Edison in West Orange, New Jersey, and the only member of the troupe who can call Mr. Edison 'Tom' to his face without being thrown out." Harlan, a specialist in "rube" songs, sang "He's Getting Too Darn Big for a One-Horse Town" and "Way Down East Where I Belong." While he sang the latter, Al Campbell sat nearby in a chair and blew a tin whistle at an appropriate point. The genial Byron G.'s rustic witticisms went over big.

Billy Murray re-appeared to announce the Peerless Quartet. He pretended to get his tongue twisted, and said: "The Beerless - Tearless - Fearless - Peerless—that's it—the Peerless Quartet."

Then occurred what seemed to be the only temporary hitch in the smooth running of the performance. Burr and Meyer walked over to the piano and looked at some music—something Campbell and Collins apparently hadn't expected them to do for they remained in the center of the stage. The audience tittered and Collins, to ease the interlude, began doing a ridiculous shuffling dance—perhaps one he had done in his minstrel days, if he really had been a burnt cork performer. Meyer and Burr returned, and the quartet sang a medley of songs they had recorded, including, "Is There Still Room For Me 'Neath the Old Apple Tree?" "Oh, Joe, With Your Fiddle and Bow, You Stole My Heart Away," and "Arrah, Go On, I'm Gonna Go Back To Oregon."

About two hours had now gone into history since the performance began, and when Billy Murray once more walked forth he announced that the next act would be the last before the "grand finale." It was Collins and Harlan. "Hot dog!" exclaimed my father's friend. "That's what I've been waiting for—Collins and Harlan!"

The two veteran comedians may have passed the high point of their popularity, but they were at the top of their form as they sang, first, one of their best selling records, "Auntie Skinner's Chicken Dinner" (for which Teddy Morse had written the music to the words of Arthur Fields and Earl Carroll), and then perhaps their biggest all-time favorite, which occupied the back of Collins' Victor record of "Preacher and the Bear." If you know your old records you will recognize the title as "Bake Dat Chicken Pie." Smiling broadly and looking affectionately at each other, they gave the black-face dialog from the middle of the record about finding an egg with a woman's name and address on it, and the words, "Please write." However, Collins explained to Harlan, he decided not to write, "because after I ate the egg I decided that by this time she must be a very old lady!" The audience roared, although most of us knew the joke by heart.

Then came the finale. The entire troupe appeared on stage, and with Billy Murray in front of the others and waving a baton, they gave a heart-stirring rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner." The last thing we saw as the curtain came down was that uniquely talented group standing "on center," giving forth with what is now our National Anthem, and with the great little comedian beating time. It was the last glimpse most of us were ever to have of a distinguished group of artists whom we considered had done Pulaski an honor by appearing in its one theater.

On our way home we saw Mr. Patterson at work in his jewelry store. Although the Victor dealer, he hadn't come to the concert. We wondered how he could bear to stay away. I remember my mother insisted that the town officials should have given a banquet after the performance in the Eight's honor, but my father replied with considerable logic that in all probability "the boys were dead tired when they finished a show, and had rather go to their hotel room, or catch their train, and get some sleep."

XIII. In Conclusion

I thought about, talked about, and dreamed about that concert for months. Within a few years I married and moved away from Pulaski. Never afterward did I catch a glimpse of even one member of that long-gone troupe (a photo of the eight members appeared in the July, 1954, HOBBIES), but there have been innumerable nights on which I have dreamed I am back in the old Elks Theater and waiting for the curtain to go up so I can hear another concert by the Record Makers. Always I am happy, but always I wake before the show begins, with a sadly let down feeling of frustration. I still consider that concert an even greater event in my life than my wedding day.

A few months after the concert, Mr. Morse published a beautiful song called "Old Virginny Days." I have always hoped and believed it was inspired by his visit to Pulaski. I like to imagine that when Billy Murray died, 37 years after that concert was given, and became the last of the eight to pass from this earth, he got together in the next world with his old friends and they gave a concert that won the plaudits of the innumerable millions who have gone before us. For all any of us know, they are now regularly singing their hearts out in a better and happier state of being.

I'm sorry, Mr. Walsh, about the lapses and gaps in my memory as I have tried to describe that concert, but, after all, 40 years is a long, long time!

Sincerely yours,

"Q. X. Z."

Old Vehicles

Mr. Hooks servicing a car at his station at Geff, Ill., on Highway No. 45

Hubcap Hobby

By BERYL RINEHART

Several years ago, H. R. Hooks, who operates a service station at Geff, Ill., on U.S. Highway No. 45, began collecting auto hubcaps. It all started by buying hubcaps from highway crewmen who would find them along the highways during duty hours. Other people soon learned where they could sell their old hubcaps. Hooks lined the inside walls of his service building with the collections until space ran out, then, he hung them all around on the outside. Motorists, driving by, spotting hubcaps they needed to replace ones they had lost, began stopping to see if they could buy what they wanted. So, Hooks began selling, realizing a nice profit.

Making it his business to know the person from whom he buys is of reputable character, Mr. Hooks has developed a profitable side line trade in buying and selling hubcaps.

WANTED

WANTED AUTOMOTIVE ITEMS: Anything pertaining to the early automotive industry, all kinds of automotive trade publications, catalogs, instruction books, technical books, automobile hand books, pictures, framed or suitable for framing. Brass lights, oil or acetylene, bulb horns, acetylene generators, some accessories, emblems, name plates, hub caps, license plates, motor meters, old cars, trucks, bought anywhere, clothing, dusters, goggles, etc., or what have you.—B. J. Pollard, 14300 Frairle, Detroit 38, Mich. je32723

WANTED TO BUY OR TRADE automobile radiator name plates.—Wallace Huffman, 610 South Webster, Kokomo, Indiana. f124201

LICENSE PLATES WANTED before 1920.—Anthony Shuplenus, Newport, New Jersey. aul12046

OLD AUTO LAMPS, horns, books, old cars, etc., wanted.—D. D. Way, 10430 Shaw Ave., Oakland, Calif. 06806

FOR SALE

"MOTOR AGE" 1915 thru 1921. Set of 1915 or 1916 and 1917 to 1921, 6 issues in all, $4.50 prepaid. Two or more sets $3.50 each set. Many ads of old cars to name a few: LaMarne, Singer, Moore, Dixie Flyer of Lexington, Ky., Stephens Sallent Six, Lexington Minute Man Six, Templar and many others. Also a wealth of mechanical data on old cars.—Bailey, 440 Chestnut St., Ashland, Oregon. my1065

FOR SALE 1923 Essex, 2 dr., partially restored, write—Dale Price, Cambridge, Maryland jly3213

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Gene Greene

(Accompanied on the piano by Charley Straight)

By JIM WALSH

A recent biographical sketch in this series told the life story of the favorite tenor, Gene Austin. On the theory that one good Gene should succeed another, I have decided to relate next what I know about the one-time "Ragtime King," the veteran, long dead vaudeville comedian, Gene Greene. In this way I shall set down the salient details of the career of a picturesque personality and shall also answer the queries I occasionally receive as to why I advertise in HOBBIES that I will pay $3 each for any of Greene's Pathé discs not already in my collection. After months of advertising I still have only four of the double-faced records Greene made for Pathé in London well over 40 years ago.

Gene Greene and his records have a peculiarly personal interest for me not only because he was an accomplished comedian with a distinctive style but also because he was the second recording artist with whom I ever talked.

In June, 1928, I was visiting in Montgomery, Ala., as the guest of a friend who, at a remarkably youthful age, was state editor of the Advertiser. Soon after my arrival I learned that the next change of program at the Grand Theater, which featured vaudeville mixed with movies, would have Gene Greene as the headliner. I was excited at the thought of seeing and hearing the famous singer and composer of "The King of the Bungaloes" in person. My friend and I were in a car parked near the Grand and I remarked: "I see Gene Greene is on tomorrow's show. I'd certainly like to see him."

"Well," was the reply, "look up the street and you can see his car right now." I looked, and saw an expensive appearing parked vehicle adorned with a sign testifying that it belonged to "The Human Singing Machine," Gene Greene, on a triumphal coast-to-coast tour."

"And," said my friend dryly, after I had sufficiently admired this modestly retiring bit of press agentry, "if you want to see Gene Greene, look over there in front of the box office. See a man talking with the theater manager? Well, that's Gene Greene—that's the old boy himself!"

If you can imagine the emotions of a present-day teenager unexpectedly vouchsafed a vision of Elvis Presley, you can visualize the emotions of young Mr. Walsh, a phonograph lover since infancy, as he gazed upon the rubicund features of the erstwhile Ragtime King now transformed into a Singing Machine. And this is how I recall Gene Greene after all these years:

The comedian was rather short and stout with an unmistakable double chin, as he stood with the side of his face toward me. He was smoking a cigarette in a long holder, was smiling broadly as he talked with the manager, whose name I have forgotten, and he occasionally waved his right hand rhythmically to emphasize some point in the conversation. I thought he looked to be about 48 years of age. (As I know now, he was 50). He was rather loudly dressed in typically prosperous vaudeville fashion and appeared in high spirits. The manager, a tall, handsome, gray-haired man, seemed to be listening attentively but seldom smiled.

The state editor and I watched the pair of "show biz" personalities a short time, then returned to the Advertiser office. I remarked, "I'd sure like to talk to Gene Greene a few minutes. I've got a couple of questions I want to ask him." My friend replied: "Well, you go to see the manager early tomorrow afternoon, tell him what you want and he'll fix it up for you."

II. I Meet Gene Greene

About an hour before the performance was to begin Friday afternoon, I called on the manager, told him I had long admired Gene Greene at a distance and would like to talk with him "for just a minute." The manager surveyed the excited youth before him with a look of tolerant amusement, and genially replied: "All right, go to the stage door and tell the doorman I said to pass you in. But, remember, this isn't to be a visit. Don't take up Gene's time longer than a few minutes."

I don't remember talking with the doorman, but I do recall going back stage and being confronted by a tall, dark-eyed woman who was running through a song with her accompanist.

I later recognized her as Lillian Gordon, a comedienne who had the "deuce spot" on the program. When I asked if Mr. Greene were in she said he hadn't come yet and added, "Any message?" I said I merely wished to speak to him for a moment and would wait outside.

A few minutes later Gene Greene himself came down the alley. He was wearing rectangular shaped spectacles that struck me as looking odd and he appeared younger in full face than in profile. As I stepped forward and said, "Mr. Greene?" he hesitated for a moment and then in a voice that seemed to have been carved from ice cubes replied, "Yes." I suspected he suspected I was a panhandler.

To disabuse him of that impression I said: "I'll take only a few moments of your time, but I have something I'd like to ask you. Do you know where I can get any of the Pathé records you made years ago?"

At that unexpected inquiry a broad smile almost split the comedian's face in two. "Why," he said, "I made those back in 1912 and '13 when I was in England. They haven't been sold in this country for years, but you can still get them from the Pathé Phonograph Company, London, England."

The ice cubes broken, I went on to tell Gene that I had long admired him through his Victor and Columbia records, but this was the first chance I had ever had to hear him in person. A flicker of suspicion crossed his face as he said, "I've often appeared here at the Grand."

"Yes," I replied, "but I'm just temporarily in Montgomery. My home is in a small town in Virginia." I mentioned that my favorite among his records was "The King of the Bungaloes," a nonsense song which he had written in collaboration with his former accompanist, Charley Straight. He smiled affectionately at the mention of Straight and told me, what I already knew, that Straight played the accompaniments for all his English Pathé records. "Charley," he added, "is doing well in the dance band business now. He's had a band for years."

Gene asked my name and when I replied "Walsh," he didn't quite catch it and asked, "Wallace?" When I said "No, Walsh," he extended his hand and said, "I'm certainly glad to know you." "Are you going to be with us this afternoon?" he asked, and when I replied nothing could keep me away that day from the Grand, he said: "Be there and I'll sing 'The King of the Bungaloes' especially for you." Naturally, I felt elated at this mark of esteem, and we parted with cordial good will. As we clasped hands, neither of us suspected that I was destined to be Gene's biographer—probably the only one he will ever have.

III. Gene Greene's Performance

I spread the word among several of my Advertiser friends that Gene Greene was going to sing his best known composition specially for me and there was an irruption of newspaper personnel into the theater.

The entire bill was good and I enjoyed it all, but naturally, I was impatient for Gene to appear, which he finally did, in the next to closing spot. I was eager to see just what sort of a performance he would give because a few years before a critic for The Billboard had harshly criticized him. As I remember, the writer said: "Gene Greene sang 'Sweet Mama, Papa's Getting Mad,' then used a lot of old and decrepit stuff that had people leaving the house. As an encore he did his famous Greek waiter stunt which convulsed those who were left. If Gene would cut out the antiques and bring his act up-to-date, he would be in next to closing, where he rightfully belongs, instead of high up on the bill." I reflected that, since Gene was the featured act on the Grand's program, he must have changed his ways, but it would be perfectly all right with me if he wanted to sing his old ragtime numbers—

JIM WALSH WANTS TO BUY

Old phonograph record catalogs and supplements (mostly prior to 1915); back copies of phonograph publications and all sorts of reference material dealing with the history and development of sound recording that will provide background information for

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Please do not send me lists of records for sale. I am not interested in buying phonographs and records by mail and do not want "The Victor Book of the Opera." Do not submit material without being instructed by me. I will not pay for or return unsolicited items. If I do not reply I already have the material you offer. I am not a dealer and have nothing to sell. Address:

JIM WALSH

Box 476

Vinton, Va.
ttx

particularly "The King of the Bungaloes"—rather than the current song hits. Even then, I preferred the old songs to the new.

Greene's act opened with a beautiful girl at the piano in the place of the quondam Charley Straight, and a red-haired boy, wearing a Western Union outfit, in the center of the stage. The boy exclaimed, "All right, Genie, all right, Mr. Greene, come on out here, for here's where you sing those songs!" and "Genie" entered to a heavy hand that showed he was a great favorite in Montgomery. He came striding on stage wearing a straw hat, blue coat and white trousers and swinging a cane. As he appeared, the house orchestra paced by a white-haired violinist struck up "Away Down South in Heaven," and Gene began to sing it lustily. I thought he looked elated, as though our talk had given him a "lift."

I heard only a few bars before I realized with disappointment that his voice had little resemblance to the one I knew on records. It contained a husky quality that I had noticed in our conversation, and he mentioned during one of his monologs that he had a cold. The cold may have accounted for the husky sound or it may be that his voice had suffered from many years of use. Conceivably, too, he had changed his style and was singing in the stentorian shouting manner that characterized Al Jolson, then at the peak of his popularity. For a reason that will appear later, the latter supposition perhaps combined with the cold, was probably the logical solution.

I told myself that Gene had probably sung "Away Down South in Heaven" to flatter his Deep South audience, and I suspected he chose his next number, "Stay Out of the South (If You Want to Miss a Heaven On Earth)" for the same reason. Both were good routine popular songs but with no element of comedy. Gene then introduced his assistants. The boy was Bobby Koyle and the girl he referred to as "Little Miss Frances." They were both from Dallas, Texas, and I wonder where they are and what they are doing today. Bobby was a mouth harp virtuoso, and the girl, besides being a capable pianist, was also a good guitar player. (The newspaper review, at least, says she played a guitar, but it seems to me now the instrument was really a ukulele). Her costume, when she came on for her string music solo, was extremely abbreviated, which didn't detract from her allure.

Gene, besides singing, told a series of stories, many of which, occasionally interspersed with profanity, were surprisingly off-color for the vaudeville stage. Some of the other acts on the program also used "blue" material which wouldn't have been tolerated in the great days of "vaude." But, though we didn't suspect it at the time, vaudeville was already dying. The following Sunday another theater gave the first exhibition of talking movies ever seen in Montgomery—an event that pointed to the unfortunately certain death of what, at its best, was probably the cleanest and most delightful form of light amusement the American theatrical public has known, vaudeville.

Some of Greene's jokes seemed to have a mildly anti-Jewish bias, though they may not have been so intended. He mentioned someone's asking him if he had trouble finding his way around the hotel in which he was staying, and he had replied that he "had enough Yiddish to get around the lobby." He got a big laugh with a story about a little Jewish boy who was asked where he wanted to go when he died, and he replied, "to hades — because papa says business has gone to h-l and I want to go where the business is." His remark that Al Smith was sure to be chosen president because "there are enough Smiths in the telephone directory to elect him" got only tepid applause. Alabama in those days was a hotbed of Ku Kluxery and anti-Catholic sen-

(Continued on page 33)

VIOLINS

TO SETTLE ESTATE—Sell for best offer (large type violin) made March, 1716. Needs reglueing and refinishing. Many other articles, books and a clock. Stamped envelope, please. — Mrs. John Winkelman, R. #1, Scotts, Mich. jcl462

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Edison, Concert, Opera, Gem, and Alva models, also U.S. Cylinder Phonograph. Write J. W. Thornhill, Box 284, Abington, Va. au8633

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia Phonographs. Hundreds of Cylinder and Disc Records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or Disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppertoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. jly3886

RARE PHONOGRAPHS for sale. Part of my personal collection is for sale, such as: Edison Opera, Berliner, Edison Concert, Columbia Grand, Pathe, Columbia coin-operated machines and others. Now is your chance to get that rare machine. 10c for list of phonographs. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly3867

FOR SALE many nice Phonograph items: Pictures, Articles, by "One of the world's largest private collectors of Antique Phonographs.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. au3483

FOR SALE: Learn value of phonographs 2nd list 25 pictures now ready $1.00. — Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. au3278

COLUMBIA GRAND (Model A G) 5" phonograph with 12 records. (2) North American battery operated electric phonograph (1890-94); (3) Edison battery operated electric phonograph (c. 1898); (4) Edison "suitcase" home phonograph (1898). For sale or will trade for pre-1898 machines. Photograph 25c.—Phillips 2335 W. 3rd, Los Angeles, Calif. jcl443

The true facts tell us that Whittington's parents were both of good family and owned a town house in Gloucester as well as a prosperous farm nearby. When centuries later the town house was demolished, a chimney piece was found on which was a carved picture of a boy holding a cat in his arms. The statue of Whittington which stood on ancient Newgate in London also had a cat beside it. And a famous 16th Century engraving also shows the lad with a cat. So it does seem probable that Richard either had a pet cat or else had a great affection for cats in general.

Collectors possessing bells with a likeness of Dick Whittington's cat on them must draw their own conclusions as to the significance of their bells (see illustration #1).

And What of Bow Bells?

We have little reason to doubt that young Dick Whittington did, in a moment of discouragement, allow himself to be recalled to London by the cheery sound of Bow bells. The original chimes in the belfry of St. Mary-le-Bow were noted for their sweet beckoning tone. To journey within sound of their magical music was the goal of many a London-bound person (see illustration #2).

Dick, being a lad of only twelve years when he left for London, may well have become homesick for pleasant Gloucestershire, after a brief apprenticeship in London. At any rate at the foot of Highgate Hill in North London there is a much photographed stone popularly supposed to mark the spot where Dick paused to listen to the chimes of Bow bells.

Were they to be permanently silenced, much of this historic lore attached to Bow bells might gradually disappear. In the face of so many determined efforts to restore the bells, that is not likely to happen though. A peal of twelve has already been cast at Whitechapel Foundry and waits only for restoration of the church and its belfry.

*And when will that be?
Ask the bells of Stepney.
I do not know,
Says the Great Bell of Bow.*

At the present time no one knows just when Bow bells will ring again, despite all manner of novel fund-raising appeals being made to hasten the restoration. One of the bells which made up the famous "cockney" chime has been converted into a collection box, inviting visitors at the ruined church to contribute to the restoration fund. Nearby an exhibition of pictures shows how St. Mary-le-Bow, its belfry and its bells will be restored.

The peal waiting to be hung in the restored belfry marks the fourth change in St. Mary's chimes. The six original bells that rang so prophetically for Dick Whittington were destroyed in the Great Fire of London in 1666.

Next month:
Ancient Celtic Saints' Bells

GENE GREENE

(Continued from page 30)

timent, and although most of the people of Montgomery were much more liberal in their attitude than the "red-necks" in the hinterland they still didn't care much for Smith. I observed the theater manager watching the performance from a box and his expression was stony and unsmiling during some of Gene's off-color sallies. I also remember the displeased look of a remarkably beautiful young woman in another box.

The act ended with Gene's singing a really good comic song, "Real Estate Papa (You Ain't Gonna Subdivide Me!)" I enjoyed everything but the "blue notes" to the highest, but left with a feeling of disappointment—for he didn't sing "King of the Bungaloos." I found out later from the manager that "little Miss Frances" didn't know the song and, lacking the music, couldn't play it on short notice. Gene made a curtain speech, in which he said the Grand patrons were "a wonderful audience" and that he thought the theater should play him a full week instead of on a split basis.

When I dropped in at the Advertiser office, Jack Young, the managing editor, asked me to write a review of the bill. I did, and since it represents one of my first attempts at newspaper criticism, I shall reproduce it here. The date was Saturday, June 16, and the headline read: "Audience Pleased at Vaudeville Bill. Gene Greene, Pierrot and Co., and Others at Grand Applauded":

One of the best vaudeville and movie bills of the season was given at the Grand on Friday. The same bill will be continued through Saturday and Sunday. Gene Greene is probably the most noted performer who appears on the bill, but James Pierrot and Company shared applause honors with him. Both these acts practically stopped the show.

The vaudeville bill opened with Pierrot, the piano accordionist, assisted by his "company," which is comprised in the person of an extremely handsome young woman. Pierrot played his accordion, and the girl whanged a xylophone and sang. Everything they did met with applause. Pierrot and his partner, both of whom are radio favorites, took innumerable bows and the male half of the team expressed the appreciation of his "company" and himself in a neat curtain speech.

Lillian Gordon, an attractive young woman, sang popular songs in typical "blues shouter" style. She has a voice that carries, make no mistake about that, and the audience proved by its repeated hand-whacking that it liked her wares.

Fred Berrens and his Ampico automatic piano provided a real novelty. Fred came out and told a weepy story, in verse, of his lady love who had flown to the spirit world, but who returned to officiate as his accompanist whenever her services were needed. Suddenly the piano began to play itself by "spirit" influence. Fred asked it what the two of them should play as a duet (Fred is a nifty hand with a fiddle) and the Ampico suggested "Ain't She Sweet?" by playing a few bars of that ditty. The suggestion was vetoed, but they played several numbers together, to much appreciation.

Gene Greene, the famous phonograph singer and veteran stage comedian, scored a triumph. His voice was not in quite so good shape as usual, for he had a cold, but his pep and personality put his songs over. Some of his jokes almost stretched the hearers in the aisles. His company consisted of Koyle and Francis, a boy and a girl from Texas. The boy played a mouth harp and the girl a guitar. She also served as Gene's piano accompanist. Montgomery likes Gene Greene and said so. He too made a curtain speech, betokening his appreciation of his reception.

The Dronoff Sisters Revue and the Mogiloff Orchestra dispensed music that was decidedly out of the ordinary. Their performance made a decided hit with the audience, which applauded them very generously.

The movie feature was "Your Wife and Mine," a typical light comedy of high life. Phyllis Haver, Wallace McDonald, Stuart Holmes and Barbara Tennant were the most prominent players. One of the funniest comedies seen in Montgomery in many a day was exhibited, as was the Pathe News. The latter gave a number of scenes at the Republican convention in Kansas City.

Besides writing the review, I wrote Gene Greene a note, telling him how much I had enjoyed his act, and saying that several of the Advertiser staff had bought Edisonics (the Edison Company's rival to Victor's Orthophonic Victrola) and wished he would make some Edison Diamond Discs. Some time later I wrote to the English Pathé firm, asking if Gene's old records could still be supplied, but received a reply that "we have practically abandoned the manufacture of sapphire records" and that the Greene discs had long since been cut out of the catalog.

After I returned to Virginia, I heard nothing further about Gene Greene. Then in 1938, when Billy Murray and Jimmy Martindale visited me in Johnson City, Tennessee, I asked Billy if he knew what had become of my Montgomery friend. Billy told me Gene had lived in Chicago but had been dead for several years. It is only in recent months that I have obtained enough background information to make it possible to write this HOBBIES article. (To be continued in the July issue)

Match Box Labels of the World

By A. J. CRUSE

The coloured labels adorning the familiar match box have been in use for more than a century since John Walker, an English chemist, gave the world its first friction match in 1828. They have portrayed an ever-increasing variety of subjects, colours and designs from glamorous women to nursery rhymes, historical scenes, to beasts and fishes. These labels are now much sought after by collectors all over the world who enjoy a hobby which is even older than stamp collecting, offering an equally wide range of colorful and interesting material. "Match Box Labels of the World" will introduce beginners to a delightful hobby, provide a work of reference for experienced collectors; while the subject being both original and full of interest, should have a wide appeal. Send $3.00 for your copy to:

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORP.
1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Gene Greene

(Accompanied on the piano by Charley Straight)
(Continued from the June Issue)

By JIM WALSH

IV Douglas Ball's Recollections

A few weeks ago, Douglas P. Ball, corresponding secretary of the Dixie Record Club of Miami, Fla., sent me two of those oh! so-hard-to-find Pathé records by Gene Greene, and followed them with a letter of interesting reminiscences, from which I extract the following:

Gene Greene was a neighbor of ours — lived across the street from us on Lake Park Avenue in Chicago. As he was a few years older than I was, I never knew him personally, but we knew his "father and mother," an elderly couple who adopted Gene when a young boy. I'm not sure, but I think there was some relationship . . .

Gene grew up in the neighborhood, but ran with a rather wild crowd, and in these days would have been termed a juvenile delinquent. Not being able to keep him in high school, his father insisted on his doing some kind of work. The father had a rather large men's furnishing store on Cottage Grove avenue, a few blocks from his home. The boy wasn't interested in this kind of business.

Finally the father rented a small store next door. They made a ticket window, a boxed-off room for the projector, threw in some folding seats and were in business as a "nickel show." Gene hired a friend who had a license as an operator to grind out the one and two-reelers and to run the stills for the song slides. Gene took in the nickels, and, after the film, closed the box office and came in and sang the song slide. Later, he began to sing songs without slides and, as he had a good voice and a catchy way of singing and invented a number of tricky songs, he soon attracted the attention of vaudeville scouts. He got on the "cheap" 10-20-30 circuit operating in small houses throughout the city. From then on he rose rapidly to the Keith Orpheum Circuit and soon got top billing.

Gene lasted about 15 years. I saw him in Louisville during the first World War. He looked very dissipated and had an early spot. Then he vanished. His best number was a pantomime of a dope fiend. . . .

Mr. Ball is mistaken in believing that Gene Greene "vanished" from the vaudeville stage. His career continued until his death. And when I saw him, ten years after the war-time period Mr. Ball mentions, he did not look especially dissipated to me, although his face undeniably was florid.

V "Cuz" Falkener Recalls

Another friend who sent me a Pathé Gene Greene record is Harold

"Cuz" Falkener, owner of an old record shop at 973 Tremont Street, Boston. "Cuz" writes:

I knew Gene Greene in Grand Rapids in 1925, also earlier. Gene had a big cafe on Ionia Street, but I think he went in the hole. I don't know what year he died. I was in his place several times. I think his brother, Frank, managed the cafe. Alas, that the good old vaudeville days are dead and gone!

VI From Other Sources

Because Gene Greene had lived in Chicago, I assumed that he died there and wrote to Edward J. Barrett, the county clerk, for a copy of his birth and death certificates. Mr. Barrett, replied, however, that a search of his files from 1871 through 1940 revealed neither of the certificates I wanted.

I then asked the Newspaper Service department of the Chicago Public Library to search its files for any Gene Greene information, and was sent a copy of the following Associated Press story from the Chicago Tribune of April 6, 1930:

"New York, April 5—With his bathrobe drawn about him, Gene Greene, 52, styled 'The Al Jolson of the West,' collapsed as his act closed at a vaudeville theatre here today, apparently of a heart attack, and died before a doctor arrived. Greene's wife and son live in Chicago. His brother, Frank, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was notified."

This brief item led to my writing to the New York Times in the hope of obtaining a more comprehensive obituary. However, it too, was disappointingly brief. Under the heading of "Actor Dies As He Leaves Stage," the Times for Sunday, April 6, 1930, said:

"Gene Greene, 52 years old, a vaudeville actor, living at the Hotel Somerset in West 47th Street, died suddenly yesterday afternoon at the Grand Opera House, Eighth Avenue and 23rd Street. Greene, who is known on the vaudeville circuit as 'The Western Al Jolson,' was standing in the wings with his accompanist, Dan Manley, after finishing their act. He complained of not feeling well. A patrolman was called and an ambulance from New York Hospital was summoned. When a doctor arrived Greene was dead."

From the foregoing it seems that Gene had parted company with his

Texas proteges, "Koyle and Francis," some time before, and that he was no longer "The Human Singing Machine," but was calling himself "The Western Al Jolson" and obviously, was patterning his singing style on Jolson's shouting mannerisms. This surely was a mistake, for Gene Greene was too clever a comedian in his own right to copy anyone else.

Learning the name of the theater in which the comedian's death occurred made it possible for me to obtain a copy of Greene's death certificate from the New York City Health Department.

This reveals his correct name as Eugene (not Gene) Greene, and gives his age as 52 but does not list date of birth. His father's name was George S. Greene and his mother's maiden name, Frances Nash. The singer's birthplace is given only as "U.S." The certificate says he was married but doesn't give the name of his wife. Medical terms are used to indicate death occurred from a heart attack. And that's about all the information it gives. I have since seen the name of a Gene W. Greene listed in the Chicago city directory, but an inquiry revealed that the present-day Greene is not, as I had hoped, a son or other relative of the comedian.

I have been disappointed at not being able to find a good photograph of Greene to reproduce with this article.

VII Gene Greene's Records

Gene Greene's recording career falls into three periods—1911, when he made his first Victor and Columbia discs; 1912-13, when he made vertical cut sapphire ball records for Pathé in England; and 1917, when he again sang for Victor and Columbia and appeared on a few minor labels.

Columbia got the jump on Victor by just one month in marketing Greene's records and placed its first on sale in June, 1911. It also gave the buyers more for their money. The Columbia disc, with both sides by Gene, sold for 75 cents, while Victor issued two single-faced numbers at 60 cents each.

Greene's Columbia titles, on A994, were "Cancel That Wedding March" and the irresistible "King of the Bungaloes." The Columbia supplement said: "Mr. Greene is a past master of the art of singing coon songs—and there is a very real art in singing just that sort of song, popular prejudice to the contrary notwithstanding. In his vaudeville work, which has brought him before some of the biggest audiences in the country, Greene is making a tremendous hit in the two songs which constitute his first Columbia double-disc."

Victor announced its first Gene Greene records in July, 1911. They were 5858, "I'm Going To Stay On Solid Ground" (another composition by Gene himself) and 5850, "Stay In Italy," a comic Italian dialect song by Irving Berlin and Ted Snyder. Seven years later Berlin again used the theme of the latter number in his highly successful "I'll Take You Back To Italy," featured in "Jack O'Lantern." The supplement said:

Those who have been fortunate enough to see and hear Mr. Greene in his vaudeville specialty will note with pleasure that the Victor has engaged this popular comedian for a series of records. Those who have not heard him have something of a treat coming to them, as Mr. Greene's singing of the popular coon songs is simply inimitable.

Two of the comedian's best songs are offered this month, and both are highly amusing. Don't fail to hear the dandy tell about his trip in the aeroplane, and learn why he is willing to leave such aerial stunts to the white man hereafter. "Stay in Italy" is one of the best Italian dialect songs we have ever heard. The Italian-American gentleman, who apparently has not prospered in the new country, is advising his "brud" in Italy to remain where he is, as long as he has "eats" and a bed to sleep in!

The foregoing supplement description is accompanied by a photo of Greene, showing him wearing a derby hat and standing with clinched fists, as if he is giving an impersonation of an old school Bowery "tough."

In August, Victor issued the titles Columbia had marketed by Greene two months before — 5853, "Cancel That Wedding March", and 5854, "King of the Bungaloes." Supplement editor Sam Rous, said:

The August records by Mr. Greene will be found most amusing. "Cancel That Wedding March" is the touching story of a broken engagement, wherein Ephraim Jackson requests the organist to play a funeral dirge instead of the Mendelssohn Wedding March, which had been decided upon!

In "The King of the Bungaloes" Mr. Greene relates that he has been notified of his accession to the title of Gazoo in a South Sea isle; and the narrative is accompanied by some of the remarkable stunts for which the singer is famous, and which no one could possibly describe!

As a comment on the latter statement, I may mention that Gene had a rapid-fire style of singing and an ability to make "funny noises," such as imitations of orchestral instruments, that sometimes caused later listeners to compare him with "Pop-eye the Sailor Man's" sound effects in the talkies.

In September came Greene's first

Victor double-face, 16887, "Alamo Rag" and "Maybe You Think I'm Happy." The description was brief:

The renowned Alamo at San Antonio has been seized upon by the song writers as a title for a new "rag." With this lively affair is offered one of Mr. Greene's own songs, in which Mr. Cohen, who was foolish enough to marry an Irish maiden, plaintively inquires if you think he should be happy, inasmuch as the new Mrs. Cohen insists on feeding him on pigs' feet several times a week!

The statement that "Maybe You Think I'm Happy" was one of Greene's own compositions is incorrect. The words were by L. Wolfe Gilbert and the music by Addison Burkhardt. This may have been the first song written by "Wolfe" Gilbert to be recorded. Gilbert, now 70, has just published a book, "Without Rhyme or Reason," full of witty reminiscences of his 50 years as a song writer.

Gene Greene's first series of contributions to the Victor list ceased with his double-faced coupling in October, 16894, "Go Back" and "Dublin Daisies." (Both these songs were later issued on English Pathés, which were better recorded than the Victor). The catalog editor absent-mindedly referred to this as the first double-faced Greene record, forgetting there had been one the month before. "Excellent value," he said, "is offered in the first of the Greene records to be issued in double-face form. Leaving the (coon) song field temporarily, this versatile comedian gives us an eccentric and amusing 'rube' number, and the favorite Irish marching song by (Percy) Wenrich, now offered for the first time as a vocal selection.

VIII Gene Records In England

By all odds the most interesting, the most tantalizingly hard to find and the Gene Greene records most coveted by collectors are the Pathés which he made on his sensational successful visit to London and the English provinces in 1912-13. More than 30 of these mouth-watering morsels were issued and sold in large quantities for that time. But today, for a reason I shall explain, they are exasperatingly hard to find. However, no connoisseur of old-time ragtime singing at its best should be satisfied until all the English Pathé Gene Greene records are reposing in his collection.

Five double-faced Greene records were issued in November, 1912. A month later a Pathé ad. said: "Gene Greene, the American Ragtime King, is scoring remarkable successes wherever he goes, and for the five discs we issued in November—the most wonderful Ragtime Records ever made—the demand grows greater every day." Since I shall print a complete list of Greene's Pathé records at the end of this article, I shall not identify the ten initial titles here. But I will say that anyone wishing to go crazy with the least possible delay should try to make sense out of the Pathé system of numbering Gene Greene's records, which jumps from a low figure of 11 up to the 5400's, with the high numbers for the most part issued before the low. I have tried vainly to puzzle it out. Perhaps Harry Hunting, whose father, Russell Hunting, Sr., headed Pathé recording activities in those days, would be able to give an explanation.

Month after month the Greene records appeared, many of them containing songs already regarded as "back numbers" in the States. They received uniformly favorable reviews in the Talking Machine News, which seldom treated any of its advertisers' products with critical disdain. In April, 1913, for instance, the reviewer (probably Ogilvie Mitchell) said of No. 11, "Beautiful Doll, Good-bye" and "Oh, You Beautiful Doll":

The King of Ragtime, Gene Greene is styled, and worthy indeed is he of the title, for no other singer seems to comprehend the meaning of the accentuation of the musical innovation styled Ragtime, and when it is stated that the artiste is accompanied on the piano by Charles Straight, than whom there is none better able to finger the ivories in Ragtime, it must be confessed that in all honest truth we find much to please us. The recording is excellent.

A few lines farther down the page from this gibberish is a review of No. 447 (again that baffling jump in numbers!), "Maybe You Think I'm Happy", and "That Coontown Quartette."

Two more Ragtimes well recorded. These four numbers by America's genius should be procured instantly, as Messrs. Pathe are sure to have a busy and strenuous time in meeting the demand.

Notice that the "T. M. N." stiffly referred to Greene's accompanist as "Charles" Straight, although the pianist never called himself anything but "Charley" and was so called on the record labels. Since the Brunswick dance records by Straight's orchestra were popular for years, I think he deserves a bit of biographical description here. Briefly, then, Charley Straight was born in Chicago on January 16, 1891, so was a stripling of 21 when he and Greene began making their Pathé records. He died in Chicago, September 21, 1940, from injuries received in an automobile accident.

After attending Forestville Elementary School and Wendell Phillips High School, Straight entered vaudeville, then became a recording artist and a musical director of a player-piano roll company. Beginning in 1920, he and his orchestra played in various night clubs and hotels. Among the songs he wrote are: "Everybody Calls Me Honey," "I Love You Sunday," "Funny, Dear, What Love Can Do," "That London Rag," "Everything is Ragtime Now," "June Moon," "The Mocking Bird Rag," "The Red Raven Rag," "Bless Your Little Heart" and "Kiss Your Baby Good-night." He was a member of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers.

The final "Greene & Straight" Pathé record was issued in April, 1914, a few months before World War

I began. It coupled "There's a Big Cry Baby in the Moon" with "My Little Hong Kong Baby" and the number was just 99! When Pathé opened its American branch, with headquarters in Brooklyn, that same year, the Gene Greene records appeared in the first few editions of the company's weirdly put together record catalog.

Then they all vanished, and I think I know why. Though recorded in London, the Greene records were pressed in French and Belgian factories (they were all of the "center start" variety, 11½ inches in size, playing from the label out toward the record edge and running at 90 revolutions per minute), and no doubt after the Germans invaded France and Belgium, the factories were closed. Probably the masters were destroyed. At any rate, American Pathé couldn't obtain any further supplies. Several of the Pathés were Greene and Straight compositions—among them "Blarney Barney Finn," "Stop That Bear Cat, Sadie," "The Long Lost Chord," and of course, "King of the Bungaloes."

After all my advertising and years of searching I have obtained only four of these records. They are the ones I have marked with an asterisk in the appended list. I still stand ready to pay $3 each for all the others. Of the ones I have, the best combination by far is "Be My Little Baby Bumble Bee" and "Oh You Circus Day"—two of the most tuneful songs ever written. Straight's accompaniment to Greene's syncopated singing is brilliant, although, like most Pathé piano recording, the tone is too distant and sounds as if Charley is playing in a back room or a back yard instead of in the room with the singer. I have been able to "improve" it to a great degree by copying the record on tape then amplifying the sound to bring the piano "closer." Oddly, in "Circus Day," Gene sings "and the monkeys we will personate," instead of the original "pestciate," which rhymed much better with "all the side shows we'll investigate." Perhaps he thought the American slang word, "pestciate," would baffle the British.

In "Go Back," Straight heckles Gene a couple of times. "Frankie and Johnny" is an excellent ragtime version of a number now recognized as an American folk classic, and Greene's is probably the first record ever made of that undying song. "Dublin Daisies" and "Ragtime Soldier Man" are splendidly done; "That Was Me" is an amusing number in the blackface minstrel manner, and "Drinking" is a laughable impersonation of a "souse." My greatest Gene Greene "want" now is his coupling of "Casey Jones" and "Parisienne," followed by the two "Beautiful Doll" numbers. But I yearn for them all!

IX Back To American Recording

Although he retained his high favor in vaudeville, Gene Greene didn't appear again in American record catalogs until 1917. He then made at least one seven-inch record, 7140, "The Chinese Blues," for Emerson. It was coupled with "Ephraim's Jazbo Band," by Arthur Collins. Allen Debus has also discovered him singing "From Here to Shanghai" on a 5½ inch Little Wonder. Probably Columbia at first intended to issue this fine comedy record by Greene, but changed its mind when one of its top exclusive stars, Al Jolson, said he wanted to record it. From an interpretative standpoint, the Little Wonder, presumably dubbed from a Columbia master, is better than Jolson's slow, draggy rendition that completely misses the spirit of the song.

Greene also sang "From Here to Shanghai" on Victor 18242, coupled with Billy Murray's classic interpretation of "Napoleon," issued in April, 1917. The catalog editor said: "Our customers will be glad to note the return of Mr. Gene Greene, the famous vaudeville headliner, to the Victor catalog. Irving Berlin's latest, 'From Here to Shanghai,' is a cheerful composition in which the sounds of 'Chinatown' manifest themselves with enlivening results." Gene was assisted by the Peerless Quartet.

In June his final Victor appeared with 18266, "Ruff Johnson's Harmony Band" (a record which had been made two years before by William J. Halley) and a new, improved version of "King of the Bungaloes." It led the list of popular vocal records for the month, and the supplement annotator said: "An admirable record of Ruff Johnson's Harmony Band" is already in the Victor catalog, but we just had to get out Gene Greene's variation of it for the sake of his imitation of the musical instruments. Flute, drum or loud bassoon—it's all the same to Gene. 'King of the Bungaloes' . . . is a vivid picture of the kingdom of the Bungaloes, lions, gorillas, crocodiles and all, realistically sung by an inimitable comedian."

(Incidentally, the "Bungaloes" song isn't entirely forgotten today. Bob Pierce, an early favorite at Radio Station WOR, made a splendid Edison Diamond Disc record of it in 1928, and when it was also issued in lateral-cut form it had the lowest serial number of any Edison needle record. Although I hate to say it, Pierce's version is even better than Greene's, having the benefit of superlative recording and marred only by his consistently mispronouncing "Bungaloes" as "Bungalows.")

In August, 1917, Greene had another Columbia record—his first since 1911. On one side of A2276 he sang the irresistibly catchy "Buzzin' the Bee." The other side was "That Creeper, Weepy Feeling," sung by Anna Wheaton, soprano (P. G. Wodehouse, who knew Miss Wheaton well, tells she's still living on Long Island), and a tenor listed as George Wilson, who also made records under the name of James Harrod but later became much better known as Colin O'More. The supplement description referred to

Greene as "one of the famous 'old guard' of American ragtime singers."

Gene was back with Columbia in March, 1918, on A2472. He sang "Alexander's Got a Jazz Band Now," coupled with Sam Ash singing "Cleopatra Had a Jazz Band." The ragtime era, during which Greene had called himself "The Ragtime King," was ending and jazz was taking over. Thus it was rather appropriate that the last record he ever made, so far as research indicates, was "Alexander's Got a Jazz Band Now." But I'd still take, any time, his performances as the King of Ragtime over his hoarse shouting as "The Human Singing Machine" or "The Western Al Jolson."

And, regardless of whatever shortcomings Gene Greene had as a man or an artist, I shall always have an affectionate recollection of the way his blue eyes twinkled that hot June afternoon in Montgomery as he said:

"Why, I'm glad to know you! If you're going to be with us this afternoon I'll sing 'The King of the Bungaloes', especially for you."

* * *

Since the foregoing article was written, I have obtained from Henry M. Shaw of North Carver, Mass., a copy of Gene Greene's record of "Casey Jones." (Mr. Shaw read my article about the Casey Jones Museum in the February HOBBIES and recalled he had a copy of the Pathé disc stored with some other old records in his attic). Repeated playings have convinced me that "Casey Jones" is not only the best Gene Greene record I have yet heard but my favorite version of the great comic song.

It is especially interesting that Greene, recording in London, transferred the scene of the wreck to England. Thus Casey is carrying the Southern, rather than Western, mail and is on his way to Dover instead of "Frisco." The fireman becomes the guard, and Mrs. Jones tells her children they "got another papa on the Cunard line" instead of the Salt Lake. There are several other changes. It is a wonderful record, and "Parisienne" on the reverse side, has an oddly fascinating melody with abrupt changes from minor to major. Greene sings it in a baritone voice instead of his usual high tenor.

PATHE RECORDS BY GENE GREENE
Note by Jim Walsh: I have the four marked with an * and want to buy the others.

((11½ inches, recorded in London and issued from December, 1912, through April, 1914).)

- 5296 Moonlight Bay (Wenrich). Reverse: In Dear Old Tennessee (Newman).
- *5351 Dublin Daisies (Murphy—Wenrich). Reverse: That Was Me (Rose—Snyder).
- 5350 When You're Married (Gumble—Grant). Reverse: Ragtime Melodies (Gene Hodgkins).
- 5349 Rum Tum Tiddle (Gene Schwartz). Reverse: All Night Long (Shelton Brooks).
- 5348 Blarney Barney Finn (Greene). Reverse: King of the Bungaloes (Greene—Straight).

- 5347 Waiting for the Robert E. Lee (Lewis F. Muir). Reverse: Ragtime Violin (Irving Berlin).
- 5369 Hitchy Koo (Muir—Abrahams). Reverse: Mocking Bird Rag (Charley Straight).
- *100 Ragtime Soldier Man (Irving Berlin). Reverse: Drinking (Will Marion Cook).
- 90 My Lady Angeline (Christie). Reverse: My Ever Loving Two-Step Man (Murphy—Wenrich).
- *5370 Go Back (Egbert Van Alstyne). Reverse: Franky and Johnny (Three Leightons).
- 305 Ragging the Baby to Sleep (L. F. Muir). Reverse: That London Rag (Greene—Straight).
- 142 Stop That Bear Cat, Sadie (Gene Greene). Reverse: Hella, Go On, Goodbye! (Walsh—Brown).
- 167 Whistling Rag (Irving Berlin). Reverse: Heinze (Egbert Van Alstyne).
- 148 My Rose of Old Kildare (Straight). Reverse: Long Lost Chord (Greene—Plantadosi).
- 41 Beautiful Doll, Goodbye (White—Violinsky). Reverse: Oh, You Beautiful Doll (Brown—Ayer).
- 447 Maybe You Think I'm Happy (Gilbert). Reverse: That Coontown Quartette (Jerome—Schwartz).
- 544 On the Mississippi (Earl Carroll—Arthur Fields). Reverse: Rag, Rag, Rag (Flannagan—Heath).
- 538 Ragtime Goblin Man (Andrew B. Sterling—Harry Von Tilzer). Reverse: That Organ Rag (Greene—Straight).
- 151 Everybody Two-Step (Wally Herzner). Reverse: You're My Baby (Brown—Ayer).
- *5222 Oh, You Circus Day (James V. Monaco). Reverse: Be My Little Baby Bumble Bee (Henry I. Marshall).
- 529 Ragtime Cowboy Joe (Muir). Reverse: That Haunting Melody (Jerome—Schwartz).
- 644 Row, Row, Row (Monaco). Reverse: Way Down South (George Fairman).
- 446 Keep Away From the Fellow Who Owns An Automobile (Berlin). Reverse: One O'clock in the Morning I Get Lonesome (Berlin).
- 536 I Want to be in Dixie (Berlin). Reverse: When the Midnight Choo-Choo Leaves for Alabam' (Berlin).
- 563 Casey Jones (Eddie Newton). Reverse: Parisienne (Albert Von Tilzer).
- 551 Jimmy Valentine (Gus Edwards). Reverse: That Baboon Baby Dance (Joe Cooper).
- 5185 They All Kept Time With Their Feet (Edwards). Reverse: You'll Never Know the Good Fellow I've Been (Glogau).
- 558 Down in Dear Old New Orleans (Conrad—Whidden). Reverse: Kentucky Days (Percy Wenrich).
- 150 Piano Fingers (Brown—Grant). Reverse: Billy Green (arranged by Greene and Straight).
- 106 No Man Can Do It Like My Father (Jerome—Schwartz). Reverse: I'm Going to Stay on Solid Ground (Greene—Straight).
- 99 There's a Big Cry Baby in the Moon (Brynn Smith and Burris). Reverse: My Little Hong Kong Baby.

Love Conquers All

KANSAS—Am sending my check for HOBBIES for another year. I can't say enough nice things about HOBBIES. I love it.—Helen Hill.

Seventeen

NEW YORK—I have enjoyed HOBBIES for 17 years. — Adelaide C. Clarkson.

Constant

IOWA — I have all HOBBIES from No. 1 (March, 1931) to date. — F. J. Gluck.

Welcome, M. J.

NEW JERSEY — Enclosed please find a check in the amount of $3.50 which I hope is correct. The latest issue I have been able to find was February, 1956, and I know that some other magazines have increased in price since then. So if the amount I enclose isn't enough please let me know as soon as you can so that I may send the correct amount. I can hardly wait until I receive my first copy of your fascinating publication. —M. J. Michael.

Among Our Good Friends in the Blue Grass State

KENTUCKY—Dear HOBBIES: All of you . . . here is my renewal check. I'm always happy to send it to you, because I love HOBBIES! It has broadened my knowledge on antiques, and acquainted me with "fields" in antiques that I have never dreamed of. My several visits to St. Augustine and the Lightner Museum of Hobbies have been a source of much satisfaction, pleasure and extended education to me.—Mrs. Theo. E. Deddens.

And for the Loyalty of Our Readers, Our Gratitude

MASSACHUSETTS—It was a pleasure to spy my name in "In a Day's Mail." It is also a pleasure when my HOBBIES arrives the first of the month — we are assured of interesting and instructive reading. I always read page 100, with perhaps a few omissions until Mr. Lightner's passing in June, 1950 when the page became the "Americana Page." It certainly continues to be worth reading. I recall how shocked I was upon turning to page 100 in the July, 1950, issue of HOBBIES to see "In Memoriam," and the personal loss that I felt. I can truthfully say to the Staff of HOBBIES, "Well done!"—Esther S. Burr.

A Year Later

NEW HAMPSHIRE—First of all may I say that I had very good results from my ad in your magazine —over fifty replies, some unusual and interesting, others, so-so. As a result I am conducting some very rewarding correspondence from Oregon to Florida to Maine, and even Ottawa. And I hope to so add to my already interesting collection.—Doris C. Maxwell.

Special Editions

ARKANSAS—Enclosed please find renewal. I can't say one portion of HOBBIES is better than the other because it's all special to me—even after I have read them through several times. —Mrs. W. J. Avery.

O.K. "Jane Doe."

NOVA SCOTIA—Here is $4 for renewal of HOBBIES, which I have taken for more than ten years, along with the books advertised in HOBBIES. They have educated me in glass, until now I am considered quite an authority. But don't publish this over my name—I don't like to "blow my own horn" too loudly.—"Jane Doe."

Thank you, Thelma

Michigan—Three cheers for your fine magazine! It is tops.—Thelma Rector.

Friends and Antiques

South Dakota — I look forward to this magazine each month. Our home is furnished with antiques and many of them have come through HOBBIES. All friends you meet through HOBBIES are good friends.—Mrs. A. H. Coon.

A Year Too Late

Ohio—I thought I could get along without HOBBIES, but I can't. Enclosed find check for a subscription. Looking through some old issues today I found several items I wished I had sent for, but I'm just about a year late.—Mrs. W. J. Root.

Prices, Places, and Antiques

Indiana—Find enclosed check for another year of HOBBIES. I would be lost without it. No other magazine quite fills the need like this magazine. Keeps you up on prices as well as a place to shop.—Mrs. Fred J. Rutledge.

A New Friend

Michigan—Enclosed please find check for $3.50, the correct amount, I believe, for a year's subscription for your magazine, HOBBIES. It was highly recommended to me.—Mrs. C. W. Norman.

Cover To Cover, Plus.

Pennsylvania—Thanks for your reminder for subscription. I especially enjoy your doll articles, price lists, etc. I study the magazine every month. We have a small shop so we go over your magazine from cover to cover about four times before I lay it aside for reference.—Mrs. J. G. Bailey.

OUR Pleasure, Too

California—Please continue my subscription to HOBBIES for another year. I am ashamed of myself for overlooking the expiration date. Thank you for the past five years of pleasure.—Bernice J. Gordon.

Under the Wire

Illinois—Thanks for the reminder. I have taken HOBBIES Magazine for many years and would be lost without it. I hope I am not too late for the current number. Enclosed please find my remittance for another year.—Mrs. George Harman.

Betty Knows Values

New York—I am an avid reader of HOBBIES and I certainly get more than my money's worth.—Betty B. Benedict.

Esto Perpetua

New York—Can't give up HOBBIES now. Each copy comes as a surprise, for there is always something new.—Willard F. Sanford.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Harvey Hindermeyer's "Golden Anniversary"

By JIM WALSH

I. The Voice from the Slot Machine

One warm day in August, 1907, a very young man, brown eyed, short and stockily built, was strolling down one of the less fashionable streets of Philadelphia. Suddenly, as he walked past a popular amusement place, known in those days as a penny arcade, a stentorian baritone voice blared from a penny-in-the-slot phonograph. The young man recognized the voice. It was that of Edward Meeker, a versatile comedian who made the spoken announcements on the old wax Edison cylinders, and as Ed's tones boomed forth the stroller indulged in a gleeful smile.

Meeker was proclaiming: "She was a Grand Old Lady." Sung by Harvey Hindermeyer. Edi-SON record!"

No wonder the youthful saunterer smiled. He was enjoying for the first time a public reproduction of the only phonograph record he had ever made up to that moment. It had not issued as promptly as records are marketed nowadays—the June Edison Phonograph Monthly had announced it as scheduled for August release, so it probably had been recorded in May—but it was now beginning to be played, not only in penny arcades, but in homes throughout the land.

Perhaps the fledgling concert tenor had even seen the description of his initial record, in the August, 1907, New Phonogram:

No. 9614, "She was a Grand Old Lady," by Harvey Hindermeyer, is a song dealing with the affection of a son for his mother. It is one of the songs certain to please the tastes of a very large circle; and this will be no exception to the rule. It deals with the gray haired mother always ready to do everything she could for her child's welfare. This record is a march ballad with good rhythm and tuneful air. And the singer who is a new comer, will be appreciated.

"She was a Grand Old Lady" did not become a hit. It had a merely modest success, but that long forgotten song is of historic interest to record collectors. Not only did the Edison cylinder mark Harvey Hindermeyer's debut as a recording artist, but when Victor issued its first

APPROVED BY HARVEY HINDERMEYER

Dear Jim:

I am sorry I have been so long in returning your manuscript, but I have been away on a short vacation.

I am delighted with it, and I thank you.

Sincerely,

HARVEY

double-faced record, No. 16000, one side was occupied by "Strains From Stern's," a medley played by Arthur Pryor's Band. Selections in the medley were "Castles in the Air," "You Splash Me and I'll Splash You," and "She was a Grand Old Lady." "Centennial March" was on the other side.

Harvey says he doesn't know just why his name was so consistently and insistently misspelled, almost invariably misspelled Hindermeyer. But he probably didn't mind very much. Whether he suspected it or not, he was beginning a career as an Edison recording artist that would extend over most of the next 22 years and cause him to be regarded as one of Edison's top stars. Today, as a memento of what used to be, a large handsomely framed photo of Harvey Hindermeyer still hangs in an upstairs room of the Edison laboratory at West Orange, N. J. And this month marks his fiftieth anniversary as a recording artist.

II. Hindermeyer's Columbia Records

However, for an association that was to be close and intimate, Hindermeyer's Edison career got off to a slow start. Almost three years went past before he made any more Edison cylinders. But, meanwhile, he had begun singing for Victor and Columbia. These companies made considerable use of his services for a few years, but his relationship with them was never so intimate as it afterwards became with Edison.

Suppose, then, before we consider the tenor's Victor and Columbia activities, we see what was said about him in the Edison Blue Amberol catalog for April, 1914:

HARVEY W. HINDERMEYER ... is a native of Easton, Pa., but the greater part of his studies were pursued in Philadelphia, under the direction of W. Warren Shaw. He has sung in musical festivals, oratorios, concerts, and song recitals in all the principal cities east of the Mississippi and has also appeared in many light operas, such as "The Mikado," "The Chimes of Normandy," "The Gondoliers," and Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus." Mr. Hindermeyer's voice is refreshing in its robustness—a quality which so few sweet tenor voices possess. It is fresh, unstrained and combines with its rich calibre the delicate nuances of the mezzo voice.

To the foregoing may be added the fact that the tenor's middle name is Wilson and that his mother was of Bohemian and his father of German descent. This home environment gave him a knowledge of German, which resulted in his being called on to sing an Edison Diamond Disc in German in 1925. It was No. 57019, "Tief im Bohmerwald," coupled with "Bedenklichkeiten," by another tenor, Arthur Hall (Adolph J. Hahl), known primarily for his English language renditions of popular songs. Still another well known tenor who made one or more German language records is Charles Hart. He and the former Mrs. Hart (Esther Nelson) did a few German duets for Gennett.

Hindermeyer's first records for both Columbia and Victor were made in 1908, but the Columbias appear to have preceded the Victors by a few months. The new tenor made his disc debut at a time when startling changes were being instituted in record selling procedures and at a time when bad feeling between Victor and Columbia was strong. 1908 was the year in which Columbia took Victor by surprise by changing all its popular records from single-face to double-face. Caught napping, Victor at first refused, in spite of dealers' clamor, to follow suit. Before long it was evident Victor had to have records playing on both sides to meet competition, so on October 20 the "Master's Voice" company issued its first list of 125 double-faced records. However, the list was accompanied by a letter to dealers in which Columbia was bitterly denounced for trying to take the profit—so Victor alleged—out of the record business. Victor dealers were told the double-faced records were not catalogued to be sold, but merely to keep Columbia from selling. The dealers were asked not to sell the d-f's if it could be avoided. Meanwhile, Victor continued to issue single-faced discs while Columbia boasted it had "the only complete catalog of double-faced records." In December, 1908, Victor announced that it had developed an improved system of recording which had made it necessary to change the standard speed of Victor records from 76 to 78. Despite this announcement, Victor speeds continued to vary widely, from about 74 to 82 revolutions per minute.

It was during this embattled period that Harvey Hindermeyer confidently took his stance before the

HARVEY HINDERMEYER,
as a mature artist

Columbia and Victor recording horns. His first Columbias were single-faced but within a few months they were taken over into the d-f list. The one-sided 10-inch discs included 3761, "Maxim's" (from "The Merry Widow"); 3781, "Don't Leave the Old Folks, Jennie"; 3900, "Come to the Land of Bohemia," and a number now recognized as a popular song classic although it was not specially suited to Hindermeyer's style - Jack Norworth and Al Von Tilzer's immortal, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," written by two men who up to that time had never seen a baseball contest.

Hindermeyer's association with Columbia lasted about three years. His last solo record for that company, a ballad with the mouth-filling title of "When a Boy from Old New Hampshire Loves a Girl From Tennessee" was issued in February, 1911. Exactly 16 years later, he reappeared under a nom de disque.

Here are a few typical Columbia supplement comments on Hindermeyer's singing. Of "No One Knows, No One Cares," the annotator said: "Mr. Hindermeyer's vocal excellence is too well known to call for extended appreciation. He has never shown to better advantage than in this record." Concerning Liddle's setting of Charles Kingsley's poem, "A Farewell," readers were told: "Mr. Hindermeyer sings this number with the rich tonal quality for which he is noted." And when the once enormously popular "Glory Song" appeared, Columbia customers were informed: "It is undeniably a sacred song of genuine musical beauty, and as rendered by Mr. Hindermeyer will be welcomed to the sacred repertoire of every Columbia user." It also was the only 12-inch record made by Hindermeyer for Columbia.

I believe the following to be a complete list of Harvey Hindermeyer's double-faced Columbia records:

A426, Don't Leave the Old Folks Jennie/Piccolo — from "A Waltz Dream" (Elsie Stevenson—Frank C. Stanley; A430, Maxim's/Some Day When Dreams Come True (Henry Burr); A586 Take Me Out to the Ball Game: Come to the Land of Bohemia; A628 No One Knows, No One Cares/Arab Love Song (Billy Murray and Chorus); A670, A Farewell/If Tears Were Pearls (Stanley); A717, Good Night, Dear/I Know a Lovely Garden (John Bardsley, English tenor); A734, If I Had a Thousand Lives To Live/It's Hard to Kiss Your Sweetheart When the Last Kiss Means Goodbye (Stevenson-Stanley); A743, Can't You See?/Garden of Roses (Stevenson-Stanley); A770, If I Could Gain the World by Wishing/Darling Nellie Gray (Carroll C. Clark); A817 Tell Her I Love Her So/Last Night (Merle Tillotson, contralto, better known later as Merle Alcock); A952, When a Boy from Old New Hampshire/Vale of Dreams (Arthur C. Clough); A5118, Oh, That Will Be Glory/Israel (Albert Edmund Brown).

Of all these records, "Don't Leave the Old Folks, Jennie," though by no means a big hit when issued, seems to turn up most consistently in second-hand stores nowadays. The only one with both sides by Hindermeyer was A586.

III. Hindermeyer's Victor Records

Harvey Hindermeyer's first two Victor records, both single-faced, appeared in the catalog supplement for December, 1908, when the controversy over Columbia's double-faced innovation was going full blast. (Columbia had introduced about a dozen double-faced discs, all orchestral, in 1904, but had withdrawn them when the German Odeon company filed suit for patent infringement). The Victor titles were "When Jack Comes Sailing Home" (5598) and "There's Nothing in the World Like Love" (5599). The supplement said: "The Victor adds this month a new tenor to its list of singers, and it is freely predicted that he will be warmly welcomed." Neither record was a big seller and neither was taken into the double-faced list, but their reception was sufficiently encouraging for Victor to call again on the young "tenor robusto."

As he had made one 12-inch Columbia record, so Hindermeyer sang one of the oversized discs for Victor. In March, 1909, his offering was No. 35026, "You Can't Stop Your Heart From Beating for the Girl You Love" (another long title!) inappropriately coupled with "Bumble—Two-Step," by the Victor Dance Orchestra. His next Victor appearance was in August, when he sang the Charles K. Harris "sob-song," "No One Knows," which he had also recorded for Columbia. It was combined with "If I Had a Thousand Lives to Live," sung by Reinold Werrenrath, making his first disguised appearance on Victor records under the assumed name of "Edward Hamilton." In September, Hindermeyer was represented with "Somebody Loves You, Dear," coupled with the Haydn Quartet's rendition of "Up In My Aeroplane."

Then there occurred an inexplicable lapse of two years before Hindermeyer again appeared in the Victor catalog — inexplicable that is, unless his status by this time as an active Edison artist had precluded his making Victor records for a time. His rollicking version (on 17043) of "Come Kiss the Blarney, Mary Darling" was combined with "Bless Your Ever Lovin' Little Heart," by Walter Van Brunt. The description was brief: "A new and popular sentimental ballad by one of the Victor's most popular tenors is here combined with an entertaining little Irish song which has been selected by Mr. Hindermeyer for his reappearance in the Victor lists."

This photo, taken about 1912, shows HARVEY HINDERMEYER in the early days of his recording career. It was frequently shown in old phonograph record catalogs.

The Van Brunt—Hindermeyer record was one of the first my parents acquired when they bought a small victrola, and I shall never forget the enthusiastic declaration by a now dead uncle of mine that "Come Kiss the Blarney" was the prettiest record he had ever heard.

Another Hindermeyer number appeared in August, 1912—one of his best for Victor. It was the old favorite, "Roses, Roses Everywhere," doubled on 17117 with "Drifting," a contralto-baritone duet by Elsie Baker and Frederick Wheeler.

And then more than three years elapsed before the last two Hindermeyer solos ever issued by Victor appeared. In November, 1915, he had both sides of record No. 17857: "Dearie Girl (Do You Miss Me?)" and "That's the Song of Songs for Me." The supplement said: "Mr. Hindermeyer exhibits his mellow and pleasing tenor in two excellent ballads." Incidentally, speaking of his "mellow tenor" the label of "Come Kiss the Blarney" calls him a baritone! The truth seems to be that in spite of Harvey's ability to take very high notes (he says he sometimes filled in high ones for Billy Murray on Edison records when Billy couldn't quite get the range) his lower tones were baritone in quality.

Hindermeyer made no more solo appearances on Victor records, but took part in several quartet numbers which the newly organized Shannon Four sang for Victor in 1917 and 1918. He left the quartet after about a year and his place was taken by Lewis James. More about the Shannon Four will be found in HOBBIES for June and July, 1954. A photograph showing Hindermeyer as a member of the group is reproduced with the article.

IV. United States & Edison Cylinders

We are now approaching the point where Harvey Hindermeyer's recording career was largely bound up with the Edison Company. However, it is worth noting that he made several records for the U.S. Indestructible Company, which antedated Edison in producing an unbreakable cylinder. The U.S. Company began business in 1909 and continued until 1913 when it succumbed to the competition of Edison's new Blue Amberol. The complete U.S. catalog dated October, 1912, contains one two-minute cylinder by Hindermeyer, No. 454, our old friend, "Come Kiss the Blarney." The following four-minute also are listed:

1019 If I Could Gain the World By Wishing; 1050 The Ould Plaid Shawl; 1166 There'll Never Be One Like You (this gives the singer's full name, Harvey Wilson Hindermeyer); 1193, Girl of my Dreams (not the familiar song of the same title which became popular many years later); 1314, I'll Be With You, Honey In Honey-Suckle Time (surely a sickly sweet title!) and 1496, a presumably comic selection from "The Quaker Girl" — Keep Away From a Married Man.

Just as our friend's Victor records had a habit of appearing three years or more apart, so there were two and a half years between his first Edison cylinder and his second. Hindermeyer reappeared in the Edison list for February, 1910, and he was never long absent from it thereafter. His second Edison was a four-minute Amberol, No. 348, "Hello, Mr. Moonman, Hello!" It elicited these editorial remarks: "A pleasing melody, whose theme is in the nature of suggestions to lovers for relief when the moon's rays interfere with their spooning, is the vehicle that Mr. Hindermeyer uses with which to return to Edison ranks.

He will be remembered as having contributed. . . 'She Was a Grand Old Lady' to our catalog. Mr. Hindermeyer is the possessor of a magnificent tenor voice whose effectiveness is greatly increased by his unusually distinct enunciation." (Notice that his name was spelled correctly on this occasion!)

In May, 1910, Harvey was back on Amberol 424, singing with the assistance of a chorus, "One Little Girl." This time the Phonogram editor was guilty of a memory lapse. He referred to "Hello, Mr. Moonman," as the tenor's first Edison record, forgetting the "Grand Old Lady":

A pretty waltz song sentimental in theme and engaging in melody, is Mr. Hindermeyer's second contribution to the Edison catalog. His first it will be remembered, was . . . "Hello, Mr. Moonman, Hello," which proved very popular. We feel sure that the good impression created by his first record will be fully confirmed by the artistic rendition he gives this selection in which his sweet voice and perfect enunciation are particularly agreeable.

The same record was referred to in the abbreviated monthly list; "An engaging waltz song of the sentimental type by one of the country's foremost concert tenors, the quality of whose voice is as agreeable as his enunciation is pleasingly distinct."

V. Long Edison Years

Harvey Hindermeyer was now well launched on his long and successful Edison career, which would require too much space to follow in extensive detail. Edison maintained what amounted to a stock company of the most accomplished popular recording artists of the acoustic recording period, and the artists made themselves useful in many ways. Harvey not only had the assistance of other famous stars in his records but he also sang in the choruses of many featuring his fellow performers. He sang second tenor in a number of Knickerbocker and Metropolitan Quartet records. Some of his best work was done in the medleys from "Pinafore," "Patience" and other Gilbert and Sullivan operas. (A photograph of an Edison light opera group, with Hindermeyer among those present appeared in this department for September, 1951). His interpretation of Sir Joseph Porter's song, "I Am the Monarch of the Sea," is a masterpiece! Equally good is a duet with Thomas Chalmers, "When I Go Out of Door," from "Patience." He also sang in many other favorite light opera excerpts.

When the first list of Blue Amberol cylinders came out in November, 1912, Hindermeyer was represented with one of his favorite songs, "Roses, Roses, Everywhere," No. 1554, which we have already mentioned among his Victors. The catalog description said that the song "though flowing easily, . . . has a decidedly distinctive note and reaches a beautiful climax which Mr. Hindermeyer enjoys thoroughly, as will those who hear his powerful, well-modulated voice."

In December, Hindermeyer (his name was again being misspelled Hindermeyer!) was on hand with 1585, "When I Carved Your Name on the Tree," a conventional type of love ballad, and 1505, a duet with Helen Clark, "When You're Away," from the musical comedy, "The Winsome Widow." The supplement writer paid this left-handed compliment to the song: "(It) is one of the hits of the performance. Although in the play the antics of the principal comedian tend to detract from the effectiveness of the song itself, we give it the serious treatment to which it is justly entitled."

When Edison achieved his great masterpiece of the acoustic recording era with the New Edison phonograph and Diamond Disc records, Hindermeyer was one of the first performers to make the discs, and he remained steadily among the more popular singers. Not only did he record solos and take part in quartets and chorus work, he also, during the 17 years the tonally perfect discs were issued, sang duets with Donald Chalmers, Helen Clark, Marion Evelyn Cox, Charles Hart, Charlotte Kirwan, Elizabeth Spencer, and perhaps others who escaped my hasty rundown of the catalogs. He was still singing for Edison when the electrical process was introduced and he remained an Edison artist until the venerable inventor went out of the phonograph business in 1929. He sang occasionally for other companies — for instance, he made some Okeh records for his old friend, Fred Hager, and also did a few for Gennett — but he was predominantly an Edison singer and was usually thought of as an exclusive Edison artist.

His Edison repertoire was varied and extensive. It ranged from purely popular songs such as "Margie" and his charming interpretations, with a mixed chorus, of "The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," and "I Love You," to old gospel hymns like "Are You Coming Home Tonight?" and masterful renditions of such Negro spirituals as "Wait Till Ah Put On My Crown" and "Standin' in the Need of Prayer." His duty of "Let the Rest of the World Go By," with the contralto, Marion Evelyn Cox, is a beauty, and one of his finest, though least known, Diamond Discs is "Route Marchin'," a musical setting of a Kipling poem, with a surging orchestral accompaniment featuring some astonishing crashes on the drums.

Harvey Hindermeyer, the late John Bieling, and Eugene Rose, the veteran flute soloist, at the Bieling home, Hempstead, L.I., N.Y., September 9, 1947

He likewise sang the refrains of many Edison dance records, among them "No, No, Nora" and "I Love Me." I suspect, but am not sure, he is also the unidentified chorister of "Yes, We Have No Bananas." He certainly sings the vocal part in that time-honored favorite among instrumental specialties, "The Jolly Coppersmith March." Most of his Edison records sold from $1 to $1.35, depending on the period at which they were issued; some from $1.50 to $1.85; and one—the most popular of all from $2 to $2.25. This was 82516, a superb recording of Harry Von Tilzer's great ballad, "In the Evening By The Moonlight, Dear Louise." It was one of the 300 most popular Edison records.

His identification as an Edison star was so clearly established that only a few months ago, when the New York Public Library, gave an evening program of Diamond Discs, Harvey Hindermeyer was one of the surviving Edison artists invited to be present. Among the others who came and heard their former recordings were Anna Case, Edna White and Charles Hart.

It is distasteful to relate that after we entered World War I, anti-German sentiment was such that Edison felt it expedient to list some Hindermeyer records—among them, "I'm Forever Chasing Rainbows," under the super-patriotic name of Harvey Wilson. Probably some record buyers who penetrated the secret took the use of "Wilson" to be a gesture of fealty to President Woodrow Wilson, but Wilson, as we know, is the tenor's middle name.

VI. Church & Radio Achievements

His phonograph engagements of course took up only a part of Hindermeyer's time. He was also much in demand for church and concert work. In the early 1930's The Musical Courier published a news story saying: "Grace Leadenham Austin's composition, 'At Eventide,' was the opening number on a recent program of the Choir of the First Presbyterian Church of Flushing, New York. The concert was given under the auspices of the Men's Club. Miss Austin was in the audience and was introduced by Harvey Hindermeyer, leader of the choir."

Hindermeyer was a busy man in the 1920's, in secular as well as sacred activities. When radio arrived, he and a basso, Earle Tuckerman, were among the first to see its possibilities, and they soon became one of the most popular acts on the air, featuring singing and comedy of the old-fashioned black-face minstrel sort. They were sponsored by the makers of Gold Dust, with Hindermeyer being known as "Goldy" and Tuckerman as "Dusty." Their vogue lasted several years. During that time they made one Edison Diamond Disc, which I haven't yet been able to find but which I badly want, No. 51830, "Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane" and "Zip Coon."

In February, 1927, Hindermeyer appeared in a new Columbia list for the first time in exactly 16 years when he and Tuckerman, as "The Gold Dust Twins," came through with record No. 820-D, "Susan Jane" and "Stop That Knocking at the Door." The supplement gave the mistaken impression that Columbia had issued other duets by them when it said: "Goldy and Dusty, the Gold Dust Twins, sure do themselves proud with their latest record. . . . There are light touches of philosophy and a lot of real laughs, put over in a most melodious, pleasing style."

The duet team not only sang the old-fashioned, homey, minstrel-style music on radio, but did much research into genuinely antique Americana. On one Washington's birthday they resurrected "The Derby Ram," a song that had been a favorite of George Washington. Another time they sang one of Abraham Lincoln's favorites, "The Blue-Tailed Fly," which has since become a popular number on the air.

VII. I Meet Harvey Hindermeyer

My first meeting with Harvey Hindermeyer, whom I had long admired and now regard as a dear friend, came just a little more than 40 years after he strolled the streets of Philadelphia and heard his first record being played. The date was September 9, 1947, and I was in Hempstead,

New York, for one of the parties given by the late John Bieling for his veteran recording artist friends. John asked me if I would mind going to the station, to meet Harvey when he got off the Long Island train and show him the way to the Bieling home, accompanied by John's sister-in-law, Mrs. Katherine Moore, I set out.

The train had already arrived when we reached the station, and I saw a stocky, white-haired man walking vigorously along. I recognized him at once and introduced myself, receiving a cordial look from his large brown eyes. And I still have happy recollections of the conversation that he, John Bieling, and some of our friends and I had that night. Part of the time, as he ate his dinner, he autographed postal cards for record collectors who couldn't be with us.

I remember asking Harvey if it was true, as I had heard, that he some times filled in high notes for Billy Murray, whose production of highs tended to be uncertain. He said it was. He also recalled that on one occasion when the American Quartet had an engagement to sing in upstate New York, Billy, who was also uncertain about filling dates, didn't show up, and Harvey went along as second tenor in his stead.

I asked if he had done any Edison tone tests and he said he traveled "from the Atlantic to the Pacific," giving them, and, as far as he knew, not one person ever was able to distinguish the sound of his living voice from his reproduced tones on the phonograph. However, he recalled a fiasco that occurred one night when he was supposed to leave the stage in the dark and leave the New Edison singing in his place. He stumbled and fell off the stage, effectually spoiling the act. I recalled that the late Arthur Collins had a more serious accident during one of those "dark bells were hung on either side of the altar and had a symbolical part of the ceremony there.

(Continued on page 55)

HARVEY HINDERMEYER and his old friend, Fred Hager (former Okeh recording director) at the 1948 John Bieling Day, Garden City, New York
(Photo by Allen G. Debus)

Russia is the homeland of a little bisque woman whose skirts hide a bell. She holds a cup of tea and nods her head back and forth when placed in the palm of your hand.

Bells shaped like flowers and decked with flowers; bells bearing the coats of arms of provinces in France, democratically nudge bells that speak with varying tongues of early America.

"That ship's bell was found in the sand near the Inlet," Mrs. Kipp tells the observer. "This little rusty iron bell was unearthed near Tomoka Park." Did it come, perhaps, from one of the nearby long vanished plantations Audubon visited?

Beside the cabinet full of bells, hangs a string of sleigh-bells whose silvery jingles recall the snowy Pennsylvania landscapes they once knew.

Another of Mrs. Kipp's bells with a history, is one that once hung in a tavern on the pike from Washington to Brownsville, Pennsylvania. It was used to herald the approach of the stagecoach, some 100 years ago, according to her aunt who gave it to her.

In Mrs. Kipp's garden is a small summer house, with a 50-pound plantation bell hanging in it. The bell was once used on a Georgia plantation to call the slaves from the fields. Her largest bell, a 150 pounder, is nearby. It was a gift from her cousins in Pennsylvania and was on their estate for eighty-five years, but it was not new when they acquired it, Mrs. Kipp recalls, so the exact age is not known.

Mrs. Kipp's interest in bells has added other items with a bell theme to her collection. She has received innumerable bell corsages (and has saved them all); a decorative painting of lily "bells" hangs on the wall and is a gift of the artist, Margaret Jones. A tiny old-fashioned music box tinkles out "Monastery Bells" and was a gift of her husband. Her daughter gave her the antique Liberty Bell glass platter bearing the names of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Reprinted, with permission, from The News Journal; Daytona Beach, Florida.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 33)

scenes," when he fell down a ladder into the basement of a theater and was grievously hurt.

I asked Harvey if there were any special "tricks," as rival dealers had maintained, in giving Edison tone tests, and he replied: "Well, you had to make yourself sound like the machine." When I asked if that implied the singer imitated the Edison, he said he hadn't meant it that way. What he did mean was that the artist must learn to sing exactly on the phonograph volume level. Some performers of nervous temperaments or with imperfect breath control couldn't do it. They'd find themselves singing louder than the instrument. Thus a certain amount of practice was necessary, and the singer had to continue practicing to find the right level and keep it.

"Obviously," Harvey said, "the phonograph was capable of extracting just so much volume from a record. There was no mechanical means of amplifying the sound to fit the requirements of a large concert hall, as a singer could do by simply singing louder. Since it would be unreasonable to expect a phonograph to alter its volume and keep pace with changes made by the singer, it was up to the artist to sing just as loud as, but no louder than, the phonograph. As far as the tone quality was concerned, there wasn't the slightest difference between the singer and the Edison."

Harvey told an amusing anecdote about how he and Tuckerman tried to make one of the long-playing Edison records, introduced in 1926, which ran 20 minutes to a side. The boys were going to fill both sides of a 12-inch disc with their minstrel songs and patter. The first time they had sung 19 minutes successfully into the horn when somebody opened the studio door and slammed it. That spoiled the last minute. The second time they had gone 19½ minutes when a train whistle blew, and the record was ruined. Thereupon Hindermeyer and Tuckerman said, "The heck with it!" or words to that effect, and refused to try any more. It proved impossible for Edison to make 20 minute discs by the horn recording method without a break, and the few Edison LP's that were issued all contained dubbings of ordinary four-minute Diamond Discs.

I remember, too, Harvey's saying he considered Billy Murray the greatest of all the popular recording artists.

When September 9, 1948, came, dear John Bieling was dead, but some of his friends held a John Bieling Day party at the Garden City Hotel on Long Island as a tribute to his memory. Harvey Hindermeyer was among those present, and he and I had another warm greeting. I appreciated his thoughtfulness in bringing me fine photos of himself. Two years later there was a second John Bieling party at Hempstead, and again Harvey was there. He sang "The Sunshine of Your Smile" in a manner that proved him still a master of the concert ballad.

We haven't met since, but it was at the 1950 get-together I told Harvey I'd like to write an article about him for HOBBIES. The biographical sketch has been postponed much longer than I anticipated, but here it is and I shall send it to my cherished friend for his approval. I hope that he will like it, inadequate as it may be as a tribute to his many years of artistry, and that he will accept it as a "Golden Anniversary" greeting. With all my heart I wish Harvey Hindermeyer many years of health and happiness and hope that we shall meet again and that I may enjoy more of his delightful reminiscences.

Postscript

After this article was mailed to HOBBIES, I received a letter from my old friend saying that, contrary to what I had always understood, his name should be spelled Hindermeyer rather than Hindermeyer, as it usually appeared on record labels.

He also gave some interesting information in his letter, from which I quote:

"Your sketch of me is wonderful and I thank you more than I can tell. Yes, I was married to Miss Gertrude Miller in Philadelphia in 1905 in the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, but unfortunately we did not have any children and my wife passed away in 1948.

"Did you know that Mr. Edison used my voice in his experiments while perfecting the Disc? I cannot tell you how many times I sang 'Carry Me Back To Old Virginny' during that process."

I'd like to add one further note. When the New York Public Library gave a concert of Edison Diamond Discs a few months ago, Harvey Hindermeyer was one of the former Edison recording artists who graced the occasion with his presence. Others were Anna Case, Amy Allerman, Edna White, and another noted tenor, Charles Hart.

J. W.

BELLS FOR SALE

ANGEL of the Month Bell, $1.25 postpaid - state month. Stamp for list of collectors' bells, please.—Mrs. C. W. Noren, Stonecrest Antiques, Marlborough, Connecticut P.O. East Hampton, Conn. 03464

Travel Search For Bells By A. C. Meyer — $2.50

A story about the Meyers personal search for bells. A down-to-earth summary of a fascinating hobby.

Published by

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORPORATION
1006 So. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

BELL CATALOG $1.00
Illustrated with 363 Bells and Prices I Pay.

•
Sell a bell to me!
Catalog is yours for FREE!

•
Your $1.00 refunded on my first purchase!

•
LAWRENCE ALTMAN
Sherman Park Antiques
5088 Easton Ave.
St. Louis 13, Mo.
my750

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Art Gillham "The Whispering Pianist"

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE: This article is dedicated to Dennis Deas of Gracewood, Ga., who made it possible for me to write it).

Recently I had an acidulous discussion with a veteran record dealer concerning the younger sets' passion for the "singing" of such performers as Elvis Presley.

The dealer shook his head resignedly. "I'm like you," he said. "I can't understand what they see in those characters. But getting crushes on recording artists and show business personalities is nothing new. After all, middle-aged women have acted just as silly as the kids, but about Liberace. And before Presley there were Johnnie Ray, Sinatra and Crosby, and going even farther back, we had Rudy Vallee, Gene Austin and Art Gillham. Fifty years ago women were writing mash notes to Billy Murray and Henry Burr, and Ada Jones was receiving dozens of written proposals from men who were smitten by her records."

"That's true," I agreed, "and your mention of Murray and Burr reminds me of something. I learned not long since that about 30 years ago Murray, Burr and the other members of the Eight Famous Victor Artists made a sound film for Metro, Goldwyn and Meyer called 'Eight Victor Artists at the Club.' I've been trying to get a copy for my phonograph curio collection, but have learned that although the negative has been preserved the sound, recorded on a separate disc, has been lost. It's exasperating."

The dealer looked thoughtful a moment, then smiled. "Did I ever tell you," he asked, "about the girl who had a crush on 'The Whispering Pianist,' Art Gillham? She lived a few miles out of town and came in one summer morning with several other girls who were going somewhere. They trooped into my store, and the Gillham fan told them she'd decided she didn't want to go any farther but would stay and 'play a record.' They could come by for her on their way home. Well, she played a record, all right. She asked for a sirupy thing called 'I Love You—I Love You—I Love You, Sweetheart

READ AND APPROVED
By ART GILLHAM

June 20, 1957

Dear Jim:

Am rushing this back to you. I think it's good. You have done a swell job. I corrected one or two spots and added the five best sellers of all my records—hope that's okay.

I wonder if I will be able to get about six copies of the HOBBIES issue that will have this article in it. I have a few "cotton picking" relatives who would want a copy. If you get them this way be sure to contact me at once, and good luck. Sincerely, of All My Dreams' and started playing it about 9 o'clock. Once in a while she came out for a drink of water, but she stayed in that airtight booth until 2:30, playing that same record over and over. I thought I'd go nuts. When her friends mercifully rescued me, she was pale but happy, and left without saying anything about buying the record. No, they're no worse now than they were in 1929. . . By the way, whatever happened to old Art Gillham?"

ART GILLHAM

"I don't know," I replied. "He is the only crooner whose records I can listen to with unqualified pleasure. Most of the others give me the willies, but Art had a pleasant tenor voice. Although it wasn't of operatic caliber, at least it wasn't a husky, one-note baritone, and his brilliant piano playing made his records sparkle. I liked him better in his comedy numbers than the ballads and tear-jerkers, but I've never been fond of musical sentimentality. As to what became of him, I've made repeated efforts to find out over the past ten years, without any luck. I even wrote to Station WSM at Nashville, with which he used to be associated, but received a brief reply that they had no information concerning him. I'd really like to know what's become of the old boy, because I liked him a lot."

As so often happens, my lack of information was relieved in an unexpected way. The postmaster at Gracewood, Ga, Dennis Deas, wrote to compliment me on my HOBBIES article about Gene Austin. He then said he wished I would do one on Art Gillham and mentioned that the erstwhile "Whispering Pianist" lived in Atlanta, Ga., and was in the office space rental business. He even gave me Art's address. This resulted in my writing to Gillham and, to my surprise, obtaining a prompt reply. (Most singers are notoriously slow correspondents, if they answer mail at all.) We have since exchanged several other letters, and I have been impressed by the warmth and humor of Art's personality, as well as the invariable promptness of his answers. I have been sorry to learn his health could be better, but hope it will steadily improve.

II. Art Gillham's First Letter

May 13, 1957. Dear Jim: Thanks for your interest in my work, and I appreciate your letter. I am enclosing a sketch that will tell a little of what I have done in my 62 years, and a picture taken of me over 30 years ago when I was recording for Columbia, for whom I made about 60 records in a little over eight years.

I have been under the weather for the past six months, but am gradually coming out of it, and have been on the job . . . for about a month.

I expect to see Dennis Deas in July in Augusta, Ga., where I will try to be for the Legion State Convention, if I am able. . . .

Be free to write anything you wish about me in your articles. Let me hear from you again, and once more, thanks for your interest in my corny recordings. When I hear the beautiful jobs that are on the market now, I just don't tell anyone that I made records back in the dark ages; before electrical recording. By the way, I did make the first released electrical record, No. 328-D, for Columbia in November, 1923. The title was (one of my own songs), "You May Be Lonesome But You'll Be Lonesome Alone." Gosh, that was a long time ago!

III. Art's Thumb-Nail Biography

The "thumb-nail autobiography" which the singer enclosed with his letter says that his parents came to Georgia from Texas three years before he was born on January 1, 1895. They moved to St. Louis in 1904, and he attended Wyman School, Central High School and St. Louis University. Art was 19 when he left school to enter orchestra work. He served in the Army during World War I, then returned to music and entered radio at the Drake Hotel Radio Station in Chicago. That was in 1922. He was on the first network show the night President Coolidge was elected, November 4, 1924. Will Rogers was master of ceremonies. Others taking part were the Joseph Knecht Orchestra, the Shannon Four, Wendell Hall, and the late Carson Robison, who died early this year.

The "Whispering Pianist" identification was bestowed on Gillham by Lambdin Kay at WSB, Atlanta, in February, 1924, while he was touring and appearing at radio stations. He was a featured, exclusive Columbia recording artist from 1924 to 1931, and recorded about 40 of his own compositions. Art estimates some 40,000,000 of his records were sold.

In 1932 he began working at WBBM in Chicago, and at some time around this period I heard an announcer at WSM play a number requested by the singer, whom he jokingly referred to as "Art Gillham, just a broken-down old piano player in Chicago." (Art frequently called himself "a broken-down old piano player.") While at WBBM he met and married Gertrude Sheldon in October, 1932, and they will celebrate their 25th anniversary this October.

In January, 1937, Gillham left radio and returned to Atlanta. For 15 years he served as principal of Crichton's Business College, but left to open his own business, "The Representative's Center," at 3105 Roswell Road, N. E. Summing up, Art said: "Gertrude and I have 3 1/2 acres out of Atlanta, a house in the middle of them that we built at 152 Burdett Road, N. W. I have done numerous radio programs and TV shows on local stations since I have been in Atlanta, but just as a 'side-line' or for advertisement for my own business. I have had two attacks of coronary thrombosis, and cannot use my arms too well to play piano very long at a time, so am not active in music any more."

IV. More Letters from Art

When I replied to thank Art for his informative letter (his cooperation has made this one of the easiest HOBBIES articles I have ever written), I questioned his statement that he made that first electrically recorded Columbia record in November, 1923, and pointed out it wasn't issued until the spring of 1925. I asked if he didn't mean November, 1924. I also said I don't admire most of today's vocal recordings, because the engineers make them sound any way they wish, changing a man with a tinny little voice into a Tamagno, and that most of the time the voice coming from the record has little resemblance to the original. On May 20, Art replied:

Dear Jim: Well, you caused Old Pappy a lot of thinking to no purpose, so I went up into the attic and dug up the old scrap book—because when you get over 60 and try to remember dates of 30 to 35 years ago happenings, you sort of kinda get fouled up. And I was really fouled up on the date of the time of 328-D.

I made that record in November, 1924, and your dates are right. I came into New York about the first of November for the network show and then stayed for recording ten sides for Columbia.

Just goes to show you how forgetful an old man can get—1924 was a year of firsts for me. Lamdin Kay, the "Little Colonel" of WSB, gave me the tab of "The Whispering Pianist" in February when I spent a week at the station, and I used it from then on; worked the first network program in November, and made Columbia's first electric recording in November.

I made ten sides for Gennett Records at Richmond, Ind., in 1923, of which they released four; made four sides for Pathe Records in New York, in 1924, all released, and made six sides for OkeH Records in New York, in 1924, all released, before I signed an exclusive agreement for Columbia Records. My first release for Columbia was "How Do You Do, Everybody?" on one side, and the other side was "Way Out West in Kansas."

I agree with you on some of these modern recordings, but the microphone certainly was a blessing for me, when I could work so softly that I could not be heard in the studio, yet it came out as clear and distinct as it did. Thanks again for your interest and let me hear from you at any time. Sincerely, ART.

In my next letter, I asked Art if he could give me a complete list of his Gennett, Pathe and OkeH records, to supplement the one I had made of his Columbia discs. I mentioned, too, that his record of "How's Your Folks and My Folks Down in Norfolk Town?" (his only Columbia on which he didn't sing both sides) was one of my favorites, but that any Virginian could tell he wasn't a native of the Old Dominion because he pronounced Norfolk as "Nor-fork," instead of "Naw-f'k," as Virginians do. I also asked why on one of his 1931 Columbias, "When They Changed My Name to a Number" - a piece of sentimental tripe that was probably his worst record - somebody named Alex Hill played the piano accompaniment, instead of its being by Art himself. With the letter I enclosed a list of his Columbia records (printed at the end of this article) and asked him to check it.

With his unfailing promptness, Art replied on May 24:

Dear Jim: Thanks for your letter and list of the 22nd. I find you have about seven records listed that I had forgotten about—damn, I'm getting old. But there were two more that you did not have listed, namely, 2349D—To Whom It May Concern/Gazing at the Stars, and 1319D—Silver Haired Sweetheart/Who Gives You All Your Kisses? And I'm afraid that about covers the Columbia releases.

Here is some inside dope on some of them. . . . Due to the acceptance and big sale on 328D, Frank Walker, the recording manager for Columbia, wished to get another record on sale quick, and had only one more side that I had recorded. With me on the West Coast and unable to get to New York at once, he backed Van and Schenk on "Norfolk," the only record where I was not on both sides. And about Norfolk—I ruined three masters when recording this one (as I was from the "Deep Sooth"), because Walker insisted on my putting the "r's" in and that took plenty of practice.

Red Nichols' Band was the Lanin's Red Heads on "Five Foot Two, Eyes of Blue." He and I were good friends, and he asked Walker to have me do a vocal on his record. I did, and it did the sales no good. That was the only dance record for which I sang the vocal.

Both sides of "When They Changed My Name to a Number" were tunes that Walker wanted me to record SURE, and as I had no time to get up on the piano part and get them on wax, we used a publisher's piano player to get them out quick. (And they both stunk). You see, I was doing a lot of personal appearances and theater dates at the time, and I got away for only two or three days or week at most to run into New York for recording.

I do not recall any of the numbers I recorded for Gennett, and the only ones I remember for Pathe and OkeH are "How Do You Do?" and "The Deacon Told Me I Was Good."

Sorry to hear about Jimmy Dorsey's illness (and subsequent death). He and Tommy were mighty nice to me back in the early '20's, when I was just getting started.

In all my record, theater, songs and personal appearance dates, I at no time had an agent. I paid no one commissions on my work, as I handled all my own business. When I went into New York with recording on my mind, after making about 50 radio stations around the country as a traveling radio artist, I sent a telegram to each recording manager of the various New York companies, telling them I was on WJZ for one week at noon and at 9 o'clock at night, and as I had a radio following throughout the country they should be interested in my record sales, if I made records. The only companies that responded to the telegrams were Pathe, then OkeH, then Columbia—so I made records. That was also in 1924.

Thanks again for your interest, and I am waiting to see the sketch you are writing about "Old Pappy." I hope we can get together one of these days.

And so, up to this moment, stands my correspondence with Art Gillham. But I hope to keep hearing occasionally from "The Whispering Pianist."

V. The Gillham Records

I do not intend to discuss Art Gillham's recordings in detail, but shall call attention to some I consider among the best. Too, there are some interesting comments scattered through the Columbia supplements in which his records are reviewed. A majority of the records are sung to his own piano accompaniments, but a fair number have an orchestral background, identified in some instances as by his "Southland Syncopators" with Art at the piano. All are electrically recorded except four. (See the accompanying list.)

The first Gillham record, issued late in 1924, coupled, as he has already mentioned, "How Do You Do?" (which became best known as the theme song of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare) and "Way Out West in Kansas." The acoustic recording is rather poor, but the horn method under no circumstances would have done justice to Art's light tenor voice. Next in order was a slightly risqué but amusing composition of Art's own, "The Deacon Told Me I Was Good," coupled with "Carolina Blues." The first electric has already been identified as 328D.

Art says his biggest selling records were, "You May Be Lonesome", "So Tired", "Things that Remind Me of You", "Thinking", and the top one "Waiting for Ships that Never Come In".

Now, let's look at the supplements. In August, 1925, there was a review of No. 387, doubling "Take 'Em to the Door," by Van and Schenk, with "How's Your Folks and My Folks?" Of the Gillham side, the supplement said:

The coupling is by the The Whispering Pianist (Art Gillham), the cross-country radio tourist, whose friendly, intimate way of whispering his songs has made him popular with Columbia buyers who have heard his previous records.

November 1925:

The Whispering Pianist (Art Gillham) is becoming more popular every day. A recent letter from him—he is touring the radio stations of the Middle West—says he is getting requests to sing more ballads. Here are two ballads ("So That's the Kind of a Girl You Are" and "Feelin' Kind O' Blue") that are sung in a way that clearly indicates why he is popular as a ballad singer.

January, 1926, brought some bad news, but with a word of reassurance to Art's fans:

A short time after Art Gillham . . . recorded "I'm Sitting On Top of the World," he accidentally shot himself and has been confined to the hospital since. Recent word from him, however, tells us that he is improving and expects to be back "on the air" in a short time.

March, 1926, brought two double-faced Gillham records, No. 529D and 550D, with this comment:

The Whispering Pianist is one of the most sought-after artists on the air. He is in constant demand throughout the country, and he attributes his popularity to the intimate way he delivers his entertainment. Whether he is singing a ballad, a blues or a comedy number, Art injects his personality in a way that makes it "different."

As an example of the way Art infused personality into his records, may be mentioned his characteristic way of talking to his hands and telling them to "play it pretty for the folks" or his simply saying, "play it, fingers!" This dry humor added much to the entertainment quality of his records.

June, 1926:

Art Gillham has added to his titles that of "The Modern Minstrel of the air," because of his frequent touring of radio stations. The Whispering Pianist presents "In Your Green Hat" in an entirely different style than that usually used for such songs. His intimate, conversational tone adds a touch that is not usually found in the work of other artists.

October, 1926:

The Whispering Love-Maker—Art Gillham. This record makes Art the world's champion indoor and outdoor, daylight and after dark whispering love maker. Art made a special trip to Columbia's New York Recording Laboratories to get "Tenderly" and "Thinking" off his mind and on to the wax. The last named required a lot of effort on Art's part.

By this time, a new Gillham record almost invariably came first in the monthly lists of popular numbers, indicating Art had become Columbia's biggest selling singer. He usually managed to select song titles that the record buying public would almost automatically associate with him, and frequently the two sides of a record "ran together" so naturally they could be read as one title—sometimes with amusing results. Examples: "Hot Tamale Molly, Can't Your Friend Get a Friend for Me?" and "I Can't Keep You Out of My Dreams—Hello, Little Girl of My Dreams". Also, "I Don't Want to Forget Broken Hearted Sue," and "Don't Forget the Pal You Left at Home Twiddling My Thumbs."

Incidentally, Columbia always seemed uncertain as to how Gillham's records should be listed in the yearly catalogs. Prior to 1929 they were referred to as by The Whispering Pianist (Art Gillham.) If you looked up Art Gillham in the 1929 and 1930 catalogs you were told: "See Whispering Pianist." But in 1931 if you turned to "Whispering Pianist," you were instructed to "See Art Gillham"!

Continuing with the supplements, in June, 1927, we find the following:

When the Whispering Pianist (Art Gillham) sings "I'm Only Another To You," thousands of girls who have heard him on Columbia New Process Records, the air and the stage will rise to object. Any girl who has ever listened to Art's whisper will never forget it. "I'm Drifting Back to Dreamland" is another appealing selection by this popular artist.

"Drifting Back to Dreamland" was also a surprising selection. When I obtained a second-hand copy many years after the record was made I put it on expecting to hear a few bars of piano introduction, after which Art would sing. But he never did uplift his voice. The disc is a delightful piano solo all the way through, beginning with shimmering effects resembling the wail of Hawaiian guitars, then gradually stepping up the tempo until a breakneck speed is reached, after which, for the conclusion, it subsides to waltz time. Toward the end of his Columbia career, Art made another "Dreamland" record. It is one of the few of his I don't have, but I assume it is a vocal.

In the July, 1927 supplement:

And now The Whispering Pianist picks "Broken Hearted" as the vehicle to express his feelings. Perhaps Art really is broken hearted—because there are no more worlds for him to conquer. He's a hit on the stage, a sensation on the radio, and a favorite on Columbia New Process Records.

In August:

The Whispering Pianist . . . presents a new style of interpretation in "I Crave You," which is coupled with "Tonight You Belong To Me." In the first named selection, Art introduces to Columbia's record audience his Southland Syncopators. As Gillham whispers the words, his orchestra keeps in perfect rhythm and fills in every space behind him.

So much for the supplements. Art Gillham's success continued as long as the sale of records held up. He not only recorded the latest ballads and comedy numbers, but also showed a fondness for reviving such old-timers as "Chinatown, My Chinatown," "Just for Tonight" and "On the Alamo." They were all deftly sung and accompanied.

As has often been related, the world-wide depression that began in October, 1929, almost put an end to the record business. Sales in 1930 were not half of what they had been in 1929, and those for 1931 probably were not half of 1930. As for 1932, that was the worst year in the industry's history. It is estimated that Columbia's entire record sales didn't reach 250,000 copies for that entire year.

However, "The Whispering Pianist" continued to whisper on "New Process" Columbias for almost two years after the depression began, and made some of his best records during that period. Their sales, naturally, were small. His last, 2506D, was issued in September, 1931. Columbia passed under new control and late in 1932, as part of a desperate effort to restore some semblance of sales, began putting out a new "Royal Blue" record. The 1933 catalog was a thin, poorly printed pamphlet, but it still contained a few Gillham records: No. 2245D, 2374D, and 2506D.

ART GILLHAM at the height of his radio and recording career

By the next time a catalog was issued, several years later, these too were gone. But Art had been a big seller as long as there were millions of record buyers to cater to.

And our genial friend in Atlanta is still remembered with affectionate pleasure by a multitude of now middle-aged men and women who heard and enjoyed his recordings when both they and the world seemed young. He deserves, and I am sure he has, the gratitude of millions of popular music lovers to whom he has given so much enjoyment. Let us all join in wishing him a long and happy life and speedy restoration to perfect health.

COLUMBIA RECORDS

By ART GILLHAM (1924-1931)

(NOTE--All are 10-inch, double-faced. All are electrically recorded except No. 238D, 297D, 326D and 343D. Both sides are by Gillham in all except 387D.)

- 238D How Do You Do/Way Out West in Kansas
- 297D Carolina Blues/The Deacon Told Me I Was Good
- 326D Hot Tamale Molly/Can't Your Friend Get a Friend For Me?
- 328D You May Be Lonesome/I Had Someone Else Before I Had You
- 343D Hesitation Blues/Second Hand Love
- 387D How's Your Folks and My Folks? /Take 'Em to the Door Blues (Gus Van and Joe Schenk)
- 411D Smile All the While/Angry
- 428D If You Leave Me I'll Never Cry/Cecelia
- 442D So That's the Kind of a Girl You Are/Feelin' Kind O' Blue
- 458D Are You Sorry?/Loving Just You
- 505D I'm Sitting on Top of the World/You're More Than a Pal To Me
- 529D Bam Bam Bammy Shore/Don't Let Me Stand In Your Way
- 550D She's My Gal/Mean Blues
- 614D In Your Green Hat/It's Too Late To Be Sorry Now
- 626D I'd Climb the Highest Mountain If I knew I'd Find You/Say It Again
- 657D It Don't Do Nothing But Rain/He Ain't Done Right By Nell
- 685D I Wish I Had My Old Gal Back Again/I'm Leaving You
- 710D Tenderly/Thinking
- 737D I Can't Keep You Out Of My Dreams/Hello, Little Girl Of My Dreams

- 771D Just Waiting For You/Crying Again
- 806D Rags/ Just a Little Longer
- 842D I Don't Want To Forget/Broken Hearted Sue
- 892D Things That Remind Me Of You/Let's Make Up
- 955D I'm Drifting Back To Dreamland (piano solo)/I'm Only Another To You
- 972D Broken Hearted/If I Get a Sweetie Now
- 1007D Tonight You Belong To Me/I Crave You (with the Southland Syncopators)
- 1051D I'm Waiting For Ships That Never Come In/Pretty Little Thing
- 1081D That Savophone Waltz/I Could Waltz On Forever
- 1116D Flutter By, Butterfly/I'd Walk a Million Miles
- 1152D I Love You But I Don't Know Why/Just Before You Broke My Heart
- 1194D Don't Forget the Pal You Left At Home/Twiddlin' My Thumbs
- 1253D What a Wonderful Night This Would Be/Now I Won't Be Blue
- 1282D You'd Rather Forget Than Forgive/So Tired
- 1319D Who Gives You All Your Kisses?/Silver Haired Sweetheart
- 1353D I Found You Out When I Found You In/The Hours I Spent With You
- 1392D Gee, But I'm Blue/I'm Longing For My Old Gal, Sal
- 1429D Nobody's Lonesome But Me/In My Sweetheart's Arms
- 1472D I'm Missing The Kissing Of Someone/My Heart's Aching For My Old Gal
- 1540D Right or Wrong/It's Never Too Late To Be Sorry
- 1572D My Heart Cries Out For You/Somebody Else May Be Telling Her Something (She'd Love To Hear From You)
- 1619D Chinatown, My Chinatown/ Just For Tonight
- 1663D Lamp of Aladdin/You Can't Take My Memories From Me
- 1726D I Love You, I Love You, I Love You, Sweetheart Of All My Dreams/Some Sweet Day
- 1802D Somewhere There's Someone/What Wouldn't I Do?
- 1873D I'm Still Caring/You've Made My Dreams Come True
- 1919D Two Little Rooms/True Blue
- 1944D On The Alamo/Tell Me There's Hope For Me
- 2016D Blue Little You and Blue Little Me/If You Know What I Know You'll Know I Love You
- 2051D If You Were The Only Girl In the World and I Was the Only Boy/Hollywood
- 2119D Have a Little Faith In Me/Ab-

A photo of Art Gillham distributed by Columbia records in 1929

- sence Makes the Heart Grow Fonder for Somebody Else
- 2189D You Don't Care/If I Had to do Without You
- 2245D Just Forget/Tonight
- 2265D Confessin'/My Heart Belongs to the Girl Who Belongs to Somebody Else
- 2291D Good Evenin'/I'm Drifting Back to Dreamland
- 2331D (You Were Only) Passing Time With Me/When They Changed My Name to a Number
- 2349D To Whom It May Concern/Gazing at the Stars
- 2374D Shine On, Harvest Moon/If You're Happy I'll Be Glad
- 2450D If You Haven't Got a Girl/Something Reminds Me of You
- 2506D Just a Minute More to Say Good-by/You are the Rose of My Heart

Dance Record with Vocal Refrain By Art Gillham

- 483D Five Foot Two, Eyes of Blue (fox-trot by Lanin's Red Heads, conducted by Red Nichols)/I'm Gonna Hang Around My Sugar (Lanin's Red Heads—no vocal).

Do You Remember?

By EDNA C. ARMSTRONG

When colors were named very differently from now? For instance, there was reseda, sage, and Nile greens, magenta and cerise in reds, watermelon pink, heliotrope in lavender, and robin's egg, peacock, and Alice blues.

— o —

When every town had one or more mandolin clubs?

When one of your favorite playthings was a set of doll furniture made of paper.

— o —

When the "Grecian Bend" was so popular and by metal devices, women would dip the front of their belts from three to six inches below the normal waist-line?

When the first "high-water" skirts came out, with brush binding at the bottom, and made of heavy material like the later golf capes?

— o —

When meningitis, and appendicitis were pronounced—eetis?

— o —

When China silk, foulard and peau de soie were favorite dress fabrics?

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Edwin M. Whitney

By JIM WALSH

The genial gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article occupies a warmly individual place in my esteem, for he is the first recording artist with whom I ever had the pleasure of speaking.

That statement means just what it says. Edwin Whitney was not the first pioneer recording artist whom I had seen. I had heard a number of others, including some of the most famous, in their concert appearances. But he will always be memorable to me because he was the first I was privileged to shake by the hand and with whom I had a long, and to me, engrossingly interesting conversation—one which he also seemed to enjoy.

I met Mr. Whitney on only the one occasion I shall describe, and although, we occasionally exchanged letters afterward, I have not heard directly from him in many years. However, my old friend, "Uncle Jim" Harkins of the NBC Television Department, tells me that Edwin Whitney, who was at one time a National Broadcasting Company program director, is now living in happy retirement at Pawling, N. Y.—a next door neighbor to the renowned news commentator, Lowell Thomas.

Many HOBBIES readers will remember the Chautauquas which used to make the rounds of the nation's towns and smaller cities every summer. The annual Chautauqua visitation was a great event in a community's cultural life, and although these productions, given in a large tent, were derided by the snobbishly inclined "intelligentsia," they resulted in millions of villagers acquiring a touch of, and perhaps a taste for the finer things. It was a Chautauqua that was responsible for my meeting Edwin Whitney.

When the news came that the Chautauqua would soon be in town I wasn't greatly interested, although I had pleasant recollections of having seen a Victor recording artist, William Sterling Battis, give some excellent impersonations of Dickens characters in one a couple of years before—an event that caused my brother Chad, then a primary school youngster, to go around for weeks afterward, imitating Battis, imitating the brain children of our favorite author. Chad's delineation of Uriah Heep was a masterpiece of whining and writhing. But when I learned the famous elocutionist, Edwin M. Whitney, was to be a feature of one night's performance, my interest perked up. His "Walnut Story" record had been a favorite in our family for years, and I wanted to see and hear in person the man who made it.

Then I got the audacious idea I'd like to meet Mr. Whitney. It was not in my nature to obtrude myself upon a person of distinguished attainments, but I felt that if the noted entertainer realized I was one of his phonograph followers he wouldn't mind exchanging a few words. So I approached the manager of the Chautauqua, told him that I would like a chance to talk briefly with Mr. Whitney, and explained why. He readily agreed to introduce me and asked me to come around that night about an hour before the performance would begin.

You may be sure I did go, accompanied by a teen-age friend, Llewellyn Elsbree (always known as "Boss"), who went everywhere with me in those callow days. True to his word, the manager took me back stage and presented me to a rather slightly built gentleman attired in a blue suit that matched his eyes. His hair was white but his complexion was fresh, his face unlined and, in spite of the white hair, he had a surprisingly youthful look. We shook hands and he had spoken only a few words before I realized I was in the presence of a cultured gentleman and a man of high intelligence.

He, on his part, understood I am

DEATH OF EDWIN WHITNEY

Since this article was written we have learned of Mr. Whitney's death in a New York hospital on June 5.

The veteran singer and elocutionist had been looking forward to the appearance of his biographical sketch and we regret that it appears too late for him to see it.

sure, that he was being admired by a somewhat excited and impressionable youth.

I told Mr. Whitney of the pleasure his record of "The Darkey and the Boys" had given all the members of my family, and asked if he knew where it had originated. He said he had learned the story from a Virginia-born humorist, the late Ralph Bingham, but didn't know where Bingham had obtained it. I interrupted to say I hadn't heard Bingham was dead and to express my regret. (The maker of "Mrs. Rastus at the Telephone" was another comedy favorite of mine). Mr. Whitney then told me Bingham had died a year or two before and gave some details of my fellow Richmonder's death (like Bingham, I was born in Richmond), which I have forgotten.

I asked the cordial gentleman how he happened to begin making records, and he said it was because Victor engaged the Whitney Brothers Quartet to sing a series of "standard" songs and gospel hymns, and he was the quartet's second tenor.

That also was news to me. For years I had been reading Victor catalogs in which records by the Whitney Brothers Quartet were followed by those of Edwin M. Whitney, "humorist and elocutionist," but it had never occurred to me he was one of the quartet singers.

I mentioned this and said I had read a death notice in The Billboard some time before about a singer whose name wasn't Whitney but who was identified as a former member of the Whitney Brothers Quartet. Knowing that not all the Six Brown Brothers of saxophone sextet fame were really brothers, I'd had no trouble accepting this statement, but it seemed to annoy Mr. Whitney.

"Whoever that man was, he never sang in our quartet," my Chautauqua friend said. "I should know, for I was a member of the quartet until it disbanded. And all my brothers who sang in it are still living and in good health."

I asked Mr. Whitney what he thought of the Whitney Brothers records as compared to those made by the modern electrical method, and he said he thought they were very good, considering the time and circumstances under which they were made. He said that, as compared to electrical recordings, there was a lack of "dynamics"—that is, strong contrasts between loud and soft and what musicians refer to, in painter's terms, as "light and shade"—and that this lack of dynamics was more evident in their few Edison cylinders than in their Victor discs.

"We had to be very careful," he said, "not to get too close to the horn, otherwise we would 'blast.' I remember somebody at Victor telling me Schumann-Heink was inclined to crowd the horn, and they had several strong men—I think it was six—to pull her back whenever she was about to let go with a loud, high note —high, that is, for such a chesty contralto.

"We met some nice fellows at Victor," Mr. Whitney went on. "The manager of the artist and repertoire department was Harry Macdonough. No doubt you know of him?"

I replied that I did and told Mr. Whitney something he didn't know, that Macdonough, whose real name was John Scantlebury Macdonald, had recently left Victor after many faithful years with "His Master's Voice" and was now a Columbia recording director.

"Then," the elocutionist went on, "I remember Rous, the assistant artist and repertoire manager. He was also the baritone of the Hayden Quartet."

"I thought," I said, "his name was S. H. Dudley. That's what the record catalogs call him."

Mr. Whitney smiled. "His real name was Rous," he said "Dudley was just an assumed name. But there was a well known colored comedian whose name really was S. H. Dudley, and I was told they stayed in a constant mix-up from getting each others mail. Poor old Rous," he added, with a sad look. "I understand he went blind, had to give up his job and now is just about down and out. Too bad, for he was such a nice fellow!"

It just happened that a short time before I had written to Camden, asking what had become of S. H. Dudley, and I was able to assure Mr. Whitney that the baritone's plight wasn't so bad as he feared. Rous, who wrote the first "Victor Book of the Opera" and was for years the company's catalog editor and supplement writer, had suffered severe eye-strain but had recovered, retired and was living comfortably in Southern France.

Mr. Whitney said he thought the quartet made about 40 Victor records and perhaps a dozen for Edison. If they did a large percentage of their records went unissued by both concerns. I know of only four Edisons that were actually published, and can account for less than a score of Victor titles. I asked which he considered the best and he said emphatically: "Swanee River" ("Old Folks at Home.")

Then he mentioned something that greatly interested me. "Last fall," he said, "I was playing an engagement in the Middle West when I saw that the Eight Famous Victor Artists were giving a concert that night. I went, and soon became convinced that those fellows gave the perfect light entertainment. They were all masters of whatever they had to do. When the intermission was called I went back stage and ran into the manager of the troupe, Henry Burr, who was standing in a doorway. As he turned and saw me, he said: 'Your face is familiar, but hanged if I can place you. Where in h---have I seen you before?'"

"I don't know," I replied. "What part of h---did you come from?"

EDWIN MORSE WHITNEY, as he appeared while program director with the National Broadcasting Co.

"Somehow that seemed to jog his memory. 'Oh yes, I know now!' he exclaimed. 'Whitney Brothers Quartet—you were one of the quartet! Hey, fellows!' He excitedly called the other members of the troupe, and I renewed my old acquaintance with Billy Murray, who of course, had been acting as master of ceremonies. Then I met the others who hadn't been actively recording in my phonograph days. Carl Mathieu, first tenor; Stanley Baughman, baritone, and Jim Stanley, the bass of the Peerless Quartet; Monroe Silver, the 'Cohen' monologist; Sammy Herman, the xylophonist, and young Frank Banta, who seemed just a kid but had been playing piano for the troupe a good many years. We had a great time together, and the Eight really seemed to hate it when they had to go back and give the second half of the concert, instead of staying back stage and talking about the good old phonograph days."

I think the high point of our chat came when I told Mr. Whitney something that I have since told many famous recording artists — that as a small boy I operated, in imagination, the Walsh Talking Machine Company, and made out, in pencil tablets, a record catalog that came to contain thousands of titles. "And," I said, "although you didn't suspect it, Edwin M. Whitney was one of my artists."

At this Mr. Whitney gave a shout of delight and called the Chautauqua manager. Turning to me, he said: "Tell him what you've just told me!" I repeated my statement, and the manager mentioned that one of the Chautauqua speakers, Ruth Bryan Owen, daughter of William Jennings Bryan, was "an Orthophonic Victrola fan" and went into Victor dealers' shops to hear the new records wherever they traveled. Mr. Whitney expressed great admiration for the Orthophonic and its ability to reproduce large massed effects. He mentioned a record of "The Bells of St. Mary's" by the Associated Glee Clubs of America, in which 1,500 voices had taken part, and said the singing was transmitted over a telephone line into Victor's New York laboratories, where the actual recording was done.

A member of the Ellenor Cook folk dancing troupe, whose act preceded his, passed us and smiled significantly, I thought, to indicate he'd better be getting ready for his own contribution to the evening's entertainment. So "Boss" and I took the beautiful young lady's hint and said goodbye to Mr. Whitney. As we parted he slapped me on the back and exclaimed, "All the luck in the world to you!"

We youngsters then went out front, where in due time we enjoyed the Ellenor Cook dancers and watched Mr. Whitney give a one-man production of a three-act play, "The Man From Mars," whose plot—a sermon against selfishness—seemed suggested by Dickens' "Christmas Carol" but was nevertheless gripping. As the newspaper review said the next day, "it was excellently given by Mr. Whitney, who impersonated at least a dozen characters and seemed an entire theatrical company in himself."

So ended my first, and up to now, only "get-together" with the first recording artist I ever met, Edwin M. Whitney.

II Biographical Notes

Despite the pleasure this meeting gave me, I still knew little about Edwin Whitney's life story. However, the 1938-39 edition of "Who's Who in America," has since come to my aid.

It identifies Edwin Morse Whitney as "an interpreter of plays," (as he was in giving the one-man production of "A Message From Mars"), and says he was born March 17, 1877, at Parma Center, N. Y. Hence by the time this article appears he will be on the verge of observing his 80th birthday or will have passed it.

His father was the Rev. Edwin J. Whitney, and his mother before her marriage was Miss Myra C. Bentley. Mr. Whitney was graduated in 1896 from the high school at Castile, N. Y. Six years later he was graduated from the Emerson College of Oratory in Boston.

On September 8, 1904, he married Miss Foss Lamprell of Malden, Mass. She died January 7, 1923. He married his second wife, the former Miss Emma Miller Bolenius of Lancaster, Pa., on July 29, 1933.

As we already know, Edwin Whitney began his career (in 1902) as a reader and as second tenor of the Whitney Brothers Quartet. In 1912 he became a reader of plays. After radio became popular, he went into broadcast work. In 1928, he became program director for the National Broadcasting Company — a position which he retained for several years.

Much earlier, in 1914, he had founded and directed the Whitney Studios of Platform Art, and in subsequent years filled more than 5,000 engagements in public recitals.

At the age of 21, he enlisted in Arizona as a member of Company A, First Territorial Volunteers Infantry, serving in the Spanish-American War, and being advanced to first sergeant. He is a Republican, a Methodist and a 32nd degree Mason.

III The Whitney Records

The recording careers of both Edwin M. Whitney as an elocutionist and a humorist and of the Whitney Brothers Quartet were confined to a two-year period, from late 1908 through a part of 1910. However, one of their Edison cylinders, recorded during this time, was not issued until 1911.

January, 1909, marked the first appearance of the Whitney name in the Victor list. The quartet made its debut on No. 5629, with a musical setting of Eugene Field's poem, "The Little Red Drum." Like most—perhaps all—of the Whitney records, this was unaccompanied. Catalog Editor, Sam Rous introduced the ensemble thus:

This fine organization, which is composed of four brothers, is quite well known to patrons of the various Lyceum courses, and the brothers have thousands of admirers, especially throughout the Middle West.

It is rare to find in one family four gifted sons; and rarer still to find them with voices so placed that they can assume the several parts in a male quartet. The Whitney Brothers sing both classical and popular songs in a most artistic manner, and in their concerts give an entire evening's program without other assistance.

In spite of the praise the brothers' work received, the unaccompanied singing and the nature of the song were perhaps too much out of the ordinary to appeal to the average record buyer of almost 50 years ago. "The Little Red Drum" was not a big seller and stayed in the catalog only through May, 1912.

The Whitneys were again on hand in February, with No. 5635, an old English glee, "Hail, Smiling Morn." Said Ed Whitney's old friend, Mr. Rous: "The quartet's singing of this number is wholly admirable; the trying turns which each voice takes up in turn being rendered with a facility which shows the most careful study and unlimited rehearsals." This record, too, was not a spectacular seller, but lasted longer than any of the other Whitney single-faced discs and remained in the catalog until May, 1913. It is odd that all the Whitney Quartet one-sided records, containing some favorite standard numbers, were comparatively poor sellers, but most of their double-faced discs remained consistent favorites for many years.

Also in February appeared Edwin Whitney's first recorded monolog, the already mentioned "Darky and the Boys." No description was given other than the sub-title, "The Walnut Story," but this record, No. 5636, was for a long time one of the best selling humorous numbers. In 1910 it was combined on No. 16661 with "The Old Oaken Bucket Parody," by Nat M. Wills, and remained available until 1923. The amusing story tells of two boys dividing walnuts they had gathered behind a high graveyard wall. An elderly Negro, walking past on the other side, hears them and decides the Lord and the Devil are inside, "dividin' up de souls." He runs and tells a white man, who scoffs but nevertheless accompanies him to the wall. They arrive just in time to hear one of the boys say: "There, that's all of 'em! Now we'll get the two outside of the fence an' we'll have 'em all!"

"And they tell me," Mr. Whitney concludes, in a drily unctuous voice, "that the white man beat the Negro running!"

This monolog was of the type of comedy popular in the days before "racial stereotypes" were the butt of organized opposition, and by 1909 standards it sold gratifyingly.

A long time went by before more Whitney records were issued, but in September, 1909, there were three ten-inch and one twelve-inch by the quartet. Judging by the titles, all should have sold well and it's surprising that none was taken into the double-faced list. The three smaller records all of which made their final appearance in the January, 1912 catalog, were: 5727, "Dixie"; 5728, "San Lucia," and 5730, "How Can I Leave Thee?"

That same month, a new monolog was offered by "Edwin Whitney, elocutionist." It was No. 5740, "Roosevelt and the Darky." The supplement said:

Mr. Whitney, who is the second tenor and elocutionist of the Whitney Brothers Quartet, is pleasantly remembered for his amusing "Darky and the Boys" which has been most popular. A new record by this clever entertainer is now offered—a good story circulated about our late President, shortly after his return from that celebrated bear hunting trip in Louisiana. It will be admitted that the old darky did what very few people in the world have been able to do; and really got the best of Theodore Roosevelt.

The Roosevelt record didn't sell as well as the "Walnut Story" and today is rather hard to find. And what was "that celebrated bear hunting trip?" The quartet's first double-faced record came out in November, 1909. It was 16362, on which the brothers' singing of a hymn, "Eternity," was coupled with a "clear" and distinct reading of the Twenty-Third Psalm and the Lord's Prayer. The reader's name wasn't given, but he was Len Spencer, and his Columbia version of these readings was played at his funeral in December, 1914.

In December, the Whitneys were represented with the beautiful old song, "Forsaken," on one side of 16369, coupled with "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs," by a husband and wife duet team, Elizabeth and William Wheeler. On 16372, they sang "Home of the Soul," which had on the reverse side, "I Am Praying for You," by Frank Stanley and Henry Burr. There was another Whitney monolog, "A Couple of Good Ones" (and they are!) combined with one of the best ragtime songs ever written, "Oh, That Yankiana Rag," sung by the greatest of all ragtime singers, Billy Murray.

It was probably also in this month that one of a series of "Special records," which dealers were not expected to carry in stock but could obtain on special order, was issued. It was 5746, "Grace Be Unto You," a hymn by the Quartet with "greetings" spoken by Edwin Whitney. I have never found a copy of the obscure record, which lasted only through January, 1912.

The next double-faced disc in numerical sequence was 16401, "Sally In Our Alley," whose "mate" was "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms," a soprano solo by Elizabeth Wheeler. January, 1910, brought two Whitney Quartet offerings on record No. 16430, "Remember Me, O Mighty One" (sacred words to the melody of "The Soldier's Farewell") and "Galilee." This was followed in February with 16441, "Jesus Saviour, Pilot Me" and "Light of Life," on which the supplement commented: "The double records of hymns by the Whitney Brothers Quartet have been quite successful, and the two numbers now offered are perhaps the best of the series."

March records included: "Nearer, My God To Thee," by the Whitneys, combined on 16451 with "Yield Not To Temptation," by the Australian baritone, the late Percy Hemus. It also brought the final Edwin Whitney monolog, another Victor record I have never found: No. 16459, "A Phenomenon," with, on the other side, "Experiences of a Commuter," by the famous comedian, Lambs Club enthusiast and New York Giants rooster, Digby Bell, who died in 1917. The catalog description said: "Two amusing talks by two famous raconteurs. Mr. Bell relates in his usual witty style some happenings in a railroad station; while Mr. Whitney gives us another of those darky stories in which he is inimitable. A colored preacher, having used the word 'phenomenon,' is hauled up before the congregation and forced to explain. He does!"

A month later, Victor issued No. 16454, "Old Folks at Home," which I have already mentioned. Mr. Whitney said he considered the best of the quartet's records. It was combined with "Loch Lomond," by that accomplished soprano, Elizabeth Wheeler. (She and her husband years afterwards went to Ann Arbor, Michigan, where they headed the University of Michigan music department and had, as a promising baritone pupil, Thomas E. Dewey, who was to become governor of New York and twice a candidate for the presidency of the United States). Immediately afterward followed 16465, "The Light of the World is Jesus," coupled with "He Leadeth Me," by Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler.

And that was the last of the Whitney Quartet Victor recordings. In view of the obvious popularity of their "standard" songs, it is rather puzzling that they did not continue to make other records. "Galilee," "Home of the Soul," "Remember Me, O Mighty One," and "Sally in our Alley," were still in the 1925 catalog, as was "Eternity," which had been remade in 1924 by the Shannon Quartet. They were removed only because of the introduction of the electrical recording process, and when, in 1927, a catalog of records of special personal and historic interest was issued, No. 16430, 16362 (in the remade Shannon version) and 16372 were included.

IV The Whitney's Edison Records

As has already been said, the Whitney Brothers made only a few Edison cylinders; or at least a mere handful were ever issued. No. 10230, a two-minute version of "Santa Lucia," was announced in October, 1909. The supplement said: "This record introduces a new combination of artists to the Edison public. The Whitney Brothers' Quartet, as its name indicates, is composed of four brothers, all of whom possess remarkably fine voices. Their work is truly artistic."

In the same month, a four minute record of "Love's Old Sweet Song," also was issued with the comment: "The first Amberol record by this quartet. This record, together with the one shown in the list of two-minute selections, will put the Whitney Brothers in a high niche among Edison artists."

In order to build up its catalog of the recently introduced four-minute Amberols, Edison also issued in October, 1909, a special list of 50 additional titles. One was 280, "Sally in our Alley." The supplement said: "This old English song is given an effective rendition by this remarkable quartet of brothers, whose work is a little different in character from any similar organization we have had. It shows the great pains they have taken to perfect themselves in quartet singing."

The only other Edison cylinder by the Whitneys did not appear until August, 1911. It was a two-minute rendition (No. 10610) of "Forsaken," and was announced as follows:

This grand old song with its beautiful melody and rich harmonies is well adapted for quartet singing. In the hands of the Whitney Brothers it shapes itself into a record which must eventually find a place in collections of the better grade. The artistic rendering of the number by this quartet of capable artists is pleasantly reminiscent of their superb rendition of "Love's Old Sweet Song" and "Santa Lucia."

Concerning "Love's Old Sweet Song," the March, 1911, complete Edison record catalog, had lavished high praise by saying: "This favorite sentimental ballad was never given a more delightful reproduction anywhere than is here presented." In view of such enthusiasm, it's a pity Edison didn't see fit to issue more of Whitney records. All those mentioned here were cut when wax cylinders were abandoned late in 1912 in favor of the unbreakable Blue Amberols.

PIONEER PHONOGRAPH SONG.—This is an illustration of the cover design of possibly the first song ever written about the phonograph. A few months after Edison invented the phonograph in 1877, a 16-year-old boy, Henry Holden Huss, wrote "The Song of Mister Phonograph," which was published in 1878 by G. Schirmer and sung at the phonograph exhibitions then being given in New York. It was the first published composition of Huss, who became a noted composer of serious music in a career that lasted 75 years. Notice the music was published under the pen name of H. H. H. von O'Graph. After Huss' death five copies of the sheet music were found in his effects by his widow. His nephew, B. A. Lascelles of Kew Gardens, N. Y., sent a copy to Jim Walsh.

V Conclusion

And so ends the story of the recording career of Edwin M. Whitney and his three brothers of the Whitney Quartet. Not having been in touch with Mr. Whitney in recent years, I do not know whether all, or any, of his brothers are still living. But they were fine artists whose memory can never be entirely forgotten as long as their records survive. As for Edwin Whitney, he will always have my affectionate warm wishes for the reasons I set forth in the beginning of this article. I hope that he will enjoy many happy years of retirement in his beautiful home at Pawling.

—o—

Several months after the foregoing article was written I became worried because there was no photograph of Mr. Whitney to go with it, and decided to try to again obtain one. So I wrote to "Uncle Jim" Harlins, of the National Broadcasting Company, and asked if any photos remained from Mr. Whitney's association with the network. He was able to find only a clipping from Radio Guide of December 14, 1931, but as a result of "Uncle Jim's efforts I had a long distance telephone conversation, the night of May 11, with Mrs. Jean Whitney, which resulted in the accompanying photo being sent to me. I also exchanged a few words with Mr. Whitney, but he suffers from a severe asthmatic condition that made it necessary for him to cut the conversation short.

From Mrs. Whitney I learned the Whitney Brothers Quartet was composed of Alvin, first tenor, now dead; Edwin, second tenor and professional (Continued on page 35) reader; William, baritone, also dead; and Yale, bass, now living in California. Another brother, Casward, not associated with the quartet, lives in Pittsburgh.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 33)

During his stage career, Mr. Whitney appeared in "Becky Sharp" with Minnie Maddern Fiske. After joining NBC in 1928 he created the roles of Captain Jimmy Norton in "Harbor Lights" and Judge Whipple in "Real Folks." He directed "Death Valley Days" for four years, and also directed "The Wizard of Oz," "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round," "Friendship Town," and "Waltz Time," with Abe Lyman's Orchestra.

The Radio Guide article contained this interesting paragraph — which, remember, appeared nearly 26 years ago:

"... It seems impossible to believe that anyone with eyes like Ed Whitney's could ever grow old. He is clean-shaven, fresh complexioned, has a dimple in the center of his chin, and gives the appearance of being keenly alive. He has a lovely deep voice, and speaks very clearly and easily. His favorite dishes are his mother's home-made bread, cinnamon buns and allspice apple pie. She is 81 years of age, but still young in spirit, and whenever Ed is expected home she dons her apron and visits the kitchen to make his favorites for him."

The Records of Jack Norworth

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

PART 2
(Will be continued in an early issue)

BINDERS For HOBBIES

The wealth of information contained in each issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with consequent danger of loss.

Holds 12 issues.

Price each $3.00

HOBBIES

1006 S. Michigan Chicago 5, Ill.

CIGAR STORE FIGURES IN AMERICAN FOLK ART

By W. PORTER WARE
& A. W. PENDERGAST

PRICE $2.50

78 pages, 48 plates

Once these proud chiefs guarded shops along early Main Street
through good weather
and bad, lending a virile tone to the atmosphere.

Published by

The Lightner Publishing
Corporation
1006 S. Michigan
Chicago 5, Ill.

Circusiana

Questions and Answers

By DANA STEVENS

Q. Was there ever a parade wagon patterned after the old woman in the shoe idea?

A. Such a wagon was built in 1888 for the Barnum and Bailey Circus. It was entitled "The Old Woman in the Shoe." It was built when James A. Bailey decided to have a series of fairy tale floats in the parade, which he called the childrens' section of the street parade. At various times this wagon was used by Cole Bros. and by Ringling Bros. Circus.

Q. When was the first light plant used to light a circus performance?

A. The earliest mechanically operated light plant in a circus was a slow speed, on-lung horizontal, engine-belted set employed by the Ringling Brothers about 1910. It gave much trouble and spectators had to be kept away from its long belt.

Q. I've heard that a ski jump was once featured in a circus. Do you have any information about this?

A. In 1907 the Barnum and Bailey Circus featured such a ski jump by a Captain Carl Howelson.

Q. It is said that P. T. Barnum's famous Jumbo, the elephant, had a fabulous appetite. Do you have any facts about what he ate?

A. It is reported that Jumbo ate the following for his daily ration: 200 pounds of hay, two bushels of oats, ten loaves of bread, a barrel of potatoes, two or more quarts of onions, and an occasional keg of beer.

Q. What were Jumbo's actual measurements?

A. According to the Museum of Natural History, Jumbo was 10 feet, nine inches tall.

Q. What happened to Jumbo after he died?

A. Jumbo was mounted and displayed by the circus for several years. Later his skeleton was given to the Museum of Natural History, where it may now be seen. His hide was reconstructed and mounted and placed in the Barnum Museum at Tufts College, Medford, Mass. Barnum was once on the board of directors of this college.

Q. Was the Dailey Circus on the road in 1948?

A. Yes. They played a number of dates in the Midwest that year. The show was a five-railroad car show. One of the main attractions was the baby elephant named "Butch." A contest was held in each city among the children patrons to try and find a new name for "Butch." Any boy or girl under twelve years of age, who attended the circus, could suggest a new name by dropping that name into a receptacle at the entrance to the big top. The winner was to be given five hundred dollars and a trip to the winter quarters of the show in Gonzales, Tex.

Q. Does Emmett Kelly ever get a haircut?

A. It is said that Kelly gets only two haircuts a year, and even then the barber leaves his hair long for it is an integral part of his clown characterization.

Q. Is there a school for clowns in Paris?

A. I know nothing about this school other than that First Sergeant Elmer C. Linquist, veteran of two world wars, received a sheepskin from a Paris clown school during his time in the army of occupation following World War I, and in 1947 started clowning full time for the Sparks Circus.

Q. Are most clowns unhappy?

A. It is not true that all clowns hide an aching heart. Stories about unhappy Pagliaccis of the Big Top have always fascinated the public. Some can be traced to an original source of woe, while others can only be said to exist as part of the legend of clowndom. But, by and large, most clowns are happy persons and according to Dexter Fellows, one of the great circus press agents of all time, a clown's aim in life is to provoke laughter, not to cover up a melancholy disposition.

(Continued on page 43)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Charles D'Almaine

By JIM WALSH

(This article is dedicated to one of my dearest friends, an admirer of Charles D'Almaine and himself an accomplished violinist—Albert Ross Via, Jr., of South Boston, Virginia).

A few years ago I went with Mr. and Mrs. Albert Via, Jr., to visit Branch Dunn, of Halifax, Va., and hear his fine high fidelity phonograph. After listening to a superb long-play performance of a Bartok violin concerto by, I believe, Yehudi Menuhin and the Philharmonic Orchestra, I remarked:

"I wonder how Charles D'Almaine would have played that?"

Albert, who had frequently discussed the pioneer recording violinist's techniques with me, replied: "I doubt that he could have played it." When I asked why, he said that D'Almaine had recorded mostly short, simple pieces of the salon or semi-classical type when he was not performing jigs and reels or downright "popular" music. "He never in his career," Albert pointed out, "recorded anything as hard to play as this concerto."

I had a ready answer. "Neither," I said, "did anybody else in those early days. After all, you couldn't crowd a concerto or an extended classical violin work onto a single-face 7 or 10-inch disc or a two-minute wax cylinder. The early Red Seal violinists, such as Maud Powell, Elman and Kreisler, played mostly the same sort of salon-type music on records that D'Almaine used. If D'Almaine played 'The Mocking Bird', Kreisler played 'Old Folks at Home.' Kreisler, in fact, recorded a great deal more strictly popular music than D'Almaine."

Then I went on to say that fifty years and more ago, recording techniques weren't capable of mastering the interplay of sound between a violin and a large orchestra, and the record-buying public wouldn't have bought such "long-hair stuff" if it had been made. Tastes ran to "Humoresque," the Meditation from

"Thais," "The Irish Washerwoman" and "Pop Goes the Weasel." And I wound up by saying I believed that if D'Almaine were playing today he could have interpreted that Bartok concerto in a manner to do it justice.

On further reflection, Albert agreed D'Almaine should not be blamed for not having recorded the more ambitious types of music and expressed admiration for the quality of tone he produced in performing the meager recorded violin repertory of his era.

I still stick to my contention that Charles D'Almaine, one of the most versatile musicians who ever touched bow to fiddle, could have given an excellent account of himself in any branch of the classical violin field. Regardless of his merits, he certainly has been one of the most difficult subjects about whom I have ever striven to obtain biographical information, and I am grateful that I find myself able at last to pay tribute to so colorful and accomplished a musician.

II EARLY INFORMATION

The more one knows about the pioneer recording artists the more there still seems left to learn. The research worker can never be sure some unexpected piece of information won't come along to upset existing beliefs. For instance, my friend, C. Hilding Bergquist of 3029 — 15th Avenue, South Minneapolis, Minnesota, who specializes in accordion records, thought he had a complete list of all American discs made by P. Frosini. But now Hilding has learned Frosini made overture recordings for Paramount and Puritan, which had previously been unknown to him. Naturally, he's eager to obtain these "mystery records" by his virtuosic idol. And I had never doubted the brilliant old-time blackface comedian, Billy Golden, used the name his parents gave him. However, Raymond Tump of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, who owns a book, "Monarchs of Minstrelsy," written by Edward Le Roy Rice and published in 1911, quotes Rice as saying Golden's name was really William B. Shire and he was born (in Cincinnati) June 9, 1858. The book further says he began his partnership with Joe Hughes (that appears to have been Hughes' legal name) September 25, 1904.

Similarly, during the many years in which I have been trying to find out more about Charles D'Almaine, I have received a great deal of well meant misinformation. Although I have admired D'Almaine since my childhood, when I made him the "staff violinist" for that imaginary Walsh Talking Machine Company which I have mentioned so often in HOBBIES, he ranks with other artists (among them Eddie Morton, Silas Leachman and George Alexander) about whom I did research for years before I had information enough to write an article. What little I knew for a long time about D'Almaine was contained in the following biographical sketch appearing in several editions of the Edison Blue Amberol record catalog:

A native of Hull, England. Mr. D'Almaine comes of very musical parents, both of whom were operatic artists. He displayed remarkable talent when a mere boy, and at 14 played before Royalty at Inversay Castle, Scotland. Coming to this country with the Balmoral Scotch Choir, he met with immense success upon his first tour. As soloist with the Redpath Bureau, Marie Decker Concert Company, and with many symphony orchestras, he has acquired fame both as a master of technique and of expression. His hobby is the making of his own violins.

(Parenthetically, that mention of D'Almaine's having been soloist with many symphony orchestras seems additional reason to believe he could have mastered a concerto by Bartok or anyone else).

The sketch was accompanied by a small photograph of D'Almaine, like one I have submitted in the hope that it can be reproduced. It shows him wearing a mustache curled at the ends and as having dark hair brushed back from a high forehead. I had never seen a photograph of D'Almaine without a mustache, until—to anticipate a little—one was sent to me by his sister-in-law in Chicago. I also hope to reproduce it.

As I grew up, I frequently found myself wondering if Charles D'Almaine were still alive and what had become of him. That was one of the questions I asked the late Frank Dorian, that veteran Columbia official who was so genially helpful in giving me information over a period of years. I am quoting from memory, not being able to lay hands on the letter in which he answered my inquiry, but he replied substantially in these words:

"Mr. Forbush (Walter Forbush, another pioneer Columbia official) tells me Charles D'Almaine 'hung up the fiddle and the bow' long ago and became a chiropractor in Newark. We do not know whether he is still alive."

For a long time this odd information, that the gifted violinist had abandoned his profession to adopt another—that of adjusting spines—was all I could learn about the post-phonograph days of Charles D'Almaine. But, as the pages that follow will prove, I tried to find out more.

This unusual, smooth-shaven photograph of Charles D'Almaine was sent to Jim Walsh by D'Almaine's sister-in-law, Miss Lillian Berry of Chicago.

III MORE INVESTIGATION

One golden day in October, 1940, I was having lunch in Lindy's, the famous New York theatrical restaurant, with Jimmy Martindale and three of the great recording artists of earlier years—all gone now—Billy Murray, Albert Campbell and Monroe Silver. I asked what had become of Charles D'Almaine. (By the way, the violinist's family name is pronounced Dal-main).

"Mike" Silver, who made his first records in 1910 or 1911, didn't remember D'Almaine at all, but little Al Campbell spoke up, "I haven't seen Charles D'Almaine in 35 years," he said. "Is he still alive?"

"That's what I'm trying to find out," I replied, and Billy Murray chimed in:

"I remember one thing Charles D'Almaine said to me many years ago. We were eating together in the Victor Lunch Club, and he said: 'Billy, one way to have a happy married life is always to take your vacation separate from your wife. If my wife goes to Atlantic City, for example, I go to the Maine woods. Each one takes time off at the spot he or she prefers. When the few weeks of separation are over we're happy to be back together.'"

"I haven't seen Charles D'Almaine for many a year," Billy concluded, "and I don't know whether he's still living, but I have never forgotten that 'happy though married' theory of his."

A little more than two years later I had a letter from the Rev. Damian Smith of St. Mary's Abbey, Newark, N. J., which contained an interesting passage about the violinist. Some of the information Father Smith gave was incorrect, but that was not his fault. It resulted from erroneous information he had been given. He wrote:

"Re Charles D'Almaine, I have gathered the following information (from one of the men in Edison's plant in West Orange). Up until his death, just a few years ago, he was a chiropractor in Ocean Grove, New Jersey. The informant paid him a visit there four years ago and said he lived right beside the post office, but couldn't remember the name of the street. He said that if you would write to the postmaster in Ocean Grove he could most likely put you in touch with D'Almaine's wife (if she is still living) or some of his children (if he had any). Another informant at Edison's said D'Almaine was not an Englishman, but a French Canadian."

Before going farther I shall correct the misinformation in the foregoing paragraph. D'Almaine was not dead when this letter was written December 7, 1942—the first anniversary of Pearl Harbor—but died the following year. And, he was not a French Canadian, but a "John Bull Englishman." Mrs. D'Almaine had already died, and the couple had no children. Several years after Father Smith's letter was written, Ed Forman, record sales manager for RCA Victor, told me a young man had called on him and, as Ed believed, represented himself to be D'Almaine's son. He asked if there were any master records by D'Almaine still in the Victor vaults and was told not one remained. Mr. Forman was not sure, however, the man identified himself as the violinist's son, and he had mislaid the card his caller gave him. The relationship, if the inquirer claimed any, may have been something else.

During the years that followed the Smith letter I was so busy doing research about other pioneer recording artists, I did little about D'Almaine. But in June, 1951, I followed the suggestion that I write to the postmaster at Ocean Grove, only to receive this discouraging reply:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: No one in this office has ever heard of the D'Almaine family. I'm sure you have the wrong town. Sorry. I can't help you. Respectfully, Willie C. Austin. P.M."

In the preceding March I had written to the Newark Daily News, asking if its files contained anything about D'Almaine. Stan Gruvy, of the News' library, whom I frequently called on for help in those days, replied:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: Sorry again!! No record of his obit from 1938 to 1944. Hope you're luckier next time."

IV CHECKING THE CHIROPRACTORS

By this time my dander was up, and I took what now seems the obvious step of writing to the Palmer School of Chiropractic at Davenport, Iowa, and asking what its files revealed about D'Almaine. The reply I received was the most revealing I'd had up to that time. On July 5, the following letter was sent to me:

Dear Mr. Walsh: We have your letter of June 27, requesting what information we have concerning Charles D. and C. Helen D'Almaine, but we doubt if the information we can impart will be of much value to you for the reason that it consists entirely of addresses we had for them over the years.

This photo of Charles D'Almaine is the one usually reproduced in old record catalogs and supplements. It was taken in 1900 by the Channell Studios of East Orange, N. J.

When these people enrolled here at the Palmer School of Chiropractic on April 6, 1914, they gave as their home address 104 Webster Avenue, Bronxville, Westchester county, New York. As of July 3, 1915, C. Helen D'Almaine gave as her future address 4438 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. As of October 4, 1916, Charles gave as his future address Fireman's Building, Broad Street, Newark, New Jersey.

The last address we had for C. Helen D'Almaine was 36 Park Place, St. Regis Building, Newark. She was taken off our mailing list on January 13, 1925.

The last address we had for Charles D'Almaine, D. C., was 101 Third Avenue, Newark. Mail sent to that address was returned to us on May 22, 1936. We've never had an address for him since that time.

In the above paragraph, where the initials D. C. follow Charles D'Almaine's name, those initials stand for Doctor of Chiropractic, which is the degree conferred upon graduates when they complete their course of study at a Chiropractic school or college.

As stated above, we realize this information won't be of much value to you, Mr. Walsh, but it is everything our records reveal. Cordially yours, The Palmer School of Chiropractic.

I was given the name of Dr. Joseph Miller as a veteran Newark chiropractor and wrote to him to ask if he could tell me anything about D'Almaine. On February 5, 1952, Dr. Miller replied that he did not know D'Almaine personally, but had got in touch with Dr. William A. Dittmar of Newark, "at one time a member of the State Board of Chiropractic Examiners, who knew of Mr. D'Almaine, but could give me no information." Dr. Miller gave the names of three chiropractors who, he thought, might have known D'Almaine, and from one—Dr. Ruland W. Lee, of 105 Halsey Street, Newark—I received a genial reply:

Dear Jim: The seeming delay in answering your letter of February 19 is due to the fact that I have been endeavoring to gather some helpful data for you, but without much success. I talked on the telephone with Henry Decker of 24 Warren Street, Newark—a former Chiropractor and a former musician colleague with Charles D'Almaine. He has not practiced Chiropractic nor played for several years. No doubt you already have such information as he was able to give me. He said that Dr. D'Almaine had played for several years at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City. Also that at the same time as he was playing there he used to spend some time at the Edison plant in Orange, N. J., making cylinder recordings.

It would make me much happier if I could give you more detailed information about D'Almaine & D'Almaine. They practiced Chiropractic in Newark and New York City. During summer months they had a home in Ocean Grove. Charlie did not devote as much time to practice as Mrs. D'Almaine. I knew them both very well—we were students at the Palmer School of Chiropractic at the same time in 1914 and 1915. Mrs. D'Almaine carried on the practice here in Newark for a few years after the death of her husband—the date of which I do not recall. When Mrs. D'Almaine decided to concentrate in practice in New York City it was I to whom she referred her patients in this area. Mrs. D'Almaine died several years ago. As well as I knew them I do not recall either of them ever mentioning that there was a son.

With best wishes to you in your interesting and unusual hobby, sincerely, Ruland W. Lee, D. C.

V MR. MUNDY OF THE METROPOLITAN

I can't recall now why I didn't immediately follow the lead Dr. Lee had given me about D'Almaine's having played at the Metropolitan, but a few months later I became acquainted by correspondence with my cherished friend, Lester White, of West Newton, Massachusetts, and he sent me a copy of a large volume, "The Musical Blue Book of America" for 1921-22. Turning casually through an alphabetical list of musicians who were active when the book was published, I snapped to attention when I saw this brief entry: "D'Almaine, Charles, Second Violin, Metropolitan Opera Company Orchestra."

So D'Almaine had continued to play after he practiced Chiropractic! This time I sent a letter of inquiry to the Metropolitan, and shortly afterward received a reply from John Mundy, the veteran Orchestral Personnel Manager, who retired not long ago to devote himself to composing. By a coincidence, my letter to Mr. Mundy was written December 7, 1952—ten years to the day from the time the Rev. Damian Smith had written to me about D'Almaine, and 11 years after the Pearl Harbor debacle.

Mr. Mundy wrote:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: Your letter . . . addressed to Mr. Rudolf Bing has been handed to me for reply."

To my own knowledge Mr. Charles D'Almaine comes from a well-known family in London, England, who were dealers in musical instruments. 1924-25 was his last season at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Herewith a letter from the Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, which is self-explanatory. Sorry for the delay in answering your inquiry. Yours very truly, John Mundy.

The letter to which Mr. Mundy referred was from Charles R. Iucci, secretary of the Musicians' Union.

It said the Union's records showed the date of D'Almaine's birth as June 13, 1871, and of his death, June 17, 1943. He lived at Hotel Newarker, 1074 Broad Street, Newark, and his beneficiary was Frank C. Berry of 4438 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago.

This was the most definite information I had yet received. On January 4, 1952, I had written to the General Register Office at Somerset House in London, England, asking if its archives contained birth certificates for D'Almaine and for Ada Jones, who was born at Oldham, near Manchester. On February 21st, H. W. Taylor of the Register Office responded:

"In reply to your letter . . . requesting a record of the birth of Charles D'Almaine, at Hull, search has been made in the Indexes of Births, registered in England and Wales, during the years 1863-1880 inclusive, but no trace of an entry agreeing with the particulars furnished by you has been found. With regard to your request for a record of the birth of Ada Jones, I have to inform you that in view of the frequent occurrence of that name in the Index of Births, the information you are able to furnish is too meagre and indefinite to permit of a search being made."

It must have been because of a desire to learn if the Metropolitan's records indicated D'Almaine's birthplace that I wrote again to Mr. Mundy on March 8, 1953. He replied that he had previously given all available information, but added:

"Sorry, we cannot be more helpful. Mr. Peyre, a violist member of our orchestra for 52 years, said he remembers him (D'Almaine) well. He was not second violinist, but a member who sat in the second violin section, and was known as Dr. D'Almaine!! Only at Met. during two seasons. Mr. Peyre did not hear from him when he gave up the instrument playing."

Regardless of frequent discouragements, I began to feel that the pieces of the musical jig saw puzzle were beginning to fit into place. So I wrote to Frank Berry of Chicago, who had been listed as the beneficiary of Charles D'Almaine's estate, and my anticipations were rewarded when I received a delightfully informative letter from Mr. Berry's sister, Miss Lillian Berry. Having read it, I realized that the information I needed to write about Charles D'Almaine was now virtually complete.

VI MISS BERRY'S LETTERS

I shall quote Miss Berry's first letter, dated March 15, 1953, almost in its entirety:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Your letter of March 5th, asking information regarding Dr. Charles D'Almaine, was forwarded to our new home, and my brother, Mr. Frank C. Berry, has asked me to answer it.

We are very happy to tell you about Brother Charles. Cornelia Helen D'Almaine was our dear sister. She passed away in Newark, N. J., on September 25th, 1933.

They were married December 24th, 1897. There were no children by that union, but Charles was previously married. I do not believe there were any children or we certainly would have heard of it in over 35 years.

Both Charles and my sister were real artists, very talented. Previous to their marriage he played first violin in the old Grand Opera House here in Chicago. He was born in London, England, and played his "fiddle" on the streets of London as a child, an orphan.

After they had been married about a year they moved to New York City. He played first violin in the Metropolitan Opera for over 17 years, and during the years that you mention he went to Philadelphia twice a week on the train to make records for Victor. I believe he also made some for Columbia.

He also was a concert violinist and my sister was his accompanist on the piano. He also had a studio in old Central Music Hall here in Chicago, teaching violin. He did some very fine oil paintings, one of which, "The Old Salt," I still have. . . I also have a fine photograph of him I would lend to you, but unless I can find another I would certainly want it back. . .

In later years both Cornelia Helen and Charles went to the Davenport, Iowa, College of Chiropractic, graduated and had offices across the street from the "tube" station on Broad Street, Newark. Charles was a Mason and my sister was Worthy Grand Matron of an Eastern Star chapter in Newark. . .

When your article is published I would like very much to have a copy.

Our home address is 10539 South Hale Avenue, Chicago 43, Illinois.

I replied almost immediately, thanking Miss Berry for her fine, informative letter, and asking if she were sure D'Almaine was born in London, since the Edison catalogs gave his birthplace as Hull. On March 24th she replied.

I am sorry to say I have mislaid or lost the death certificate which I got from Newark after Charles' passing. . . and that contained the date of birth, I believe the names of his parents, and place of birth. He may have been born in Hull, but was certainly not a French Canadian. He was English, "Johnnie Bull" to the tips of his fingers and toes.

I am enclosing a photo of Charles which I found in a scrapbook and I'll be happy to give it to you. I have only one of the fine photographs which I told you of. Would lend it so that a copy could be made, but I could not give it up. The companion photo of my sister was made at the same time and they have identical frames.

Yes, Charles did make several violins and sold them for a very good price. The last tour he made was with Harry Lauder.

My next message from Miss Berry, on a card mailed September 14, 1953, brought the sad news of her brother's death. She said that because of his passing she had no wish to proceed further with the D'Almaine biography for the time being. Largely for that reason, I have let several years go by without doing further work on the project. However, I now hope to obtain Miss Berry's approval and to publish this long planned series. . .

Meanwhile, it must be admitted there are a good many discrepancies in the record as it stands—some of them irreconcilable. For instance, Dr. Lee was honestly mistaken in believing Mrs. D'Almaine carried on the chiropractic business after her husband's death. D'Almaine himself was living when Father Smith believed him dead. All the evidence points to the couple's being childless despite Ed Forman's memory of the "son" who called on him. It is still a matter of speculation whether Charles was born in Hull or London.

His status as a member of the Metropolitan orchestra is open to question. Miss Berry believes he was first violinist for 17 years. Mr. Mundy says he was a member of the second violin section, but played with the orchestra only two seasons. (Perhaps the Metropolitan files are incomplete and he had been first violinist a good many years before). It is hard to understand how an orphan boy who played his fiddle on the streets of London could also have played for royalty, as the Edison booklet says he did, at the age of 15.

However, in the long view, none of these things matter so much. What is important is the emerging portrait of a singularly gifted man—one who was not only a fine violinist and violin maker, but also a skilled painter; one, moreover, who for almost a decade was the only violinist of importance in the phonograph world. Somehow, the name, Charles D'Almaine, seems to me to suggest a great concert virtuoso. It is the ideal name for a violinist. In former years when I read the advertisements of D'Almaine's, the great English music house, in The Gramophone, I wondered if Charles D'Almaine were a member of that family. Now, thanks to John Mundy, we know he was.

Since the preceding pages were written, Miss Berry has graciously read them and made some comments, as well as provided some additional information which I feel should be recorded here. What she says strengthens my belief that there is a mistake in the information that D'Almaine played only two seasons with the Metropolitan Orchestra. Under date of May 14, she writes:

Dear Mr. Walsh: I received your manuscript yesterday and have read it carefully, twice. There are one or two corrections, or suggestions. Otherwise, I think you have done a very fine job.

First off, I would definitely take issue with the question of time that Charles was with the Metropolitan Orchestra. In those days I spent a lot of time with my sister and Charles, and very many years attended the opera with my sister, and Charles in the orchestra. I may have been wrong as to whether he played first violin. It may have been the second.

I also was in their home the day Charles came home with the news that he had been let out. He had a contract which he thought was a life contract, and which he afterwards called "a scrap of paper!"

The management had employed a new conductor, an Italian, who said he would come on one condition—that being that he should bring 23 of his own men. So the management discharged their men and Charles was among the number! And that day both Charles and my sister said: "What an awful thing to do after 17 years of faithful service!" You see I know whereof I speak. I was there! They did spend their summers in Ocean Grove. I was with them one summer. They had rooms in a private home, and Charles played that season with Arthur Pryor's Band in Ashbury Park.

Charles died on June 17, 1943, was cremated, and his ashes brought to Chicago where they were placed in the grave with my sister. He had requested to be with his beloved.

I had, but do not know where they are now, large autographed portraits of famous opera singers. Two that I remember are of Caruso and there is one of Melba. . . Charles was on familiar terms with many and that could only happen over a period of many years.

I call special attention to Miss Berry's last statement. Caruso died in Italy, August, 1921, after a long illness. It is obvious that for him to have known and esteemed Charles D'Almaine well enough to present him with two autographed portraits, their friendship must have begun long before the "two-season" period which the Metropolitan records indicate as the extent of the violinist's association with the Opera Orchestra. I wish it were possible for Miss Berry to find one of the Caruso portraits for reproduction here.

Next month, we shall discuss Charles D'Almaine's records.

(To be continued)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 32)

worries especially when one gets contradictory statements from authorities concerned with the case. Then one does his best and finds that the critics tear him apart, because the speed may be a fraction higher or lower than these critics are accustomed to or wish to listen to. As if the listeners could not adjust their sets most of the time to the speed they prefer! And what about the abusive letters one gets, because Tamagno was recorded half a tone lower, though there may be a perfectly good reason why it was done so!

I am recording a Plancon and a Calve recital next week and I hope I shall not be far out on the speeds. Yet again I had to use my best knowledge gathered after consulting books and magazines. And I may still be out on what may be the best sound to a critic!

Please re-read my article and you will find that I was speaking generally and that what I was preaching is a correct approach to our peculiar problems. For example I found one of the Hempel Odeons to have different speed on one side of the record than on the other. I also found a Faust disc by Borjoli on Columbia marked speed 80, which should really be played with speed 77, that is if the artist was singing as the score demands. I recorded Tamagno on 78 r.p.m. in spite of much contrary advice and with the exception of Morte d'Otello which I felt should be lowered. I also had very much trouble with determining the speed of the Patti discs. I may have decided rightly or wrongly, but most of the time I had some reason for it and as good a reason as anyone else may have provided proving the contrary.

Generally speaking and within limits of gross distortions harmful to the listeners' appreciation of the music or the singer, I believe that it makes no appreciable difference to the pleasure a record can give if there is a slight—at times even as much as half a tone—disagreement as regards to the correct pitch between the experts.

I should be greatly pleased if I succeeded in convincing you and I should be glad if you could publish this letter in HOBBIES at your own convenience. In any case I should like to assure you of my personal interest in your articles and opinions even if at times we may differ. After all that makes the record collecting such a pleasure!

Trust, that I have now completely removed any misunderstanding which may have arisen between us, and wishing you the best, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

A. G. Ross

Many thanks, Mr. Ross, for your interesting letter. I'm happy to publish it, as you request, and under the circumstances it seems that a few comments of my own are necessary.

Well now, let's see: I believe the reason for your writing me was my opening paragraph to your excellent Hempel Rococo LP, in August HOBBIES. In it I said ". . . as part of the Rococo management does not believe that correct pitching is possible, etc. . . ." What other interpretation, pray, could I give to your summing up statement: "One may ask then: Does the foregoing mean that the original key and pitch of a recording or re-recording cannot be satisfactorily determined? My answer is that it cannot. One may see then what a responsibility some people take upon themselves when they assert that they are able to determine what is right and wrong in this respect."

I'm glad you find my Hempel review "honest," but then so were my other reviews. It so happened that in this record I found "a very laudable all-around job," and in some of the others I didn't. Sorry, to give the impression, that I "seemed to have been laying down the law as to the correctness of (my) conclusions rather intolerantly." It is true that I'm extremely uncompromising in my statements concerning correct pitch (and that for a solid reason), but no one who does not so choose is obliged to agree with me. In fact, I remember stating exactly this in one of my earlier reviews, as well as explaining thoroughly and repeatedly how I draw my conclusions.

Besides, when in doubt, I always say so and give a detailed reason why. It is only after weighing the matter from all angles, when I feel that my deductions cannot possibly be wrong, that I am positive in my assertions.

About the standardization of the 440 vocal modern pitch that has been done, with but little variation, long before records came into existence, so there really isn't much to worry about on this score. And as for fractions above or below in re-recording, I disregard small deviations, but when they approach a half-tone the voice is definitely distorted—something many people cannot correct on their machines, either because they don't know how or because their turntables revolve at a set speed only, or both.

Frankly, Mr. Ross, I don't know whether to continue to emphasize the pitch in LPs as much as I have. It all started when people began asking me about selections on this or that Long Play disc. Each time it is a long and tedious job, and is it worth it? Incidentally, the observance of correct pitch on LP has been stricter of late, and that is an encouraging trend. Perhaps a referendum would be in order: if enough readers write in asking that this feature be kept unchanged it will stay that way, otherwise a more conventional line of reviewing will be followed.

In closing, hearty congratulations to Rococo for its splendid work.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Charles D'Almaine

PART II
By JIM WALSH

(This article is dedicated to one of my dearest friends, an admirer of Charles D'Almaine and himself an accomplished violinist—Albert Ross Via, Jr., of South Boston, Virginia).

I. D'Almaine's First Edison Records

It would be interesting to know how Charles D'Almaine happened to become a recording violinist — just as I should like to know why he and Mrs. D'Almaine virtually abandoned a musical career in favor of being chiropractors. I wonder if he approached the recording companies after his removal to New York from Chicago in 1898 or whether somebody associated with one of the companies heard him play in a recital and suggested that he make records. Whatever the reason, the English-born musician soon became the recording violinist and remained so for almost ten years. He had virtually no opposition except from a few "celebrity" performers whose discs sold for high prices. In some way not easily explained he seemed to have a knack, unrivaled by any contemporary player, of impressing his personality upon the wax.

However, D'Almaine was not the first violin virtuoso to make records. The initial list of "phonograms" issued by the North American Phonograph Company in 1890 contains several selections by an unidentified violinist. I have not found any violin numbers in the Columbia catalogs issued during the 1890's and none appear in the Edison cylinder list for 1898. However, in the complete catalog dated October, 1899, there are 16 — all played by Frederick W. Hager, better known in later years as a band and orchestra conductor and composer. Mr. Hager is still living, in retirement in Florida, at the age of 81, but is in poor health. The numbers he played are a virtual forecast of those Charles D'Almaine would record a little later.

I believe that D'Almaine first appeared as an Edison artist in a supplement dated November 20, 1899. He was represented by three two-minute brown wax cylinders: 7324, "El Miserere," from "Il Trovatore"; 7325, "Polish National Dance," and 7326, "Ben Bolt—Fantasia." The Edison catalog for the fall of 1902 contains 18 records by him, done by the gold moulded process, which had been introduced only a few months before and made it possible for the first time to have a permanent cylinder master. Fred Hager's name had disappeared by this time as an Edison violinist, and several of the D'Almaine offerings were remakes of numbers previously performed by Hager. Both violinists are shown in a group photo of 42 Edison artists taken in 1900 and reproduced in HOBBIES of September, 1944. As far as I can find out, Hager is the only one of the group alive 57 years later.

For historical interest, here is a list of the 1902 D'Almaine records. They clearly foreshadowed the type of music with which he would long be identified, except that none of his masterly performances of Irish and Scotch jigs, reels and hornpipes had yet appeared. Yet before many years D'Almaine's lively fiddling of old country dances would type him in the average record buyer's mind as specializing in the same sort of boisterous music that John Kimmel played so well on the accordion. The following were all two-minute gold moulded Edison cylinders:

7326, Ben Bolt Fantasia; 7732, Come All Ye Faithful; 8070 (old No. 7990), Edward German's Shepherd Dance; 7324, El Miserere; 7574, Gems from Faust; 6702, Gypsy Dance; 7590, Holy City; 7377, Imitation Bagpipes and Scotch Air; 6703, Intermezzo from Cavalleria Rusticana; 7824, Le Carnaval de Venise; 8099 (old No. 6705), The Mocking Bird, with variations; 7325, Polish National Dance; 7633, Raff's Cavatina; 7455, Scenes That Are Brightest; 7192, Schubert's Serenade; 7195, Mendelssohn's Spring Song; 7458, Then You'll Remember Me; 7659, Waltz from Faust.

Several of these selections became stock favorites in D'Almaine's recording repertoire. Among his standard "war horses" were "Ben Bolt," "Imitation Bagpipes," "The Miserere," the "Cavalleria Intermezzo," "The Mocking Bird," "Polish National Dance," "Raff's Cavatina," the "Spring Song" and "Waltz from Faust."

II. D'Almaine Plays for Victor

I am assuming that Edison was the first company for which D'Almaine recorded, but that is by no means certain, and almost any statement about the pioneer recording days should be regarded as tentative and accepted with caution. It is possible that he played for the seven-inch Berliner discs concurrently with, or even before, making his Edison records, but I lack Berliner catalogs to check. It is also possible that he made Columbia records about the same time as his first Edison records were issued, but the 1899 Columbia catalog, published late in 1898, lists no violin cylinders.

However, the 1901 Columbia cylinder catalog contained 18 violin records which could be obtained in either the small brown wax two-minute size, or the five-inch "concert" or "grand" type, also playing only two minutes but much louder. No artist's name is given, but I had to smile as I read the list of titles. The repertoire makes it appear likely most, perhaps all, were by D'Almaine:

27003, Because; 27002, Ben Bolt (special arrangement); 31495, Carnival de Venise; 27013, El Miserere; 31493, Gems from "Faust"; 27012, Waltz from "Faust"; 27004, Gypsy Dance; 31492, Holy City; 27006, Imitation of Bagpipes and Scotch Airs (special arrangement); 27007, Imitation of Organ and "O Come All Ye Faithful" (special arrangement); 27001, Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana"; 27000, Mocking Bird (with variations); 27009, Mr. Finniagin's Conversazione (comic, with vocal effect); 27014, Polish National Dance; 31494, Raff's Cavatina; 27005, Scenes That Are Brightest; 27010, Schubert's Serenade; 27008, Then You'll Remember Me.

Comparison will show that Edison and Columbia were keeping remarkably in step in their choice of violin selections. I suspect "Mr. Finniagin's Conversazione" was the same comic sketch that became famous on Edison as "Down at Finnegan's Jam-boree."

Charles D'Almaine was an important Victor artist from the beginning of Eldridge R. Johnson's company in 1901. I find the following quotation from the February, 1902, Victor catalog specially interesting:

"At enormous expense, our entire list of 'Victor' (seven-inch) Records, with very few exceptions, has been remade. No greater proof of the advance we are making in recording sound could be given than the marked improvements in our new records of the old seven-inch 'Victor' lists of Sousa's Band and D'Almaine and (Samuel) Siegel's violin and mandolin solos."

This makes it clear that D'Almaine was not only recording for Victor in late 1901, when the catalog was prepared, but had even earlier played other numbers which had been remade. Here is his 1902 Victor repertoire. Records having numbers prefixed with a V were seven-inch Victors. Those with an M, were Monarchs, as the 10-inch records were then called:

V405, Ben Bolt; V432, Gems from "Faust"; V431, Hungarian Gypsy Dances; V248, Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana"; M3336, Medley of Irish Airs; V430, Mendelssohn's Spring Song; V245, Miserere; V404, Polish National Dance; M3334, Raff's Cavatina; M3337, Shepherd's Dance from "Henry VIII"; V247, Scotch Medley; V249, The Mocking Bird; M333, The Holy City; M3335, Then You'll Remember Me; V246, Traumerel.

Where have we seen most of these names before. Why, in the Edison and Columbia lists. It really seems as if when D'Almaine decided upon a suitable recording title, he made the rounds of the companies, playing it for all impartially. Of course the amount of violin music of even pseudo-classic status that would fit onto two-minute cylinders and seven-inch discs was severely limited.

Until some time in 1905, D'Almaine was the only violinist playing for Victor. Then a few Red Seal records were made by Maud Powell, and one of Kubelik's solos was imported. In the complete Victor catalog dated August 31, 1904, the following D'Almaine titles had been added:

M2802, Gavotte from "Mignon"; 1209, Hearts and Flowers (both seven and 10-inch); 2424, Polish National Dance (probably a remake of V404); 2738, Pop Goes the Weasel Medley; M2871, Raff's Cavatina; 2921, Scotch Medley; M2872, Shepherd's Dance; M1210, Sixth Air and variations (De Berliot); 2923, Spring Song; 1985, Then You'll Remember Me; 1208, Waltz from "Faust."

Observe the large number of apparent remakes of earlier numbers. Old-timers at Victor used to tell a story about the "Pop Goes the Weasel Medley," which may have been D'Almaine's first jigs and reels recording. It contained besides the title number, "Irish Washerwoman," "Mrs. McCloud's Reel," "Speed the Plow" and "Prince's Reel." The story was that many years after the record was cut from the catalog, a small boy became desperately ill and constantly demanded to hear the family's copy of "Pop Goes the Weasel," which had been broken. His physician said he would die if the record couldn't be played. The Victor company was informed of this and the master was brought out of the vault and a special pressing made, which, by its soothing influence saved the child's life. There may have been no truth to the story . . . a similar one was told about Billy Murray's record of "The Story Book Ball" but it is at least interesting.

During this period D'Almaine's records were also appearing on Columbia discs, and the Talking Machine News for May, 1905, praised his Columbia record of "Ben Bolt," issued the preceding year, as being wonderfully fine. The T. M. N. referred to its "weird, wailing strains" and added: "The almost human tone of the violin interprets marvelously that fine old English ballad, 'Ben Bolt'—which was an American, rather than an English, song. 1905 was the year that saw two other violinists added to the Columbia list—Arthur Bergh and Miss Jessie Strauss. Walter Biedermann, George Stehl (or Stell) and Jan Kocian came along shortly afterward.

FIRST VICTOR ORCHESTRA

These instrumentalists constituted the Victor Talking Machine Company's first permanent orchestra. Charles D'Almaine, second in top row, was the solo violinist.

The 1904 Victor catalog contained three records by D'Almaine described as being played on the "viol-horn." This was the Stroh violin, designed by an English inventor, Charles Stroh, to give the violin a stronger tone for recording. A small bell was fitted to the violin and served as an amplifier. It gave a coarse tone but the Stroh violin was extensively used in recording studios until electrical processes took over in 1925. The viol-horn records were 2770, "Donkey and Driver"; M2804, "Favorite Hymns" (with an organ imitation), and 2828, "Military Serenade."

"Donkey and Driver" shows D'Almaine essaying a comedy number. As described in the catalog: "The peasant starts for market with his faithful donkey—jogging along the road—the donkey becomes playful and is whipped—song of the driver—Mr. Donkey is obstreperous and lifts his voice in protest as he is again chastised."

This record sounds intriguing and I regret that I haven't found a copy. In a year or so Victor dropped the "viol-horn description" and these numbers were listed, like D'Almaine's others, under the heading of violin solos.

III. D'Almaine Joins the Victor Orchestra

In its monthly supplement for February, 1906, Victor announced that the company had set up its own permanent recording orchestra. The announcement, no doubt written by Sam Rous, did not err on the side of modesty:

The Victor Company, in 1903, began to make its vocal and instrumental solos and duets with orchestra accompaniment. It soon became dissatisfied, however, with the plan usually followed by record-making laboratories of engaging musicians as individuals whenever they were needed. Even though the best available players were used, it was found that really artistic work could not be done in this way. In 1904, therefore, the Company conceived the idea of establishing a permanent orchestra which should give its exclusive time to the making of Victor records.

From a list of the very best instrumentalists of America were chosen the players comprising the Victor Orchestra, and it is an indisputable fact that this is one of the most remarkable bodies of musicians in the world.

Although the cost of this exclusive Victor feature has been very great, the expenditure has been fully justified, as Victor records soon became famous for their artistic accompaniments and are now in a class by themselves, no other records even approaching them in general excellence.

Walter B. Rogers was conductor of the Victor orchestra, and D'Almaine was solo violinist. Here is what the supplement said concerning the English-born virtuoso:

The Victor Company has much reason to feel proud of the engagement of this noted violinist to head the string section of its orchestra. Mr. D'Almaine is an artist of international reputation, well known in England and America. His playing is marked by superb execution, delicacy of touch and great purity of tone—these qualities being especially noticeable in the fine solos and obligatos he has played for the Victor catalog, although his work with the Victor Orchestra is of the greatest value.

During this period of his association with Victor, D'Almaine proved his versatility by playing the fiddle in "The Arkansaw Traveler" and other comic sketches by Len Spencer, and by providing obligatos for a long series of contralto solos by Corinne Morgan. He also played obligatos for Harry Macdonough and other singers.

The supplement from which I have quoted gives brief biographical sketches of other members of the Victor Orchestra. Since I frequently receive inquiries concerning the personnel of this ensemble and it is unlikely I shall ever write biographical sketches of most of the members, I believe it will be worth while to interrupt the continuity of the D'Almaine biography long enough to copy the highlights of these thumbnail sketches. This information may be of special interest to collectors, such as Steve Gilman, Al Bridges and Charlie Hodgdon, who specialize in instrumental records:

WALTER B. ROGERS, Conductor and Cornet Soloist. The career of this brilliant young conductor has been one of uninterrupted success. After some years of study in the Cincinnati College of Music he joined Cappa's Seventh Regiment Band of New York as cornet soloist, and during the years that followed he was one of the great features of that famous band. On the death of Bandmaster Cappa, Mr. Rogers became the leader of the band and served four years in that capacity. In 1899 John Philip Sousa made him a flattering offer and he became the cornet soloist of Sousa's Band. After five successful years with Sousa, the Victor Company induced Mr. Rogers to leave the band and become its general Director of Music. His work with the Company speaks for itself in the Victor Orchestra records and the artistic accompaniments which are provided for Victor singers.

LOUIS CHRISTIE, Solo Clarinet. Few musicians have had such a wide experience as this young New Yorker. He has filled the position of solo clarinet with seven great bands, having served with Brooke's Marine Band, Reeves' American Band, Gilmore's Band, and under Liberati, Innes, Sousa and Pryor. Mr. Christie's work in the Victor Orchestra and Pryor's Band records shows what a valuable addition he is to the musical staff. He is one of the most accurate of players and his execution is fluent and graceful, the most difficult of clarinet passages being easily mastered.

DARIUS LYONS, Solo Flute. Mr. Lyons is a native of St. Paul, Minn., where he began his study of the flute, and made such rapid progress that he soon became the leading player of that city. Being ambitious for a wider field, however, he went to Chicago for further study, and finally to New York, where his talent soon made him widely known. He has filled the position of soloist with Victor Herbert's Orchestra, the Savage Grand Opera Company, and Sousa's Band, with which organization he remained six years. The artistic obligatos played for the soprano soloists were a feature of the band during its transcontinental and European tours. An engagement with Pryor's Band followed, and the Victor Company has now persuaded Mr. Lyons to become a member of its permanent orchestra.

EMIL KENEKE, Solo Cornet. Emil Keneke is a native of Germany, having been born in 1866, in Magdeburg. His military band experience is a wide one, comprising four years as solo cornetist in the Garde Hussars, Potsdam, two years in the 8th Field Artillery, Coblenz, one year in 7th Pioneer Battalion, and two years as first trumpet and solo cornet with the Warsaw (Russia) Symphony Orchestra. He came to America in 1892, and was solo cornetist five years with 7th Regiment Band of New York, three seasons with Innes and five years with Sousa. In 1903 Mr. Savage secured him for first trumpet in his Parsifal Company, a most important position, which he filled with distinction. The Victor Company congratulates itself on being able to secure such a player.

HERMAN CONRAD, First Bass. Herman Conrad is undoubtedly one of the best bass players in the world. His work with Gilmore's Band first made him famous, and during the six years from 1883 to 1892 he was one of the features of that great band. On the death of Mr. Gilmore there was great competition among the leading conductors for Mr. Conrad's services, but he was finally secured by John Philip Sousa, who succeeded in keeping him for eleven years, until the Victor Company in turn persuaded him to abandon the road and enlist in their service. Mr. Conrad is a man of magnificent physique and is known as the tallest tuba player in the United States.

O. EDWARD WARDWELL, First Trombone. From the frozen North came in 1893 this young Maine giant, whose splendid physique and broad chest account in some degree for the wonderful tone he produces. Wardwell's experience is a broad one and the organizations he has played with comprise the foremost in the country. He was three years with Innes, and five years with Mr. Sousa, participating in the famous European tours. In 1904 he joined Arthur Pryor's Band as first trombone, and his solos and his masterly playing with the band have been a feature of the Asbury Park engagements.

FRANK E. RESCHKE, First Viola and Saxophone. . . was born in Detroit and pursued his first studies there. After a season with Liberati's band, he settled in Chicago, playing first violin with Thiele's Symphony Orchestra and saxophone with Brooke's Chicago Marine Band and Innes Band. A flattering offer from the Detroit Symphony Orchestra induced him to return there, and after four years with that orchestra and the Detroit Philharmonic Club, he returned to the saxophone and went abroad with Sousa. As Mr. Reschke is one of the finest viola players in America, the Victor Company has persuaded him to resume that instrument, and become a member of its permanent orchestra.

WALTER PRYOR, 1st Cornet. . . is a native of Missouri and has taken a large part in the musical affairs of that state. As director and soloist of Pryor's Military Band of Missouri he gained much distinction. The Victor Company has induced him to abandon his work in the West and accept the important position of first cornet in the orchestra, where his accurate playing and fine tone have been quite noticeable.

A. LEVY, 1st Clarinet. A native of Sioux City, Iowa, Mr. Levy came to Chicago in 1894 and joined Brooke's Chicago Marine Band, the organization that has produced so many fine players. After three years with Brooke, he came East and played with Innes' and the United States Band, Victor Herbert's Orchestra and the New York Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Levy was then engaged by Sousa, and, after several seasons, joined Pryor's Band. This is his second season with the Victor Orchestra, and he has proved a decided acquisition to the Victor forces.

ARTHUR TREPTE, 1st Oboe. The Victor Orchestra is to be congratulated that it has been able to command the services of this noted oboe soloist. His beautiful tone and fine execution are especially noticeable in the higher class orchestra records, where the oboe is indispensable. The Victor Company was the first to use this instrument in its records, and the beautiful effects produced have been highly commended by music lovers.

THEODORE LEVY, 1st Violin. This talented young musician, who is not only a fine violinist but an expert cornetist, in 1896 found his native town, Salt Lake City, too small for him and came East, where his artistic playing soon secured him an engagement in Sousa's Band, with which organization he remained for many years. In 1903 he joined Arthur Pryor's Band and is now a valued member of the Victor Orchestra.

S. O. PRYOR, Tympani and Drums. This young Westerner is one of the cleverest drummers in the country. He has been for two seasons a member of Arthur Pryor's Band and his work has attracted much attention. Mr. Pryor handles the difficult work required of him in the Victor Orchestra extremely well.

(Continued on page 67)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

C. H. H. BOOTH, Organist and Accompanist. This distinguished young pianist, organist and composer has been on the Victor staff for several years, and the artistic accompaniments which he has played for the Caruso, Sembrich, Homer and other Red Seal records have been greatly admired. Many of the arrangements for the oratorio selections, grand opera numbers and other high-class records were made by Mr. Booth, and they are written in a masterly style.

As far as I know, none of these artists are still living, but it may be that some are, and have merely faded into obscurity with the years. I wonder if the two Pryors were brothers or other near relatives of the famous bandmaster, Arthur Pryor, who was intimately associated with Victor for a generation. Since they both came from the West and Arthur Pryor was a native of Missouri, it is likely that they were.

(To be continued)

A. B. C. (ANTIQUES BOOK CLUB)

A. On page 80 of the September HOBBIES our revitalized ANTIQUES BOOK CLUB offered a half-price packet with no strings attached and promised a bonus for such takers when announced the December quarterly selection. Their free bonus booklet now ready for mailing, and any latecomers who take September offer A (3 Furniture Books for $6.50) along with December offer B below get the extra bonus, too. Whatever you do, may we urge immediate action, especially on B... it's another steal in very limited supply.

B. AMERICAN LITHOGRAPHS, hard-bound basic text and identifying pictures by the great authority (Comstock) with rarity indicated. Covers not only Currier & Ives, but their sometimes more valuable contemporaries ($2.50); also in packet is related book, over 100 historical cities prints pictured with pricing ($5.00), plus old packet of Hornung's 4x8 colored lithographs showing bygone vehicles and suitable for framing ($1.00). Unbelievably while they last, an $8.00 list for only $4.00 postpaid. Learn the value of prints and collect them, or use with the print packet for Xmas gifts. Send to Antiques Book Club, Watkins Glen, N. Y. Reminder: Check for both A ($6.50) and B ($4.00) gets you an extra bonus.

CENTURY HOUSE
Publishers, Watkins Glen, N. Y.

MRS. ISABELLE A. GROOT
34 Glen Terrace

Scotia 2, New York
ROSE SPRIG Cakestand ..... 6.00
FEATHER Water Pitcher ..... 4.50
TIFFANY Cordial - signed ..... 7.50
4 THUMBPRINT Honeys - Flint, ea. 2.50
ONE-O-ONE Compote Base - only 5.00
Transportation Extra

dp

UNUSUAL ITEMS

Old Documents, Old Paper Money, Coins, Medals, Etc.

- |  |      |   |      |
|--|------|---|------|
| 1. "Panorama of San Francisco." Old Magnus Print (of 1850's). 6 1/2 x 10" .....  | 1.50 | 20. China. Honan Province. 10, 20, 50, 100 & 200 Cash. 1912. Set of five coins, picturing flags. (some very large) .....            | 1.65 |
| 2. 1880. U. S. Silver Dollar. Uncirculated .....   | 1.95 | 21. Old Newspaper, "The Independent Chronicle". Boston, 1804. Interesting news, ads, etc. ....                                      | 2.50 |
| 3. Old Stock Certificate of the North American Land Company, Philadelphia, 1795, signed by Robert Morris, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. 12 1/2 x 9 1/2". Engraved. Excellent for display, etc. .... | 7.50 | 22. U. S. Army General Orders, 1866 .....   | 1.00 |
| 4. Lot of 5 different Old Canadian Tokens, used before 1860. Large bronze pieces. Interesting .....  | 1.00 | 23. 2c black U. S. Stamp, 1862, on original envelope. Bears large head of Andrew Jackson. (the famous "2c Black-Jack") .....        | 2.50 |
| 5. $1.00, $2.00 & $3.00 Vermont Glass Factory, Salisbury, Vermont, 1814. Set of three Notes .....   | 3.35 | 24. Elizabeth II Coronation Medal, 1953. Canada. 1 5/16" bronze .....   | 1.00 |
| 6. Abraham Lincoln Centennial Medal, 1909. Portrait. 1" .....  | 1.25 | 25. $500.00 Canal Bank, New Orleans, La. Ships. Red back. Unsigned .....   | 3.95 |
| 7. Old Daily Newspaper, "Foulson's American Advertiser", Philadelphia, 1806. Very interesting news, ads, etc. ....   | 2.50 | 26. Old Newspaper, "The National Gazette", Philadelphia, 1822. Interesting ads, articles, etc. ....                                 | 1.25 |
| 8. 1878. U. S. Silver Dollar. Carson City Mint. Uncirculated .....   | 2.75 | 27. 1956 PROOF Set of 5 U. S. Coins. In Plastic Holder .....  | 4.50 |
| 9. $3.00 Citizens Bank, Gosport, Ind., 1857. Plowman, etc. Blue back .....  | 2.00 | 28. $1.00 Augusta Insurance & Banking Co., 1860. Rural scene. Red & black .....  | .75  |
| 10. U. S. Presidential Campaign Pin of Wm. McKinley, 1900, by The Star Ball Retainer Co. Ball-bearings around portrait. Very unusual .....   | 4.50 | 29. U. S. Presidential Campaign Silk Ribbon of Millard Fillmore, 1852 .....   | 3.50 |
| 11. Old State of Georgia Land Grant, 1793. Signed by Gov'r. Edward Telfair. Bears large 3 1/2" wax Seal and plat of land .....   | 7.50 | 30. Old Document, 1800, bearing 4c Massachusetts U. S. Embossed Revenue Stamp .....   | 2.00 |
| 12. $10.00 Confederate, 1864. Artillery. Blue back .....  | 1.00 | 31. 75c State of North Carolina Confederate Note, 1863. State Arms .....  | 1.25 |
| 13. Complete Set of 32 U. S. Presidential Stamps 1/2c thru $5.00. Used. ....  | 1.85 | 32. U. S. Post Office Department Draft, 1855. Portrait of George Washington. Engraved. Signed by Postmaster General .....           | 4.85 |
| 14. S.uth Africa. 1956 PROOF Set of 9 Coins, 1/4d thru Crown. In Official Gift Case .....  | 6.95 | 33. 1c blue U. S. Stamp of 1861, on original envelope. Bust of Franklin .....   | 3.00 |
| 15. 1883. U. S. Silver Dollar. New Orleans Mint. Uncirculated .....  | 2.95 | 34. $100.00 Confederate, 1862. Negroes hoeing cotton. Uncirculated .....   | 3.95 |
| 16. Old Way-Bill of Middlesex Canal Boat, Massachusetts, 1805 .....  | 2.50 | 35. Old Delaware State Lottery Ticket, 1823. State Arms .....   | 2.00 |
| 17. 5c State of North Carolina Confederate Note, 1863. State Arms .....  | .65  | 36. Negro Slave Bill of Sale, dated before 1860. States amount paid for Slave, guarantee of title, etc., and signed by seller ..... | 7.50 |
| 18. Columbian Exposition Medal, 1893. U.S. Government Bldg. 1 1/2" brass. Struck by U. S. Treasury Dept. ....  | 1.95 | 37. "Birds-eye View of Cincinnati". Old Magnus Print (of 1850's). 6 1/2 x 10" .....   | 1.50 |
| 19. Abraham Lincoln Mourning Letter Sheet, by Magnus (1865). Portrait, etc. and verse .....  | 7.50 | 38. 1889. U. S. Silver Dollar. Uncirculated .....   | 2.45 |
|  |      | 39. Broadside. Instructions to the People of Poland from the German Military Commander, 1915. Printed .....                         | 1.00 |

TERMS: Cash with order. Three day return privilege.

BENJAMIN B. Du BOSE

P. O. Box 993,

Atlanta 1, Ga.

dc

MARY F. ST. JOHN
94 Elm St., Quincy 69, Mass.
Pair of fiery white Bristol vases, 6" h. fluted tops, with applied deep blue spray. $10.
Darling ormolu thermometer, held by cupid, very lacy $5.50.
Amber pickle castor, beaded diamond, resilvered frame, $15.
Amber daisy and button & cross bar sugar and creamer, $15.
Ridgway, miniature handleless cup and saucer, marked Nov. 19, 1839, tiny brown flowers $5.
Small square tea-pot, marked the same and matching $9.
Beautiful cobalt 10" vase, ruffled top, lovely panel enameled with apple blossoms in white and gold border $9.

dp

FARMSIDE ANTIQUES

Jane & Al Kramer
Rt. 3, Pataskala, Ohio.
on U.S. Rt. 40, 19 miles east of Columbus, Ohio.
Postage extra.
Loop Buttermilk glass ..... $ 4.50
Brass school bell, final gone ..... 4.00
Child's tea set, dec. with St. Nick, snow man, children; tea pot, bowl, creamer, sugar, 6 cups, saucers .. 25.00
Iron 5-candle candleabra, Germany .. 12.50
Fish platter, 12 plates ..... 45.00
Royal Copenhagen plates, $8 and 12.00

dp

BIRCHLAND'S

12 North Main Street

Essex, Connecticut

ETHEL HALL BJERKOE

"CABINETMAKERS OF AMERICA"

By ETHEL HALL BJERKOE

Published by Doubleday &amp; Company

New Bedford, Mass. "For the first time, lovers of antiques will be able to lay their hands on one complete, definitive and well-illustrated volume telling them virtually all they need to know about the myriad cabinetmakers of pre-machine-age America."

Chattanooga, Tenn. "Ethel Hall Bjerkoe is a name well known and widely respected by lovers of antique furniture. . . This book will appeal to the beginning 'antique hunter' as well as to the 'advanced collector.'"

Ayer, Mass. "A book which is sure to interest a large number of people. . . Milwaukee, Wisconsin. "This should guarantee 'The Cabinetmakers of America' a permanent space in the libraries of those who favor early Americana."

Toronto, Canada. "Lovers of antique furniture are going to be delighted with this story of the lives and works of the cabinetmakers of America."

IF YOU WISH AN AUTOGRAPHED, POSTPAID COPY SENT TO A FRIEND FOR CHRISTMAS OR FOR YOURSELF, SEND CHECK FOR $10 TO BIRCHLANDS.

dx

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Charles D'Almaine

CONCLUDED

By JIM WALSH

(This article is dedicated to one of my dearest friends, an admirer of Charles D'Almaine and himself an accomplished violinist—Albert Ross Via, Jr., of South Boston, Virginia).

III. D'Almaine's Varied Recordings

I do not know how long Charles D'Almaine remained solo violinist of the Victor Orchestra, but there is some reason to believe he gave up this position within a year or so after the announcement I quoted last month appeared.

Meanwhile, his was a prominent name in the Victor lists for 1906, and he was becoming acclaimed, not as the accomplished concert violinist he primarily was, but as a purveyor of country dance tunes. A Victor dealers' order blank for February, 1906, lists a 12-inch, single-faced record 31480, "Medley of Old Time Reels." It included "De'il Among the Tailors," "Flow'r of Edinburg," "Speed the Plow," "Tom and Jerry," "Roger's Reel" (which I'd like to believe was named by D'Almaine's looking 50 years into the future and foreseeing the advent of my beloved black cat, Roger!) "Miss McCloud's Reel" and "Auld Lang Syne." The annotation said: "Everybody knows how popular D'Almaine's former records of reels, jigs and hornpipes are. This is the best of the series."

In March, D'Almaine was paired with the flute player, Lyons, in two 12-inch records of standard numbers in his repertoire: 31493, "Call Me Thine Own" (the Romance from "L'Eclair") and 31493, Schubert's Serenade. A month later he played, on No. 4617, a 10-inch version of the "Medley of Old Time Reels." There was this comment: "D'Almaine's rollicking medley reel listed in February has proved one of the big successes of the season. While we have issued thousands of these 12-inch records, which are especially suitable for dancing, there has been a large demand for a ten-inch size."

The July, 1906, contained D'Almaine's last single-faced, 10-inch record, No. 4723, Mazkowski's "Serenade."

In March, 1907, D'Almaine and Lyons were back with No. 5007, "Sing On, Sweet Bird," and a little later the violinist made his final appearance as a Victor soloist with an eight-inch record, 5054, "Medley of Favorite Reels." When Victor issued double-faced records in the autumn of 1908, most of D'Almaine's popular titles were taken into the two-sided classification, but a number remained in single-faced form.

There is an oddity concerning Columbia's first catalog of double-faced records which appeared a few months before Victor's. D'Almaine had not played for Columbia in several years, but several of his records were taken into the double-faced catalog, without his name being used. All were listed merely as "violin solos." These records were of the old announced type, with the artist's name given in a spoken introduction but omitted on the label. In later catalogs they were identified as being by D'Almaine. They were: A202, "Ben Bolt Fantasia," coupled with "Suwanee River Medley," a xylophone solo by Charles P. Lowe; A229, "Faust Gems," in appropriately doubled with a banjo solo, "Whistling Rufus," by Vess L. Ossman; A214, "Imitation of Bagpipes and Scotch Airs," with "Nigger Fever," a piccolo solo by George Schweinfest; and A234, "Jigs and Reels Medley—The White Cockade," combined with "Two Little Tots," by Prince's Military Band. In May, 1915, after D'Almaine had given up recording work to become a chiropractor, Columbia reissued "The White Cockade" as No. A1712, combined with "Harrigan's Reel," by Prince's Orchestra.

I suspect, but am not certain, that D'Almaine left the Victor Orchestra (Howard Rattay took his place as violin soloist) in order to assume a similar position with Edison. Certainly, for the remainder of his recording career, his name appeared more frequently in Edison catalogs than in any others. A list of his earlier Edison records has already been given, but it is interesting to note that his "Pop Goes the Weasel Medley," issued in May, 1904, contained a tune identified as "D'Almaine's Favorite Reel" and presumably composed by the performer himself. Another oddity, issued years later as a four-minute Blue Amberol cylinder, is "Jim Lawson's Medley of Reels." I wonder if the "Jim Lawson" referred to was the famous Punkin Center character whom Cal Stewart introduced into his "Uncle Josh" records and if so whether Stewart selected the numbers D'Almaine played. Still another D'Almaine dance number, "Fisher's Hornpipe" is named for Kitty Fisher, notorious English courtesan of more than 200 years ago. He also played a hornpipe named for Jenny Lind.

In May, 1905, Edison issued No. 8993, "Garry Owen Medley," and there was then a long interval before the next D'Almaine cylinder, presumably because of his having entered into an exclusive Victor contract. D'Almaine didn't reappear, in fact, until April, 1908, when he was represented with 9797, "Hornpipe Medley." In May he had 9833, a Jigs and Reels Medley.

With the introduction of the four-minute Amberol record late in 1908, D'Almaine had a better opportunity to show Edison audiences what he could do. The December, 1908, New Phonogram contained an inquiry from "A. L." of Binghamton, New York: "What kind of a violin does Mr. D'Almaine use in making records?" He received the rather flip-pant answer: "We do not know. It is not one made by the old masters." And, two months later, "C. A. T." in far away Invercargill, New Zealand, asked: "Where is Charles D'Almaine, the violinist?" He was told: "Charles D'Almaine is still making records for us. Violin records are not largely sold and we make no effort to add many of them to our catalogs." This statement was in contrast to an earlier one which said all D'Almaine's records were so popular they were considered permanent catalog additions with no chance of being cut out.

IV. Final Records

It also contrasted with the comment made in June, 1911, when "Shepherd's Dance" was issued as four-minute Amberol 711: "As Standard 8070, by Mr. D'Almaine, this has been for several years the most popular instrumental number on the Standard list, and there is little doubt that with the artistic interpretation he has here given its bright happy strains it will be a formidable competitor for the popular supremacy of the Amberol instrumental catalog."

The following month, there was another intriguing description in the New Phonogram as "Down at Finnegan's Jamboree" was resurrected in four-minute form:

Cast of Characters in the Order of Their Appearance. . . Mrs. O'Brien - Steve Porter; Mrs. McCarthy - Ada Jones; Finnegan, Host and Master of Ceremonies - Steve Porter; O'Grady, Fiddler and Leader of Orchestra - Charles D'Almaine; O'Brien - Edward Meeker; McCarthy, winner of the Dancing Contest - George Werner.

A bright, breezy sketch of wit, mirth and music. Standard Record No. 8146 - the popularity of which has kept it in the catalog over ten years - made into an Amberol. New "business" - new situations - new characters - more music - more dancing - more laughs - in the added two and one-half minutes of playing time. This is a "corking" record, and one that convincingly demonstrates the entertaining superiority of the Amberol over the Standard record.

The two-minute catalogs listed D'Almaine as the "composer" of this genuinely funny sketch. He apparently does not speak in it, however, but contents himself with playing the dance music. George Werner, who took an incidental part, was an Edison studio employee. This sketch was so popular that it was made again in 1921 as an Edison Diamond Disc with Eugene Jaudas as the fiddler. The disc is one of the most realistic group productions ever made by the acoustic method. It is almost impossible to believe that you aren't present at a genuine Irish shillelagh-swinging brawl instead of hearing the efforts of a few men and women crowded around a horn.

During the last five years of his recording career, D'Almaine may have performed only for cylinders. Besides working for Edison, he was also employed by the U. S. Everlasting company, whose recording chief was his old friend, Albert Benzler, and by the Indestructible Record Company. For U. S. Everlasting he played some of his favorites - "Chanticleer Medley," "Pop Goes the Weasel," "Jigs and Reels Medley" and "Shepherd's Dance" - and assisted Len Spencer on 1399 in a four-minute version of the ever-green "Arkansaw Traveler."

The old "Arkansaw Traveler" with its quaint music and philosophy has been a classic of its kind for many generations. This arrangement by Mr. Len Spencer is especially unique and pleasing, and when the "traveler" - the eminent violinist, D'Almaine - finishes the tune on the fiddle that the native contended "couldn't be did," it permits a most happy conclusion.

Indestructible issued a number of novelties, with D'Almaine playing one half of a four-minute record and somebody else concluding it by playing another instrument. Thus, on one, the violinist played a medley of jigs and reels, and Vess L. Ossman gave a rousing banjo finale. On No. 3067, the procedure was reversed. John J. Kimmel, the accordionist, began with "A Medley of National Airs," and D'Almaine concluded with jigs and reels.

When Edison brought out the first list of unbreakable Blue Amberol cylinders in November, 1912, D'Almaine was represented with No. 1519, "Kitty O'Neil Medley of Reels." The description said:

A spirited medley of reels including "Charlie's Reel," "Ball and Pin," "Dick Sands," "Douglas Favorite," "Old Ironsides," "Kitty O'Neil," "Juniaata" and "Quindaro." Charles D'Almaine, well-known in Edison circles, performs the selection as only a talented violinist can. If you doubt that it takes unusual energy to make a record of this kind, try playing a medley of lively reels continuously for over four minutes, and bear in mind that there mustn't be even a single mistake!

D'Almaine was now nearing the time when he would give up his recording career for chiropractic work, but before he said goodbye to the studios he recorded for Edison his only three performances of currently popular music. In January, 1914, he was represented with Irving Berlin's lament over the death of his first wife, "When I Lost You." In May he offered 2263, "Peg o' My Heart," concerning which the supplement writer said: "Charles D'Almaine, an accomplished violinist, avails himself of the opportunity to play something more serious than his usual dance music, and gives a most beautiful rendition." The annotator must have forgotten that during his earlier recording days D'Almaine didn't specialize in jigs, reels and hornpipes - a type of music the record-buying public had been taught to demand - and that he had been soloist with many symphony orchestras.

The list of popular song numbers ended in October, 1914, with "Mother Machree." And that was almost the last time Charles D'Almaine's name figured in any list of new records. He had by this time entered the Palmer School of Chiropractic and was learning a new profession. However, in February, 1918, Edison brought out one of his old masters and issued it as "Blackthorn Stick Medley of Jigs."

For several years after his retirement from phonograph work, Edison dealers continued to regard D'Almaine's records as among the best for demonstration use. In the March, 1917, Edison Amberola Monthly, George A. Myers of Vermont, Illinois, related that "an old gentleman who I knew loved violin music met me on the street one day and asked me if I had some good violin records. I told him I had some that played so naturally that it was impossible to distinguish their music from actual violin music. . . He came to my store a few days later. I played a few D'Almaine records for him. 'It beats anything I ever heard,' he said. . . Get the instrument and all of those records ready for delivery."

In May, 1917, Fred E. Stevenson, of Killarney, Manitoba, Canada, told of how the D'Almaine record of "Medley of Country Dances" so charmed an illiterate old Irishman that the Hibernian, Mr. Bartley, sold a flock of geese to raise money for an Amberola and some good fiddling records. In May, 1918, another Canadian dealer, Frank C. Pethick, of Bowmantown, Ontario, described a visit a family from the country made to his store.

"As they came in," Pethick wrote, "a Model 75 . . . behind a partition was playing the violin solo, 'When I Lost You.' As I greeted them, one of the daughters asked who was playing the violin so sweetly, and said she wished she could play like that. I told her an Edison artist was playing and, if they wished, I would be glad to introduce him. You should have seen their faces when I led them behind the screen and showed them the Amberola. . . I knew I had the sale nearly completed and to make it certain I used a bit of psychology. They have a boy overseas doing his bit and I put on 'Stick to Your Mother, Tom,' and that settled it - they bought the Amberola and 30 records."

This article may well conclude with a complete list of D'Almaine's Blue Amberols. Since he, unfortunately, made no Diamond Discs, they represent the best recording he ever achieved. Where the unbreakable cylinder Blue Amberol was a reissue of an earlier Amberol wax cylinder, the Amberol number is given in parentheses:

3434, Blackthorn Stick; 1763, Down at Finnegan's Jamboree (718); 1770, Fisher's Hornpipe Medley (886); 1790, Jim Lawson's Medley of Reels; 1519, Kitty O'Neil Medley of Reels; 2419, Mother Machree; 2263, Peg o' My Heart; 1964, Sailor's Hornpipe Medley (776); 1885, Shepherd's Dance (711); and 2131, When I Lost You. Amberols not carried over into Blue Amberol stock were 584, Chanticleer Jigs and Reels Medley; 960, Hornpipe Medley, and 675, Larry O'Gaff Medley.

I'll sum up by saying few instrumentalists have ever given so much pleasure to millions of persons as Charles D'Almaine did during the 15 years he was making violin records. How I wish he were still alive and in full possession of his powers. I'd like to see him have the backing of a full symphony orchestra and hear him tackle a Bartok Concerto!

CIGAR STORE FIGURES IN AMERICAN FOLK ART

By W. PORTER WARE
& A. W. PENDERGAST

PRICE $2.50
78 pages, 48 plates

Once these proud chiefs guarded shops along
early Main Street
through good weather
and bad, lending a virile
tone to the atmosphere.

Published by

The Lightner Publishing
Corporation
1006 S. Michigan
Chicago 5, Ill.

Harry C. Browne

By JIM WALSH

John Cowper said, "Variety's the very spice of life that gives it all its flavor," and John Gay expressed the same idea by remarking, "Variety's the source of joy below, from whence still fresh-revolving pleasures flow." Since I agree with these long-dead poets, I seek to give as much variety as possible in my articles about pioneer recording artists. Like a canny baseball pitcher, I try to "mix them up."

During the past year or so, the series has included a famous Italian operatic baritone, Taurino Parvis; a distinguished American concert and opera contralto, Mary Jordan; an English music hall comedian, George Robey; a once noted American vaudeville performer, Gene Greene; two comparatively modern "crooners," Gene Austin and Art Gillham; an eye-witness account of a concert given by the Eight Famous Victor Artists 40 years ago; a concert tenor, Harvey Hindermeyer; an elocutionist and singer, Edwin Whitney; and an accomplished violinist, Charles D'Almaine. About the only fault I can find by way of variety is that the ladies are rather insufficiently represented, but that is largely because women recording artists were greatly outnumbered by men in the pioneer days. Anyway, I hope to go on giving plenty of variety.

That word, "variety," brings me to the subject of this month's sketch. I don't know what the C. in Harry C. Browne's name stands for, but his middle initial should be V. for Variety, or, perhaps, for Versatility. Seldom have I had occasion to write about so versatile a gentleman with such a variety of accomplishments. A man who has been a soldier, an actor on Broadway and in the movies, a banjoist, a recording artist, a phonograph company executive, a radio star and producer and, finally, president of the Mother Church of Christian Science, has achieved a career almost bewildering in its scope. No wonder Harry Browne is one of the comparatively few recording artists about whom I have written whose life story has been summarized in "Who's Who in America."

From the 1953 edition we learn that the humorist with the resonant baritone voice was born August 16, 1878, in North Adams, Mass. His father, Isaac Shell Browne, was a skilled banjoist and one of the foremost composers in his day of songs of the old-fashioned Negro plantation type. The singer's mother was Elizabeth Tobin Browne.

Harry Browne was educated in the grammar and high schools of North Adams. He served in the Santiago campaign of the Spanish-American War, and lectured on the war in 1898-99. On November 7, 1900, he married Edith Elizabeth Jacklin, by whom he had one daughter, Jane Elizabeth. In that year he began as an actor, traveling with repertoire companies and later playing with stock companies in the East and Middle West. Beginning in 1909 he was under the management of such leading impresarios as Klaw and Erlanger, Cohan and Harris, David Belasco, William Harris, Comstock and Gest, the Selwyn Brothers and the Actors Theater.

Browne was engaged in radio work from 1926 to 1931. This included producing the once famous "Hank Simmons' Show Boat." He became interested in Christian Science in 1910, and from 1932 to 1936 was first reader of the Second Church in New York. He was first reader of the Mother Church, Boston, from 1938 to 1941, and in 1948-49 was the Mother Church's president. When Who's Who was published he lived at 107 Falmouth street, Boston 15.

II Browne's Recording Career

Most HOBBIES readers will be chiefly interested in Browne's career as a Columbia recording artist (apparently he never sang for any other company), so I shall trace his activities before the horn, beginning with his first record, issued July, 1916. On disc A1999 he rendered two old minstrel classics, "Nigger Love a Watermelon, Ha! Ha! Ha!" and "Old Dan Tucker," the latter written by Daniel Decatur Emmett, composer of "Dixie." The catalog editor termed them "Quaint Mississippi River Songs" and commented: "Here is a treat that will tickle the musical palates of all lovers of the old slave-day river songs and bring to the younger generation some rattling, jiggling melodies that will open their eyes to what real American ragtime is. How anyone who can sing as well as H. C. Browne found time to play the banjo as well is a mystery. Mr. Browne is a double-barreled genius."

This first Browne record was a big seller, probably the biggest he ever made. In August, he was represented by a Stephen Foster song, "Gwine to Run All Night" (better known as "Camptown Races") and a number written by a Kentuckian, Will S. Hays, who regarded himself as a greater composer of songs of this type than Foster — "Roll Out, Heave Dat Cotton." Said the monthly supplement:

American Folk Songs by Banjo-Baritone Expert. . . Turn back a leaf of your life—recall the old-time minstrel songs—let H. C. Browne, baritone and banjo expert, take you back to the good old days of Haverly, Hooley and Primrose. Mr. Browne's clever records were the brightest spot in last month's list; and if you have not yet heard this versatile artist, don't miss this month's opportunity.

I do not intend to quote all the supplement comments of the ensuing years on Browne's recordings, but shall use some of the most interesting because of the light they throw on the man himself. Meanwhile, the brief biographical sketches in the 1917 and 1922 Columbia record catalogs are interesting. First the 1917:

Harry C. Browne is the son of I. C. Browne, the well known composer for the banjo. He inherited his father's genius for this instrument, and in addition has the added gift of a remarkable baritone voice. Mr. Browne is a well known actor, a popular New York club man, a splendid gentleman, and an exclusive Columbia artist who has given some of our best renditions of old darky melodies with banjo accompaniment.

(Mentioning Browne's father as I. C. Browne obviously was a mistake. The initials should be I. S.)

Now the 1922 write-up:

Harry C. Browne's father was a well known composer for the banjo, which accounts for Harry's love of the instrument. Browne has spent years traveling around the highways, byways and back alleys of cities and country collecting original Negro melodies, which he jots down and sings to the accompaniment of his banjo. Singing is the second of Browne's gifts. Browne is also an actor of distinct merit, having appeared in many of the most successful Broadway shows. He is a war veteran, a lecturer, a vaudeville artist and six-foot-plus a man! But "banjo" is his middle name without question.

In November, 1916, when "Angels Meet Me at the Crossroads" and "Angel Gabriel" was issued, the supplement said:

H. C. Browne is doing more than giving amusement in preserving the old time minstrel and plantation songs he sings so admirably. These airs compose a unique chapter in musical history, and Mr. Browne's recordings are equally unique.

"Unique" perhaps was not the most accurate word the writer might have chosen, but he was correct in saying that records like Browne's contribute to American musical history. Yet today when racial tensions are high there would be no chance of such records being issued unless the words were drastically revised. Even the Stephen Foster songs are foolishly bowdlerized by substituting words such as "children" and "people" for "darkies," which was always a term of affection for Negroes in the South. There was no intention on the part of the men who wrote the songs Browne sang to hurt the Negroes' feelings, and certainly the genial singer had no such intention. Minority groups — Negroes, Irish, Italians, Jews and the rest — were not so thin-skinned in those days and vaudeville audiences delighted in all types of dialect comedy. But the prevalence of words such as "nigger" and "coon" in the titles and lyrics of these "old time minstrel and plantation songs" would cause a protest by the NAACP if the records were being issued today.

In June, 1917, Browne had the assistance of the Peerless Quartet—at that time Albert Campbell, Henry Burr, Arthur Collins and John Meyer—and the Peerless soon became his recording "buddies," their fine harmonies adding strength and charm to his recordings. The songs were "Gwine to Get a Home Bye and Bye" and that Foster classic, "O Susanna." The supplement said:

Harry C. Browne, humorous actor and artist of the baritone, the Peerless Quartet, familiar as singers of real popular music, a full orchestra accompaniment, and Browne's personal banjo playing thrown in—here are two more of those Mississippi River songs which make it really quite impossible to sit still.

Browne sang both sides of nearly all his records, but there was an exception in August, 1917, when "She Stopped to Powder Her Nose," which appears to have been written by himself, was paired with a talking comic sketch, "All Aboard for the County Fair," by Byron G. Harlan, Steve Porter, and Harlan E. Knight. The supplement said: "Harry C. Browne lays down his banjo to sing an original composition with orchestra. His subject is a delicate one but is handled with complete success!"

One of the most interesting descriptions occurred in the February, 1918, supplement:

H. C. Browne takes as much pleasure in discovering his old Negro songs as he does in singing them. Up and down out-of-the-way alleys and in and out of old barber shops—Browne always emerges with one more unique melody. The Golden Stairs to our knowledge has never been recorded and dates back at least a quarter of a century. Everyone knows snatches of Johnny, Get Your Gun, but how many have heard the entire song? Browne sings us the original complete—it is well worth knowing in its entirety.

Both "Johnny, Get Your Gun" and "Climbing Up the Golden Stairs" were written by Monroe H. Rosenfeld, "Johnny" in 1884 and "Climbing" in 1885. The annotator was mistaken in saying the golden stairs song had never before been recorded. Edison issued it on a Blue Amberol cylinder by Walter Van Brunt in October, 1915, and it appeared later on a Diamond Disc. It had also been made on wax cylinders in the '90's.

The supplement writer, probably my old friend George Clarence Jell, made an amusing error in his description of Browne's two songs for May, 1918. He wrote:

When a bit of music is so good it does not matter what happens to the words it is famous! "Polly-Wolly-Doodle" means about as little as words could, but where is the man or woman who has not sung this rollicking air? With H. C. Browne and a banjo the old tune dances into new life. You will have a new appreciation of the old Negro spiritual, "Push Dem Clouds Away," if you remember that underneath all the swing of the music these folk tunes are born from the deepest hopes, longings and sufferings of one of the most emotional races of man. Listen for this undercurrent of feeling in Browne's singing—you will find it.

"Push Dem Clouds Away" was not a spiritual or a folk song. It was written in 1892 by Percy Gaunt, a white man born in England, and sung in Charles Hoyt's "Trip to Chinatown" production, for which Gaunt also wrote "The Bowery" and "Reuben and Cynthia." Its references to "boys smoking cigarettes . . . mama's little pets" and similar sophisticated jeers have nothing in common with the cotton field type of spiritual.

Popular Stage and Radio Comedian and Columbia Recording Star. In 1948 he became President of the Mother Church of Christian Scientists in Boston.

Some interesting comment was provided when Browne's record of "Climb Up! Ye Chillum, Climb!" and "Carve Dat 'Possum" appeared in October, 1918:

A well versed musical student has traced our American ragtime directly to the Mississippi River songs of the Negro, which had traveled up from the South and reached Chicago at the time of the Great Fair. Recalling the sentimental ballads of the day and the change which came over popular music at that time, this seems extremely probable. The banjo has always been the favorite instrument of the Negro, and their songs are based on the three basic chords of this instrument. H. C. Browne has fortunately united a love of the banjo and a love of Negro music in his clever collection of Columbia records—the most "true to life" Negro "rags" ever recorded.

In December, 1920, Browne appeared in the Columbia list in a way that demonstrated his versatility. On record A2992 he and the Peerless sang his father's song, "Meet Me on de Golden Shore," coupled with "Keep Those Golden Gates Wide Open," by an unknown composer. On A2991 he assisted Cal Stewart (who had died December 6, 1919) in "Uncle Josh at the Dentist." Browne was one of several deep-voiced gentlemen who had the opportunity of portraying the dentist in this Uncle Josh sketch. Len Spencer helped Stewart on the Victor disc and the Edison cylinder; Gilbert Girard was the dentist on the Emerson; George Alexander assisted "Josh" on the almost mythical sonora vertical-cut disc, and after Stewart's death, Byron G. Harlan, acting Uncle Josh, made the skit for Okeh with Ernest Hare as the wool-gathering tooth-puller. . . . And, by the way, speaking of Alexander, I am now convinced that he was the baritone who sang for Edison cylinders under the name of Arthur Clifford, in records listed from 1903 to 1906. It suddenly occurred to me not long ago that "Clifford's" Edison repertoire was largely identical with that Alexander had sung for Columbia, Victor and Zon-o-phone. And when I recalled that Alexander's real name was CLIFFORD Wiley his identification with Arthur Clifford appeared unmistakable.

Harry Browne assisted Cal Stewart in remaking another Uncle Josh record, although his name never appeared in the catalog as an assisting artist. I have a 1911 copy of A865, "Uncle Josh on an Automobile," on which only Stewart's name is given. I also have another version, made some ten years later, which contains Browne's name as well as Stewart's. But as long as the record occupied space in the yearly catalog, it was attributed solely to Stewart.

III Decline in Popularity

Browne's records were among the most popular in the Columbia catalog up to and including A2992. All the titles issued up to that time sold well and are easily found in second-hand stores today. But those that came afterward are hard to find and seem to have sold in relatively small quantities. There is then one reason for this. Columbia had greatly over-expanded its activities and was hard hit by the depression that succeeded war-time prosperity late in 1920. The company went into bankruptcy in 1923, but was "bailed out." Radio, too, came along and cut into record sales. Browne was not alone in finding his record sales had skidded. No doubt the fact that "coon songs" were becoming frowned upon had much to do with it.

Browne's inimitable offerings continued to appear, however, at gradually increased intervals, and the comment on "Skeeter and the June Bug" and "Dar's a Lock on de Chicken Coop Door," in August, 1922, is worth reprinting:

When the day's work is over and dinner out of the way, everyone likes to hand the double cross to Old Man Trouble. There is no more direct route than via one of Harry Browne's rollicking, nonsensical songs.

Di'ja ever see the time when "All Bound Round With a Woolen String" didn't make a frown slip its clutch and set one's feet to patting? Well, "Skeeter and the June Bug" is just that kind of tune. It's a rube, slapstick, comedy song and dance combination to jig time with a teasing refrain that goes, "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen." On the other side a wall from a darkey who finds things ain't as they used to wuz. He plaintively wants to know why, when there's going to be a party, or the parson's invited to eat, "Dar's a Lock on de Chicken Coop Door."

One more quotation. In April, 1924, after Columbia "New Process" silent-surfaced records had been introduced, Browne was represented by "Shinbone Alley" and "Marsa' Joe." He was assisted in both by the Shannon Four. His former associates, the Peerless Quartet, by that time were exclusive to Victor:

These Negro character songs by Harry C. Browne, prove conclusively that someone has made a close study of the darkey, his habits and his characteristics. That someone is Isaac S. Browne, the father of the singer, who writes practically all of the record material his son uses. "Shinbone Alley" is a tale of the place all the darkies love to go, every colored lady and her beau. There you can find them on a Saturday night, larking and sparking to their heart's content. The other side of the record shows that the darkey has a more sober side to his nature. It tells of the intense devotion of an old slave for his beloved "Marsa" Joe."

A few months later, Browne's final acoustically recorded disc was listed, containing "I Long to Go to Dixie" and "Rock Me, Honey." (Was the latter title an anticipation of rock-'n-roll?) No new records by the baritone-banjoist were issued until July, 1928, when he had an electric version of the already issued "Polly Wolly Doodle" and "Push Dem Clouds Away." Since this was his only electrical re-make, it may have been the most popular Browne record, but "Nigger Love a Watermelon" and "Old Dan Tucker" was the only one of his acoustic recordings still in the 1929 catalog. It should be mentioned that a number of the horn-recorded Columbias were transferred to the lower-priced Harmony label which Columbia introduced in 1925 or 1926.

I believe that at some time in the 1920's Browne became a Columbia artist and repertoire official, supervising the hill-billy records which came into vogue during those years. I recall a Columbia "folk song" artist, Clarence Greene, showing me a check he had received with an accompanying letter from Browne. I have been told and am inclined to believe that Browne went on scouting expeditions into the Southern mountains for hill-billy talent and that he was the deep voiced "Bill Brown" who assisted Gid Tanner, Riley Puckett, Clayton McMichen and other popular country music performers in recording the popular "Corn Liquor Still in Georgia" series "Brown" was the villainous prohibition agent who was always seeking to arrest the ostensible "moonshiners."

IV Stage and Radio

Harry Browne was well established as an actor before his recording career began, but his achievements in radio came years later. In the early 1930's a New York newspaper published an article by William Clayton, which told of how Browne originated the "Show Boat" program and also recounted his theatrical successes. The article is too long for complete quotation, but I'll boil it down to the essentials:

More than two years ago . . . he (Browne) was called in to a conference to consider the advisability of putting on the air an old-fashioned melodrama. . . . He rushed out and bought scripts. He telephoned for actors. He edited copy. He started rehearsals, and before noon had passed the whole thing was complete, living and colorful—Hank Simmons' Show Boat—with a complete repertoire. . . .

Before two weeks had passed the Show Boat was running smoothly and has been running smoothly ever since. And Harry Browne has grown with it. A handsome man, not unlike his heroes, with a career somewhat heroic, he served in the Spanish War, lectured here and there, mounted the political stump, became an actor.

He was leading man for Lillian Russell, Mary Ryan, Rose Stahl, Frances Starr, Edith Taliaferro and Irene Bordoni and played the leading role in Channing Pollock's "The Fool," after James Kirkwood left the cast. He went into the movies and played with Mary Pickford, Constance Talmadge, Mae Murray, Hazel Dawn and Corinne Griffith. . . . In the Columbia Broadcasting studios he is the biggest man alive. He directs actors, coaches supernumerary audiences, shouts directions to Freddie Rich and the Show Boat orchestra, writes the atmosphere and acts himself.

In manner he is modest, quiet and efficient. Has no radio mannerisms. Treats his cast, which is still intact, like one big family. He played football in his high school days and wore his hair long. . . . He is the brother of Brad Browne, of Nit Wit fame.

V Letters From Browne

I have had only a little correspondence with Harry C. Browne. It occurred from 1948 to 1950, the period when he was president of the Mother Church of Christian Science in Boston. Our acquaintance by mail resulted from my writing to invite him to attend the John Bieling Day reunions of pioneer recording artists on Long Island. On July 31, 1948, the singer whom I had long admired wrote this typically friendly letter:

Dear Mr Walsh: Thank you for taking valuable time from your busy days to write me such an appreciative letter as yours of June 12.

Yes, I am the same Harry C. Browne of Columbia Phonograph days, and at present am continuing to make recordings—transcriptions for use over some 150 stations throughout United States, Canada, Cuba, Porto Rico, Australia, New Zealand, Bermuda and short wave to Europe and the British Isles, for the Christian Science Church here in Boston.

Your invitation to attend the party of record collectors in September at Garden City is gratefully acknowledged. At present I cannot say if it will be possible to attend. I will surely keep it in mind.

By the way, I have two recordings about Christian Science, which were made two years ago. They are on sale at Christian Science reading rooms. I'll see if I can send them to you.

It would be most pleasing to meet Frank Croxton and John Meyer, as well as the other artists you are having as guests. I will send you the photograph very soon. With best wishes, sincerely yours, HARRY C. BROWNE.

On September 6, 1948, Mr. Browne wrote:

I regret not being able to attend the John H. Bieling Day at Garden City, as I would surely like to renew the acquaintance of many friends—Frank Croxton, Billy Murray and others. I am sending you the autographed photograph I promised, under separate cover. The recording will be sent later.

Once more thank you for thinking of me in connection with the party and with best wishes to all, cordially yours, HARRY C. BROWNE.

On September 2, 1950, Mr. Browne wrote to me, regretting his inability to attend that year's Bieling party. The photo which he mentioned in his September, 1948, letter is reproduced with this article. He apparently forgot to send the record, for I never received it. I expect to have the issue of HOBBIES containing this article mailed to Mr. Browne, and it may serve to remind him that I'd still be glad to receive that recording.

VI Harry Browne in Christian Science

The biographical sketch in Who's Who indicates Browne was attracted by Christian Science as early as 1910, but he seems not to have become active for more than 30 years afterward. However, a clipping from a 1948 Christian Science Monitor indicates his membership goes back to 1910:

BROWNE HEADS CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MOTHER CHURCH . . .

Harry C. Browne of Boston, former actor and radio executive, was elected president of the Mother Church of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, yesterday at the annual meeting to succeed Mrs. Helen Chaffee Elwell of East Hebron, N. H.

A native of North Adams, Browne has been a member of the church since 1910. Following his service in the Spanish-American War he toured the United States and Canada for 25 years as an actor. Later he was production director and announcer for the Columbia Broadcasting System. In 1931 he withdrew from radio to devote his time to Christian Science. He served as First Reader in the Mother Church from 1933 to 1941, and in the following year was elected a member of the Christian Science board of lecturership. He was official speaker for church programs.

And here is a condensation of an article, "Christian Science on the Air," from a 1953 issue of Time:

From 600 radio stations this week came a new kind of opening announcement. "The power of God," said a voice to a soft organ background is present and available today to heal you of sickness, sin, sorrow, and limitation. . . . This program is another in the series on How Christian Science Heals, produced and transcribed by the Mother Church, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

The Scientists were on the air with a 15-minute weekly series, each to consist of a believer's own account of a real-life crisis, followed up with a vest-pocket sermon by Lecturer Harry C. Browne, president of the Mother Church in 1948 and onetime troupier with such greats as Lillian Russell and Irene Bordoni. . . .

Browne lost no time in making his point: "Perhaps you haven't realized that your bonds were self-imposed, and that with your own thinking you have forged the fetters that are binding you? But you have. . . . Just as surely as the divine voice spoke to our friend in the tank of the ship and directed his release, so that divine voice speaks to you and me as we learn to understand God aright. . . . Friends, it's worth trying, don't you think so?"

That seems an appropriate point at which to end this survey of the career of Harry C. Browne and his diverse achievements. Few men have had the opportunity to make a name for themselves and serve their fellow man in so many fields of human endeavor. I am sure we who have enjoyed his records wish him many more years of health and happiness in which he may devote his energies to the missionary work he finds so much to his liking.

COLUMBIA RECORDS BY HARRY C. BROWNE (1916-1928)

Note: Both sides are by Browne unless otherwise indicated. The letters, "H," "K" and "P" in parentheses mean Browne was assisted on the indicated records by the Harmonizers, Knickerbocker or Peerless Quartets. Many Browne records may be found on Standard, United, Cimax, Consolidated and other "off-brands" which Columbia issued for private traders, but the titles and, usually, the couplings are the same as on conventional cumbias.

- A1999 Nigger Love a Watermelon, Ha, Ha, Ha/Old Dan Tucker
 A2016 Gwine to Run All Night/Roll Out, Heave Dat Cotton
 A2075 Angel Gabriel/Angels Meet Me at the Crossroads
 A2116 Keep in de Middle ob de Road (K) /Oh! Dem Golden Slippers (K)
 A2179 Bann of Gilead/Southern Medley (Fred Van Eps, banjo)
 A2218 Gwine to Get a Home Bye and Bye (P/O Susanna (P)
 A2252 She Stopped to Powder Her Nose/All Aboard for the County Fair (Byron G. Harlan, Steve Porter and Harlan E. Knight)
 A2255 Jordan Am a Hard Road to Travel /De Gospel Train Am Coming (K)
 A2430 Climbing Up the Golden Stairs/Johnny, Get Your Gun ny, Get Your Gun
 A2502 Polly - Wolly - Doodle/Push Dem Clouds Away
 A2590 Carve Dat Possum (P)/Climb Up, Ye Chillun, Climb (P)
 A2622 Oh Boys, Carry Me Long/Li'l Liza Jane (P)
 A2853 Hear Dem Bells (P)/Keemo Kimo (P)
 A2922 Hi, Jenny, Ho, Jenny Johnson (P) /Razors in the Air (P)
 A2991 Uncle Josh at the Dentist's (with Cal Stewart)/Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove (Cal Stewart and Ada Jones)
 A2992 Keep Those Golden Gates Wide Open (P)/Meet Me on de Golden Shore (P)
 A3386 Get Yo' Ticket/Put on de Golden Sword (with male quartet)
 A3622 Skeeter and the June Bug/Dar's a Lock on de Chicken Coop Door (H)
 A3678 Colored Barbeque/I Loves You, Mister Coon
 A3769 De Darkies' Jubilee/Angelina (both with male quartet)
 A3832 I'll Make Dat Black Gal Mine/Kiss Me, Honey, Do
 A3896 Get Behin' Me, Satan!/It's Hard to be a Nigger
 A3963 Darktown Jambores/Rosy
 53D Marsa Joe (with Shannon Four)/Shinbone Alley
 204D I Long to Go to Dixie/Rock Me, Honey
 1359D (electrically recorded) Polly Wolly Doodle/Push Dem Clouds Away

FOLK ART AND THE COLLECTOR

(Continued from page 25)

er sheath and sold for the amazing price of $1.40! Costa Rica is noted for its hand painted oxen carts. Every cart is a brilliant display of color, especially the wheels. They are done in triangles of vivid colors, and when the wheels turn in that bright sunlight, it looks as if a rainbow is coming right at you. They have miniature oxen carts for sale, if you don't care to take a real life-sized one back with you.

PANAMA — This nation gets most of its objects from other countries and consequently isn't as rich in folk art as the others, but they do create beautiful pottery and wooden bowls. They decorate them richly with color patterns that have been handed down through centuries. The colors are vivid blacks, reds and lavenders, and most of the designs are of insects, birds, alligators and swamp animals. What more can I say, except that here in your own back yard are objects that will not only form a collection but objects that will delight you each time you look at them. Can any collector ask for more?

ANTIQUE JEWELRY

THE SANCY DIAMOND By DOROTHY TUDOR HARRELL

The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays, Collected, light, compact.

—THOMSON

The Sancy diamond has been called the Sphinx of Diamonds, and the story goes that two or three different stones were blended together successfully. The first record of this stone shows that it was the property of Nicholas Harley de Sancy in the latter part of the 16th century. He is said to have purchased it in Constantinople while on business for the French. In 1604 he sold it to King James I of England. It remained in the English Treasury until the reign of Charles I, when he was forced to send it to the Continent along with other valuable jewels, to raise money for the Royalist troops. Queen Henrietta Maria took charge of these transactions, and the Sancy was pawned. It was later redeemed by Cardinal Mazarin, who bequeathed it, along with 17 other fine diamonds to the French crown. In 1792 it was stolen, and could not be traced as the Regent was.

It was first taken to Spain, passing through many hands, and is said to have belonged to a rich Parsee, Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, and later was acquired by the Indian Potentate the Maharaja of Puttiala.

It was finally returned to Europe and was purchased by Baron Astor for his daughter-in-law the Viscountess Astor. Its weight is given as 55.23 metric carats.

Many stories are connected with his jewel. It is said that Charles the Bold wore and lost it at the Battle of Granson in 1476 with the Swiss. However, the Swiss did not sell it until 1492 when it was purchased by Johann Fugger a banker of Augsburg. In 1547 it was sold to Henry the VIII of England, and became a part of the collection of English Crown Jewels, being set in an elaborate brooch with rubies and pearls.

JEWELRY WANTED

HIGHEST PRICES paid for old jewelry. Send by registered mail.—Gordon's Antiques, St. Johns, Ohio. f3042

DIAMONDS, OLD GOLD, COINS, watches, stickpins, rings, earrings, etc., regardless of condition. Highest prices paid. Prompt replies. Send by registered mail to—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penna. my124891

OLD GOLD WANTED: Highest prices paid for old gold jewelry, gold coins, rings, watches, teeth or any gold item in any condition. Prompt replies. Send by registered or insured mail.—Midax Enterprises, Box 257, Frederick, Md. mh3675

GENNARO RUSSO

BRANCH OF NAPLES, ITALY
CORAL, CAMEO
ANTIQUE JEWELRY
Cameos Our Specialty

Dearborn 2-2094
32 N. State St. Chicago 2, Ill.

WANTED TO BUY

We will send you by return airmail our check (certified if you so specify) for any antique jewelry, diamonds, platinum, gold, and Sterling silver in any condition, old watches in gold and silver, broken or otherwise, and odds and ends of jewelry, irrespective of its condition. We will keep your package intact for ten days, subject to your approval of our remittance. References: Whitney National Bank (Morgan Branch), New Orleans, Louisiana.

ANTIN'S ANTIQUES

114 Baronne St.

New Orleans, La.

ESTABLISHED 1916

Jly58

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

John H. Kimmel, "The Irish Scotchman"

(Piano Accompaniment by Joe Linder)

By JIM WALSH

I. Sudden Urge

Occasionally, meditating these sketches, I find myself eager to write about someone who has not previously been in the forefront of my mind.

This is an example. For years I have been intending to tell, eventually, the life story of John J. Kimmel, the first American accordion player to make commercial records, but, in spite of much research, the time for writing has always seemed some day in the future. Now, however, the impulse to chronicle Kimmel's career is so strong that I am hastening to relate what I know about a skilled instrumentalist who for many years seemed a remote, mysterious figure.

I was wrong. Besides being a master of the old-style, ten-button "Irish accordion," John Kimmel was a regular guy. And so, it seems, was his almost inevitable accompanist, Joe Linder, without whose piano playing Kimmel never felt completely at ease.

But I was surprised to learn Kimmel had been a saloon-keeper—though a law-abiding one.

II. Preliminary Notes

Before telling something of the man himself, I'll clear up a few former misstatements. In the March, 1953, HOBBIES, writing about the Scotch accordionists, Peter and Daniel Wyper, I said that the first accordion record made in the United States, was, as far as I had been able to learn, Kimmel's Zon-o-phone disc No. 212, "American Clog," issued in 1905. Since my former article was written I have obtained a good many old Zono catalogs and supplements and have discovered Kimmel was recording a year or more earlier than I thought.

A photo of John Kimmel in the December, 1910, New Phonogram.

The 10-inch records which Zon-o-phone introduced in 1904 had been preceded by seven- and nine-inch discs bearing numbers beginning with 5,000 and continuing through 6,168, when the series was discontinued. Kimmel contributed at least five selections to the pre-10-inch listings. The earliest was 5996, "Bedelia," made in both seven- and nine-inch. Since "Bedelia" was published in 1903, the Zon-o-phone disc presumably was made that year, though it may not have appeared until early 1904. This was one of the few instances of Kimmel's playing contemporary popular music. "Bedelia" was followed by 6006, "Irish Jigs and Reels Medley," issued in both sizes, and by three others in nine-inch only: 6047, "Irish Reels Medley," 6060, "American Polka" and 6071 "Straight Jig Medley." The jigs and reels were characteristic of most of the music Kimmel was to record throughout his career.

Kimmel made two single-faced 10-inch Zonos that appeared in 1905. One was 212, "American Clog," which the catalog described as "a real novel record. The tone and execution are very good." Then came 234, "Yankee Doodle Dandy," which, in a badly cracked form, was one of the oldest records in my parents' collection. It was among a large number of relatively ancient "platters" my father had bought second-hand. The title was misleading, for the music Kimmel played was not that of the "Yankee Doodle" of the Revolutionary War, but George M. Cohan's 1904 hit, "The Yankee Doodle Boy." The catalog said: "A particularly good record of this instrument. The variations introduced are recorded very well." It might have added that the piano accompaniment, undoubtedly played by Joe Linder, was excellent and unusually well taken down for that primitive period.

No more single-faced Zon-o-phone records by Kimmel were issued, at least through 1907, but when a double-faced catalog was compiled in 1909, he was represented by the following twelve titles: 5058 Irish Jigs/American Clogs; 5059 Cakewalk/Irish Jigs and Reels; 5331 Medley of German Waltzes/Irish Boy March; 5332 Straight Jigs Medley / Schottische Medley; 5333 American Polka/Yankee Doodle Dandy (still mislabeled!); and 5184 Tipperary March/The Fan March. By the time the double-faced Zon-o-phone record list was issued Kimmel had been recording some time for both Edison and Victor.

In the article about the Wypers I said that Peter Wyper's first records came out before Kimmel's and he appeared to be the first accordionist to have his playing reproduced. That statement possibly is still true, if Wyper's home-made cylinders, recorded one at a time in Cadzow, Hamilton, Scotland, are counted, but since Wyper's first Columbias didn't reach the market until late in 1907, Kimmel seems to have been the first to record for an established commercial firm.

However, the distinction of making the first accordion-type record would seem to belong to a well-known player of the concertina, Percy Honri. On October 1, 1898, Honri made one of the earliest seven-inch records for the Gramophone Company, then just beginning business in England. The title was "Happy Darkies."

III. Something About Kimmel

The question of John Kimmel's racial strain was discussed several years ago in an exchange of letters between a Minneapolis specialist in accordion recordings, C. Hilding Bergquist and me. Hilding maintained Kimmel must be Irish, "for, otherwise, how could he play Irish jigs and reels with such skill and authority?" I, on the other hand, pointed out the resemblance of Kimmel to the German word for heaven, "himmel," and maintained he must have come from German stock.

I was right. Kimmel's father and mother were both born in Germany, but he specialized in Irish dance music to so great a degree that he was jokingly known among his ad-ming friends in Brooklyn, where he lived all his life, as "the Irish Dutchman."

For a man who made hundreds of popular records, it is strange how little was known, outside Brooklyn, about John Kimmel. I have met with great difficulty in obtaining information about many pioneer recording artists, but Kimmel was one of the most elusive of the lot. The first time I met Billy Murray I asked him if he had known John Kimmel and knew whether he was still alive. Billy amazed me by replying he not only hadn't known Kimmel but couldn't remember having ever previously heard his name. Yet Billy, after coming east and beginning to make records in 1903, had lived several years in Brooklyn!

I probably still would be floundering in my search for knowledge about John Kimmel had it not been for my veteran song writer friend, Ray Walker, also of Brooklyn. Ray not only made some personal inquiries, but in 1953 inserted a letter in the Old-Timers' department of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, which brought considerable correspondence from men who had known Kimmel and Linder. From what these courteous and informative letter writers told either Ray or me I have garnered the information to write this article. I also eventually obtained a copy of Kimmel's death certificate which gave the date of his birth and death.

John Kimmel was born in Brooklyn on December 13, 1866, and was living there, at 1044 Decatur street, when he died (in Kings County Hospital) at 11:20 p.m. September 18, 1942. He was 75 years, nine months and five days of age. Although he had the middle initial J., the certificate doesn't list a middle name. (It probably was Jacob or Joseph.) His profession was given as "musician," with a notation that he retired in 1927. (However, he made records later than that.) His father, also John Kimmel, was born in Germany, as was his mother, whose maiden name was Margaretha Schmidt. He was married (his wife's name was Margaret), but they seem to have had no children other than an adopted daughter. The cause of death was given as lobar pneumonia, accompanied by chronic glomerulonephritis—a form of Bright's disease.

Now I may as well set down what information I have about Kimmel's "accomplice," Joe Linder. Lennie Diehl, of Baldwin, L. I., New York, an old friend of both Kimmel and Linder, who was especially helpful to me after reading Ray Walker's newspaper letter, wrote that Linder was born in Brooklyn on January 23, 1870, and died January 12, 1943, less than four months after Kimmel. His last address was 1121 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn—the YMCA building.

John J. Kimmel and Joe Linder

Lester W. M. Hunkele, of 7917 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, wrote the following interesting note to Ray Walker:

Joe Linder was a very good "fake" piano player. He was tall, slightly bald, large frame, wore glasses, and had he studied might have been another Liszt. He read a little in the treble clef, but as he played for the same performers nearly all the time his memory helped him to get by.

I first met him around 1908 to 1916. At first he was popular at stage parties where Johnny Casey, Frank Fogarty and Johnny Carroll were the principal entertainers.

I am sure he was German. . . He was well known around the various Elks divisions, and many times played Elks' parties here in Brooklyn Lodge, where he was a member. In 1916, when the YMCA built 65 Hanson Place, I was pianist for gym classes, and organist and pianist for special events. Joe Linder was for a time, my assistant in the gymnasiums.

So much for Joe Linder. Now some reminiscences from men who knew Kimmel.

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES
Rare Pieces For Sale
ALL SIZES AND TYPES
Expert Repairing
Original Factory Methods—All Work Guaranteed
(ESTIMATES AND APPRAISALS FREE)
BORNAND MUSIC BOX COMPANY
139 4th Ave. (Po. 8-1506)—PELHAM, N. Y.

"F. R. P."
Famous Records of The Past
2060 1st Ave., New York, N.Y.
Jack L. Caidin

Re-issues and re-recordings or rare and unusual phonograph records. Operatic, Theatrical, Political, Instrumental. The finest in quality and true reproduction. 10" LP—$2.98 12" LP—$3.98. Tax and postage prepaid. Also original records.

SEND FOR FREE BULLETINS!

IV. More About "The Irish Dutchman"

None of John Kimmel's old friends who wrote to Ray Walker or me describe the accordion wizard's appearance, but photos in old record catalogs and supplements show him as a rather short, stocky man, wearing a placid expression on a round, moon-shaped face. His features were typically German.

I found a letter from Patrick F. Stedman of 326 Lincoln Place, Brooklyn, unusually interesting. In part he wrote:

I personally knew Mr. Kimmel and Mr. Linder through a young man who was employed at the same store as I was at that time, 1893. His name was Frank Gammon. He afterwards became sanitation commissioner for the Borough of Brooklyn. A quartet including Gammon . . . along with Kimmel and Linder assembled four or five nights a week in an undertaking establishment on Court street, across the way from St. Paul's Church. They practiced their singing and playing their skills. The undertaker's name was Eickoff. All of them have passed away . . . I still have in my possession several of Kimmel's recordings and I sure enjoy listening to them . . . even at the age of 81, my next birthday.

Of equal interest was a letter from Lennie Diehl, written April 7, 1953:

Dear Jim: . . . Regarding Kimmel, I've sent out at least 15 letters to different sources to try to locate his aged sister (if still alive) and his foster daughter. I saw her grow up. . . . Kimmel's last records were made with a banjo-guitar accompanist whose name was Andy Fiedler. I also am waiting to hear from him. You are right about 1929 being Kimmel's last recording year, as that was the year I made orchestra arrangements for John . . . for a spot on WOR that Don Carney was promoting.

About his title, "The Irish Dutchman." Before John opened saloons he hit the board with a musical act such as coming out and playing four-part harmony on cornets, then saxophones, xylophone and, of course, during scenery shifts he'd solo on the accordion. He never set the world on fire with

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.)
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York

18th SEASON
DIXIE RECORD CLUB
1635 duPont Building
Miami (32), Florida

OCCASIONAL RECORD AUCTIONS—Operatic & Concert VOCAL Selections by Great Singers of the Past and Present. Rareties of early vintage to recent cutouts. The bidder makes to price. List of realized prices sent to each bidder after the sale. Write for lists.

the other instruments . . . but nevertheless he was there playing.

Before his death he dabbled in real estate. His last saloon was on Myrtle Avenue and Madison street in the Ridgewood section of Queens, a little over the Brooklyn line. The name of the place was "The Accordion," and he didn't have it long. He wouldn't sell whiskey and beer against the law and he had the place in the early days of prohibition. Previous to that he had a place at Himrod street and Irving Avenue in Brooklyn. . . . This was a good spot with the cream names of entertainers appearing. Plenty of good performers came out of this neighborhood—among them Joe Schenk, Gus Van and Mae West.

Mr. Diehl's statement about Kimmel's having been in vaudeville is confirmed by a U. S. Everlasting Records catalog for 1912 which described him as "the world champion accordionist, formerly with Elite Musical Four, and a headliner in vaudeville."

The Daily Eagle, to whose reference department I had applied without success for any information concerning Kimmel and Linder, appears to have published an article about Kimmel in 1945, for Lennie Diehl sent me a clipping of a letter to the editor he had written that year, in which he said:

It certainly was a treat to read the article on Johnny Kimmel. It's too bad that John couldn't stay with us to see that nice article. Johnny Kimmel passed away . . . after living in retirement up in Greene Avenue, Ridgewood, for the past 25 years or so. In this time he was still making phonograph records and was in the "Main Street Sketches" on WOR. For the past few years he was ailing in health and only brought the accordion out for rare occasions.

Still another letter from Lennie Diehl said:

I knew John Kimmel well and played piano in his back room while I still wore short pants. I also played mandolin and guitar in one of his troupes. John played cornet, xylophone and saxophone in a musical four act, similar to the old musical acts of B. A. Rolfe. A fellow by the name of George Bell, living in Babylon, L. I., still has Kimmel's old cornet.

Through his letter in the Daily Eagle, Ray Walker heard from Kimmel's adopted daughter, Mrs. Madeline Stumpp, who became a member of the Kimmel family at the age of nine. She lived at 625 47th street, Brooklyn, and wrote to Ray that she would be glad to give him all the information she could about her foster father. However, because of the difference in their working hours, she and Ray didn't meet, except for a brief conversation in the night club where he was playing.

V. John Kimmel's Edison Records

John Kimmel was in his fortieth year and presumably was already operating his saloon in the German "Old Dutch Town" section of Brooklyn when he had his first Edison recording date on May 8, 1906. He made Edison cylinders and, later, discs, at widely spaced intervals for almost 23 years afterwards.

That initial engagement resulted in Kimmel's recording a pair of two-minute Standard cylinders. The first, No. 9341, "American Cake Walk," appeared in September, 1906. The Edison publicity writer misspelled Kimmel's last name as Kimmble and that awkward use of superfluous letters continued until 1918 when he made his first Diamond Discs. It was also an Edison custom in those days to add an incorrect "h" to the end of Ada Jones' first name and refer to John Biehling instead of Bieling—the way the annoyed tenor himself spelled it. The New Phonogram said:

This is an accordion solo, with piano accompaniment, and is the first record of the kind that we have ever listed. Mr. Kimmble is an especially fine player on this instrument, probably one of the best in the country, and he has chosen for his initial selection a non-published composition of Edward De Veau that is well adapted to this popular musical instrument.

Who, I wonder, was "Edward De Veau" and why should Kimmel be playing one of his compositions that hadn't even been published? The suspicion may be wrong, but I think it is justified, that De Veau was simply a pen name for "Kimmble," who also composed for the accordion.

In November, 1906, came 9389, "Medley of Reels," with the comment: "Mr. Kimmble's first accordion record was such a success that he has made another for this supplement. That it will be equally popular will be admitted by all who hear this selection. It is full of variety and well rendered."

Edison called Kimmel back to the recording studio on March 7, 1907, and this time he appears to have made eight cylinders. In July, 1907, the company listed No. 9581, "The Kimmble March," and the customers were told:

The enormous success of our two previously listed accordion solos prompts us to list another by the same artist. It is one of Mr. Kimmble's own compositions—a march and a fine one, too. To hear it played is to admire it at once, for no composition ever before listed is better suited to the accordion and few marches are more tuneful. Played with piano accompaniment.

There is a bit of mystery associated with the "Kimmble (Sic) March." It is the same composition as Zonophone and Victor listed under the name of "The Irish Boy March." Why did Kimmel use one name for Edison and another for the other companies? And why did he call it "The Irish Boy March?" Did he perhaps feel that was as close as he could come to referring to his status as "The Irish Dutchman?" Whatever the reason, the composition was extremely popular, and years later, as "The Kimmel March," was one of the big selling Edison Diamond Discs. For a time, as we shall see, "The Irish Boy" occupied an even more elevated position among Victor records.

No. 9665, "Medley of Straight Jigs," was listed in October, 1907, and 9761, "American Polka," appeared in February, 1908, with this enthusiastic notice:

An accordion solo that will add much to Mr. Kimmble's already widespread popularity as a player of unusual skill on this somewhat peculiar musical instrument. Mr. Kimmble's execution will do much to dissipate the opinion that many have concerning the musical qualities of the accordion. In his hands it becomes most attractive. His previous records are among the best sellers in the Edison catalogs and his newest contribution will rank fully as high in selling qualities.

I have a bit of unusual evidence to prove that the catalog writer knew what he was talking about when he mentioned the popularity of Kimmel's records. It is an order blank which the Edison dealer at Whitman, Mass.—P. A. Howland—filled out for February, 1908. He ordered only one copy of an Edison cylinder of an Italian dialect song, "Garibaldi," sung by the popular song writer, James Brockman. Ada Jones was vastly popular, but her "Under the Matzos Tree" was down for just two copies—probably because Mr. Howland suspected a Jewish dialect number wouldn't sell well to his New England customers.

He ordered only four of "Somebody's Been Around Here Since I've Been Gone," by that day's king of popular recording artists, Billy Murray. Ten copies each were ordered of "The Crack Regiment Patrol" by the Edison Symphony Orchestra and "The Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane," by the Edison Male Quartet. But the top order, twelve copies, went to Kimmel's record of "The American Polka"! At this period Kimmel's records probably were second in popularity, among instrumental offerings, only to Vess Ossman's banjo solos, and were even more popular than Charles D'Almaine's violin renditions of Irish jigs and reels.

In July, 1908, Kimmel was present with No. 9881, "Medley of Irish Jigs." The supplement writer said:

An accordion solo of a number of well known Irish jig airs. The large and steady sale of Mr. Kimmble's records shows how popular the accordion is throughout the country. This selection is made with a piano accompaniment, as usual, bands and orchestra accompaniments serving to confuse the peculiar melody of the accordion.

It should hardly be necessary to say that the accompaniment was by

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

ELECTRONIC tone arm for Edison disc records. Edison disc records, catalogs, reproducers, bought, sold & exchanged. Special 100 Edison discs, $35 F.O.B.—Clyde E. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pennsylvania. t3234

MUSIC BOXES

SWISS MUSIC BOX, inlaid rosewood, 20x40½x12 with matching table 32½x50½x30. Good playing condition, with six interchangeable 19½, six tune cylinders. Has bells, drums, block and concertina. $450 including crating. Also two 15½" table model Reginas, excellent condition, $125 each including crating and ten records. — B. Shirar, 289 Divisadero, San Francisco, Calif. mh3088 the inevitable and never-failing Joe Linder!

WANTED: Regina music box, automatic console, 15½" or 27" discs.—J. E. Nickels, 1054 La Mesa Place, Fullerton, Calif. mh3403

When No. 9943, "Schottische Medley," was issued in September, 1908, the supplement writer said: "The accordion used by Kimmble in his solos has no relation to the ordinary concertina type of instrument. You will be astonished at its sweet tone and variety of musical expression, while the volume is sufficient to fill a large-sized concert hall." And in November, when 9975, "Popular Straight Jigs," appeared, the supplement remarked: "After hearing Kimmble play on his magical accordion, one wonders why jigs are ever played on any other instrument. But then every accordion player is not a Kimmble."

In February, 1909, Kimmble was represented by 10071, "The Minor March," which he also recorded for Victor. Edison misspelled "Minor" as "Miner." July, 1909, brought 10172, his own composition, "The Fans' March."

VI. Kimmble's Later Edisons

"The Irish Dutchman" was not called back to the Edison recording rooms until May 27, 1910. When he walked out he must have felt he had put in a busy day, for he had recorded three Standard two-minute cylinders and three four-minute Amberols. The first of the Standards, 10284, "Medley of Irish Reels," became available in July, 1910. It was described as "an accordion solo with piano accompaniment introducing a number of well-known popular Irish airs that are as infectious as they are melodious."

The other Standards were 10417, "German Waltz Medley" and 10525, "New Tipperary March." The Amberols were 504, "International and Fan Marches," 553, "Buck Dance Medley" and 927, "Elite March," another composition attributed to the shadowy De Veau. These were issued at intervals from September 1910, to March, 1912, when the "Elite March" appeared. This time "De Veau's" first name was given as Edgar.

Almost eight years slipped by before Kimmble was again on hand at 79 Fifth Avenue to make more Edison records with Linder as his accompanist. Linder was now 48 and Kimmble past 50. On March 4, 1918, they recorded three numbers, "The Kimmble March," "Bonnie Kate Medley" and "Connaught Man Medley." "The Kimmble March" was the first to be issued, appearing in June, 1918, as Blue Amberol No. 3943. For the first time on an Edison list, Kimmble's name was spelled Kimmble instead of Kimmble. "The Connaught Man" (B. A. 3521) was issued in October, and "Bonnie Kate" a few months later, as 5547.

Characteristic of Edison's peculiar treatment of withholding potentially big selling Diamond Discs from the market for months or years was the delay in issuing the new Kimmble performances. "The Kimmble March" and "Bonnie Kate" were coupled on disc No. 50604 in February, 1920. As if to make amends, the Edison musical magazine, Along Broadway, for that month included a full length photograph of Kimmble and the following article, headed "The Accordion Comes Into Its Own":

The fellow who writes things for the Encyclopaedia Britannica said in describing the accordion that "this, the smallest of the organ family, in the hands of a skilful performer is not entirely without artistic beauty." It is a safe wager that he had never heard John J. Kimmble turn her loose. If he had, he probably would have said, "My word, but the accordion is a hum-dinger!"

Because of its construction, the accordion is almost a fool-proof instrument. When you pull it out and squeeze some keys a certain kind of sound results. When you squeeze it together something else happens, usually not discordant but not necessarily pleasing.

Mr. Kimmble has put the accordion in the class of real musical instruments. In the "Bonnie Kate Medley of Reels," which he has re-created on the New Edison, you are reminded of a combination that might result from a Scotch bagpipe and a jazz band, and the rhythm is so compelling that you feel like shouting "swing your partner." In his own composition, "The Kimmble March," there are occasional suggestions of tones of a church organ swelling out in all their beauty, coupled with the rhythm and "pep" of a military band.

"Connaught Man—Medley of Jigs" was issued late in 1920 as Diamond Disc No. 50692. Its coupling was a "Medley of Scotch Airs," by Fred J. Bacon, banjoist.

Just before "Bonnie Kate" and "Kimmble March" reached the market, Kimmble and Linder reappeared at Edison, on January 17, 1920, and recorded four more numbers. These were "Haste to the Wedding," which became Blue Amberol 4194 and Diamond Disc 50653; "Oh Gee—Medley Reel" (B. A. 3985 and D. D. 50870); "Homeward March" (B. A. 4111 and D. D. 50674) and "Haley's Fancy Medley," issued on Blue Amberol 4076 but never issued on the disc. Probably Mr. Edison thought he heard a technical defect which, in his opinion, rendered the recording unsuited for disc use but satisfactory for the Blue Amberols, on which the standards were not so high.

On August 11, 1922, the Damon and Pythias of accordion and piano recorded "Stack o' Barley Medley" (often regarded as Kimmble's "theme song") and "Contentment Medley," which became Diamond Disc 51141. "Stack o' Barley" came out as Blue Amberol 4688, but "Contentment" didn't appear on the cylinders.

When Kimmble next made Edison records the modern era of electric recording had arrived—but Joe Linder wasn't with him! Why the inseparables had separated we don't know, but, as Lennie Diehl has said, the accompanist was a guitar player, Andy Fiedler. On December 27, 1928, they played "Bryant's Favorite Hornpipe" and "Fitzmaurice's Polka," which became Diamond Disc 52488. On January 3, 1929, they came through with "Floggan Reel" and "A Trip to the Cottage—Irish Jig"—Diamond Disc 52499. All four selections were likewise recorded for Edison needle cut records. In the order mentioned they had master numbers N659, N600, N673 and N674, but they were never issued. No. 52488 came out in February, 1929, and 52499 in March—a few months before Edison went out of the record business. Diamond Disc sales had fallen off badly, and these last Kimmble records are hard to find.

Thus ended Kimmble's more than 20 year association with Edison.

VII Kimmble's Victor Career

Although Victor controlled the Zon-o-phone label for which Kimmble had recorded, his name didn't appear in a Victor supplement until October, 1907, when 5237, "Irish Boy March," and 5238, "Medley of Irish Jigs," were issued. Catalog Editor Sam Rous said:

For a great many people in the world there is no music like that of an accordion. For their benefit, as well as the enjoyment of those who like a lively record of a march or jig, we offer two of the finest records of that instrument possible to make. They are very loud and splendidly played, Mr. Kimmble's execution being simply astonishing.

Kimmble made as immediate a hit with Victor audiences as he had with Edison patrons. When his record, 5417, of "American Polka" was issued in May, 1908, Rous remarked:

Lovers of lively music, and plenty of it, will be pleased to see this new Kimmble number. The records of this favorite accordion player have enjoyed tremendous popularity, especially the merry "Irish Boy March," which for some time was the most popular of all Victor records. . . .

Other Victor records by Kimmble of the 1907-08 period are 5254, "Medley of Straight Jigs"; 5307, "Medley of Popular Reels"; 5438, "American Cakewalk" (described as "a loud and lively record of this popular instrument, which in the capable hands of Mr. Kimmble becomes almost a whole orchestra"); and 5468, "Medley of Reels, No. 2."

Kimmble probably had a hand, but without label credit, in at least three of the records of that time. The comic "rube duet" by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, "My Gal Irene," has accordion interludes which must have been played by Kimmble, for Victor then had no other player on its list. The accordion is also introduced in 5406, Steve Porter's comic sketch, "Thim Were the Happy Days." One of a series of records issued in 1908 for demonstration purposes by Victor dealers but not to be sold to the public was called "The Irresistible Accordion." It appears reasonable that Kimmble provided the samples of accordion music.

When Victor began to issue double-faced records late in 1908, Kimmble's single-faced numbers were gradually coupled. "The Irish Boy Medley" was rather inappropriately doubled on 16747 with "Bye, Bye, My Honey," a "coon shout" by the imitable Billy Golden. Kimmble's records continued to appear for several years, although no new ones were issued in 1912, 1913 or 1914.

"The Irish Dutchman" made a Victor comeback in November, 1915, despite the strong competition of Pietro Deiro's vastly popular piano-accordion solos. On record 17849, he played Medleys 3 and 4 of Irish Reels. Mr. Rous said:

While Mr. Kimmel renders many kinds of music well, it is in the playing of jigs and reels that he is most thoroughly at home. Here are two lively medleys of Irish reels, and the only persons in America who can listen to them and keep their feet still are the unfortunates who are totally deaf!

Kimmel was back in January, 1917, with 18193, "Geese in the Bog—Irish Jigs" and "Stack of Barley—Irish Reels." A photo showing him holding his accordion had the cut lines, "Mr. Kimmel Waiting for His Cue." The editor commented:

The accordion, as played by John Kimmel, is a very good instrument for a medley of Irish jigs; it has the reedy virtues of the bagpipes, without the raucousness. The jigs in the present medley are lively enough, in the words of Pope, to "make the soul dance upon a jig to heaven."

Our Brooklyn friend was back in March with 18207, "Floggan Reel Medley" and "Irish Jig Medley." He also made several Victor records during the early 1920's, which usually were issued in March for the St. Patrick's Day trade. Then, after electric recording came in, there was an interval of no new Kimmel records until in 1928 he and Andy Fiedler made No. 21441, issued on July 6th. It contained a remake of the eternally popular "Irish Boy March" combined with "Fitzmaurice's Polka." Thus his last Victors were recorded a few months before his final Edisons. No. 21441 stayed in the Victor catalog until 1933, as did the acoustically recorded 18193.

VIII. Columbia and Other Companies

Kimmel's Columbia debut came long after he had made records for Zonophone, Edison and Victor. He first appeared in a Columbia supplement in March, 1916. The reason probably was that Columbia had been able to import accordion jigs and reels records, played by Peter and Daniel Wyper, from its English affiliate. Too, it had Guido Deiro, selling large quantities of piano-accordion discs. This initial record, A1917, was "Irish Jigs," introducing "Connaught Men's Ramble" and "Irish Reels," which included "Mason's Apron" and "Cuckoo's Nest." (In view of Kimmel's all-German ancestry, it still seems odd that he should have been so much fascinated by Erin-go-bragh music!) The supplement said:

Mr. Kimmel is a new accordion expert for Columbia lists and opens his reputation with a collection of Irish jigs and reels that will bring delight to several hundred thousands of our patrons at least. Mr. Kimmel has completely mastered the intricacies of his instrument and plays with unusual vim and vigor.

In September, 1916, Columbia marketed A2036, "Medley of Irish Jigs" and "Medley of Irish Reels." Under the heading of "Kimmel a Real Accordion Acrobat," the editor made a surprising statement:

John J. Kimmel would be a famous man today if he had taken his accordion and his playing ability and gone on the stage. A ten-minute playing of the Irish jigs featured on this latest Columbia record would bring any house to its feet. As it is, Mr. Kimmel is reaching just as delighted and a far larger audience on his records. Well worth hearing is the splendid technique of this artist of the accordion.

How did it happen, one wonders, that George Jell, or whoever else wrote that paragraph, didn't know Kimmel for many years had been a famous vaudeville headliner?

In December, 1916, Kimmel had another Columbia record, A2094, coupling "Medley of Reels" and "International Echoes," the composer of the latter being listed as Joe Linder. During the next two or three years he made several others. As a rule he played both sides but A2283, issued in September, 1917, coupled his "Medley of Jigs," with a march—two-step, "Irish Hearts," played by the unbeatable banjoist, Fred Van Eps.

As more and more companies went into the record business between 1916 and 1925, Kimmel was engaged at least occasionally by most. His versions of "Stack of Barley" and "Bryant's Favorite" were recorded on Pathe sapphire record No. 20956 and were also copied on to the Actuelle needle-cut disc. In the Emerson supplement of December, 1919, he was represented by 10-inch record 1099, "Medley of Irish Jigs" and "Irish Reels." The first side included "Haste to the Wedding," "Larry O'Gaff" and "Trip to the Cottage" and the second, his old favorites, "Bonnie Kate" and "Green Fields of America." The supplement's annotator was rather facetious:

Mr. Music-Lover, we want you to meet our new artist, John J. Kimmel, the famous accordion player. Mr. Kimmel was born in Brooklyn, but he has managed to live it down. He has met and vanquished, in turn, every competitor for the championship of the ten-key accordion.

Kimmel probably wouldn't have cared much for that good-natured "crack." All the evidence seems to indicate he was proud of being an "Old Dutch Town boy" and that he remained a loyal Brooklyn patriot to the last, never seeking to "live down" his birthplace.

And so it went as long as John Kimmel was active. Whenever and wherever he played, he was recognized as one of the masters of his instrument—a brilliant performer of the type of music which may appeal more to the feet than the head but which entertains if it doesn't edify. He probably lacked the wide musical culture of Charles D'Almaine but he played much the same type of music on the accordion that the gifted D'Almaine essayed so well and so often with his violin. It is appropriate, I think, that Kimmel's biography should appear in HOBBIES so close on the heels of D'Almaine's.

DEATHS OF HARRY C. BROWNE AND HARVEY HINDERMYER

By JIM WALSH

Since my biographical sketch of Harry C. Browne appeared in the January HOBBIES I have been surprised and saddened to learn Mr. Browne died in November, 1954. My information comes from Miss Hazel A. Firth, manager of the Executive Office of the First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, Mass.

I had not corresponded with Mr. Browne in recent years but had not seen any notice of his passing in the publications which naturally would be expected to publish it. Consequently, I wrote my article without knowing that the versatile gentleman whom I so much admired was no longer with us.

I am also informed by the noted tenor, Charles Hart, that our friend, Harvey Hindermeyer, died a short time ago, not many weeks after my article, "Harvey Hindermeyer's Golden Anniversary" appeared in the August, 1957, HOBBIES. I hope to have more detailed information later about Mr. Hindermeyer's death.

"A FRIEND INDEED"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $3.50 to HOBBIES, 1006 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago 5, Illinois.

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is:

.....
.....
.....
.....
.....

Reed Miller

(AND NEVADA VAN DER VEER)

By JIM WALSH

I A Birthday Party

Forty-two years ago, on March 7, 1916, at his home in New York, Reed Miller celebrated his ninth birthday.

The party was held a week late. The eminent concert and oratorio tenor and recording artist had been born in Anderson, S. C., on February 29, 1880. He was really 36 years of age, but since that Leap Year date comes only once each four years, the birthday was actually his ninth. Miller and his wife, a noted contralto known professionally by her unmarried name of Nevada Van der Veer (she was born in Springfield Center, N. Y., January 25, 1884) wore costumes suitable for boys and girls of nine and eight.

Among the guests were the baritone Frederick Wheeler, at that time Miller's partner for making duet records, and another famous recording tenor, Harvey Hindermeyer. Also on hand were members of the Mendelssohn Glee Club who presented Reed and Nevada Miller with a silver service.

Reed Miller was at the summit of his career when that birthday party took place. A short time before, his singing voice had been heard across the continent by long-distance telephone—a miracle in those days before radio and TV—as a feature of the Pan-American Exposition in San Francisco. Charles Wakefield Cadman, the composer, had written to him from California: "Your 'Drummer Boy' song sounded bully last night over 3,500 miles. Leonard Lieb-ling and I sat together and marveled. Wasn't the stunt thrilling? We could hear every note, and the piano, too."

There was no hint, that winter night, of Reed Miller's premature death. Yet the genial tenor, whom his equally distinguished fellow tenor and associate, Charles Harrison, has pronounced "the finest oratorio singer of his day," was to have a short life. On December 29, 1943, when he was only 43 and before he had observed his eleventh birthday, Miller died. But his life, though regrettably brief, was one marked by genuine musical achievement.

II Some Biographical Notes

Reed Miller never sang exclusively for any phonograph company, but he was one of the few free-lance artists who received biographical sketches in the record catalogs of all the major companies for whom he worked—Victor, Columbia and Edison.

For years the Victor catalog contained the following, accompanied by a small photo of the tenor:

It is with much pleasure that Victor announces the engagement of Mr. Reed Miller, the well-known concert tenor, whose beautiful voice, admirable diction and correct method have earned for him a large following of musical people. Some of Mr. Miller's recent engagements show in what favor he is held by concert-goers. Besides his regular engagement as solo tenor of the Brick Presbyterian Church of New York City, he has lately sung at the Spartanburg and Greensboro Festivals; Musical Art Society, Pittsburgh, with Damrosch and the New York Symphony; at the Worcester Festival, etc. The numbers selected for his Victor list by Mr. Miller are most attractive ones, and consist of a number of standard and sacred songs, besides several duets with Mr. Werrenrath.

The Columbia catalog said:

As one of the best tenors of the concert platform, Reed Miller has occupied an enviable position among American singers for several years, and the admiration everywhere felt for his splendid work increases season by season. Mr. Miller is not alone a singer with a tenor voice of magnificent calibre and quality, he is also an interpretative artist with every resource at his instant command.

This was supplemented by another mention under the Columbia Stellar Quartet heading:

Reed Miller, second tenor, is a native of the South. Miller came to New York with nothing in his pocket but ability. With a voice no less than a gift, he has achieved fame as one of the greatest oratorio soloists the country has ever known. From coast to coast Mr. Miller has been called to sing in chorus productions.

The April, 1914, Edison Blue Amberol catalog contained write-ups of both Miller and his wife. Of the tenor it said:

Reed Miller, born in Anderson, S. C., was not satisfied with merely possessing an unusually clear tenor voice, but was determined to become a true artist. To that end he studied under F. Powers, Arthur Mees and Walter Damrosch. His field of endeavor is large, including opera, oratorio and concert work, and he has appeared in the best houses all over the United States, singing with the New York Symphony Orchestra and with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra. He has also sung at the Worcester and Evanston Festivals and with the New York Oratorio Society. His voice is clear, perfectly rounded and tremendously powerful.

Under the heading of "Nevada Van der Veer Miller, Contralto," the following appeared:

An artist of whom much is heard is the young and attractive contralto, Nevada Van der Veer, who has earned her prominence by most artistic work and a beautifully trained voice. Mme. Van der Veer (in private life Mrs. Reed Miller) is a singer whose interpretation of oratorio has much of the English tradition, combined with modern individuality, while her song singing is a sheer delight. That Mme. Van der Veer is receiving great recognition is shown by the fact that she is to be heard in so many performances of oratorio clubs. She is a member of the famous Frank Croxton Quartet, composed also of Agnes Kimball, soprano, Reed Miller, tenor, and Frank Croxton, basso.

The 1922 Edison Diamond Disc catalog contains a sketch that appears to have been adapted from the one in the Blue Amberol booklet of several years before:

Reed Miller has sung to immense audiences in the largest cities in the United States. His field of endeavor is a vast one, including opera, oratorio, concert work and song composition. He has been a soloist with the New York Symphony, the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, the Chicago Orchestra and the New York Oratorio Society. Mr. Miller was born in South Carolina and received his musical education in the United States. His voice is clear, tremendously powerful and perfectly rounded. Mr. Miller is now the soloist of the famous St. Thomas Church on Fifth Avenue, New York.

The frequent mentions of Miller's appearances with the New York Symphony under Damrosch remind me of something I heard Ben Gross, the radio and television critic for the New York Daily News, tell on a New York Philharmonic program.

Gross said he was a small boy when the New York Symphony came to his home city, Birmingham, Ala., and he was one of a group of youngsters who gathered outside the auditorium in which the performance was given. They couldn't pay but wanted to listen. Mr. and Mrs. Miller were the soloists and during a rest period they stood inside a door opening on the alley in which the boys were clustered.

Miller looked at them, smiled and said: "Hey, kids, you wanna come in?" They say they did, he opened the door and they heard the remainder of the concert from good seats. Gross declared Reed Miller's genial thoughtfulness gave him a start toward a lifelong love of good music.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

III Reed Miller Records

It probably will surprise most admirers of Reed Miller to learn he made records as long ago as 1904, and possibly a bit earlier. His first recorded work was done for Zonophone, under the assumed name of James Reed, which he used extensively a decade later.

The first record I can find by him is Albert Von Tilzer's great "coon song" hit, "Teasing"—not the type of composition with which one would ordinarily associate Reed Miller's name. This was a nine-inch record, No. 6055. Likewise in the Zonophone nine-inch list was 6092, "I'm Wearing My Heart Away For You," which had been written in 1902 by the tearjerker ballad specialist, Charles K. Harris. It also was listed as Zonophone ten-inch record No. 17.

The 10-inch was described "a very clear and distinct record."

I have found no more Zonophone records by Reed Miller. His next appearance in any record list appears to have been in the Edison two-minute standard cylinder supplement for October, 1907. In view of his Southern ancestry, he began his Edison career appropriately on Record 9658 with an Ernest R. Ball ballad, "The Birds in Georgia Sing of Tennessee." The supplement said: "A pretty sentimental ballad that will gain many admirers. Mr. Miller, who sings it, although he has made over several records for us, has not previously made a new one, and should soon become a favorite by reason of his fine voice."

The first complete Edison standard record catalog in which Miller's name appears is dated December, 1907. Besides the "Birds in Georgia" song, it contains two records, originally made by Harry Macdonough, which had been done over by Miller: 7242 "Sing Me a Song of the South" (again an appropriate choice for a South Carolina tenor!) and 6504 "The Lost Chord," a number to which his ringing resonant voice should have been well adapted.

Reed Miller and that superb baritone Reinald Werrenrath were represented by their first recorded duet in the November, 1907, Edison supplement. The tone quality with Werrenrath singing the "lead" and Miller harmonizing, is remarkably clear and sonorous, and Werrenrath's voice sounds richer than on any disc record I have heard by him. The song they sang on this cylinder, 9679, is "Honey Boy," with words by Jack Norworth and music by Albert Von Tilzer. The supplement writer truthfully said "the air is catchy and uncommon . . . a swinging march tune, sung with much spirit."

Miller did not become widely known as a song writer, but he was testing his talents at composition in 1907, when these first Edison cylinders were made. M. Witmark & Sons published at least two of his songs that year: "From the Depths," with words by Samuel Wood, and "Memories," for which Miller wrote both words and music. Both are numbers resembling Tosti's "Goodbye" in theme, with an air of sad disillusionment. "Memories" has an unusual type of lyric, containing only seven lines. There is no reason to think Reed Miller personally shared in the conventionally heartbreaking sentiments which his songs expressed.

The tenor continued to record for Edison, but his first Victor record did not appear until January 1910. It was a ten-inch single-faced, No. 5753, the Clifton Bingham and Edward German ballad, "Roses in June," which, judging by the frequency with which he recorded it and sang it in concert, was one of his best liked songs. Other favorites of his repertoire were Hope Temple's "'Tis All That I Can Say," and Stephen Adams' "Maid of the Mill." The supplement contained the biographical sketch of Miller which has already been quoted, and commented: "The number selected for Mr. Miller's first record is that charming song . . . 'Roses in June,' which he sings delightfully. The accompaniment, with its violin obbligato and harp passages, is a wholly beautiful one."

"Roses in June" was soon combined on double-faced record, 16675, with "Annie Laurie," sung by that sterling English baritone, Alan Turner.

Before many months Miller had become a Victor stand-by and, as such, took part in some of the medleys sung by the Victor Light Opera Company. His second record, a melodious Ernest Ball ballad, "In the Garden of my Heart," appeared on black label disc 5765 in March, 1910. It was after words combined on 16741 with "My Wild Irish Rose," by the Hayden Quartet. The supplement said:

Mr. Miller's beautiful record of "Roses in June" has met with much favor since its issue in January. The tenor's friends were charmed with such a perfect reproduction of his voice, and the record has made him many new admirers.

In March, 1911, the supplement listed two new Miller records—5820, "Kathleen Mavourneen," and 5721, "Beauty's Eyes," by Tosti, with the statement that "this popular concert singer has returned from a long tour in the West, where he has been highly successful, and has sung for us two old favorites."

The Victor tendency was to restrict Miller, in the beginning at least, to ballads of a Victorian flavor. In April, 1911, he was represented by 5829, "Tell Her I Love Her So," and this comment was made:

. . . Mr. Miller sings this lovely old song with rare expression and perfect diction. Those who are fortunate enough to possess this unusual reproduction will doubtless wonder why such genuinely beautiful songs as this are so neglected by concert singers. The Victor, however, intends to perform a public duty by rescuing many of these numbers from the oblivion into which they have apparently fallen.

Neither Victor nor any other phonograph company ever gave the tenor an adequate opportunity to display his unusual accomplishments as an interpreter of oratorio and opera.

The April, 1911, supplement also contained the first of several duets by Miller and Werrenrath, No. 5832, "The Army and Navy," described as "a famous old duet which was the delight of tenors and baritones thirty years ago. It serves admirably to introduce to Victor audiences this new combination of Victor artists. Mr. Miller's clear tenor and the vigorous baritone of Mr. Werrenrath blend admirably in this fine martial number."

Reinald Werrenrath became an exclusive Victor artist and was promoted successively to Purple Label, Blue Label and Red Seal status. Miller's records never went higher than Black Label, but had he become exclusive to Victor instead of free-lancing throughout his recording career he probably also would have been advanced to higher rank. His Edison Diamond Discs were always issued in the 80,000 series, selling at from $1.50 to $1.85, and corresponding to the Victor Blue Label.

IV Columbia Recordings

From 1910 to April, 1915, all Victor records by Reed Miller were listed under his own name. But when he made his first Columbia he revived the "alias" of James Reed which he had used for Zonophone in 1904. Columbia, with a flourish of trumpets, had just entered into an agreement with Charles K. Harris to record all his songs—an arrangement which didn't amount to much, for Harris, composer of "After the Ball," was already outmoded and no longer able to write hits consistently. Miller's first Columbia disc, as James Reed, was A924, "It's Always June When You're in Love," whose coupling was another Harris number, "I Miss You Honey, Miss You All the Time," sung by Ada Jones and chorus.

The supplement writer gave this double-barreled Harris combination a rousing send-off:

Following our recent arrangement with the Chas. K. Harris Music Publishing Company . . . we introduce Harris' greatest sentimental song success of the present season—one of the most popular and tuneful numbers composed by him in the entire course of his successful career. The theme of the words is one that never grows old or loses its interest, and the air, in slow waltz time, is of an unusually engaging and ingratiating character. Add to this the wonderful vocalism of Mr. James Reed and you have a record that is indeed difficult to equal in popular music. That Mr. Reed is a "find" of the first water, for recording work, is obvious from his first note; he is a real tenor and a notable acquisition to Columbia ranks. Undoubtedly he will be heard from regularly in the future.

The next month, January, 1911, Miller was present as himself. The front cover of the Columbia supplement was used to advertise his record, A941, of "Beauty's Eyes," combined with Eugene Cowles' "Forgotten," more often sung as a bass solo. True to its tradition of giving better value than Victor, Columbia offered both songs for 75 cents, while Victor, whose version of "Beauty's Eyes," appeared two months later, charged 60 cents in single-face. The supplement said Miller "has sung for the Columbia one of the most celebrated love-songs of the nineteenth century, and one which holds a high place in the list of the most popular songs ever written. . . . Coupled with 'Beauty's Eyes,' Mr. Miller gives us an interpretation of this favorite standard number by Eugene Cowles. . . . That Mr. Miller is precisely the artist to do it justice is amply proved in this splendid record."

From that time on, both as Reed Miller and as James Reed, the South Carolina tenor was as big a favorite on Columbia records as on Victor. He not only made many solos, but also sang duets with Grace Kerns, soprano; Frank Croxton, basso; Walter Lawrence, a 12-year-old boy soprano (the selection by this unusual combination was "Love Divine, All Love Excelling," from "The Daughter of Jairus"); and recorded one duet with his wife, a Mendelssohn composition, "The May Bell and the Flowers." This is a record I have never succeeded in turning up. Mr. and Mrs. Miller seldom recorded duets together, but some years later they made a few Emerson records of gospel hymns. One was No. 10271, "I Need Thee Every Hour" and "I Love to Tell the Story."

V Miller as a Quartet Member

The late Frank Croxton, that golden voiced basso from Paris, Ky., made his debut as a recording artist in 1911. By that time he had organized a mixed quartet, all of whom were accomplished soloists. Whatever scruples of modesty he may have had did not deter him from naming the ensemble the Frank Croxton Quartet.

The Quartet's photo appeared on the cover of the Edison record supplement for January, 1912, and its first record was announced in that issue. It was four-minute Amberol 884, "Flora's Holiday—A Song Cycle," composed by H. Lane Wilson. The cycle, written in old English style, was not of a nature to arouse much enthusiasm among Edison cylinder enthusiasts, most of whom probably found the music a bit "difficult."

However, Edison issued several other Frank Croxton Quartet records, of which three appeared on Blue Amberols: 1528, "Quartet from 'Rigoletto'"; 1545, "Abide With Me," and 1745, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee." The Quartet later made discs for several companies but not for Victor—which, incidentally, was one of the few for which Mrs. Miller never sang.

In 1914 Miller also became a member of the once world-famous Columbia Stellar Quartet, singing second tenor, or "lead," as it is called nowadays. He was not the original second tenor of this remarkable organization which specialized in singing without accompaniment. John Barnes Wells held that post for a couple of records and was succeeded by Henry Burr for one or two more. But the Quartet achieved its greatest success when the personnel became Charles Harrison, first tenor; Reed Miller, second; Andrea Sarto, baritone; and our old friend, Frank Croxton, bass. It continued to be a feature of the Columbia catalog until the early 1920's, but as Miller's concert and oratorio popularity increased he traveled a great deal and was sometimes unavailable for the quartet's recordings. When that happened other artists, among them Lewis James, took his place.

The year 1914 was also one in which Columbia allowed Miller to do some more ambitious recording work than he was usually associated with. In January, he was represented by a 12-inch disc, A5511, on which he gave some of the noble numbers from Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The first side contained the recitative, "Ye People Rend Your Hearts," and the aria, "If With All Your Hearts." On the other side he sang "Then Shall the Righteous Shine Forth." The supplement commented: "The two principal tenor solos from this most dramatic and beautiful of oratorios reveal Mr. Miller at his best—and his best is exceedingly good."

Columbia needed recordings of the Rigoletto Quartet and the Lucia Sextet in English to compete with the Purple Label versions which Victor had issued, and in October, 1915, on double-faced 12-inch record A5709, these two classics of operatic shouting were combined — again giving more for the money than Victor. The quartet was sung by Grace Kerns, soprano; Mildred Potter, contralto (she died a month or so before the record was issued); Charles W. Harrison, tenor, and Albert Wiederhold, baritone. The same artists sang the sextet with the addition of Reed Miller and Frank Croxton. The supplement annotator waxed lyrical:

In this new popular-priced Columbia recording a wonderful opportunity awaits the thousands who recognize in these two selections the most inspired concerted compositions in all opera. . . . The great fact is the singing of them by Columbia artists of such merit that the resulting record can be compared favorably with the most expensive ones that money can buy, and yet sell at a popular price. The singers, selected from the long list of Columbia talent, have been trained specially to produce the perfect vocalization and stupendous finales of these operatic masterpieces. Their success can be delightfully heard in every home on this remarkable Columbia record.

In 1913, Miller had made two Edison Diamond Discs of opera arias in English. On 82031 he sang "Vesti la giubba" from "Pagliacci" and on 82041, the Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana." They were short-lived, their masters probably having been destroyed in the disastrous December, 1914, fire at the Edison laboratories. He later became one of the Edison "tone test" artists.

As befitted a South Carolinian, Reed Miller was a remarkable interpreter of the Negro spiritual type of composition. One of his finest records was Edison Diamond Disc 80487, "By an' By," and "Go Down Moses," in which the Edison catalog statement that his voice was "perfectly rounded and tremendously powerful" is proved beyond doubt. Columbia and Victor also provided examples of his ability to sing music of the Negro type. In September, 1914, Columbia issued on A1558, his version of "Exhortation" (A Negro Sermon), combined with Croxton's singing of "Uncle Rome." These were described as:

Two standard Negro songs, perhaps the best and most characteristic of their kind that have ever so far been written. They are absolutely true to type, each presenting a distinct phase of the Negro character with a fidelity and clean-etched outline that is almost startling. In "Exhortation" Will Marion Cook has created the musical setting to a Negro sermon which, underneath its grotesque literary form, has the kind of common-sense religion that stands a man in good stead for every day in the week. In his musical investiture of the words Mr. Cook has risen to truly great heights of descriptive composition, and Mr. Miller — a Southerner himself with a thorough conception of the Negro character — has made a record that is intensely full of personality and meaning.

Victor delayed issuing its version of "Exhortation" until December, 1915, although the number, 17695, indicates it had originally been scheduled for publication around March or April. The B side was another so-called Negro sermon, "Dah's Gwinteb er Lan'slide," written by a South Carolina woman composer, Lily Strickland. The thought occurs that Victor missed a bet by not teaming Miller with another South Carolina singer, the contralto, Marguerite Dunlap, and having them sing some of Miss Strickland's compositions, such as the favorite "Mah Lin-

THE FRANK CROXTON QUARTETTE.
FRANK CROXTON, bass; AGNES KIMBALL, soprano; NEVADA VAN DER VEER, contralto; REED MILLER, tenor.

REED MILLER (Stroking Victor Dog) and FREDERICK WHEELER photographed in 1917 in La Voice's Music and Art Shop, Plattsburg, N. Y.

A 1915 photograph of the Columbia Stellar Quartette. Left to right—CHARLES HARRISON, first tenor; REED MILLER, lead; ANDREA SARTO, baritone; FRANK CROXTON, bass.

dy Lou." Such an all-Carolina combination should have been a big favorite—at least in South Carolina!

Miller and Nevada Van der Veer were an extremely busy couple at this stage of their careers. The Edison Phonograph Monthly for November, 1914, remarked of Miller that "his repertoire is necessarily very extensive and includes much that it would be impossible for the average tenor to present creditably. But, with his conscientious, untiring study and his remarkable natural endowments, Mr. Miller has been able to gratify his ambition to become one of the foremost tenors of the country."

More information on Mr. and Mrs. Miller's musical progress is given in the Phonograph Monthly for November, 1916:

Reed Miller and Nevada Van der Veer (Mrs. Reed Miller) made a splendid impression on New England audiences during the course of a Chautauqua tour through Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine in the latter part of the summer and fall. Their itinerary also took them into New York State, where they appeared at Plattsburg and sang to the "rookies" encamped there in large numbers. Mr. Miller has been engaged for the "Messiah" performances of the New York Oratorio Society at Carnegie Hall, New York, and by the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston, while Nevada Van der Veer is to sing with the New York Oratorio Society in its presentation of Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

For a "boy" and "girl" who had signalized their ninth and eighth birthdays only a short time before, the Millers were doing all right!

VI Duet Partnership With Fred Wheeler

As the photo of the Columbia Stellar Quartet taken in 1915 reveals, Reed Miller was a small, short man whose once abundant dark hair had begun to thin and threaten him with baldness by the time he reached that ninth birthday. But, regardless of loss of hair, he became ever busier.

Late in 1914, Miller, who had not sung with Werrenrath for a considerable time, decided he needed a baritone duet partner, and Frederick Wheeler, the famous recording baritone, found himself in need of a tenor associate. Wheeler had been for almost a decade the partner of John Young, and under the assumed names of Harry Anthony (Young) and James F. Harrison (Wheeler) they had made hundreds of duet records. Their specialty was gospel hymns. But Young decided to sign an exclusive Edison contract, with a loophole that allowed him to sing on Victor records as a member of the American Quartet.

Young and Wheeler continued to sing together for Edison, but since the tenor's services were not available for duet work on other records, Wheeler's activities were curbed. Hence, the decision he and Miller made to join forces. They did not sing together on Edison records, but made the rounds of most of the other companies, especially Victor and Columbia. Occasionally they used their real names for duet work, but for the most part disguised themselves as James Reed and James F. Harrison.

The first Columbia duet by Reed and Harrison, No. A1682, appeared in March, 1915. It coupled their rendition of "Over the Hills to Mary" with a novelty number, "The Violin My Great-Grand-Daddy Made," sung by a vaudeville baritone, Henry Santrey. Their initial Victor record came out the following month—No. 17732, "The Little House Upon the Hill," combined with a Harry Von Tilzer hit, "When My Ship Comes In," by Albert Campbell and Henry Burr.

Reed and Harrison's harmonizing became immediately popular and remained so for almost three years. During the period in which their partnership flourished they toured together and made many visits to the stores of record dealers. An oddity occurred in the February, 1917, Victor supplement when their record, No. 18197, of "Just a Word of Sympathy," was listed among the new song hits as being sung by Reed/Harrison, but in the index at the back was credited to Miller and Wheeler.

VII Reed Miller's Last Years

American entry into the first World War probably resulted in ending the partnership of Reed Miller and Frederick Wheeler as well as somewhat impairing the demand for Miller as a recording soloist. His last Victor record under his own name, No. 18234, "Love Will Find the Way," appeared in April, 1917. The last Victor duet by Reed and Harrison, 18402, "Old Virginny Days," was issued in December, 1917. It was coupled with "Sometime You'll Remember," Miller's final Victor solo on which he once more appeared as James Reed. At the end of 1917, much of the Victor plant was converted to war manufacturing and with lessened record production the staff of artists was reduced.

"Sometime You'll Remember," also appeared in the December Columbia list, but under Miller's own name. In January, on A2412, he and Wheeler sang their final Columbia duet, "My Sunshine Jane." Miller's last Columbia solo, issued in June, 1918, was A2526, "Lafayette, We Hear You Calling." It seems likely that his association with the Columbia Stellar Quartet ended at this time, although no announcement of a change was made. The tenor also seems to have made no Edison records after 1918, but a few numbers which he had recorded earlier were issued subsequently.

The cause is obscure, but although Miller's career as a recording artist

(Continued on page 49)

SPOONS FOR SALE

Sterling Souvenir Spoons $1.50 ea. tax inc. Assortments sent on approval. State seal spoons $2.50. Foreign & enamel spoons, $2.50 to $10. —L. & F. Schwarz, 1806 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. d120882

STERLING SOUVENIR and unusual spoons, $1.50 up. Approval selections upon request and reference. Four spoon lists a year, $1. —Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. my126351

COLLECTING TEASPOONS? Historical teaspoons of Lincoln, Washington, Jackson, Jefferson, Grant, Theodore and F. D. Roosevelt. All new, full size, silver-plated, originally made 1938. Example - Washington spoon shows his modeled bust, his name, that he was First President years in office 1789 to 1797. In the bowl is raised picture of Mt. Vernon. Other spoons made same, with scene associated with each President in the bowl. $1.00 each ppd.—Don Parker, Silversmithing, Branford 8, Conn. ap34811

Discontinued & Old Ster. Silv. Flatware Patterns
We may have your missing pieces of flatware by

- Gorham
- Towle
- Wallace
- Whiting
- Frank Smith
- S. Kirk & Sons
- International Silver Co.
- Steiff

Write your Pattern wants
Contact us and save money

GOLDEN'S SILVER & ANTIQUE SHOP

Dept. H
863 N. Howard St. Baltimore 1, Md.
Phone: Saratoga 7-7888 ufo

STERLING - ENAMEL SOUVENIR SPOONS
Beautifully hand painted on porcelain and high-fired for extra beauty and permanence.

FAMOUS AMERICANS

Dr. Antonin Dvorak who composed his famous New World Symphony in Sullivan, Iowa in 1893.

Dr. William S. Pitts who composed the song and lyrics THE LITTLE BROWN CHURCH IN THE WILLOW while driving through

BRADFORD, Iowa in 1857. Each $5.50 or both $10.75, P.P. Ins.

ALBERT H. OESCHLE

709 East High St.—Jefferson City, Missouri mho

MAKES COPPER, SILVER, BRASS,
NICKEL & GOLD

BRILLIANTIZE

BRILLIANT INSTANTLY
Reg. Size Kit $1.00
Med. Size Kit 2.00
Large Size Kit 5.00

Prepaid and Guaranteed
We have a fine offer for Dealers

STEPHENSON'S, Inc.
Box 435
AMES, IOWA

REED MILLER

(Continued from page 33)

was not over, from the middle of 1918 until the time of his death he sang mostly for the smaller companies, especially Aeolian-Vocalion and Emerson, by whom he was employed fairly regularly. He also did a little singing for others, among them Gennett and Pathé.

The last Miller records I have been able to trace again bring the James Reed disguise into play. They are on the 35 cent Cameo brand. On S-308 "Reed" sings "The Palms" and "The Holy City." On 342 he sings a ballad, "River Shannon Moon," coupled with "When Will the Sun Shine for Me?" by Scott and Grey, who sound like Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw. Miller's friends say he never "went back" and his vocal powers were as great at the end of his career as at the beginning. That may be true, but as best I can judge through the execrable Cameo recording the tenor's tones had taken on an "old" sound and the renditions of the hymns seem tired and without spirit. However, there is no reason why Miller should have suffered any serious artistic decline at the age of 43.

The end came unexpectedly and dramatically for the sweet-voiced singer from South Carolina. Charles Harrison says Miller had taken the flu and his death came from a stroke suffered during a coughing spell. As already mentioned, it occurred in Christmas week of 1923. The March, 1924, issue of that famous recently discontinued, music magazine, The Etude, briefly mentioned his passing by saying:

SPOONS WANTED

WANTED: Sterling souvenir teaspoons of Wisconsin cities. Place of interest of town in bowl. Not just the name.—Edward A. Thuriot, 2030 12th St., Racine, Wisconsin. mh3614

WANTED: Souvenir Teaspoons, any description. Send them postpaid will make immediate offer.—G. S. Shampianler, Box 123, Fresno, Calif. my3403

MISC. SILVER FOR SALE

FLATWARE: For Active, Inactive and Obsolete Sterling patterns. Write us your needs. Prompt replies.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pennsylvania. my128041

UNUSUAL SILVER, modern and antique — Frederick T. Widmer, Jeweler, (est. 1844) 31 West Street, Boston, Mass. jly124001

SILVER WANTED

1847 ROGERS Vintage silverware — Melus Cushing, 14426 Emerald Ave., Harvey, Illinois. je4671

WANTED: Certain pieces to Meriden Silver Tea Service, number 2024. What have you? — Crawford, 121 North Maple, Somerset, Kentucky mh1651

"Reed Miller, one of our best tenors in concert and oratorio, passed away at his home in New York on the afternoon of December 29. He was a native of Anderson, S. C., and had filled a number of leading church positions in New York."

But though gone, Reed Miller had not been removed out of memory. In 1938 the MacMillan Company issued a one-volume Encyclopaedia of Music and Musicians, edited by Albert E. Wier. The editor apparently did not know Miller had died 15 years before, for there is no mention of the tenor's death in this brief sketch:

MILLER, REED, American tenor, born Anderson, S. C., Feb. 29, 1880; cornettist in the Spanish - American War and pupil of E. G. Powell. He made his concert debut in 1903 and sang with all the leading American orchestras and choral societies. His repertory included the standard oratorios and more than a hundred concert numbers.

Mrs. Miller also was mentioned, thus:

VAN DER VEER, NEVADA, contemporary American contralto, born at Springfield Center, N. Y., studied in Europe and was soloist with the New York Oratorio Society and the New York Symphony Orchestra.

I might also mention that most of Mrs. Miller's solo work for the phonograph consisted of singing Christian Science hymns.

If Reed Miller were still alive he would now be 78 years of age. He has been dead so long he now remains in memory only on the strength of his many fine records. Electric recording was unknown in his lifetime; radio was in its swaddling clothes when he died and television seemed a barely remote possibility. But a singer who is a fine artist in one generation could be equally good in another. Should Miller return to earth today, with the vocal equipment he had 50 years ago, there would be no doubt of his ability to do now what he did at the turn of the century — leave South Carolina with nothing in his pocket and carve a distinguished career for himself.

CORRECTION

Sorry that we erred in our heading of Mr. Walsh's article last month. It should have read, as you probably have noticed, JOHN J. KIMMEL, THE IRISH DUTCHMAN.

PLAYER PIANO SCRAPBOOK

YES. Roehl, long awaited, 112-page historical study of all makes, inc. coin-operated and basic diagrams, is finally on the press. Even those whose money was once returned should mail $3 for this limited edition, collector's item, postpaid.

CENTURY HOUSE PUBLISHERS

Watkins Glen,

New York

mhc

The Original Radio Girl

Vaughn De Leath

By JIM WALSH

I. The Rival "First Ladies"

A few years before World War II, a chubby, sweet-faced girl from Virginia was one of the most popular singers on radio. Kate Smith's frequent renditions of "God Bless America" touched off so much patriotic fervor that her admirers dubbed her "The First Lady of the Air."

This gave offense to the admirers of an equally chubby, sweet-faced young woman from Illinois — known to millions of radio fans and record buyers as Vaughn De Leath. They argued that if anyone were entitled to be known as "The First Lady of the Air," Vaughn De Leath, "The Original Radio Girl," deserved that distinction. They recalled that Vaughn's was the first woman's voice ever broadcast on radio. She was also the first woman to announce and manage a radio station. Her voice was the first ever broadcast on a beam of light. In 1935 it was announced she had sung more than 15,000 songs in 2,000 broadcasts. A few years earlier an Edison record supplement had said she had "one of the sweetest voices that ever crooned a Southland melody or whispered a song of wistful love. Into her simple songs she puts her whole charming personality, known and loved by millions of radio listeners and record buyers." She had written more than 300 songs as well as many magazine articles and had made uncountable records. She was an aviation enthusiast, an "inventor" (along rather frivolous lines) and reputed one of the best trap shooters in the East. Surely, Vaughn De Leath's admirers maintained, it was she who was the First Lady of Radio.

Those days and that debate now seem remote. Kate Smith is still active as an entertainer, but her one-time rival has been dead half a generation. However, a fragrance yet clings to the memory of the gifted, great-hearted Vaughn De Leath that makes it both a pleasure and a debt of gratitude to tell the story of her too-short life.

II Biographical Notes

Not a great deal of space is needed to relate the more important facts in the life of "the Original Radio Girl." The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary of Authors, Composers and Publishers described Vaughn De Leath as a "composer, author, pianist, singer, actress, radio and recording artist." She was born in Mount Pulaski, Illinois, September 26, 1896, and died in Buffalo, New York, May 28, 1943. After attending the high school in Pomona, California, she went to Mills

College in San Francisco for two years.

Miss De Leath began writing songs when she was eleven. Her first two compositions, "Glenwood Waltzes" and "In the Twilight," were published in 1912. She was a concert singer in her early teens and in January, 1920, became the first woman to give a broadcasting program, under the direction of Dr. Lee DeForest, in the now demolished New York World Tower building. Shortly afterward she was manager-director and chief entertainer of New York radio station WBT, housed in a piano factory. In 1939 she became one of the first artists to appear on television, then in an experimental stage.

The versatile Vaughn was in vaudeville several years. Her acting engagements included the role of the prima donna (her hefty physique inevitably suggested the vast proportions of the old time operatic singers!) in Lionel Barrymore's play, "Laugh, Clown, Laugh." Governor Alred of Texas presented her with a scroll for writing "Blue Bonnets" for the Texas Centennial Exposition. She was also an honorary member of the Oklahoma "Rangerettes." In 1921 she was employed by Irving Berlin's music publishing company and wrote the music of a song, "Drowsy Head," for which Berlin supplied the words. Her other songs include "Drive Safely," "Hi Yo Silver," "A Little Bit of Sunshine," "At Eventide," "Honey, I'se A-Waitin' Jes' fo' Yo," "Bye Low," "Ducklings on Parade,"

"I Wasn't Lying When I Said I Love You," "If It Hadn't Been For You," "Love Is a Song," "My Lover Comes A-Riding," "Rosemary for Remembrance," "The Gingerbread Brigade" and "The Madonna's Lullaby."

Although the foregoing didn't take long in the telling, it points, in bare outline, to a wide variety of achievement by the gifted lady in her fewer than 47 years.

III. A Magazine Interview

In September, 1930, The Delineator published an article, "Bagging Radio Lions," by a woman interviewer, Vera Connolly. That article is interesting to collectors of old-time records, because among those whom Miss Connolly interviewed were Jessica Dragonette, Harry Reser, Billy Jones and Ernest Hare and Vaughn De Leath. Her account of a visit to Miss De Leath provides some valuable information concerning that favorite pioneer recording artist.

Here are the more important parts of the interview with Miss De Leath:

My next fascinating adventure . . . was a luncheon party at the home of famous Vaughn De Leath, the pioneer radio singer, whose beautiful contralto voice is heard every Monday evening in the Firestone program. Miss De Leath has an enormous following. First, she is a distinguished artist. Second, she is warm, sincere and unspooled; qualtles her listeners feel. Third, she has helped make radio history.

She is the "original radio girl"—the first American woman ever to broadcast. She began ten years ago, just for fun, at the invitation of Dr. Lee de Forest, who was then experimenting with wireless in the World tower. She sang, there in his cluttered laboratory. Her audience consisted of lonely wireless operators at sea. But so fascinated was she by the experience, and the grateful letters that came pouring in from the high seas, that she continued to sing. Then Dr. de Forest's experiments resulted in his inventing the vacuum tube. Wireless became "radio," radio spread like wild-fire. And Vaughn De Leath became famous with it. Despite her success, Miss De Leath has never grown egotistical. She remembers her early struggles as a western girl in New York. She is happily married to Livingston Geer, a portrait painter of note, and their New York apartment is charming.

It was in this apartment that the luncheon party was held. Dr. Lee de Forest was the guest of honor. We were served in Miss De Leath's Italian dining-room, on a lovely old table spread with filet lace. Then we returned to the living-room fireside. Here Dr. de Forest settled down on a divan by the fireplace. Miss De Leath seated herself opposite him, and the two relived for us, humorously, the struggles of those early days of wireless experimentation. . . .

"Speaking of present day radio," I asked Dr. de Forest, "will television be a practical reality in the near future? In our homes?"

The inventor of radio gave a quick nod. "Oh, yes. In five years, I would say."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

"One last question, Miss De Leath," I pleaded, as we prepared to depart. "You were the forerunner of all the present day crooners. How did you happen to choose crooning when you began broadcasting?"

A sudden gust of understanding laughter swept over everyone in the room—except me. One guest turned to me, and explained:

"Even today a too loud, harsh tone can ruin a transmission. In those days it could shatter a tube! Tubes were very costly. So she crooned, to save the tubes. And crooning became the fad. Isn't that right, Vaughn?"

Vaughn De Leath laughed. "It's not far wrong," she replied. "I do not croon today, you notice."

I recall reading another interview with Vaughn De Leath in which she described herself as a "typical small town girl at heart, whose idea of a good time is a party with ice cream, cake and lemonade." She expressed a dislike for night clubs and "big parties."

Unfortunately, there is a sad sequel to the reference about the singer's being happily married. On September 21, 1934, the Bridgeport (Connecticut) Post published the following under the Stamford date line:

Leonore Von der Leath, known professionally on the radio and stage as Vaughn De Leath, today instituted suit for divorce from Leon Geer of Hasbrook Heights, N. J. . . . The suit will be returnable in Superior Court, Bridgeport, Oct. 2, and will be in the singer's married name.

Miss De Leath, known as the "Original Radio Girl," and heard over a national network, charges "intolerable cruelty between January and September, 1931." She will also ask a return of her maiden name. The singer and Geer were married May 3, 1924, the papers set forth.

For the past three years Miss De Leath has lived in Easton, her home being known as "The Hitching Post."

Perhaps you have noticed the Delineator interview gives Geer's first name as Livingston and the newspaper article as Leon. Perhaps he had both names. Ray Walker, the noted popular song writer, who worked with Miss De Leath at her radio station, says he understands that after her divorce from Geer, she was married to Irving Rose, now a movie producer in California. A New York Herald Tribune death notice, to be quoted later, gives the name as Irwin Rosenbloom, and describes him as a Pittsburgh musician. The second marriage took place in 1936.

IV. Start of Recording Career

The singer's professional name of Vaugh De Leath obviously was a modification of her family name, Vonderleath. By changing "Von" to "Vaughn," "der" to "De" and using "leath" as a separate syllable, she arrived at a name with a suggestion of French influence, as against the unmistakably Germanic sound of Vonderleath.

Leonore Vonderleath had already adopted Vaughn De Leath as her working name when she made her first record. The song was "I Love the Land of Old Black Joe," and it appeared in the October, 1920, Edison supplement as Blue Amberol 4091. The original recording was made on a Diamond Disc, then dubbed to the cylinder. For some reason—perhaps because of a technical defect in recording—Mr. Edison didn't approve it for sale on the disc. He frequently rejected for Diamond Discs selections that were considered good enough to go on the cylinders.

VAUGHN DE LEATH (1896-1943).

The first woman to sing on radio. Shown here in an early experimental television program with "Young Tarzan."

Anyone familiar with Vaughn De Leath's other recordings will be surprised and perhaps shocked on hearing the Blue Amberol. Instead of the chesty contralto tones that were so popular in later years . . . tones deliberately assumed, as we have seen, to avoid blasting out the tubes in pioneer radio stations—the voice is a high, pure soprano.

An even better example of this unexpected sound may be found in Columbia 1203D, on which the Singing Sophomores (the Revelers) harmonize "When Honey Sings an Old-Time Song." Miss De Leath impersonates "Honey" and sings snatches of several antique ballads in a sweet soprano. The record has "My Blue Heaven" on its other side, but, like Vaughn's own Edison record of that song, the Sophomore's version was almost overlooked in the public's mad rush to acquire Gene Austin's history-making Victor interpretation.

After that one trial, half a dozen years came and went before Vaughn De Leath made another Edison appearance. However, she did considerable singing in the early 1920's for other companies, and seems to have been exclusive to OkeH for two or

12" Hi-Fi 33⅓ RECORD of 26 WALTZ MELODIES from Rare Old MUSIC BOXES

CHARMING, NOSTALGIC GIFT

HEAR—Skater's Waltz, Merry Widow, Invitation to the Dance, Blue Danube, After the Ball, A Sunday Afternoon, Treasure Waltz, etc. faithfully recorded from 5 finest old MUSIC BOXES in the world-famous BORNAND collection—another treat for those who have already enjoyed our CHRISTMAS MUSIC BOX RECORD, and have requested more of this music.

$3.95 each

H. BORNAND

Est. 1825

139 4th Ave. Pelham, N. Y.

Free lists other recordings.
All music boxes repaired & restored.

myc

three years ending in 1925. Her first OkeH, "For Somebody Else" and "Vamping Rose," No. 4303, came out in 1921. Many of the titles of the De Leath solos in the 1923 OkeH catalog are amusing and short on dignity. They include "Can't Feel Jolly Blues," "I Ain't Gonna Be Nobody's Fool," "I'm a Dog-gone Struttin' Fool," "I've Got the Blues But I'm Just Too Mean to Cry" and "Maybe You Think You're Fooling Baby." On No. 4439 she sings "Dozing," coupled with an almost unknown solo version of "On a Little Side Street," by Ada Jones — certainly one of the last records Ada ever made. Two of Miss De Leath's 1922 OkeHs were duets with Billy Jones — "Sweet Lady" and "When Francis Dances With Me."

Her first Gennett record, 4095, "I'm Just Wild About Harry" (coupled with "Why Should I Cry Over You?" by Arthur Fields) came out in 1922. I have a Bell record by her, No. P182, of "Where the Bamboo Babies Grow" and "Lovin' Sam, the Sheik of Alabam'." Bell, I believe, was a disguise for Cameo. It is of about this same period.

By 1925, Vaughn De Leath had resumed free-lancing and was making records for most of the smaller companies under the name of Gloria Geer — Geer being, of course, her married name at that time. This seems to have been the only alternate name she used to a great extent, but I have a Harmony record, 240-H, on which she is called Angelina Marco. She sings "I'm Leaving You" and a lament for the death of Rudolph Valentino, "There's a New Star in Heaven Tonight."

V. Peak of Recording Career

The charming comedienne, who infused so much warmth and wholesome friendliness into her recordings, achieved her greatest popularity and did her best work after she began to sing for the four leading companies of the mid-1920's — Victor, Columbia, Brunswick and Edison.

Columbia came first. Early in 1925 she made several acoustically recorded numbers for Columbia, and one by the electric process. Recorded by the horn method were 271D, "Nobody Knows What a Red-Head Mama Can Do" and "I Ain't Got Nobody to Love" and 320D, "Somebody Like You" and "Polly of Hollywood." No. 361D, "Ukelele Lady" and "Banana Oil," was electric. A year or so later Columbia paired her with Irving Kaufman (calling himself Frank Harris) for a series of sentimental duets and comic sketches. She also made duets for Columbia with Franklyn Baur and Ed Smalle. When 361D was issued in the mid-month, 1925, supplement, the copy writer said: "Vaughn De Leath knows how to sing a comedy song so that all the humor registers. This record, with ukulele and violin accompaniment, is no exception."

The popular young lady's Edison reappearance was next. Her first Diamond Disc to be issued was 51874, "Hello, Bluebird," and "I'm Tellin' the Birds — Tellin' the Bees — How I Love You." It appeared with no comment, but a smiling photograph of Miss De Leath was included.

A few months later, the Edison supplement for July, 1927, contained this "plug" on the back cover:

If you want to hear a truly delightful record, overflowing with joy, listen to Vaughn De Leath sing "The Whisper Song" — No. 52018. Vaughn puts her whole personality into her recorded voice, and, believe us, it's a charming personality. Since her first release, "Hello, Bluebird," she has won thousands of loyal friends among Edison owners, and many of them have started collections of her records. Seven have now been released, including two this month. There are more to come, and they make a fine little library of love and happiness. Start yours now with "The Whisper Song."

"The Whisper Song" is every bit as charming as the Edison writer said. It is full of amusing effects and at one point Miss De Leath becomes so amused she laughs — apparently without premeditation. A former Edison official told me the company wanted to issue De Leath records for a considerable time before she was signed up. He said the record business had been declining so badly the Edison people didn't feel inclined to pay the high fee Miss De Leath's agent demanded, but her popularity on radio and other records became so great, "they decided she was worth it, after all."

The Edison records were her best and will be discussed in more detail a little later. Meanwhile, Vaughn made her Brunswick debut in the March, 1927, supplement, with "Crazy Words — Crazy Tune" and "Since I Found You."

That initial Brunswick by the soprano turned contralto was listed in the supplement without any sort of "send-off." Nor did her first Victor record, in the July, 1927, list, receive a fanfare. It was 20600, "Song of the Wanderer," coupled with "Rock Me To Sleep in an Old Rocking Chair," by the baritone, Elliott Shaw, now living in retirement at Sharon, Conn. The annotator merely said, "Vaughn De Leath has been making a name for herself over the radio."

In the September list the supplement writer paid her what sounds like a backhanded compliment. In describing No. 20664, on which she sang "Kentucky Babe" and "Mighty Lak' a Rose," he described her performance as "an almost perfect example of what the ordinary non-musical music lover means by 'good singing.'"

Victor continued to issue De Leath records at intervals and they sold well, but her list for the industry's top company was not so large as for some of the others. However, it contained some interesting titles, notably a tribute to Charles A. Lindbergh because of his flight to France, "Like an Angel You Flew Into Everyone's Heart." She and Ed Smalle did a duet version of "Together, We Two."

Certainly, the most unusual Victor record by Vaughn De Leath is 19740. Both sides are devoted to a "Ukulele Lesson." Vaughn gives the spoken instructions and sings, while May Singhi Breen plays the ukulele, with her husband, the late Peter De Rose, famous composer of "Deep Purple" and other popular song classics, at the piano.

Miss De Leath actually became a Victor Red Seal artist! When an album of Stephen Foster Melodies was recorded under Nat Shilkret's direction, she sang, or recited, "The Village Maiden" and took part in other numbers. She made no Victor records after 1930, when the "platter" business seemed ready to topple, and all her numbers had been discontinued by the time the drastically reduced 1933 catalog appeared. However, she afterwards sang some children's songs for Victor's lower priced Bluebird label. After Edison went out of the record business in the autumn of 1929, most of Vaughn's recording was done for the cheaper labels.

VI. More About Her Edisons

I have said that Vaughn De Leath's Edison Diamond Discs were the best records she made. That is true for several reasons. Edison recording was better than any other of its day; the records had a longer playing time and gave the artist more opportunity to develop the possibilities in a song; and most of the De Leath records had brilliant piano accompaniments that were as attractive as her singing. The lady had a gift for selecting excellent accompanists. They included Muriel Pollock, Stuart Ross and Bill Regis. Ross' work in "Everything's Made for Love" and Regis' in "Yep! Long About June!" is especially fine.

Miss De Leath provided some unusual fare for the dwindling coterie of Edison loyalists at that period when the company's life was running out. On No. 52129, "Christmas in Other Lands," she sang Christmas songs of ancient Judea, England,

Cover of an Edison supplement featuring Vaughn De Leath, "the radio girl."

France, Spain, Italy, Germany and the United States — all in the language of the country mentioned. On 52131 she rendered "The Night Before Christmas," to an incidental piano background by Hanna Van Vollenhoven, who had set Clement C. Moore's beloved old poem to music.

But from a historical standpoint, the most fascinating Diamond Disc by Vaughn De Leath is 52044, "It's a Million to One You're in Love." This was recorded on the day New York held its wild celebration honoring Lindbergh's return from France. Before singing she gives a spoken introduction in which she says she has just been up on the roof of the Edison building (at 79 Fifth Avenue) "watching the big Lindy parade" and is still excited over it. This intimate, warm-hearted touch was typical of Vaughn De Leath's vibrant personality.

Finally, Miss De Leath had the privilege of making the last Diamond Disc ever issued. The master number printed on the label shows it was not the last recorded. It had been held in the files for several months before being placed on the market, but it has the final catalog number assigned to any Edison disc—52651. On one side she sang "Oh Susanna" and on the other her own composition, "Honey, I'se a Longin' Jes fo' Yo'."

A few De Leath records also were issued on the Edison electric needle-cut discs that were on the market less than three months in 1929. They included 14002, "I Got a 'Code' in My 'Doze'" and "I've Got a Feeling I'm Falling"; 11037, the same titles as Diamond Disc 52651; and 14025, "Reaching for Someone and Not Finding Anyone There" and "Honey." She likewise sang a good many vocal refrains for both Diamond Disc and Edison needle-cut dance records, sometimes being identified only as "The Radio Girl." The other companies also used her as a dance tune "plugger." On Brunswick, for instance, she did some singing with Ben Bernie's Orchestra.

VII. A Letter from Vaughn De Leath

A few years before her death, but after her recording career had ended, I wrote to Miss De Leath and told her of the pleasure her records had given me. My letter was suggested by an article she had written for Radio Guide, saying many old-time radio artists whose popularity had declined were returning to favor. She promptly replied:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Your letter was an elixir! After being buffeted about by this network and that, and hearing various bits of unsound propaganda about myself, I am finding a certain contentment in a little commercial on WMCA for Battle Creek Foods. Strange are the exigencies of fate! While I may not be pleased at playing small time (feeling that I still have something to give the larger networks) I enjoy my tri-weekly programs and yet I am a bit curious as to what the future may hold.

May I vouch the suggestion that you write as one older than your actual years? It seems strange that a chap of your youth should be writing about old-timers. One might rather expect such a treatise from an older man writing his memoirs!

VAUGHN DE LEATH, Song Writer,
Recording Artist and Radio Star

—Photo courtesy the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers

Recording was one of the most fascinating experiences I have ever had. Alas!—that I should have to speak of it in the past tense. I haven't made a record in over two years.

So you want a few details about my recording career? There isn't an awful lot to tell, except that at one time or another I probably did a number for each of the companies. You were right, "The Land of Old Black Joe" was the first record I ever made. As you know, it was for Edison, and there was a lapse . . . before I ever made any more for them. You see, I made a test for Okeh records and they immediately gave me an exclusive contract which lasted for several years. It was after that that I made discs for Edison again, Victor, Columbia, etc.

Edison seemed to unload their recording department about the time that the industry itself collapsed, although I have heard that "The Old Man" carried on the recording division at a considerable loss for many years.

I am sorry that you have been unable to complete your collection of my Diamond Disc recordings. I have some in my attic in the country. I do not know how complete it is (my collection), but it just occurred to me that the records I do have might be safer in your hands than in mine as a "permanent exhibit," and if you will let me know which numbers you are lacking, I will look them over some time when I am out there. I know of no one else to whom I would entrust them, for as you know they are unobtainable. . .

Sincerely, VAUGHN DE LEATH.

Naturally, I replied to Miss De Leath, saying I would be delighted to have any of her Edison records she would care to send me and in due course half a dozen or more arrived. More than a year later she wrote to ask if I could give her the name and address of a Bridgeport man who, she had heard, had developed a new type of dahlia which he had named the Vaughn De Leath. I was able to tell her that the dahlia had been developed by an accomplished horticulturist, the father of my old friend, William H. Selt-sam, founder of the International Record Collectors Club. I believe she obtained cuttings from the elder Selt-sam.

Death of Vaughn De Leath

I am not certain whether I had any further correspondence with Vaughn De Leath, but I heard she had become associated with a radio station in Buffalo, N. Y. Then, while I was reading the New York Herald Tribune for Sunday, May 30, 1943, I was saddened to learn of her death. A brief Associated Press dispatch, dated May 28, from Buffalo, said: "Vaughn De Leath, singer and composer, sometimes known as The First Lady of Radio, died Friday after a long illness caused by uremic poisoning and a heart condition. She was 42 years old." (She was actually 46.)

The Herald-Tribune provided some supplementary information, from which I shall quote:

Miss De Leath was making phonograph records in 1920 when she was invited by Dr. Lee De Forest to sing over his wireless telephony station at 40th street and Broadway, New York. There was no piano or other musical instrument in the studio when she stepped to the microphone to sing "Swanee River" and became the first woman whose singing voice was heard on the air.

At Mills College in San Francisco, Miss De Leath had surprised her instructors with a three-range voice, from contralto to soprano, and they had permitted her to develop it. Singing into the imperfect microphones of the experimental period of radio, she was compelled to use soft, dulcet tones, lest a high note shatter a transmitter tube. Thus, Miss De Leath was credited with originating the "crooning" style of singing. . . Later, when crooning fell into disfavor with some radio fans, Miss De Leath denied that she was a crooner, and identified herself as a "qualtioniste." She described her voice as a "definite quality of vocal tone, full, but modulated and low pitched, particularly adapted to microphone singing."

After radio left the experimental stage, she sang over station WDJ at Roselle Park, N. J., and was one of the radio artists of the day who helped to open WJZ in Newark as well as WHN and WEA.

She was made director and chief announcer of the old Shipowners station WDT, on West 23rd street, and remained with the station until it was shut down at the time the Shipowners closed their radio jobbing department.

She was then signed by Belasco for the part of Signora Calvaro, an opera singer, a light comedy role in the play, "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," which ran for seven months in New York in 1923. She also appeared in Owen Davis' farce, "Easy Come, Easy Go," in 1925, but she soon returned to radio and appeared on many programs, several with commercial sponsors, over a dozen years or more.

She wrote more than 500 songs. . . (and) had broadcast over WBEN, Buffalo, from August, 1942, until shortly before her death. . .

Shortly before Vaughn De Leath died, I had begun my Walsh's Wax Works program over WDBJ in Roanoke, Va. On June 27 I gave a Vaughn De Leath Memorial Program, which was written up by Nick Kenny in his department in the New York Sunday Mirror.

About the same time, The Billboard carried the following news story from Bridgeport:

"According to the terms of a will filed in Probate Court here this week, Vaughn De Leath ("First Lady of Radio") named her sister, Alma Cunningham, of Los Angeles, as her sole beneficiary.

"She also provided for the establishment of a 'Radio House' at Mount Pulaski, Ill., as a museum for her effects and for information on early

(Continued on page 37)

HIGH GRADE BANKS AND TOYS

FOR COLLECTORS,
DECORATORS, MUSEUMS, ETC.

Largest Stock of Old
Banks & Toys in the U. S.
Always in the market to buy in any quantity.

F. L. BALL

45 Fresh Pond Lane
Cambridge 38, Mass. tfc

We are accepting orders for
REPAIR SERVICE
on

MECHANICAL
BANKS and TOYS
We Also Buy Old Banks

GEORGE W. BAUER

P. O. Box 145
Pottstown, Pa. tfo

OLD MECHANICAL BANKS FOR SALE

1. Miniature Bucking Ram and Hungry Frog. Action same as Hungry Frog. This bank is in very fine condition. Price $225.00
2. Stump Speaker. "Negro Drops Coin in Bag." Fine condition. Price $100.00
3. Speaking Dog. "Wags tail and jaw." Fine condition. Price $45.00
4. Trick Dog. "Jumps thru hoop." Fine condition. Price $45.00
5. Boy on trapeze. "Revolves on Bar—Coin goes." Very good condition. $45.00
6. Kicking Mule. "Deposit Coin—Mule kicks. Very fine condition. $50.00
7. Kicking Mule. Needs repair. 15.00
8. William Tell with Gun. "Shoots proverbial apple." Fine condition. 50.00
9. Monkey and Organ Grinder. "Monkey places coin. Very fine condition. Have two of these. Each 40.00
10. Owl Bank. "Turns Head." Extra fine condition. $37.50
11. Owl Bank. Same as above. Needs one eye and spring. $15.00
12. Trick Pony. "Nods head—coin in wagon." Tail on horse missing, otherwise in very fine condition. $25.00
13. Creedmoor Bank. "Shoots in tree." This is the common variety. Fine condition, $40.00
14. Creedmoor. Same as above but base has been repaired. $25.00
15. Tammany Bank. "Puts coin in pocket." Good condition. Needs arm spring connection, $18.00
16. Jolly Nigger Bank. "Bow Tie." Very good condition. $25.00
17. Jolly Nigger. Same as above, but bottom plate missing. $22.00
18. Eagle Bank. "Old feeds young." Left wing missing, otherwise very good. $12.50
19. Gem Bank (var.) no name. "Dog takes coin in house." Mint condition, $45.00

* Indicates bottom plate missing. All banks are guaranteed to be genuine old, with original paint. Prompt refund on all banks listed, if returned within 5 days after received.

DELMUTH'S ANTIQUE SHOP
958 Baxter Ave. Louisville 4, Ky.
Phone Ju. 4-8842 app

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

$100 and up paid for many kinds of mechanical banks.
List of prices I pay for 235 different banks only 25c.

E. L. ROMEY

Box 291

Bluffton, Indiana tfc

MECHANICAL ANTIQUES WANTED

PLEASE NOTE my mechanical bank display ad in this section, listing various wants.—F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump &
Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

OLD TOY TROLLEYS, trains wanted; also cast iron toys; banks; catalogs. —
Walter Popek, 15 Main, Garfield, N. J.
s6675

MECHANICAL BANKS & Iron Toys—
Jim Cushing, 16426 Emerald Ave., Harvey, Illinois. je4291

CAST IRON TOYS, still, and mechanical banks, catalogs and parts wanted.
High cash, fast action, write Carl Knecht, 184 Pennsylvania Ave., Brooklyn 7, N. Y.
ap3863

MECHANICAL BANKS—Leslie DeVoe,
4010 Washington Blvd., Indianapolis 5,
Indiana. ja12676

MECHANICAL BANKS and Razor
Blade banks. Describe and state price.
—Flamingo Gift Shop, 133 Sunny Isles
Blvd., Miami Beach 41, Fla. jly6276

WANTED: Old toy trains, cast iron boy's toys, trolley cars, toy soldiers, train catalogs, banks. Send lists.—Ben Smith, 265 Tompkins Ave., Brooklyn 16, N. Y.
ap3004

WANTED: Old cast iron toys, fire engines, old toy trains, trolley cars, train books, catalogs, magazines, old railroad calendars, Railroadiana. Send lists. — Ben Smith, 265 Tompkins Avenue, Brooklyn 16, N. Y. ap1042

MECHANICAL BANK BOOKLET

A new booklet useful to both dealer and collector. Complete listings and new grading system. In seven parts covering the complete field of American, foreign, semi-mechanical, patterns, recasts, fakes, and variations.

NOW AVAILABLE. PRICE $2.

F. H. GRIFFITH
Harris Pump and Supply Co.
Pittsburgh 3, Pa.

DISPOSING OF Collection of Mechanical Banks ADVISE YOUR NEEDS!

R. VAN HOOSEAR
151 Bayshore Blvd.
San Francisco 24, Calif. myp

MECHANICAL BANKS & TOY PISTOLS

Especially Want Mechanical Banks:

- TURTLE (Sticks head out)
- BOWERY BANK
- PRESTO (Mouse on roof)
- WIMBLEDON
- JONAH & WHALE (Jonah emerges from whale)
- HOWLING ALLEY BANK
- RED RIDING HOOD
- FOOTBALL (Colored man kicks ball)
- SCHLEY BOTTLING UP CERVERA
- PRESTO (Penny changes to quarter)
- JAPANESE BALL TOSSEY (Tin, wind up)
- SHOOT THAT HAT BANK
- FOOTBALL BANK (Man Kicks Coin In House)
- TOMMY BANK (Prono Soldier Shoots Gun)
- JOHN BULL BANK
- BULL & BEAR BANK
- COASTING BANK
- MUSICAL SAVING BANK (You pay—I play)
- PREACHER IN THE PULPIT
- TARGET
- WINNER SAVING
- LITTLE JOCKO MUSICAL (tin)
- RIVAL
- SMYTH X-RAY
- SNAKE & FROG
- BRITISH LION (Tin)
- TOAD IN DEN (Tin)
- PERFECTION REGISTERING BANK

PISTOLS:

- CAMERA
- DOLPHIN TORPEDO
- SHOOTER
- HUMPTY DUMPTY (3 heads)
- SAILING SHIP
- TWO DOGS ON BENCH
- OSCAR WILDE BOMB
- TAMMANY PISTOL (Tiger Head)

Also want Cast Iron horse drawn carriages, and mated bell ringing pull toys, old toy automobiles and old catalogs showing banks and toy pistols

F. H. GRIFFITH
HARRIS PUMP & SUPPLY CO.

Pittsburgh 3, Pennsylvania u.

FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Iron bank and toy parts.
Coin traps 25c, broken banks and toys wanted.—Kurtz Antiques, Sanatoga, Pa.
je6806

HAVE nice selection of still banks and few mechanicals. Please enclose stamp for list.—A. Hotze, 9326 McKenzie Rd., Affton 23, Mo. au6407

FAVORITE PIONEER

(Continued from Page 33)

radio history. Also stipulated that income from her membership in ASCAP be known as the 'Vaughn
De Leath Fund' and loans be made to members in distress without interest. No estimate of the current value of her property was announced."

The generous provisions of that will are characteristic of the glowing personality of Vaughn De Leath. I have no information as to whether the Radio House was established at Mount Pulaski or whether, if it was, it is still in operation. Perhaps some HOBBIES reader from Mount Pulaski can enlighten us. But no museum is needed to keep the memory of Vaughn De Leath ever green. Her records attest that she was too sweet a woman and too fine an artist ever to be forgotten.

As good almost kill a man as kill a good book; who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image, but he who destroys a good book kills reason itself.

—John Milton

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Billy Williams

"The Man in the Velvet Suit"

By JIM WALSH

I. Those Amazing Australians

Throughout the phonograph's history there have been periods when one comedian or ballad singer has dominated the popular record scene.

The 1890's were the era of Len Spencer. From 1900 to 1905 the outstanding performers probably were Harry Macdonough and the Haydn Quartet. From 1905 to 1910 Ada Jones created more interest than any other singer. The dominating figure from 1910 to 1920 unquestionably was Billy Murray, although he received worthy opposition from such friendly competitors as Collins and Harlan, Cal Stewart and the Peerless Quartet. Henry Burr's sentimental songs may have been the foremost attraction from 1920 to 1925. From 1925 to 1930, Gene Austin led in sentiment, Billy Jones and Ernest Hare in comedy and Vernon Dalhart—probably the largest seller of that period—in hill-billy numbers. The years from 1930 to 1940 were a time of small record sales, but they were also unmistakably the age of Bing Crosby. It is harder to find a dominating figure from 1940 to 1950, excluding the dance bands which accounted for a large percentage of the sales totals, but probably Frank Sinatra is the best choice. More recently there have been Frankie Laine, Johnnie Ray, Elvis Presley and Pat Boone.

Only American artists and recordings are referred to in the foregoing paragraph, but if we look across the Atlantic we find that, remarkable as the achievements of these Yankee performers were, in some respects they were surpassed by two Australian-born singers who came to England and made careers. No American has equaled Peter Dawson's achievement as a popular recording artist for more than 50 years, beginning in 1904. And none of our compatriots has ever towered over his country's recording scene so completely as did another Australian the music hall comedian, Billy Williams, from 1907 until his death in 1915. By comparison, the furor caused by Elvis Presley during the past year has been mild, even though the existence of a much larger number of record players has caused Presley's nasal "singing" and git-tar twanging to sell a larger number of records as just another proof of how mass taste has deteriorated.

But although Billy Williams blanketed his "area of operations" more completely than any other singer had done before or has done since, the man himself has become, with the lapse of 43 years since his passing, a remote and shadowy figure about whom it is hard to glean information. Perhaps one way of beginning this biographical tribute, before trying to tell who he was, is to tell what he was not.

Billy Williams has been a popular name for phonograph singers. I know of at least three who have used it, and it may not have been the legal name of any. However, the man about whom I am writing certainly was not the still living American Negro singer of popular songs. Neither was he a long-gone comedian who called himself Billy Williams, specialized in impersonating aged Negroes and assisted Len Spencer and Dan W. Quinn in making minstrel cylinders for the U.S. Record Company at Newark, New Jersey, in the early 1890's. Instead, as I have already said, he was a native of Australia, a star of the English music halls, and his real name appears to have been William Banks. At any rate, it wasn't Billy Williams.

II. A Brief Biographical Sketch

The nearest approach to a biographical sketch of Billy Williams I have been able to find is contained in a

Left to right

A January, 1912, advertisement of the English branch of the Columbia Phonograph Company, boasting of having Billy Williams records out earlier than competing firms.

An October, 1912, Columbia ad., showing Billy Williams, "The Man In The Velvet Suit," in a characteristic music hall pose.

In March, 1911, The "Twins" record company, which soon afterwards combined with Zon-O-Phone, advertised a new "Boom" in the records of Billy Williams, who had just returned from a tour of his native Australia.

Columbia-Rena Records

OUT FIRST—As Usual!!!

10 inch 16. 6d.

NOW, Mr. Dealer, here's another big opportunity of doing big business. We put all our factory facilities into the rapid production of these new Billy Williams Records, with the result, we fully believe, that we are roughly THREE WEEKS AHEAD of any other maker! So you have that time to get in all the business without fear of competition or wait. If the public wants Billy Williams NEWEST titles they must have Columbia-Rena. You know they will. HAVE BILLY WILLIAMS, so there's your opportunity.

THREE Sparkling New Records by BILLY WILLIAMS

Which is better to SELL the Records that are READY, or wait while others make them? You know best, but there's an old saying that a pound or even in the pocket is worth a hundred on the promise. So order all you can of Billy Williams on Columbia-Rena, and watch the man who is waiting for the other makes to come along, looking sick. We'll have "Dealer's Right."

ABSOLUTELY FIRST—AS USUAL!
And This Time Nearly THREE WEEKS AHEAD!

PLENTY OF ADVERTISING MATTER READY WRITE FOR A SUPPLY
COLUMBIA-RENA RECORDS LTD. GENERAL CITY ROAD LONDON E.C.

"THE BEST—AS USUAL"

YES THREE Columbia-Rena Records NEW ONES!!

HAVE your chance again! Once more COLUMBIA-RENA brings the band with a new batch of some new Billy Williams' records. THE BEST—AS USUAL, and READY TO GO! You know what that means with NEW records!

Billy Williams

Here they are, on COLUMBIA-RENA. Remember that, and while you are waiting, get the most dealer who will trade for your records because the public must have Columbia-Rena, and he won't get them! Conclude, hence that Billy is at his best on Columbia-Rena.

COLUMBIA-RENA RECORDS
BILLY WILLIAMS' LATEST

16011	16012	16013	16014	16015
16016	16017	16018	16019	16020
16021	16022	16023	16024	16025
16026	16027	16028	16029	16030

10 inch — Price 2s. 6d.

WIRE YOUR FACTOR
YOUR ORDER TO DAY

The Boom in Billy Williams

"The Man in the Velvet Suit"

ANTICIPATING in time the boom which was bound to follow the return of the famous Comedian from Australia, we at once set out to make all his new songs for "Twins"—the record the public will love.

The following titles will be ready early in March

16011 Sing me an Irish Song	16012 I'll love you my heart's glad
16013 Billy Williams	16014 I don't want a Girl for Nothing
16015 Here we are again	16016 Oh, my love, my love
16017 Let's have a song upon the Grammer	16018 When Father passed the parlour
16019 You found me	16020 I'm the man that saved Flanagan

You bet they are the best they're

On "Twins"

2/6

book, "Music Hall Parade," written by a British authority on old-time popular entertainment, M. Willson Disher. It is worth quoting to set the stage for my own research, although I think Mr. Disher exaggerates the degree to which Williams nowadays is "forgotten":

Is Billy Williams remembered? Although none of those who once shouted his name from gallery, pit, circle or "faux" will forget him, he has no share in the legendary fame that makes some of our idols loved even by those who never saw them. Yet he was among the very few who could whip an audience to enthusiastic frenzy. I remember a Bank Holiday performance when he was still being called for after he had sung song after song. He had to leave, but the shouting and the tumult would not die. No other turn could hope for a hearing in that din. The management put on a prolonged display of living statuary. Pose after pose of chalk-white figures invited our admiration. Instead we all went on shouting "Bil-lee Wilyums, Bil-lee Wilyums!" just to relieve our feelings, although we knew he had gone. Soon he had gone beyond all earthly recall. He died in the spring of 1915 at Shoreham.

Turn on one of his gramophone records and you will find that infectious gaiety is still a living thing when his chuckle comes out of the disc. He was one of the first to collect a gramophone following, for he had that knack of putting his whole soul into the recording which makes you feel the singer must be inside the box. "Why Can't We Have the Sea in London?" and "Let's All Go Mad" project into present and future that blithe irrepressible spirit of the past. There was nothing much to look at in his turn—merely a curly-headed, sturdily-built young man, rapidly swaggering up and down by the side of the footlights, with flapping jacket to show the bright lining of his dark blue-green velvet jacket. He was called "The Man in the Velvet Suit." That was all he employed, unless you count white spats, flowing tie, and a button-hole, by way of costume or make-up.

According to Charles Wilmott's biographical sketch of him in the "Album of Billy Williams' Popular Songs," he was born in Melbourne in 1877. "The love of sport which was in later years to prove so expensive to him found early development," it is stated here. He entered a racing stable at Caulfield, and then became a boundary rider at a squatter station. His next experience of the turf was as a golf instructor, "an epoch the brevity of which was owing not so much to ignorance or want of facility in the language essential to the game as to the fact that his brothers, Dick and Rowley Banks, were by way of becoming professional champions of the Antipodes."

He joined a small variety company in 1895, and traveled the back country, "playing in comedy, tragedy, vaudeville, and barns or anything else big enough to hold paying audiences which were principally composed of miners and roughriders, whose disapproval of anything mean or villainous in the entertainment invariably made good for the gunpowder trade." This led to a pantomime engagement and then to parts in musical comedy. In 1900 he started afresh in London as assistant-manager of the Marylebone Music Hall. There he made his first public appearance in England, and began to reveal his way of inspiring song writers and composers to happy examples of "the wit of the wash-tub." At least one of his songs, "John, Go And Put Your Trousers On," was written and composed by himself, and in several others he took a hand. His spirit of cheerful nonsense is in them all.

III. Billy Williams Begins Recording

Although Willson Disher had known and admired Billy Williams, somehow I don't feel that what he wrote brings us as close to "The Man in the Velvet Suit," as we should like. Perhaps I can make the approach a bit more warm and human by quoting the reminiscences of a couple of other men who were associated with the comedian in a business way—friends who liked him as a man and admired him as an artist. Meantime, we may trace the beginning of Williams' career as Great Britain's all-time most sensational performer for the phonograph.

There is no doubt that Billy Williams' first records were two-minute Edison Standard cylinders. Although his later fame was largely that as a singer of his own fresh and original compositions or of material written specially for him, in the beginning he recorded parodies of several currently popular songs.

12" Hi-Fi 33 1/3 RECORD of 26 WALTZ MELODIES from Rare Old MUSIC BOXES

HEAR—Skater's Waltz, Merry Widow, Invitation to the Dance, Blue Danube, After the Ball, A Sunday Afternoon, Treasure Waltz, etc. faithfully recorded from 6 finest old MUSIC BOXES in the world-famous BORNAND collection—another treat for those who have already enjoyed our CHRISTMAS MUSIC BOX RECORD, and have requested more.

$3.95 ea. Postpaid

H. BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

Est. 1823

139 4th Ave. (Pe. 8-1506) Pelham, N. Y.
Free lists other recordings.

MUSIC BOXES: Restored, Bought, Sold.
myo

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G. & T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tdx

18th SEASON DIXIE RECORD CLUB 1635 duPont Building Miami (32), Florida

OCCASIONAL RECORD AUCTIONS - Operatic & Concert VOCAL Selections by Great Singers of the Past and Present. Rareties of early vintage to recent cutouts. The bidder makes to price. List of realized prices sent to each bidder after the sale. Write for lists. tfo

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1825

EXPERT REPAIRING

FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

Free estimates, appraisals & lists.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. (Pe. 8-1506) Pelham, N. Y.
Member Musical Box Society—Int. tfo

"F. R. P."

Famous Records of The Past 2060 1st Ave., New York, N.Y. Jack L. Caidin

Re-issues and re-recordings or rare and unusual phonograph records. Operatic, Theatrical, Political, Instrumental. The finest in quality and true reproduction. 10" LP—$2.98. 12" LP—$3.98. Tax and postage prepaid. Also original records.

SEND FOR FREE BULLETINS! tfo

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.
Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island tfo

However, his first cylinder was of one of the songs with which his name is most intimately associated today and he is credited with writing himself. The record, No. 13539, was issued in January 1907, but somehow escaped being reviewed by the Talking Machine News. It was "John, John, Go and Put Your Trousers On" (some labels give it as "John, Go and Put Your Trousers On" or merely, "John, Put Your Trousers On") and the enthusiasm it generated caused some less admiring souls to fear its vogue would last forever. The title

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: A two horn antique phonograph. — Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. my3671

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR Sheet Music to 1850. Catalog 15c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. je126921

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list. — Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. je3253

ORGAN FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Electrified Reed organ, in family 75 years. Black walnut, beautifully carved, 70" high, 45" wide, 22" deep. Excellent condition.—Mrs. Lillian Samson, 2223 Goldenrod Street, Sarasota, Florida. my3215

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia, Points, the Columbia Record and the Voice of the Victor. — Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinorah: Sei vendicata—any number, size or coupling; outside or centre start.—Alda Favia-Artsay, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

WANTED: JOLSON MATERIAL. — Dick Bonesteel, 1807 42nd No., Seattle, Washington. o12046

WANTED: Cornet, trombone and Providence band records. Buy or swap. — Steve Gilman, Jamestown, R. I. my1021

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

GOLDEN-AGE and cut-out vocals, personality discs, band, orchestral and instrumental records, catalogs, books and photos. Write for lists to—Ross, Court & Co., 2098 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont. Canada. jly3084 became a catch phrase just as "Yes, We Have No Bananas" (a much better song) did half a generation later.

After reading about the "John" song for many years, I heard it for the first time a couple of years ago when Allen Debus sent me a British disc pressing of it, and I was sadly disappointed. The tune is banal, although incorporating a snatch of Harry Lauder's "Stop Your Tickling, Jock," and to me the words don't seem funny. I consider it well below the Billy Williams standard.

Regardless of my present-day opinion, the record sold and sold and the Edison Company preened itself on having obtained dirt-cheap, a star of first magnitude. Actually, Williams, who was about 28 years of age, with what now seems an almost incredible lack of business acumen, had signed a contract to make Edison cylinders exclusively for three years at two pounds, ten shillings per record — about $12.50 each, at the exchange rates prevailing then. In February, he was represented by 13548, a parody on "I Wouldn't Leave My Little Wooden Hut For You," and in March by 13561, "Where, Oh Where?"

The popularity of the wax cylinders caused Williams, whose vogue had been mainly confined to the provinces, to receive much more lucrative engagements in the London music halls, and Edison's American business manager rather self-righteously took the attitude he was justified in holding the comedian to his "starvation contract" because of the increased money Billy was making from personal appearances. Williams, however, considered he had been victimized and protested strenuously.

From this point the story of Williams' early recording days may be told best by a veteran Edison official, who prefers not to be mentioned by name but who was at that time employed in the American company's English plant. I wrote to him for whatever reminiscences he could give of Billy Williams, and he replied at generous and appreciated length on May 16, 1956:

IV. Edison Old-Timer's Recollections

Dear Jim: . . . In regard to Billy Williams . . . I think the first time I had the pleasure of meeting Billy was about 1907. At that time I was living in a part of London called Cricklewood, and on my way home one evening I stopped in a music hall which was only a few minutes out of London himself. . . . The manager, a man by the name of Edgar . . . informed me that he had a man working there, doing two turns a night, who he was quite certain would be a great addition to our catalog.

After Mr. Williams had finished his first turn, Mr. Edgar introduced us and we had quite a talk. I at once thought he would be certain to make a wonderful record, but I must confess I had no idea at the time that he would reach to the heights that he did as a phonograph singer. As you quite understand, at that time it was not too easy to find voices that were suited to the phonograph, but Billy Williams, as soon as he had made a trial record, convinced us all that he was a great artist. As he had not made any records up to this time, he was very pleased with the results, and was so excited about it that it took some time for us to get rid of him. I contracted him for three years. We had to be very careful in going that

20,000 OPERATIC RECORDS (1898-1945). G & T's, Zonofono, Fonotipias, Victor, Columbia, etc. For beginners and advanced collectors. Send want list to: John Scignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley 10, N. J. my6299

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold. —James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. je3084

Rare Vocals, Operatics, cutout collectors' items supplied. Wants located. Lists available, reasonably priced. — Personalized Record Service, 158 W. 58th St., N. Y. C. s85

25,000 POPULAR RECORDS (1900-1945). Vocals, bands, spoken, instrumentals, etc., at 50c each. Send want list to: John Scignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley 10, N. J. my6468

CARUSO COLLECTORS! Send for free list of over 125 original Caruso records now in stock. Also request lists of other Operatic, Show Business, Popular or Vaudeville artists you collect. Huge stock available. — Memory Shop, 188 Monroe, Grand Rapids, Michigan. my60401

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia 23, Penna. my3633

IF IT'S RECORDED I have it. 450,000 Collectors Items. Send wants. I will also buy store stocks or collections of Pre-1940 records (popular). — Jacob S. Schneider, 109 West 83rd St., New York City 24, New York. jly128632

THOUSANDS of out of print records—jazz, blues, personality, country, classical and opera. Send me your wants. Satisfaction guaranteed.—William C. Praster, Sr., 438 N. Broad St., Woodbury, N. J. my3084

FREE LISTS: Classical vocals, instrumentals, personalities, old timers and jazz. Please specify interests. — Jack Whistance, R.D. 2, Box 232, Kingston, N. Y. je3633

LP REISSUES of famous voices of the past. Caruso, Tamagno, Melba, Patti, Hempel, Calve, Schumann-Heink, Plancon, etc. Send for catalog to — Rococo Records, 2098 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont., Canada. jly3084

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, P. O. Box 155, Verona, N. J. d128801

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists. — Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. my3618

Cylinder records, various makes. 4 minute record list (2000 selections) 25c. 2 minute record list (2000 selections) 25c. List cost refunded with first purchase. — Dexters, 421 W. Arbor Vitae, Inglewood, Calif. my3447

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS.—South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Records bought as well as sold. — Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. jly3447

ENTIRE Private Collection for sale. 1902-03 Carusos, Calve, Plancons, Adams; and Nordicas, Pattis, Melbas and many more. Send for particulars. Will sacrifice as unit for $1500.00.—Howe, 219 Oxford Road, Franklin, Ohio. jly3215

PHONOGRAPHS

FREE. My estimate of value of your phonograph. Describe completely. Collector of one of the world's largest private collections antique phonographs.—Miller, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. my3614

ATTENTION! Edison Cylinder Phonograph owners: Why be satisfied with only about half of the reproduction that is obtainable from your Edison reproducers? I can increase the volume and reproduction on all types of Edison cylinder reproducers. Write for details.—Pollard's 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly3027

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia phonographs. Hundreds of cylinder and disc records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder or disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppernoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. jly3886

EDISON 2-4 minute home phonograph, with cygnet horn. 350 two minute and 100 four minute cylinders. All $120.—Howe, 219 Oxford Road, Franklin, Ohio. my1082

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

ELECTRONIC tone arm for Edison disc records. Edison disc records, catalogs, reproducers, bought, sold & exchanged. Special 100 Edison discs, $35 F.O.B.—Clyde E. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Penna. my3234

VIOLIN BOWS for Violano Virtuoso. Factory duplicate, guaranteed. Set of 4 $20.—Feese Hobby Shop, 1202 North Washington, Lexington, Nebr. Phone: 4-2154. my3053

WANTED: Seeburg, Wurlitzer and other mechanical instruments, grind organs with paper rolls, music boxes, phonographs, Duo-Art, Welte, Ampico rolls. Antique instruments.—Kugler, 7 South 6th St., Minneapolis 2, Minn. my3034

WANTED: Edison, Columbia cylinder phonographs and disc phonos, with large horns. Cylinder records, music boxes, roller organs.—Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. je3004

WANTED: A Vega Tubaphone 5-string banjo, in good condition: or what have you to offer? Describe fully.—N. Howard, 45 West 32nd Street, New York 1, N. Y. my1232

ANTIQUE BAND INSTRUMENTS, especially Civil War over-the-shoulder type.—Carl A. Landrum, 920 Spring St., Quincy, Illinois. my1441

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

WURLITZER BAND ORGAN. Brass trumpets, violin, flute and bass pipes, bass and snare drums. Takes a Callola roll still available. Double tracker. Price $500 F.O.B.—G. T. Merriken, 2141 Briggs Chaney Rd., Silver Springs, Md. jly3065

MUSIC ROLLS

RAGTIME & JAZZ rolls wanted, also some such rolls to trade. Write Trebor Tichener, P. O. Box 6, Sappington, Mo. jly3023

MUSIC BOXES

IF YOU HAVE a 17 note Harmonette reed music box would you please write me?—Ben Buchtel, 2003 Franklin Pl., N.W., Canton 9, Ohio. my1291

Mira music box discs, 18½" $3; 15½" $2.50; 12" $1.50; 9¼" $1; 6-13/16" 75c, plus postage and insurance.—Squires, 2328 Channing Way, Berkeley, Calif. my1882 far—one year was about the limit at that time—but I took the chance and I never regretted it, neither did the company because he became a best seller month after month.

At this time the sales department had to be consulted when making a deal with artists. . . Now it was not the price that we were going to pay Williams, but it was the length of time that we were contracting him for. Mr. (James H.) White, who was manager, also readily saw that he was a find and did not object in any way. Later Mr. John R. Schermerhorn became manager of sales and it was with this gentleman that Billy was forced to deal when he decided that the money we were paying him was far too little. He of course first came to see me, but I told him that when I signed him up that finished the contract with me. The cost was up to the company—as to whether or not they wanted to give him an increase in money.

Up to the time I discovered Williams he had done very little work in London itself. Most of it was in . . . the provinces, and of course he was . . . a big headliner in the provinces. When his records went on the market all the dealers in our products immediately put out big ads on the front of their buildings saying that Billy Williams was appearing in such-and-such a theater and that it was now possible to obtain records made by him, and to see the Edison dealers in town if they wished to buy these wonderful records he had made. This of course increased business in the various theaters in which he played perhaps three or four times a year. . .

This gave Williams a good opportunity to obtain an increase for his records. When he studied his contract he found that he was tied exclusively to the Edison people. When he returned to London he immediately visited us and told me all about how he was treated in the provinces and what success he had had, and that he thought he ought to get more money. I then brought him to see Mr. Schermerhorn. Billy stated his case but he was up against a hard-boiled man, and he flatly refused to make any change, saying that Williams should have known what he was doing when he signed, as he was not a boy any more and could read and write, etc., and that he knew that he was very intelligent. Billy became somewhat annoyed and he told Mr. Schermerhorn that when his contract was up he certainly would make the Edison Company pay or he would quit them altogether.

Feeling that Billy should have had a big increase, we left Mr. Schermerhorn and went back to the recording department, where we had quite a long talk about Billy's future. . . I finally told him that he had better read his contract once more. He wanted to know why and I said that I didn't think he understood . . . that he was only contracted to the Edison company to sing for cylinder records, and that was stated plainly. Of course he immediately saw what I meant—that he was free to sing for disc records—and that was all that he wanted. He left me at once and went to the Gramophone Company and that very afternoon he made disc lateral-cut records. These records I knew would be placed on the market as soon as they could possibly get them out, because of his popularity and because up to then only cylinder records of his voice could be obtained. I notified Mr. Schermerhorn that neither he nor the company had any hold on Williams, and there was no sense in trying to keep that away from him. . . That was one big step in the life of Williams.

When he had finished his contract with us he kept his promise, but he made it very hard for us as far as money was concerned. However, there were no hard feelings and we remained on the best of terms. He of course finished his contract at an increase. He continued to be a big seller and his sales increased as the years went on.

All I know, after leaving London in 1914, is that the theatrical business increased during the first few years and that Williams' reputation was still as

MISCELLANEOUS

PLAYER PIANO music rolls bought, sold and traded, all makes and types.—D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Maryland. je68001

CYLINDER RECORDS for sale. Send for large list. Edison, Columbia, Victor and other rare phonographs for sale. Parts, repairs, Reproducers and horns, all types of reproducers repaired. Player piano rolls and catalogues. Send 25 cents for lists.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. je88001

EARLY CYLINDER and disc phonographs, records, reproducers, catalogs, parts. Bought, sold, repaired.—Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. au6806

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mhi22361

PLAYER PIANOS. Old rolls, 50c each, lots of 10 or more. Victrola, Pathe, other's 78's records. Three ladder back chairs, $25.—Berlins, 660 Neil Ave., Columbus 8, Ohio. je3834

WANTED: Ampico and Duo-Art piano rolls. Coin-operated pianos and rolls. Grind organs. Sales or service manuals and any literature pertaining to player instruments, cylinder phonographs, or music boxes. Odd or unusual players. I want anything in the automatic music line. State price and condition.—Larry Givens, R. D. 1, Wexford, Pa. jly3008

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (bel-lows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap124661

CASH for your old piano rolls — $2 to $15 each! Airmail stamp brings list.—Pfc. Robert Montgomery, 7945th Liaison Group, APO 800, New York City. 094011

SMALL SEEBURG coin operated player piano. Automatic mandolin attachment. No keyboard. Plays 65 note Clark "A" rolls. Has been reconditioned and plays perfectly.—Albert Evans, 220 Berry, Stillwater, Okla. Phone 571. my1342

MELODEONS

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED INSTRUMENTS. Also buy and repair; reasonable.—C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. au126651

MELODEONS. Fully restored Melodeons, reasonable. Stop in or write for list.—Chet's Shop, 91 Union St., Manchester, Conn. my6084

MELODEON: 105 years old, refinished, re-leathered like new, unusual tone, keyboard.—Richard M. Geddes, R.F.D. 1, Winsted, Conn. my1441

MELODEON: 6 octave, rosewood. Restored to excellent playing condition. Case refinished. Price $200, crated F.O.B. Akron, Ohio.—W. E. Vale, 112 Hamilton Ave., Akron, Ohio. je3004

NICKELODEONS

NICKELODEON: By Seaburg, fully restored to excellent playing condition. Coin operated. Plays 8 orchestra instruments. Case refinished. Have 10 rolls of music.—W. E. Vale, 112 Hamilton Ave., Akron, Ohio. je3084 great as when I was there. On one occasion a member of the (Edison) Company visited London. When he returned I inquired about Billy Williams and was quite surprised to hear of his death, which I knew nothing about. . . . They left me with the impression that he had dropped dead on the stage. Since that time one of the recorders working for me visited America. . . . When I was talking one day about old times in London I inquired as to what had happened to Williams and he told me the same as I had heard before — that he dropped dead during a performance.

All that I can say about Billy Williams as a man is that he was one of the best I have ever met and that he could make a record the easiest of any of the artists who recorded in those days. His name was always at the top of the list when the monthly supplements were published. He was really what we call a "natural" when it came to recording. As far as I know, he was born in Australia, but he never talked to me about that country. He always felt that he became recognized when he started working in London and was helped to a great extent by his making Edison records.

V. More About the Edison Argument

A few years ago I was talking with the veteran Edison employee whose letter has just been quoted and he gave me an account of the dispute between Billy Williams and Schermerhorn that was more colorful and amusing than the version put on paper. It entertained me so much that I have decided, even at the risk of a bit of repetition, to set it down here, substantially as I recall it.

My friend said that after Williams had his unsuccessful argument with the business manager he advised Billy, as he mentions in the letter, to read his contract and see for himself that he was at liberty to make all the disc records he liked and was exclusive to Edison only for cylinders. The comedian's delight was almost beyond expression. He went to the phone, called up several of the amazingly large number of disc firms England had 50 years ago and told them that he was available for making records. The various recording managers almost fell over themselves at the thought of obtaining the day's most popular comedian. Billy then took my friend to a nearby tavern, ordered champagne and drank to his good health and happiness.

"You're all right, Yank," he said. "But as for that other son-of-a-sea lion (meaning the business manager), I'll make him sorry for the way he's treated me if it's the last thing I ever do."

Time went by and Williams, thanks to his hundreds of disc and cylinder records and his music hall engagements, was more popular than ever. He faithfully lived up to the terms of the contract which bound him to sing for Edison at a paltry $12.50 per record. As his old contract was about to expire, Schermerhorn approached him.

"Well, Billy," he said, "it's time to renew your contract. I suppose you'll come back at the same terms?"

This was the moment Williams had been waiting for. His voice took on the expression of a gigantic icicle and his voice might have been carved from ice cubes.

"Oh, yes?" he said. "Well, let me tell you this—I'll renew my Edison contract under certain conditions, and you can take it or leave it. If you don't want me on these terms plenty of others will."

"First of all, I'm not doing any more singing for chicken-feed. I'm the most popular comedian in this country and I know my value. Instead of two pounds and ten shillings, you'll pay me 100 pounds each time I sing for you. Furthermore—"

"Wait a minute, Billy!" the agitated Schermerhorn interposed. "You know we can't afford to pay you anything like that—!"

"You will or I don't sing for you," Williams replied inflexibly. "But that's not all. I said you'd pay me 100 pounds each time I sing for you, and that's exactly what I mean. I'll sing each song once. If anything goes wrong and I have to do it over, that'll be another hundred pounds. And—"

"But, Billy," protested Schermerhorn, "suppose you make a mistake—"

"I don't make mistakes," the glacial Billy imperturbably replied. "But if I do I'll sing the second take for the original fee. If the recorders make a mistake or the orchestra blows up it'll be, as I said another hundred pounds. Another thing, I'm not going to waste my valuable time rehearsing with the orchestra. I'll let you know what day I'm coming in to record and the orchestra will have a chance to practice my songs in advance. You'll have that orchestra here from early morning until night, and I'll come in just whenever I feel like it. I may be here at 7 a.m., and I may not show up until dark. But the orchestra is to be ready and waiting and all set to accompany me, whenever I'm in the mood to sing. Those are my terms!"

And it actually worked out that way. It cut Schermerhorn to the quick to accede but he felt Edison must have the new Billy Williams records to meet competition and they could be obtained only on the singer's terms. Williams was as good as his word. There was never any telling when he would appear for recording date, but morning, noon or night, he found a well rehearsed orchestra waiting. And he collected 100 pounds for each song he sang. Probably in all history there have been few more picturesque exemplifications of the old maxims, "Every dog has his day," and "Revenge is sweet."

VI. A Letter from Sir Louis Sterling

In my zeal to clear up some of the obscurity concerning Billy Williams' early days and his death, I wrote to the man who was for many years known as Britain's "Gramophone King," Sir Louis Sterling. Louis Sterling began life as a Jewish boy on the East Side of New York and received his first real business opportunity when he was sent to Europe to take charge of the old International Zon-o-phone Company's affairs. Afterwards, in England he and the late Russell Hunting operated the Russell Hunting Record Company, which made the Sterling cylinder and was sales agent for Odeon and Fonotopia discs. When the company eventually failed, Hunting became recording director for Pathé and Sterling founded the Rena Record Company which was afterwards consolidated with Columbia. The erstwhile New Yorker rose to the top with Columbia and became a millionaire many times over. On his fiftieth birthday he decided it was high time to give away some of the money he made and within the next year or so had distributed some $40,000,000 to charities and other worthy causes. Because of his great public services he was knighted and became Sir Louis Sterling.

This is what Sir Louis wrote me on February 1, 1956:

Dear Jim Walsh: I have yours of January 22nd. I am awfully sorry I cannot give you much information about the late Billy Williams. Of course I knew him very well during the years he was recording, but I left that industry over 16 years ago. I met him a dozen or so times but know nothing about his personal life, whether he was married or not, and I do not remember now about his "tragic death." He certainly was a very great recording artiste, and he became so prominent and important that no one company could make an exclusive deal with him and eventually six different companies signed a contract with him without any one of them having exclusivity. I am very interested to hear that you might be visiting this country . . . and I will be delighted to make your acquaintance. Yours sincerely, LOUIS STERLING.

Meanwhile, I had written to the editor of the London News Chronicle, the great Liberal newspaper founded by Charles Dickens, asking if its files contained a death notice of Williams. I was emboldened to write to the editor, who had since died, Mr. R. J. Cruikshank, because we were both members of the Dickens Fellowship and I had greatly enjoyed his book, "Charles Dickens and Early Victorian England." On October 3, 1955, his secretary, Miss Lillian Russell, wrote to me:

Dear Mr. Walsh: I am writing to acknowledge your letter to Mr. Cruikshank of September 27th. Mr. Cruikshank has read your letter and has asked me to thank you for it for your very pleasant remarks about his books on Charles Dickens. Also, he was much interested to hear of your activities in connection with the Dickens Fellowship in the States and sends greetings to a fellow Dickensian.

With regard to the information you require on the death of Billy Williams, I am hoping to be able to get some details for you. As it is necessary to look at our index and files for 1915—and this may take a little while—I thought I would send you word that the matter is in hand. I will let you know by air mail as soon as possible the result of the search. I trust we can find some material that will be of assistance to you.

On October 31, Miss Russell wrote:

. . . I regret to say we have been unable to trace any details regarding the death of Billy Williams. Our librarian has had a thorough search made of both our own files and those of The Times of London from January to May 1915, but unfortunately there is no mention of Billy Williams at all. I gather that in 1915 the reference library in this office was in its infancy, which probably accounts for the fact that we have no reference to him in our index. I am more than sorry that we have drawn a blank. I feel sure you will want to pursue the inquiry and if you feel that we can help in any way, please let me know.

Since I failed here, despite Miss Russell's sympathetic cooperation and am not sure what Williams' real name was, so as to have a search made among the death certificates filed in London, I still don't know exactly when the comedian was born and died. The Talking Machine News' references to his death are exasperatingly vague. This brief mention appears in the April, 1915 issue:

"Out for the Day Today" and "Who's Your Friend?" on the Scala April list (686) are full of interest, inasmuch as they were the last two records that the late Billy Williams made. The artiste has gone, but his voice still is left to cheer us, and this pair are two of his best.

A few pages farther on I find:

In connection with the lamented death of Billy Williams, it is interesting to know that the Coliseum Company claim that they have all the singer's records in their list. As they say, the artiste is dead, but his voice still lives. There can be no doubt that the tragic end of the versatile comedian will give a genuine if somewhat somber interest to the titles he has left behind him.

What I wonder, were the "tragic" circumstances of Williams' death at the age of 36 or 37. Did he drop dead on the stage or die from some other cause? It is certainly a reason for regret that the Talking Machine News wasn't more explicit. Incidentally, a few months later Coliseum, one of the innumerable companies for which the comedian sang, was boosting another performer, George Crowthorn, as "The New Billy Williams," but Crowthorn never succeeded in obtaining a fraction of the great original's popularity. I may also mention that some of Williams' records for the companies making cheap records were listed under the alias of Billy Melville.

VII. Williams' Recording Career

What sort of a comedian was Billy Williams? Would he be as amusing to American hearers as to British? Those are questions probably a great many readers by this time are asking.

In reply I can only say that tastes always have differed and always will. I have a good many Billy Williams records and enjoy most of them highly, but Al Debus, with whom I am usually in accord concerning the merits of comedians, says the only Williams record he likes is "My Old Arm Chair." He objects to Billy's innumerable chuckles and that is an objection which I share to a degree.

There may have been a tradition that British music hall comedians must chuckle all the way through their song to prove not only that they were naturally funny fellows but that they stayed good humored. An even more glaring example of the chuckle carried to excess may be found in Harry Lauder, whose records I like less than Williams.

Actually, no American record collector need be without specimens of Billy Williams' work. Edison imported most of his Blue Amberol recordings and they are probably the best reproductions of his voice and style, with his Pathé sapphire records coming next. Columbia also issued several of his recordings for its English branch. Williams had an infectiously breezy, swinging style of singing and his lyrics were usually clean, although he did occasionally get away with a bit of profanity. One example occurs in his Pathé record or "Blame It Onto Poor Old Father," when he uses a naughty word and then says in a chuckling whisper: "Did you hear me say 'd--n'?" (The other side of this record is of unusual interest, being a number sung, or rather drawled, by the still active cartoonist, R. L. (Rube) Goldberg. Apparently the only record Goldberg ever made, it has the title of "Father Was Right.")

As has already been said, Williams did not ordinarily sing current popular songs, but instead confined himself to special material written for him by some of the best English "tunesmiths." Sometimes he wrote the words or music himself. His songs usually deal with ordinary happenings, often featuring Father, the time-honored butt of many comic songs. Typical examples are two of his most famous numbers, "When Father Papered The Parlor," and

He added to the sum of human joy, and were every one to whom he did some loving service to bring a blossom to his grave, he would sleep tonight beneath a wilderness of flowers.

Robert G. Ingersoll

"Where Does Father Go When He Goes Out?" "Wait Till I'm As Old As Father" is the announcement by a potential juvenile delinquent that when he grows up he means to misconduct himself exactly as Father does.

Although Williams was never exclusive to any company, the various English firms waged a merry war, especially from 1910 to 1914, to convince the public their Billy Williams records were better than any competitors. Nor were the German firms—Peka, Pilot, Mellophone, Scala, Coliseum and many others which were making a determined effort to capture the English record market—behindhand with their claims. Most of them took full page advertising in the Talking Machine News to boost their Williams wares. Columbia's boast was that it was always "Out First With The New Billy Williams Records," and it probably paid the comedian a double fee to give Columbia its first "crack" at his new titles, so they could be issued about three weeks before the other companies had theirs on the market. Columbia put them on sale 18 days after the recording. In all, Williams made thousands of records for many more than the six firms which Sir Louis Sterling mentioned as having the command of his services. Although many of his numbers were topical they were seldom serious. However, in one, "Wake Up, John Bull!" he made a plea for a protective tariff in the British Empire. "Go Where The Crowd Goes" was a song he sang especially about the Coronation of King George V.

It is pleasant to know that the stocky young man with the infectious grin, the curly hair, and the rather commonplace features went back to Australia and gave the "home folks," who had been hearing him only through records, a sample of his wares. In a full page T. M. N. ad. for March, 1911, the Twins Company (later combined with Zonophone), announced "The Boom In Billy Williams, 'The Man in the Velvet Suit.'" "Anticipating in time," the ad. said, "the boom which was bound to follow the return of the famous Comedian from Australia, we at once got him to make all his new songs for Twins. . . . You bet, they are the best—they're on Twins. The Twin records of Billy Williams are the only ones to have." The ad. included an excellent photo of the smiling Billy.

And, so it went, with ever-increasing popularity, until Billy Williams died in the spring of 1915, possibly a victim of overwork. He had also been injured in a traffic accident in 1913. His records remained popular until the end of the acoustic recording era. In 1921 English Columbia listed a large number of its Williams recordings under the lower-priced Regal label and a special four-page folder was printed to advertise them. The Vocalion Company, which was not operating in England at the comedian's death, obtained from somewhere a great many masters of his old songs and issued them in its 1924, 1925 and 1926 Aco catalogs. The Gramophone made an amusing mistake in reviewing one, when it referred to "an almost uncannily realistic reproduction of the voice of the late Billy Jones. Obviously, by a slip of the pen the reviewer had confused Williams with the popular American comedian Billy Jones, whose death didn't occur until 1940.

Nor is Williams forgotten today. Especially in Great Britain and the overseas dominions, there are many avid collectors of Billy Williams recordings, who never tire of listening to his cheery lilt and hearty laugh. But no collector can hope to have a copy of every record Williams ever made. Although he was active before the recording horn for only about eight years, he made so many that to compile an unabridged list of his discs and cylinders would be virtually impossible.

VIII. Billy Williams Song Titles

No such effort will be made here. It must be remembered that when Williams added a new song to his repertoire he quite possibly sang it for a dozen or more companies, not all of whom always used exactly the same title. Probably most of the numbers were never published and were recorded from manuscripts. But I have assembled what I hope is virtually a complete list of the titles the comedian recorded, and because the names are frequently amusing, shall publish them here. In some instances where titles vary slightly from company to company I have copied only one:

All Coons Look Alike to Me—Parody; All the Ladies Fell in Love With Sandy; All the Houses Are Going Round and Round; All Silver from the Silvery Moon; Are We All Here?; As Good as Money in the Bank; Bamboo Bungalow—Parody; Billy Williams in His Catchiest Choruses (a series of four sides made for Jumbo); Blame It On to Poor Old Father; Bobbing About in the Briny; Boys and Girls, Come Out to Play; Call Me Early in the Morning; Chanticleer; Clog and Shawls—Parody; Cock-a-Doodle-Do; Cohen Keeps On Rowing; The Colliers; Come and Have a Look at What I've Got; Come Into the Garden, John.

Daylight Bill; Don't Go Out With Him Tonight; Girls of Gottenberg; Girls of Today; Girls Want Everything; Give My Love to Scotland, Maggie; Giving a Donkey a Strawberry; Goodbye Eliza Jane—Parody; Goodbye, Ragtime; Go Where the Crowd Goes; Has Anyone Seen My Poodle Dog? Here Comes Oxo; Here We Are Again; Hobnail Boots That My Father Wore; I Can't Keep Still Tonight; I Come Frae Scotland; I Didn't Know What to Do; I Don't Care; I Don't Know How You Do It; I Don't Want a Girl for Sunday; If I Could Only Find the Key; If the World Belonged to Me; I Keep on Toddling Along; I Like Little People; I'll Have to Ask My Mother if She'll Let Me; I'll Lend You My Best Girl; I'll Meet You One Dark Night; I'm the Man That Buried Flanagan; I must Go Home Tonight; I'm Wearing My Heart Away for You—Parody; I Never Heard Father Laugh So Much Before.

In the Land Where There Are No Girls; It's a Far Better Thing I Do; It Jolly Well Serves You Right; It's a Grand Old Song is "Home, Sweet Home"; It's a Wonder What Little Things Lead to; It's Mine When You've Done With It; It's a Treat to be Alive; I've Found Kelly; I've Got a Lover Up in Scotland; I wish It Was Sunday Night; I Wish I Were a Ladies Man; I Wish I Were You; I Wish I Were Back in Lancashire; I Wouldn't Leave My Little Wooden Hut for You—Parody; Jean from Aberdeen; Jean Loves All the Jockeys; John, John, Go and Put Your Trousers On; John James Brannigan; Kangaroo Hop; Land Where the Women Wear the Trousers; Let's All Go Mad; Let's Go Where the Crowds Go; Let's Have Another One Together; Let's Have a Song on the Graphophone; Let's Have a Song on the Homophone; Let's Have a Song on the Pathophone; Let's Have a Song Upon the Phonograph; Little Willie's Wild Woodbines; Little Wooden Hut—Parody.

Matrimonial Chimes; Molly McIntyre; Mr. Harris from Paris; Mr. John Mackenzie, O.; Mrs. B.; My Ballooning Girl; My Father Was Born in Killarney; My Girl From London Town; My Lass From Glasgow Town; My Old Arm Chair; My Sweet Rosetta; My Young Man is Not the Chocolate Soldier; Nobody Knows How to Kiss Me; Oh! Diablo; Oh; For Another Day at Margate; Oh! Mr. McPherson; Oh! That Ragtime Waltz; Oh! The Sailors of the King; Old Gray Coat; One Girl's As Good As Any Other Girl; On Her Pic-Pic-Colo; Only Bit of English We Have Got; On the Sunny Side; Our Little Kiddie Sings the Best Song of All; Out for the Day Today; Pantomime Songs; Picture Postcards; Poodle Dog; Poor Old England; Put a Bit On It, Do; Put Me Amongst the Girls.

Rosetta's Ragtime Wedding; Sally O'Malley; Save a Little One for Me; Settle Up—Settle Down; Sheila O'Neill; She Does Like a Little Bit of Scotch; She is My Best Girl Now; Since Father Joined the Territorials; She's Coming Home Tonight; Sing Me an Irish Song; Soap and Water; Spanish Dance; Spooning With My Girl; Squeeze Her, Ebenezer; St. Kilda (Australian song); Take Me Back to the U.S.A.; Take Me Where There Are No Eyes About; Tale of Paris; Taximeter Cab; Tell Them You're a Londoner; That's a Jolly Fine

Song; There Must be Something Nice About the Isle of Man; There's a Picture for a Postcard; There's Life in the Old Dog Yet; There's Something Nice About a Girl; They Can All Do As They Like With Me; Tickle Me, Timothy.

Under the Yum Yum Tree; Wait Till I'm As Old As Father; Wake Up, John Bull; Walking Home With Angeline—Parody; We All Live at No. 24; We All Sang Too-ral-lou-ral-addle; We All Came Into the World With Nothing—Parody; We Don't Want More Daylight; We're All Waiting for a Girl; What's the Matter with Father?; What Time Tomorrow Night?; When Father Papered the Parlor; When Father Tried to Kill the Cock-a-Doodle-Do; When Mother Backed the Winner of the Derby; When There Isn't a Girl About—Parody; Where, Oh Where, Where Shall We Go Tonight?

Where Are the Girls We Used to Know?; Who's Your Friend?; Why Can't We Have the Sea in London?; Why Don't Santa Claus Bring Me Something Nice?; Why Do You Think I Look So Gay?; Worst of It Is, I Like It; You're the One.

IX. In Conclusion

I was preparing to write "The End" when I found a few notes calling for brief attention. In spite of one of his titles, "Take Me Back to the U.S.A.," I don't think Billy Williams was ever in this country. Whether he would have been a hit in American vaudeville is a matter for speculation. Besides using the name of Billy Melville, he also appears to have made off-brand records under the disguise of "Billy Wilson" and "Billy Mersham."

The series of titles, "Let's Have a Song Upon the Phonograph," etc., was the same song, slightly adapted to change the requirements of whatever company he was recording for. It amounted to a "plug" for records he had previously made, with Billy singing a line or two from each.

In 1934 the Edison-Bell Company, then in its last days, issued a record called "A Night at the Old Tivoli Music Hall," which consisted of excerpts from records made years before by music hall stars. Christopher Stone, associate editor of The Gramophone, was the master of ceremonies, or "compere," as the record called it. The artists included Florrie Forde, Billy Williams, G. H. Chirgwin, Jay Laurier, Jack Pleasants, J. W. Rickaby, Arthur Lennard and R. G. Knowles. Perversely, the dubbing of the Billy Williams record is the worst of the lot and I have never been able to decide from the brief chorus what song "The Man in the Velvet Suit" was singing. Florrie Forde, caroling "Down at the Old Bull and Bush," did her part "live," but all the other artists are represented by old acoustic recordings.

For a laughable conclusion, I'll quote the Talking Machine News re-

Grass is the forgiveness of nature—her constant benediction. Fields trampled with battle, saturated with blood, torn with the cannon, grow green again with grass, and carnage is forgotten. Forests decay, harvests perish, flowers vanish, but grass is immortal.

Robert G. Ingersoll

view of three Billy Williams records in its March, 1911 issue, just after he had returned from Australia. The elderly, bearded Ogilvie Mitchell, who did most of the T. M. N. reviewing, was usually sycophantic in his approach and too lavish with his praise for what were often poor records, but he outdid himself in fulsomeness, reviewing these Williams productions. No doubt the songs were funny, but no records could be as amusing as Mitchell represents these to be. The old Bohemian gentleman tossed words about with such abandon that he must have been paid by the line. Anyway, here is what he said:

SPECIAL NOTICE.—We are pleased to receive from the Columbia-Rena Company six songs by that diverting comedian, Mr. Billy Williams. In the days of our youth, long, long ago, there used to be a favourite song entitled, "Oh, Willie, we have missed you!" Now, as Willie is only another form of Billy, we might appropriately apply the phrase to our humorous old friend. It is, indeed, true. "Oh, Billy, we have missed you!" Yes, missed you sadly, for there are few who can bring the tears to our eyes as you can—tears of laughter, of course, we mean. We, therefore, extend to you the hand of friendship and welcome you back to the recording world with all the enthusiasm that a weary old reviewer can command. That Billy is in his very finest form can be told the moment the first note of his familiar voice issues from the machine.

The record we light upon is, singularly enough, "Here We Are Again" (1564), and, as the chuckle and comical "aside" reach our ears, we begin to smile, the smile broadens into a grin, the grin turns into a laugh, the laugh to a roar, and presently we are doubling up "with laughter holding both her sides." The song comes to an end, and we turn over the disc. There we find, "When Father Papered the Parlor." "Oh dear! Oh dear! This is more excruciating than ever. Shall we ever be able to stop? The manner in which that parlour was papered is one of the funniest things we have listened to for ages. Luckily for our waistcoat buttons, the record runs out before they burst off.

When we change the disc, we see that the title before us is "I'm the Man That Buried Flanagan." (1565). We are glad that Flanagan is dead, simply because Billy Williams is the man who buried him. According to his undertaker, however, Flanagan must have been a bit of a scamp, but we shall say nothing more about that at present, leaving our readers to hear the story from Billy's own lips when they have secured the record. Then, if they don't laugh, they must have been brought up as mutes. "I've Found Kelly" is coupled with the foregoing. Having told us that he buried Flanagan, Billy proceeds to inform us how he found Kelly, that other gentleman who was connected with the Isle of Man. It is equally diverting with the Flanagan history, and we are still shrieking.

We now put on the third disc, though we are gradually growing weaker, and discover that the first song thereon is "I'll Lend You My Best Girl." (1566). Billy in this ditty takes care to inform us that it is not the sort of thing a young fellow should make a practice of. There is danger in lending your girl, but our merry comedian makes infinite fun of the business, so that the tears of laughter are now rolling down our cheeks. "Laugh and grow fat," says the adage. We are positively bursting. And now we come to the last, "Let's Have a Song on the Gramophone." It is a little more personal than the others, Billy here speaking of himself, but it is no less risible. We have laughed till we can laugh no more. Our muscles are limp, our sides are aching, our eyes are painful through shedding tears. We are just able to stop the machine and then we collapse. Good-night, Billy!

Harry Mayo and Harry Tally, singing in direct comparison with their Edison Disc of "At the Ball, That's All," in their Orpheum Circuit vaudeville act.

HARRY TALLY

(Not Forgetting Harry Mayo and the Empire City Quartet)

By JIM WALSH

(Dedicated to an ardent Harry Tally admirer . . . my fellow HOBBIES contributor, Allen G. Debus.)

* * *

1. Good Luck and Bad

Frequently I find myself pondering over the manner in which Providence, Fate, Chance, Luck or some other unseen force appears to conspire at one moment to help me write my HOBBIES articles and at the next seems determined to keep me from accomplishing my task. Sometimes it almost seems there are two opposing factions battling over whether a given subject shall find its way into Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists.

This biographical sketch is an example. For years I hoped to write about the sweet-voiced tenor, Harry Tally, but was unable to obtain enough information to justify the effort. Then, when a fair amount of knowledge was available, I withheld action because of a lack of suitable photographs.

That defect was remedied on Saturday, February 15th, this year, when the favorable forces momentarily took control. On a bitterly cold, snowy morning I received from Milford Fargo, of Rochester, New York, a large package containing issues of Diamond Points, the house organ of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for 1916 and 1917. My delight was almost beyond expression when I opened the box and came on the April, 1916, number, containing a splendid photograph of Tally and his singing partner, basso Harry Mayo, giving an Edison "tone test" as part of their Orpheum vaudeville act on the West Coast. They were singing in conjunction with their first Edison duet record, "At the Ball, That's All."

My glee was so great I was clutching the April issue and still looking at that photo as I went out the post office door. Then the forces opposed to my writing took charge. The wind was blowing hard and, to my horror, it snatched the Diamond Points from my hands, tore the pages apart and scattered them for a considerable distance over the snow. Despite the handicap of a swollen left foot, I ran frantically about through snowdrifts, grasping at the pages of which the wind had robbed me. If necessary, I was resigned to part with all the others but I had to recover that precious photo. Eventually, out of breath, I retrieved them all and was overjoyed to find Mayo and Tally still beaming from the yellowed page. As soon as possible I had a copy made for HOBBIES and although it isn't as sharp as I had expected I think it will still reproduce reasonably well. I scored that as a victory for my friends, the Favorable Forces.

The scene moves now to Sunday, February 23. By this time I was seething with desire to write about Tally and for several days had been collecting reference material. Early that afternoon I decided I had everything I needed. Then it occurred to me that I had still lacked a clipping in an old scrapbook giving some information about one of Tally's singing associates, Harry Cooper. In high good spirits, I went upstairs to get the scrapbook out of a box in which I thought it had been placed. A sheet of plate glass was on top of the box and I casually picked it up. A few moments later I found my left hand was bleeding profusely and the finger next to the little finger had been almost cut in two. That resulted in a hurried trip to Lewis-Gale hospital in Roanoke, where a surgeon discovered a tendon had been severed by a rough spot or a sharp edge on the glass. He took eight stitches in the finger and sternly warned me not to type or use that hand in any way until it had healed. Farewell to the bright visions I'd had of writing my Harry Tally article that Sunday afternoon! The Evil Forces had scored a smashing triumph.

Now it's Sunday afternoon, March 16. My finger has healed and I'm once more in the mood to write. Thus far I have got along fairly well except for being interrupted by several phone calls and by the loving insistence of my beautiful cat, Gray, who thinks I should hold him in my lap instead of wasting time pounding a stupid old typewriter. Thus far, however, Gray has been overruled. And now, with a prayer that nothing else will happen to interrupt my creative mood, I shall proceed to tell what I have found out about Harry Tally.

II. Some Varied Information

As long ago as the 1930's I was seeking information about Harry Tally. The late Frank Dorian, a veteran Columbia official from whose informative letters I have often quoted, told me he recalled Tally as a tenor with a peculiarly sweet voice, who "wasn't fat but was short and stocky." He didn't know what had become of the singer whose records were popular for almost a decade. The "tone test" photo reveals Mr. Dorian's description was very apt.

I also wrote to The Billboard, asking if its readers could give me any information about Tally and several other old-time recording artists. I said I believed Tally had been the original second tenor of the Empire City Quartet, an ensemble reputed to have played more vaudeville time than any other organization or individual. It was likewise known as the Empire City Four.

My inquiry brought a reply which indicated my belief that Tally was one of the original Empire City Quartet members was wrong. A New

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

SPECIAL NEW LEN SPENCER SERIES TO BEGIN IN JULY ISSUE OF HOBBIES

The following is quoted from a recent letter of Jim Walsh to the Editor of HOBBIES:

"I am planning to begin a new series that I consider in some respects the most interesting and valuable of any I have written for you. It will contain fresh information about the first famous recording artist, Len Spencer, based on the recollections of his daughter, Mrs. James A. Yarbray, of San Antonio, Texas. It will supplement the Spencer series that appeared in 1947 and correct some of the errors unavoidably contained in the earlier articles. Mrs. Yarbray has provided me with a great many old and rare photographs of her father and other members of his family, and I hope to have the series lavishly illustrated."

York woman, Lillian Thelma Alton, wrote to The Billboard:

Roy Alton was the original tenor of the Empire City Four. I have a photograph of him with the quartet, Roy Alton, Harry Mayo, Irwin (should be Irving—J. W.) Cooper and Harry Cooper. Irwin Cooper today refers with pride to Alton having been their tenor for he possessed a great and glorious robust voice.

He afterwards became principal tenor in Ziegfeld's Red Feather opera company and was co-starred with Grace Van Studdiford, star of the piece, and was chosen from 500 tenors for the role, owing to power and range of voice. He scored heavily with the famous "sword song." He was also tenor in the Ben Hur production of Klaw & Erlanger, was tenor of the Tivoli Opera House Company in San Francisco, and made phonograph records, among them arias from great operas. He died of typhoid fever on October 22, 1905, aged 23 years. Chicago papers carried headlines about his death. He was acclaimed an American tenor with an Italian voice and at the time of his death he held a contract for three years in Milan, Italy.

Until Lillian T. Alton's letter appeared I had never heard of Roy Alton, who must have been an unusually gifted young man to accomplish so much in only 23 years. Neither have I ever come across any other reference to him or seen his name in a record catalog. (I wonder if the letter writer was his mother, wife or sister!) Nevertheless, he seems to have been the original "lead" of the Empire City group. I now believe that Tally, who succeeded him, was appearing in McIntyre & Heath's famous blackface comedy production, "The Ham Tree," when Alton died. He recorded for Columbia two of the songs he sang in "The Ham Tree," "Sweethearts in Every Town" and "Goodbye, Sweet Old Manhattan Isle."

For years my Tally investigation stood still. Then Al Debus, who had urged me to write about the tenor, informed me the famous comedian, Jack Norworth (a friend of both Al and mine) had told him that after Tally retired from the stage he operated a cigar store in California. I wrote to Jack, who replied on April 12, 1956:

THE MUSICAL MUSEUM Deansboro, N. Y.

(14 miles south of Utica)

Where you are welcome to play the restored musical antiques.

(Music Box Restaurant on large free parking lot)

0850

SQUARE GRAND

HALLET & DAVIS

Unusually small, beautifully grained Rosewood
Circa 1845-50

Completely restored and refinished. Colored prints showing interior and exterior—One dollar —refunded on return of pictures.

DAVID E. MARTIN

11304 Francos St.

Omaha 14, Nebraska

Jep

Dear Jim: So glad to hear from you. I am afraid I cannot give you much help about Harry Tally. I was playing a split week at Ocean Park, California. I met Harry when he had his little cigar store on the boardwalk. Ocean Park was a tiny Coney Island. I am fuzzy on dates, but I think it must have been between 1920 and 1923. If he is dead and you want to write a death certificate the proper place would be Ocean Park. . . You will pardon me but will have to leave you now. The horse racing season starts today and the Mrs. and I do not want to miss the first race.

Jack's letter made me recall that a Chicago friend of mine, Frank Gloodt, who specialized in collecting Billy Murray records, had told me years before he had clipped a newspaper item saying Harry Tally, the famous vaudeville tenor, had died in California, but had mislaid it. Now that I knew where to apply for more information I went into action.

A letter to the reference department of the Los Angeles Examiner brought a reply that the Examiner didn't carry a death notice about Tally: "We have searched our files and can find no clips on the gentleman at all."

However, one to the Santa Monica Evening Outlook brought better luck and made me feel the Favorable Forces were toiling in my behalf. A courteous and obliging reporter, William Hale, wrote me the Outlook for August 17, 1939, published the following brief death notice:

Harry L. Talley, 73, for 25 years a headliner on the Orpheum circuit, died last night in his home at 3009 Washington Blvd., Ocean Park, after a short illness. He had resided in Ocean Park since his retirement from the stage in 1918. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary H. Talley.

Rosary will be recited at 8 p.m. tomorrow at the chapel of Kerkelie, Bernard & Peek, and requiem mass will be said in St. Clement's Catholic Church Saturday at 9 a.m. Burial will be in Holy Cross Cemetery.

Notice that the newspaper spelled the tenor's last name as Talley. That form was also adhered to in the death certificate, but his name never appeared on records or in record cat-

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHON CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPLA, G. & T., etc.)
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIAVTE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tz

18th SEASON DIXIE RECORD CLUB 1635 duPont Building Miami (32), Florida

OCCASIONAL RECORD AUCTIONS - Operatic & Concert VOCAL Selections by Great Singers of the Past and Present. Rareties of early vintage to recent cutouts. The bidder makes to price. List of realized prices sent to each bidder after the sale. Write for lists.

tz

alogs any way except as Tally, which is almost certainly the correct spelling.

Bill Hale not only copied the obituary, he also offered to call on Mrs. Tally, who was still living, and interview her for me. This offer I accepted eagerly. Meanwhile, I had applied to the Division of Vital Records of the Los Angeles County Health Department for a photostat of Tally's death certificate, and received it a few days later.

III. What the Death Certificate Said

The certificate revealed that Tally was born June 30, 1866, and was 73 years, one month and 16 days of age when he died. He was about a year older than the first famous recording artist, Len Spencer, but five years younger than another contemporary comedian, Bryon G. Harlan, and two years younger than Harlan's partner, Arthur Collins. However, he made his recording debut more than ten years after Spencer and a few years after Collins and Harlan.

I was surprised to learn Tally was a Southerner, born in Memphis, Tennessee. However, I should have suspected his Southern descent because his voice had a liquid softness and sweetness characteristic of the best type of "magnolia and honeysuckle" accent.

His father, Fletcher E. Tally (spelled Tally on the certificate) also was born in Memphis. The reference to his mother results in a slight puzzle. Her maiden name is given as Marcella Leake and her birthplace as Leake county, Virginia. There is no Leake county, Virginia and I believe Mississippi is the only State with a county of that name. However, there is a Lee county in the coal mining, mountainous section of Southwest Virginia, and I am sure that is the one which was meant. The person who took down the obituary information - presumably from Harry's widow, could easily have misunderstood "Lee county" to be "Leake county." This also brings up the possibility that Mrs. Fletcher Tally's maiden name was Marcella Lee instead of Leake. Harry Tally's middle initial was L., and Harry Lee is a common compound name for boys in the South.

The certificate says Tally was a professional vocalist and had been for 30 years before his retirement in 1918. He had lived in California for 21 years and in Ocean Park for 20. His physician, Dr. Leonard E. Croft, of 327 Wilshire Blvd., Santa Monica, reported he had treated Tally from 1936 to 1939, and that the tenor had been stricken with a cerebral hemorrhage on July 15, 1939. He also suffered from arteriosclerosis and vascular hypertension.

Unfortunately, Bill Hale's kindly plan to interview Mrs. Tally and get her to answer a long series of questions I sent him didn't fructify. She at first readily agreed to be interviewed, but on May 16th, 1956, Bill wrote:

I received your letter, questionnaire and note to Mrs. Tally this afternoon and promptly gave her a call.

The last time I talked with her she mentioned she had been troubled with rheumatic fever, and this afternoon she was too ill to speak long with me. She said her doctor had advised her against doing anything which would excite her and thought it best if I would wait until the first of next week to see her. . . . I will expect her to call me next week.

Mrs. Tally, who must have been aged if she were near her husband's age (he would have been 90 if still living at the time of my correspondence with Mr. Hale) never could bring herself to the point of granting an interview - a fact I regret, for I am sure she could have filled in many blanks in my information. Once more the forces in opposition to my writing had the upper hand. But now I had information enough, despite their trials of my patience, to compile the article you are now reading.

IV. The Empire City Quartet

I am sorry we don't know more about Harry Tally's earlier life . . . especially his boyhood and young manhood. It would be interesting to have the facts as to when and where he decided to go on the stage and what type of work he had done prior to beginning his long vaudeville association with the fabulously successful Empire City Quartet. In view of his appearing in "The Ham Tree," it's probably a shrewd guess that at one time he had sung in minstrel shows.

It is easier to find references to the quartet in books about the show business than to its individual members. For instance, in "Show Biz," by Abel Green and Joe Laurie, Jr., we are told that, shortly after the turn of the century, "My Sweet Little Eskimo," was sung by every male quartet, including the Empire City Four, who first introduced 'bum-bum-bum' counterpoint." We shall hear more later about the "bum-bum-bum" effects introduced by the Empire's stupendous basso, Harry Mayo.

When the late Joe Laurie, Jr., wrote

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. jai28862

GOLDEN-AGE and cut-out vocals, personality discs, band, orchestral and instrumental records, catalogs, books and photos. Write for lists to—Ross, Court & Co., 2098 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont. Canada. jly3084

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 325 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. jei20061

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. je3084

Rare Vocals, Operatics, cutout collectors' items supplied. Wants located. Lists available, reasonably priced.—Personalized Record Service, 158 W. 58th St., N. Y. C. s85

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia 23, Penna. au3633

IF IT'S RECORDED I have it. 450,000 Collectors Items. Send wants. I will also buy store stocks or collections of Pre-1940 records (popular).—Jacob S. Schneider, 109 West 83rd St., New York City 24, New York. jly128632

FREE LISTS: Classical vocals, instrumentals, personalities, old timers and jazz. Please specify interests.—Jack Whistance, R.D. 2, Box 232, Kingston, N. Y. je3633

LP REISSUES of famous voices of the past. Caruso, Tamagno, Melba, Patti, Hempel, Calve, Schumann-Heink, Plancon, etc. Send for catalog to—Rococo Records, 2098 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont., Canada. jly3084

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, P. O. Box 155, Verona, N. J. di28801

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists.—Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. au3618

THOUSANDS OF RECORDS always in stock. From opera to jazz. Send me your wants. Satisfaction a must.—William C. Praster, Sr. 433 N. Broad St., Woodbury, N. J. au3612

FRENCH PATHE 5", 3" and 2" cylinders. Send 10c for list.—Phillips, 2335 W. 3rd St., Los Angeles 57, Calif. je1481

RARE VOCAL RECORDS at auction. Items for the basic collection and the advanced collector. Also early disc and cylinder phonographs.—George Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. je1612

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold.—Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. jly3447

ENTIRE Private Collection for sale. 1902-03 Carusos, Calve, Plancons, Adams; and Nordicas, Pattis, Melbas and many more. Send for particulars. Will sacrifice as unit for $1500.00.—Howe, 219 Oxford Road, Franklin, Ohio. jly3215

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor.—Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinorah: Sei vendicata—any number, size or coupling; outside or centre start.—Aida Favia-Artsay, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

WANTED: JOLSON MATERIAL.—Dick Bonesteel, 1807 42nd No., Seattle, Washington. oi2046

PHONOGRAPHS

ATTENTION! Edison Cylinder Phonograph owners: Why be satisfied with only about half of the reproduction that is obtainable from your Edison reproducers? I can increase the volume and reproduction on all types of Edison cylinder reproducers. Write for details. — Pollard's 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly3027

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia phonographs. Hundreds of cylinder and disc records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppernoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. jly3886

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED: Edison, Columbia cylinder phonographs and disc phonos, with large horns. Cylinder records, music boxes, roller organs.—Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. je3004

WANTED TO BUY: Hexophone, in good condition. Describe, state price first letter.—J. W. Thornhill, Box 284, Abingdon, Va. je3403

WANTED: Diamond point or complete reproducer for Edison Diamond Disc long play phonograph. — C. Y. de Kay, 1821 90th Ave., Oakland 3, Calif. je1671

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

WURLITZER BAND ORGAN. Brass trumpets, violin, flute and bass pipes, bass and snare drums. Takes a Calliola roll still available. Double tracker. Price $500 F.O.B. — G. T. Merriken, 2141 Briggs Chaney Rd., Silver Springs, Md. jly3065

DUO-ART UPRIGHT. Excellent condition, $395. Nine rare early coin operated pianos, all need complete rebuilding. All nine, as is, F.O.B. Vestal, N. Y., for $1,000.—H. Roehl, Tel. Vestal 7-9062. Also read Century House ad for my new Player Piano Scrapbook. je1823

MUSIC ROLLS

RAGTIME & JAZZ rolls wanted, also some such rolls to trade. Write Trebor Tichener, P. O. Box 6, Sappington, Mo. jly3023

MUSIC BOOKS FOR SALE

BOOKS FOR SALE, all good condition, $5 each: Jenny Lind, Raymond. Roamin' in the Gloamin', Lauder. Paderewski, Landau. Quaker Singers Recollections, Bispham. Jean Dereske, Leiser. Music Goes Round, Gaisberg, Clara Butt, Ponder. My adventures in Golden Age, Finck. Sims Reeves, Pearce. My Life, Calve. 40 Years Opera Chicago, Moore. Schumann-Heink. Lawton. 30 Years Musical Life in London, Souvenirs, LeBlanc, Melba, Murphy. Memoirs of American Prima Donna, Kellogg. Record catalogs: H.M.V. 1920, $10. Pathe 1920, $10. English Columbia 1927, $5; 1928, $5; 1929, $5. English Parlophone, 29/30, $5. — George Moran, Lodi, Wis. je1867

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

EDISON DISC RECORD and electronic tone arm business, entire stock, material parts, 3 completed arms, 3500 different discs A-1 condition original jackets, 1500 duplicates. 13 Edison LP's; 1 LP gear; 1 LP reproducer electrified; only automatic changer in world playing 12 Edison discs electrically; 300 78's operatic, etc. Catalogs, supplements, etc. $500 F.O.B. shelves or sold in parts, must be sold by June 15th. — Clyde E. Haines, Box 1442, Reading, Pa. je1255

"Vaudeville," he had this to say about the quartet:

"Who will ever forget the great Empire City Quartet (Harry Cooper, his brother Irving, Harry Tally and Harry Mayo)? Harry (Cooper) did a Hobo comic, no make-up except for an oversized derby which he kept tipping through the act to imaginary women in the audience, saying, 'How's the Momme?' which became one of the first catch lines in vaude (years before 'Do you wanna buy a Duck?' and 'Vas you dare, Sharlie?') The boys had grand voices besides making 'em laugh."

My impression is that all the members of the quartet except Tally specialized in dialect and wore appropriately absurd costumes, with the tenor being conventionally clad as the "romantic lead." Harry Cooper did the Jewish impersonation; Harry Mayo was a tramp, and Irving Cooper, I believe, did blackface. Was there ever another quartet with three of its four members named Harry? Had it not been for Irving Cooper they might appropriately have called themselves the Hairy Four!

Now we come to the scrapbook clipping for which I was looking when I cut my hand . . . a New York Herald Tribune story telling of the death of Harry Cooper. Through an oversight I didn't date it, but judging from the other clipping on the same page it appeared in October, 1937:

Harry Cooper, former vaudeville actor who was a member of the Empire City Quartet, died Friday in the Hospital for Joint Disease of an infected foot. He was 59 years old. Funeral services will be held at 1 p.m. today at the Riverside Memorial Chapel, Amsterdam Avenue and 76th Street, under the auspices of the Jewish Theatrical Guild, of which Mr. Cooper was an incorporator and former secretary.

Mr. Cooper's tenor was heard in the Keith, Orpheum and William Morris circuits probably more often than any other voice in vaudeville, for the Empire City Quartet was credited with playing more "solid time" than any other vaudeville act on record. Mr. Cooper also put on a solo act in the role of a letter carrier.

For 24 years after 1900 audiences heard him and his brother, Irving Cooper, and Harry Tally and Harry Mayo sing such popular favorites as "My Little Eskimo" and "Cheer Up, Mary." Harry Cooper was also noted for his Irish airs and Irving Berlin songs. He acted in the original production of Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta" and also in "The Ham Tree."

Recently he was in the insurance business, with one venture into the restaurant field, and he organized and was master of ceremonies at countless benefits for fellow actors. On his 50th birthday in 1928 a dinner was held in his honor at the Commodore by the then Mayor James J. Walker; Herbert H. Lehman, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor at the time; Senator Royal S. Copeland, Dr. Shirley W. Wynne, Eddie Cantor and 2,000 other friends in political and theatrical life.

His father was a cantor. Surviving besides his brother, Irving, are his mother, Mrs. Fanny Cooper; his wife, Mrs. Dora Lazarus Cooper; three brothers, Joseph, Louis and Bert; two sisters, Mrs. Sadie Tauber and Mrs. Lena Scherman, and a daughter, Miss Helene Cooper. A son, Irwin Cooper, a radio sports announcer known as Wynn Cooper, died eleven months ago.

Irving Cooper lived to be the last surviving member of the Empire City Four but has since died. The Herald-Tribune article must be wrong in saying the quartet stayed together for 24 years after 1900. As we have seen, Tally retired in 1918, and there is reason to believe that he and Mayo had left the quartet and set

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR Sheet Music to 1850 Catalog 15c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. je126921

OLD POPULAR SONGS. 1 buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list. — Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. je3253

EARLY AMERICAN SHEET MUSIC WANTED, bound volumes or single to 1870. — M. Pastor, Ashland, Ohio. au3042

MISCELLANEOUS

PLAYER PIANO music rolls bought, sold and traded, all makes and types. — D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Maryland. je88001

CYLINDER RECORDS for sale. Send for large list. Edison, Columbia, Victor and other rare phonographs for sale. Parts, repairs, Reproducers and horns, all types of reproducers repaired. Player piano rolls and catalogues. Send 25 cents for lists. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. je38001

EARLY CYLINDER and disc phonographs, records, reproducers, catalogs, parts. Bought, sold, repaired. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. au6806

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mh122361

PLAYER PIANOS. Old rolls, 50c each, lots of 10 or more. Victrola, Pathe, other's 78's records. Three ladder back chairs, $25. — Berlins, 660 Nell Ave., Columbus 8, Ohio. je3234

WANTED: Ampico and Duo-Art piano rolls. Coin-operated pianos and rolls. Grind organs. Sales or service manuals and any literature pertaining to player instruments, cylinder phonographs, or music boxes. Odd or unusual players. I want anything in the automatic music line. State price and condition.—Larry Givens, R. D. 1, Wexford, Pa. jly3008

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (bel-lows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos. — Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ap124681

CASH for your old piano rolls — $2 to $15 each! Airmail stamp brings list. — Pfc. Robert Montgomery, 7945th Liaison Group, APO 800, New York City. 094011

MELODEONS

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED INSTRUMENTS. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. au126651

MELODEON: 6 octave, rosewood. Restored to excellent playing condition. Case refinished. Price $200, crated F.O.B. Akron, Ohio.—W. E. Vale, 112 Hamilton Ave., Akron, Ohio. je3004

NICKELODEONS

NICKELODEON: By Seaburg, fully restored to excellent playing condition. Coin operated. Plays 8 orchestra instruments. Case refinished. Have 10 rolls of music.—W. E. Vale, 112 Hamilton Ave., Akron, Ohio. je3084

HURDY-GURDY FOR SALE

PUSH CART hand cranked organ or Hurdy Gurdy in its original condition, plays ten songs. Write Sal Esposito, 157 Central Ave., West Haven, Conn. je1002 up as a duet team not later than 1915. I have no idea who took their places if the quartet continued after their going.

V. Harry Tally's Recording Career

We return now to our principal subject and shall consider Harry Tally's recording career. I am unable to say with certainty exactly when he began making records, but I believe the year was 1902 and the company for which he first sang was Columbia. Here the Frustrating Fates once more get in their dirty work, for Columbia, during the first five or six years the company made disc records, perversely refused to give artists' names in catalogs. They were identified simply as "Tenor," "Bari-tone," etc. The same stupid procedure was followed with cylinder lists. Neither was the performer's name carried on the record label. A spoken announcement at the beginning of the disc or cylinder was considered identification enough.

However, I have a Harry Tally record (unfortunately broken) which is numbered 203. It is a "coon song," "Love Me, Phoebe, Love Me." Tally himself gives the spoken announcement in that liquid accent which makes for sweetness rather than for clarity of enunciation. Columbia didn't begin to make disc records until 1902, so "Phoebe" must go back to that year. It is probably one of several hundred records which were made by the short-lived Climax company, for which Columbia served as sales agent. Afterwards they were issued under the Columbia label. Two other very old Columbias by Tally are 934, "I'm Going to Live Anyhow Till I Die" and 1084, "I'll Miss You in the Golden Summer Time."

The tenor probably was exclusive to Columbia for a one-year term. Luckily, there is printed evidence as to when his Victor association began. In the September, 1904, Victor supplement appeared the following brief note: "It is with pleasure that we introduce a new tenor to our great Victor family. Mr. Tally's records will speak for themselves." They were 2955, "All Aboard for Dreamland" (referring to the great amusement park, so popular in those days at Coney Island) and 2956, "I've Got a Feelin' for You," a Teddy Morse "coon classic."

For the next five years Tally was a regular contributor to the Victor catalog and his records gained a great deal of popularity. This is shown by some characteristic comments on the order blanks sent to dealers. The February, 1906, form said: "Three brand new successes by Mr. Tally with orchestra accompaniment will no doubt be near the top of the February list. They are the finest records this favorite tenor has made anywhere." The titles were "Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie" (one of the greatest hits Harry Von Tilzer ever wrote), "Silver Heels," an Indian song sensation, and "My Irish Molly-O." To repeat an oft-used phrase: "They don't write songs like those anymore!"

In April, 1906, the order list said: "No advice will be needed in regard to Tally records. The five records with orchestra accompaniment already listed have been tremendous sellers."

And in October, 1906, dealers were told: "Tally's sweet tenor continues to delight record buyers, and his popular ballads are large sellers. We introduce for October two frivolous 'spoon' numbers which are now the rage and a really beautiful Irish love ballad." The songs, all written by Harry Von Tilzer, were "A Little Lunch for Two," "Holding Hands" and "Sweet Rose of Athlone"—the latter a 12-inch disc. All these records, of course, were single-faced.

VI. Records for Other Companies

It may be well to pause here and discuss briefly the records Harry Tally made for companies other than Victor and Columbia.

The tenor's Edison cylinder career was mysteriously short. His first two-minute Standard cylinder, No. 8483, "My Little Coney Isle," was issued in September, 1903, a year before his Victor beginning. In October he was represented by 8518, "There's Music in the Air" (not the old song with the same name by George F. Root). No more Tally records were issued until October, 1904, when 8808, recorded on August 10, "Seminole," appeared. For some reason Tally's Edison cylinders didn't sell well and all were discontinued by February, 1906. More than ten years elapsed between his last cylinder and his first Diamond disc.

Tally also made a number of records for the Zon-o-phone company, which passed under Victor control in 1903. They included the following single-faced 9-inch: 5896, "The Gondolier"; 5960, "Goodbye, Little Girl, Goodbye"; 5898, "If I Were Only You"; 5895, "In the Village by the Sea"; 6014, "Seminole," and 5943, "We've Got to Move Today." All these were listed in the June, 1905, catalog and were made in '904-05. Later 10-inch Zon-o-phone recordings included 436, "Anxious"; 288, "Goodbye, Sweet Old Manhattan Isle"; 471, "I'm Trying to Find a Sweetheart"; 445, "My Dusky Rose"; 320, "On an Automobile Honeymoon" (another hit from "The Ham Tree"); 863, "Balloonin'," and 873, "Take Me Back to New York Town."

The tenor also recorded for some of the disc companies that were put out of business in 1907 for infringing Victor-controlled patents. I have two Leeds records by him—4212, "The Furniture Man," and 4272, "Mr. Wilson," both comics. Although Tally was primarily a ballad singer he occasionally essayed comedy, especially of the "coon" variety. One of this type is a Columbia I had previously overlooked, 1086, "No Use in Askin' 'Cause You Know the Reason Why." Also in my collection is a blue 10½-inch American record with an Indian trademark on which Tally announces and sings "My Maid of Hindoostan." Arthur Collins sings on the other side "By the Watermelon Vine." Tally seems to have made only one four minute U.S. Everlasting cylinder, "Goodbye, Betty Brown," No. 1128, a march song written by Theodore Morse whose title was obviously borrowed from the refrain of the Southern folk tune, "Old Joe Clark":

Fare you well, Old Joe Clark,
Goodbye, Betty Brown.
Fare you well, Old Joe Clark,
I'm going to leave this town.

VII. Victor Record List

Tally's popularity as a Victor artist seems to have tapered off around 1908. When double-faced records were introduced late that year some of his best sellers were taken over into the two-for-one form, but a great many less popular titles passed out of the catalog. And the double-faced records he made of new songs were comparatively few. It is worthy of mention that he did no duet work for Victor, and the only record of that early era by him which contains other voices, so far as I recall, is 12-inch Victor, 31548, on which, with the help of the Haydn Quartet, he sings the Charles K. Harris ballad, "Somewhere." I asked the Quartet's first tenor, the late John Bielting, what he recalled about Harry Tally but John couldn't remember ever meeting him.

For the sake of Tally admirers who would like a fairly comprehensive list of his recordings I shall give what I believe to be a virtually complete tabulation of his Victors. First, the single-faced:

2936, Mandy Won't You Let Me Be Your Beau?; 2987, Seminole; 2933, If I Were Only You; 2955, All Aboard for Dreamland; 2956, I've Got a Feelin' for You; 2976, Always in the Way; 2977, Kitty Dooley; 2978, My Little Creole Babe; 4060, I've Gwine to Live Anyhow Till I Die; 4148, Egypt;
4551, Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie; 4579, Silver Heels; 4580, My Irish Molly-O; 4592, On an Automobile Honeymoon; 4593, Why Don't You Try?; 4618, Fly Away, Birdie, to Heaven; 4619, Can't You See I'm Lonely?; 4647, My Dusky Rose; 4775, Alice, Where Art Thou Going?; 4820, A Little Lunch for Two; 4821, Holding Hands; 4859, When the Girl You Love Loves You; 5078, The Girl Who Was Meant for You; 5130, Roll Around; 5139, Deutschland; 5160, A Friend of Mine Told a Friend of Mine; 5213, Balloonin'; 5224, Broncho Buster; 5258, Bye, Bye, Dearie; 5260, Sacramento.

The following are 12-inch: 31548, Somewhere; 31549, Just One Word of Consolation; 31571, Sweet Rose of Athlone.

Victor's initial list of double-faced records, issued in October, 1908, contained the following by Tally:

16097, Wait Till the Sun Shines Nellie, combined with Where the Morning Glories Twine Around the Door, by Byron G. Harlan; 16098, On an Automobile Honeymoon/Why Don't You Try?; and 16099, Always in the Way/Fly Away, Birdie, to Heaven. A little later came 16156, Sacramento, doubled with The Stars, the Stripes and You (Harry Macdonough); 16259, In Those Good Old Country Days, whose coupling was Shine On, Harvest Moon, by Macdonough and "Miss Walton"—probably a disguise for Elise Stevenson; 6283, Let's Go Into a Picture Show, doubled with Won't You Even Say Hello? (Byron G. Harlan); and 16221, A Friend of Mine Told a Friend of Mine, with The Family Tree (Collins & Harlan).

Tally's last appearance in the Victor list was in the supplement for January, 1911. No. 16689 combined his version of My Bonnie Blue Bell, in which his voice seems almost at its sweetest, and Without You the World Don't Seem the Same, by the Peerless Quartet. The supplement said Tally had rejoined the Victor staff, but this was his final appearance.

Before leaving the subject of Tally's Victor records, I must mention one confusing problem. The September, 1904, supplement certainly gives the impression that Tally was making his first Victor appearance with "All Aboard for Dreamland," and "I've Got a Feelin' for You," yet the numerical list of his records shows three others with earlier numbers—"Mandy, Won't You Let Me Be Your Beau?" "Seminole," and "If I Were Only You." I am not sure whether these three were listed a month or so before the records first mentioned or whether, in spite of their lower numbers, they were held for later release.

VIII. Tally's Columbia Records

Because, for a reason already explained, it is impossible to identify all the Tally records in the Columbia single-faced and cylinder catalogs, no effort will be made to list them here. However, I am glad to give a complete list of his double-faced Columbia discs:

- A200, Won't You Fondle Me?/Rabbit Hash (Billy Golden);
- A308, My Irish Molly O/Any Rags? (Arthur Collins);
- A334, Why Don't You Try?/'Tis But a Dream (Henry Burr);
- A443, Goodbye, Sweet Old Manhattan Isle/That Welcome on the Mat Ain't Meant for Me (Collins-Harlan);
- A584, Love Me Just Because/Are You Sincere? (Lucy Isabelle Marsh and Henry Burr);
- A592, Honeymooning/Pat O'Brien's Automobile (Steve Porter);
- A642, I Wish I Had a Girl/Golden Land of My Dreams (Henry Burr and Columbia Quartet);
- A733, When I Dream in the Gloaming of You/My Little Eva (Frank Reade);
- A855, When the Bells Are Ringing, Mary/Call Me Up Some Rainy Afternoon (Ada Jones and Chorus);
- A927, Goodbye, Betty Brown/Scuse Me Today (Harlan);
- A966, Come, Josephine, in My Flying Machine/Washington Grays March (Prince's Band).

Tally's final Columbia disc, A966, came out early in 1911, about the same time he made his last Victor. Just why he quit making records isn't clear. Perhaps the quartet's coast-to-coast vaudeville tours interfered with his filling recording engagements.

IX. Mayo and Tally's Edison Duets

We now reach (if my midget kit-ten, Little Nipper—named for the Victor dog—will cease strolling over the typewriter keys and give me a fair chance to write) the five Edison records were the climax and virtually the conclusion of Harry Tally's recording career. These Diamond Discs were all made as duets with Harry Mayo and were by far the finest records on which Tally's name ever appeared. For the first time he had perfect recording and the four-minute playing time gave the duo ample opportunity to turn their performances into typical vaudeville acts.

As far as I can find out, Tally made no records after his last Victors and Columbias appeared in 1911 until early in 1915 when he and Mayo teamed up in the first of their Edison offerings, "At the Ball, That's All"—the one with which they are singing in the "tone test" photo. This was issued as Blue Amberol cylinder 2595 in May, 1915, and as a Diamond Disc shortly afterward. Maurice Burkhart sang "At the Yiddish Wedding Jubilee" on the other side. "At the Ball" seems to have been Mayo's first appearance on records, but he had made some Edison tests on January 4, 1911. It remains a mystery why such a famous ensemble as the Empire City Quartet never recorded.

In the next year and a half, during most of which the tenor and bass were touring in West Coast vaudeville, Tally and Mayo made four other Diamond Discs. 50269 combined a Harry Von Tilzer hit, "When My Ship Comes In," with a pretty but mournful ballad composed by Egbert Van Alstyne, "When I Was a Dreamer (And You Were My Dream)," sung by George Wilton Ballard. The two Harrys chose another Von Tilzer song for their next offering, No. 50297. It was the catchy "Somebody Knows" and was paired with "My Hula Maid," sung by two fine artists who are still living—Gladys Rice and Irving Kaufman. On 50315 they sang my favorite of all the Mayo-Tally duets, "Piney Ridge," coupled with "When Old Bill Bailey Plays the Ukulele," by Billy Murray and chorus. Finally, in December, 1916, came 50394, "I Was Never Nearer Heaven in My Life," with a number in contrasting vein, "There's a Little Bit of Bad in Every Good Little Girl," sung by Gladys Rice and chorus, occupying the other side. In view of the remarkably entertaining quality of their records, it's surprising that Tally and Mayo's Edison output was restricted to five. They had the qualities that should have made them one of the most popular duet teams in recorded music history. Perhaps Tally was already thinking of retiring, and this brought the association to an end.

"I Was Never Nearer Heaven in My Life" also was issued as Blue Amberol 3012, but the other three duets seem not to have been dubbed onto cylinders. The Edison Phonograph Monthly for November, 1916, contains a write-up of the pair, which appears to indicate the Empire City Quartet had already disbanded, or at least that Tally and Mayo had ceased to be among its members:

Few people have not heard of the Empire City Quartet, an organization that was a headline feature in high-class vaudeville for many years, and the majority of people who live in the larger cities have been entertained by the superb renditions of these singers. On their vaudeville programs, the members . . . presented solos and duets as well as quartet numbers, and it was this, perhaps, that brought renown to

Harry Mayo and Harry Tally. The latter was the tenor of the organization and his solos always brought repeated demands for encores. And the public also seemed to appreciate the bass renditions of Mayo . . . about as much as they did the tenor numbers of Tally, and both of the artists gradually acquired individual prominence.

They formed a team to render tenor and bass duets, which have proved highly popular features of their programs. It is some time since they started to sing together and today their names seem to have become linked inseparably, at least in the world of vaudeville music. They specialize in songs and ballads of the popular variety and their voices seem to be especially effective in their characteristic arrangements of this class of numbers. Their latest production for the Blue Amberol catalog is a rendition of "I Was Never Nearer Heaven in My Life." This is one of the most popular songs of the day, the melody being sweet and simple and the words having a strong sentimental appeal.

X. Excerpts from Mayo—Tally Duets

The Edison Company had gone out of the phonograph and record business before I heard my first Mayo and Tally Diamond Disc. I happened to acquire a copy of "Piney Ridge," and when I played it the first time I was captivated almost beyond expression. The song is a successor to "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," written by Ballard Macdonald and Harry Carroll, but having to my ears an even prettier melody. The thing that attracted me most in the beginning was the gorgeous blending of the tenor and bass voices. Never before having heard Mayo I was well-nigh overcome by the resonance, power and beauty of his ponderous tones. There was an indescribable freshness in his voice that I have heard equaled by only one other basso—Gus Reed, who also made Edison records. Although Harry Tally is the subject of this article and Mayo only a subordinate figure, I must admit that on hearing that record I thought—and I still think—that as a vocalist the tenor was dwarfed by his partner. Tally's tones were sweet and pretty, but the tall, black-haired Mayo was a vocal giant. I consider his voice one of the finest I have ever heard in any branch of music.

If the pair's singing enthralled me, I was even more delighted by the nonchalance with which, after the first chorus, they ceased to warble about the little girl waiting by a rustic bridge "somewhere in the Blue Ridge Mountains" (the section of Southwest Virginia in which Tally's mother was born) and went into a typical vaudeville patter act that had no relation to the theme of the song. Some people say the talking by Mayo and Tally spoils their records; to me it's a pearl of great price because of its utter incongruity. This same pattern is followed in three of the remaining four Mayo-Tally duets which I hastened to acquire. Only in "I Was Never Nearer Heaven in My Life" is the incongruous conversation omitted. Since it is a typical sobby song of longing to be a child again and to return to "mother's knee," apparently not even the measureless nonchalance of Tally and Mayo could solve the problem of introducing frivolous dialog without jarring the listeners' sensibilities.

However, they let nothing stand in their way in the other four records, and their sublimely irrelevant remarks have amused me so unfailingly over the years that I shall quote portions here. Incidentally, during the singing portion of "At the Ball, That's All," Mayo speaks to Tally in one place as Henry, another as Harry and in a third as Will. This gave me for a long time the idea the tenor's real name was William Henry Tally, instead of the Harry L. listed in the death certificate. I still wonder why Mayo called him Will. After the singing, there is this conversation:

Mayo—Who do you think I saw this Morning, Harry?

Tally—Why, I have no idea. Who was it Harry?

Mayo—Mr. Rockefeller. (He pronounced it Rock-feller.)

Tally—John D. Rockefeller? (Pronounced Rocky-feller.) I'd like to have seen him. He's an old friend of mine. In fact, I knew John D. Rockefeller when he had only one barrel of oil, and now he controls the entire output of oil for the United States. Then there's Andrew Carnegie. Do you know Andrew Carnegie, Harry?

Mayo—He spoke to me one. . . He told me to get out of the road!

Tally—Well, Andrew Carnegie's another old friend of mine. I knew Andrew Carnegie when he had only one piece of steel, and now he controls the entire output of steel for the United States. Then there's—Mayo—No! No!

Tally—What's the matter?

Mayo—You're going to tell me you knew Heinz when he had one pickle!

Tally, laughing—Well, maybe so.

They then resume singing.

I consider the talking in "When My Ship Comes In" the most amusing of all. After singing an intensely sentimental song, the music stops and the conversation goes like this:

Tally—Why do you always carry a little frog with you, Harry?

Mayo—Little frog tells me when to go home. . . Each time I take a drink I look at the frog. When I see two frogs I go home.

Tally—Well, that's time to go home. But what happened to your little frog the other night? You went home with an awful bun on!

Mayo—I sold it to the brewery for hops and the darn thing croaked! You know the minister lives next door to me?

Tally—Oh yes, I know the parson.

Mayo—Well, he told me if I'm ever in that condition again I'll turn into a rat. Ain't that terrible?

Tally—Why, my boy, it's worse than terrible. It's horrible!

Mayo—Keep your eye on me, will you, Harry?

Tally—I'll do that; I'll watch you closely.

Mayo—And if you see me beginning to grow small, with hair all over my back and ears, and a great long tail—

Tally—Now don't you worry. . . I'll keep my eye on you all right!

Mayo—Pay no attention to me!

Tally—Pay no attention to you?

Mayo—Keep your eye on the cat!

Then they return to their sentimental singing with some astonishing vocal pyrotechnics by Mayo at the end. Incidentally, in "At the Ball, That's All" he gives a gorgeous demonstration of the "bum-bum-bum" style of singing which Green and Laurie said was originated by the Empire City Quartet.

The comedy in "Somebody Knows" is rather weak, involving a pun about a man named John Rice riding horseback down a street in which a wedding was being performed. As the equestrian came to the church the wedding party emerged and the horse, wishing to enter into the spirit of the occasion, "stopped and threw Rice."

In "Piney Ridge," Mayo asks Tally a riddle "Why is a horse with a sore neck like next Tuesday?" Tally gives up and receives the answer, "Because it's next week (its neck's weak!)" Mayo then asks Tally how it would be possible to divide 999 eggs equally among a thousand soldiers. Tally suggests, "Scramble 'em!" but that isn't the right answer, which turns out to be, "Kill one of the soldiers." What this has to do with the little girl waiting at Piney Ridge for her homesick sweetheart is more than I have ever been able to figure out!

XI. In Conclusion

"I Was Never Nearer Heaven In My Life" may have been the last issued record by Tally, but the final solo on which his name appeared—the first he had made in more than five years—was listed on Pathé sapphire disc No. 20082. Tally sang a Charles K. Harris ballad, "Come Back, Let's Be Sweet Hearts Once More," backed by the Sterling Trio's harmonious rendition of "On Lake Champlain." This is a rare record, but through the kindness of Al Debus, I have been fortunate enough to obtain a copy. Mine and the one Al kept for himself have the same defect—the recording seems to begin too near the edge and the sapphire ball declines to track the first few grooves. But I have never heard Tally's voice sound sweeter or more musical than in this solo swan song.

On September 20, 1917, Tally recorded, without Mayo, an Edison Diamond Disc, "How Can I Forget You?" which was given the serial number 5795. It was scheduled for issue, but the extremely critical Mr. Edison rejected it. That was probably the last recording Tally ever did.

The following year the tenor retired from the stage work, but he and Mayo joined with Clarence Gaskill in writing a fairly successful patriotic song, "That's a Mother's Liberty Loan," which was sung on Columbia record 2471 by a musical comedy baritone, Greek Evans. After Tally went to live in California, Mayo continued in vaudeville for another decade. He also continued to write songs. In 1920 he, Gaskill and Alfred Dubin contrived a follow-up to "Oh, What a Pal Was Mary!" They called it "Who'll Take the Place of Mary?" and it was recorded by most of the phonograph companies. I have no biographical information about Mayo and do not know when he died.

And that, at last, is as much as I know of the story of Harry Tally, Harry Mayo and the Empire City Quartet. In view of the difficulties under which it has been written I shan't be surprised if the Frustrating Forces induce the manuscript to get lost in the mail before it can reach the editor's desk, but I hope it will survive the journey it is beginning on St. Patrick's Day and find its way into type. I have long admired Harry Tally and his singing associates and it is a pleasure to have chronicled, however sketchily, their genuine accomplishments.

DO YOU REMEMBER?

By EDNA ARMSTRONG

WHEN Baker Electrics, with cut flowers in vases in the corners, would pass you, with elegantly dressed ladies steering them with white-gloved hands on the control?

WHEN every lady wore a breast-pin?

WHEN the what-not shelf showed a bottle of beautifully shaded sands?

WHEN skating-sails carried the owners over the ice at 30 or more miles per hour?

AT the beginning of the season you went skating on "rubber" ice?

The many hours you spent playing croquet?

WHEN girls wore stiff collars with shirtwaists?

WHEN tandem bicycles were often seen on the streets?

WHEN all girls and women wore muffs?

WHEN your fingernails were worn down on one side from playing Jacks on cement sidewalks?

Peek-a Boo blouses? and camisoles?

The Song: Don't Bite the Hand That's Feeding You?

WHEN ladies wore blouses with such full sleeves that they hung like wings?

WHEN you played two kinds of hop-scotch—round and long?

WHEN you played Run, Sheep, Run,—Dare Base—and New Orleans?

WHEN you rode the Merry-go-round for 5c a ride or six for a quarter?

WHEN horses had their heads help up in a most unnatural position by the use of check reins?

Leonard Garfield Spencer

As His Daughter Ethel Lovingly Recalls Him

(And new light on Ada Jones)

By JIM WALSH

How time flies!

More than ten years ago I wrote a biography of the great pioneer recording comedian, Len Spencer, which appeared in HOBBIES from March through August, 1947. The series was one of the most comprehensive I had written, but it was based so largely on third and fourth-hand information that I doubted its being as accurate as I should like.

Time has proved my qualms were justified. Although the mistakes were not intentional, they were numerous and the article stands as perhaps the least trustworthy of any I have published. But now, through a series of fortunate chances, I can present a revised version of the life and personality of Leonard Garfield Spencer, based on the recollections of his charming daughter, Mrs. James A. Yarbray of San Antonio, Texas.

In writing the 1947 "profile" one of my worries was that I had never become acquainted by correspondence, or in person, with any of Len Spencer's surviving relatives. And, when I finally came to know Mrs. Yarbray, it was not through my learning where she lived and writing to her, but through her getting in touch with me.

This was followed by a face to face meeting in 1954 that I regard as one of the major events of my life.

This series will not be a revamping of the one that appeared more than a decade ago and will not try to cover the same ground where the statements already made are trustworthy. Instead, it will be largely a retelling of Mrs. Yarbray's reminiscences, expressed in writing and in person. First though, since I don't want to be making corrections of preceding errors throughout this article, I shall devote a section to remedying the former misstatements. And, by another lucky "break," I shall also be able to give some additional information about Len Spencer's long-time protegee and associate, the almost legendary Ada Jones. First, the Spencer alterations.

II Correcting Some Mistakes

In the March, 1947, installment, the name of Len Spencer's mother was printed as Sara Andrew Spencer. It should have been Sara Andrews Spencer. The Spencerian Business College was at Ninth and D Streets in Washington, D. C.

Len and Henry (Harry) Spencer were not twins. Len was several years the older. This error came from a statement by a former pupil of the business college that the boys were twins and when they dressed in each other's clothes were so much alike not even their mother could tell which was which.

In April, I quoted from Fred Gaisberg's book, "The Music Goes Round," a statement that Len Spencer's face was scarred from a razor cut. Mrs. Yarbray says this is not true—at least she never observed any scar. The statement that Len had trouble with failing eyesight is true but does not go far enough. In his late thirties he lost the sight of his right eye.

The May installment says that the name of Garry Allen, which Len sometimes used in his early recording days, was taken from the maiden name of his wife, Miss Elizabeth Allen. Spencer was married more than once, but not to anyone named Elizabeth Allen. Mrs. Yarbray doubts the story that he eloped with a business college student.

Harry Spencer made more records than the former series would indicate. They were mostly recitations. Companies for which he worked included Columbia, Edison, Berliner, Zon-o-phone and Leeds. It was he who made the Columbia record of "President McKinley's Address at the Pan-American Exposition," which has been generally credited to Len. I learned this from a 1907 catalog of Marconi semi-flexible records, pressed from Columbia masters, which specifically gives the artist's name as Harry Spencer. The first Victor record (No. 1070), made in 1901, of portions of McKinley's last address, was recited by the Haydn Quartet basso, William F. Hooley. This was soon remade by Len Spencer. Victor record No. 1071 also contained portions of McKinley's last address with snatches of his favorite hymns, sung by the American Quartet (not the same group which Billy Murray headed a decade later). Since Hooley sang bass in the American, no doubt he again did the McKinley impersonation. Frank C. Stanley made an Edison wax cylinder of the McKinley address. Not one was by the President himself, who was mortally wounded before he could have had a chance to record the speech.

After his early Columbia days, Len Spencer signed an exclusive contract with the U.S. Record Company of Newark, New Jersey, and recorded for it a number of years. He returned to Columbia on the death of the U.S. Company, which made "New Jersey" records. Columbia moved its headquarters to New York in 1897, but Len continued to live in Washington for several years. The details of his association with the U.S. Company are well brought out in an article which appeared in the November, 1896, issue of The Phonoscope. It probably was written by the editor, Russell Hunting himself, a brilliant recording comedian:

MR. LEONARD SPENCER, better known among his friends as "Len," was born in Washington, D. C., January 12, 1867. His father was the famous Henry C. Spencer, of the Spencerian Business College of Washington, and joint author of the Spencerian system of penmanship. From his 18th to his 21st year, Mr. Spencer taught in his father's college. He then accepted an offer of the Columbia Phonograph Company, of Washington, D. C., to sing to their phonographs. This is a fine art, and few make a success of it, but Mr. Spencer's remarkable powers gave a big impetus to the business of the company. First one Company, then another, outdid each other for his services. Finally he was secured, at a fat salary, by the U. S. Phonograph Company, with whom he has now been for more than six years.

Mr. Spencer has an original way of singing the best Negro songs that makes his records of splendid merit in that line. His sympathetic, well-cultivated voice also enables him to render familiar ballads with great sentiment and feeling. The gifts of comedian and vocalist he combines in an unusual degree. He is the originator of the darky shout in phonograph work. His efforts are always original and his resources seemingly without limit. He has a repertoire of fully 600 songs, of which more than 300 are being catalogued at the present time, and the total records he has made exceeds 62,000.

Some of his great hits are: "Nigger and the Bee," "Little Liza Loves You," "Little Alabama Coon," etc. "The New Bully" he has sung ten times a week for six months with great success, May Irwin having complimented him especially on his rendering of this song. Mr. Spencer is one of the few successful imitators of Chevalier's coster songs, where he seems not only to have caught the spirit of the original singer, but also to have entirely donned the character of the East End Cockney.

In the descriptive selections played by Issler's Orchestra, Mr. Spencer manipulates the castagnettes, clogs, tambourines, etc., making also the necessary announcements and the remarks that cause so much laughter by those who have listened to these popular

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

A copy of a 90-year-old photo, taken December 7, 1867, showing the future great recording artist, Len Spencer, when he was not quite 11 months old.

selections. Gifted with a powerful voice he utilizes it to great advantage in announcing for band and other records where a number of machines are used, necessitating great vocal power to fill the horns of the several machines which are running at the same time.

He has lately formed a co-partnership with the popular artist, Mr. John P. Hogan, for the production of a sketch called "Our Sunny Southern Home," a true character delineation of the Southern Negro, with all his wit, humor and pathos. This sketch has been produced at a number of the leading theatres in and around New York, meeting with the approval of critical audiences.

Mr. Spencer is a universal favorite as is shown by the many songs that have been dedicated to him by such popular composers as Monroe H. Rosenfeld, Addison Kent, Will Carlton and others.

Perhaps it may be well to explain that the Chevalier mentioned in the foregoing quotation was an English music hall comedian, Albert Chevalier—not the still active French singer, Maurice Chevalier. One of the songs dedicated to Spencer was a sequel to "The New Bully," called "De Bully's Weddin' Night." It was written by Will C. Carleton, the once famous author of "Over the Hills to the Poorhouse," and John W. Cavanaugh, who was credited with the music of the original "Bully" song. In later years it has been corrupted into a hill-billy tune, "Bully of the Town."

A year and a half later, in July, 1898, after Spencer had returned to his original Columbia allegiance, the Phonoscope said:

Len Spencer is acknowledged to be the most versatile artist in the record making business. He is a Washingtonian and a member of the famous family that brought Spencerian penmanship into the world. Early in life he began to shine in private theatricals and minstrel entertainments. About ten years ago he began record-making for the Columbia Phonograph Company, and he has won a place at the head of the profession. Gifted with a splendid voice and a talent for interpreting the comic as well as the sentimental, he sings effectively comic songs, Negro songs or ballads of a sentimental sort.

The "record of pure gold," mentioned in the May, 1947, installment was presented to Thomas A. Edison by National Phonograph Company jobbers during a convention in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, July 17-20, 1906. Len Spencer read the message on the cylinder, which is as follows:

Mr. Edison: This record of pure gold, which addresses these words to you, is a gift from the jobbers engaged in the distribution of the Edison phonograph and records. They have come from the East, the West, the North and the South of this fair land of ours. They are your loyal and admiring friends—your ambassadors of commerce, whose mission it is to distribute your products to the far quarters of the globe. By the touch of your colossal inventive genius you have created industries giving employment to countless thousands the world over. The wheels of commerce occupied in the production of your invention sing a never-ending song of praise to your magnificent achievements.

To the seven existing wonders of the world you added the phonograph, which is the eighth wonder of the world. It speaks every language uttered by human tongue, and in the field of language-study it is the greatest educator the world has ever known. With song and story it will continue till the end of time to entertain the multitudes of the earth, who place the name of Thomas A. Edison at the head of the column of the world's greatest captains of industry.

The record ended with an orchestra playing "Auld Lang Syne." Each jobber was given an ordinary wax copy of the "gold record," and several years ago I was fortunate enough to obtain one, which I still have.

In spite of its label of an earlier era, the record made for Victor dealers, described in the May issue, came out in 1905—not 1903.

Turning to the June, 1947, HOBBIES, Spencer's association with Ada Jones began in 1904, not 1905.

The speculation in the July issue that Myrtle Spencer was Harry's daughter was incorrect. He had no children. She was Len Spencer's child. One of the most glaring errors I committed was in giving the names of Len's children as Michael, Ethel and Clare. This was taken from a New York newspaper obituary notice in which the names were wrongly spelled. Spencer was not survived by any sons. His three surviving children were Myrtle, Ethel and Clara. The Ethel Harboro mentioned as taking part in one record was not Ethel Spencer.

In the August, 1947 issue, there is a reference to Len Spencer's last record, the Edison Diamond Disc of "Uncle Fritz and the Children's Orchestra," introducing the "Christmas Symphony" composed by F. X. Chwatal. Mrs. Yarbray recalls going to the Edison studios with her father and playing a toy instrument—probably a triangle—as a member of the "children's orchestra," which helped him make the record.

Spencer's death occurred in his office, not at his home. He was 47 years of age, not 46, and the record played at his funeral was not—Mrs. Yarbray says—an Edison cylinder but a specially made over-sized Columbia disc. She still has the record. When the comedian died he was not signing a letter, but was talking with a woman performer who had come into his Lyceum. Mrs. Yarbray, then a girl of 16, was standing beside him when the fatal attack occurred. She says, The Lord's Prayer record has a symbol in script along the edge: Sp 18-19367-2" and the 23rd Psalm, "Sp 18-19366-2." Undoubtedly, "Sp" stands for "Special."

Len Spencer, about the time his recording career began in the late 1880's.

III New Discoveries About Ada Jones

That seems to take care of the corrections. Now, before relating how I came to be acquainted with Mrs. Yarbray and privileged to put into type her recollections of her distinguished father, I should like to digress briefly to relate some newly discovered facts concerning that most remarkable of phonograph comedienesses, Ada Jones. After all, it was reading a magazine article of mine about the inimitable Ada that caused Mrs. Yarbray to write her first letter to me.

My Ada Jones series appeared in Ada Jones sending a joke by wireless, about 1921.

HOBBIES from June, 1946, through January, 1947. It was as comprehensive as it well could be considering the circumstances in which it was written, but it left some things unrevealed. For instance, although I knew the singer was born in, or near Manchester, England—probably during the 1870's—I had been unable to obtain her birth date. Neither did I give the date of her marriage to a vaudeville "song and dance man," Hugh Flaherty.

Now, thanks to an enthusiastic admirer of Ada Jones, I can. Milford H. Fargo of 1279 Park Avenue, Rochester 10, New York, is a young man who is a member of the faculty of the Eastman School of Music. Although his activities have been in the field of fine music, Mr. Fargo recently became acquainted with some of the cylinder recordings of Ada Jones and was charmed. He recognized Ada as a great artist—as great in her way as the operatic stars in theirs. He determined to find out everything he could about Ada, but had no luck until he discovered in a public library the old copies of HOBBIES containing my articles. After reading these he wrote to me for more information, sent me a number of questionnaires and began doing independent research, which he is still carrying on. He has acquired some 550 discs and cylinders by Ada Jones and hopes to establish a memorial to her by assembling the most nearly complete collection of her records in existence.

Seeking to learn Ada's birth date and the names of her parents, he obtained a copy of the information she gave when the New York State census of 1915 was taken. With this as a basis, he wrote to the General Register Officer, Somerset House, London, and as he says, "In a couple of very long weeks I was rewarded with a certified copy of an entry of birth."

Now, owing to the fine work of Milford Fargo, I am able to report that Ada Jones was born June 1, 1873, in her parents' home at 78 Manchester Street, Oldham, Lancashire, England, a suburb of Manchester. Her birth was registered August 18, 1873, and she seems to have been given only the one name of Ada. She was not quite 49 years of age when she died in Rocky Mount, North Carolina, May 2, 1922. Incidentally, her death certificate gave her age as 46, not 40, as was printed in the former series.

Ada Jones' father, James Jones, was an innkeeper. An Oldham directory of 1875 lists him as the innkeeper of "The British Flag," at the Manchester Street address. Her mother's name was—I discovered to my surprise and pleasure—Ann Jane Walsh. As far as I know, she was not related to me, but my late father, who vastly admired Ada Jones, would have been captivated at the thought of a possible family connection. Ada said her mother was a well-known professional singer, but Oldham authorities who have aided Mr. Fargo in his research have found no record of her singing career. However, as he remarks, "it has been a long-standing custom in Oldham for a public house to provide entertainment, and it is possible that Ada Jones' mother sang in "The British Flag." The original building is no longer standing, but the site is now occupied by another public house called "The Lancashire Vaults," built in around 1900 to 1910. Apparently there are no photos of the old "British Flag."

Cover of an 1896 song hit dedicated to Len Spencer.

Ada's baptism is registered at the Roman Catholic Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel and St. Patrick in Oldham. A search of local newspapers revealed an obituary notice for Ada's baby brother, Arthur James Jones, aged six months, born October 24, 1874.

Mr. Fargo adds: "Papa must have liked that name for he chose Arthur F. for one of his sons from his third wife. No living relatives have been located, but an article by John Gaunt appeared last month in a local paper (the Oldham Chronicle, I think), which brought my search to the attention of the readers in the hope of doing so."

Milford searched the marriage records of the Borough of Manhattan and finally discovered Certificate No. 16264. It was that of Ada Jones and Hughie Flaherty, and said: "I hereby certify that the above-named groom and bride were joined in marriage by me, in accordance with the Laws of the State of New York, at 217 Second Avenue, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, this 9th of August, 1904." The marriage must have taken place some two or three months before Billy Murray heard Ada singing in Huber's Museum and recommended to Len Spencer that he engage her as his associate. She often sang to the accompaniment of colored song slides and was considered one of the best "delineators" of that type of work. The first issued record in which she worked with Len Spencer appears to have been the Columbia of "The Hand of Fate," which came out in February, 1905, as cylinder 32623 and disc 3050. Henry Spencer played a minor part in it. This burlesque sketch likewise was recorded for other companies. The Imperial record label, made by the Leeds & Catlin Company, refers to her as "Miss Ida Jones."

The 1915 census report says, "Ada Jones was born in England, but had been in the United States for 35 years. She was listed as an alien, so apparently she never became a naturalized American. Her occupation was given as "professional singer." Her husband was noted as Hughie Flaherty, 36 years of age (six years younger than Ada), an actor by profession who had been in this country 33 years. The marriage certificate gave his birthplace as County Kerry, Ireland, his father as John Flaherty, and his mother as Kate Sullivan—certainly an all-Irish combination. Their only child, Sheilah, was nine years old when the census was taken." Mrs. Frances Seay Verme, who lived next door to the Flahertys as a girl, told Mr. Fargo that Sheilah married after her mother's death and had a son. She thought Sheilah, after moving away from Huntington Station, died in the early 1930's.

I am happy to pass on these newly learned facts concerning the woman whom I have already referred to as "the almost legendary Ada Jones." The singer was so nearly a legendary figure in her lifetime that almost from the beginning of her recording career rumors periodically swept the country that she had died. For instance, the following denial appeared in the Edison publication, Along Broadway, for June, 1919, together with a photo showing her cooking over an old-fashioned coal stove:

A little while ago someone wrote in to us for corroboration of a rumor of Ada Jones' death. We denied it emphatically. As Mark Twain once said of a similar rumor about himself, "It was greatly exaggerated." Just how alive Miss Jones is may be imagined from this picture, where she looks competent to fry hot cakes for a whole family. We know very well that the May supplement established her presence on this mortal sphere more completely than any picture could, however, with the two new numbers her admirers hastened to carry home.

To conclude the Ada Jones section, I believe it should be interesting to reprint my article, "Miss Ada Waxed Hot in Her Day," which I contributed to the Capitol Record Company's Music Views magazine for June, 1953, and which made Mrs. Yarbray, who accidentally happened upon it, decide to write to me:

Today's record business is full of "glamour girls"—Margaret Whiting, Dinah Shore, Doris Day, Patti Page, Rosemary Clooney—but for ten years or so, beginning in 1904, the phonograph had only one "Personality Miss." Her name was Ada Jones.

In proportion to the number of "talking-machines" then in use, blonde, blue-eyed, buxom Ada probably had the greatest following of any woman recording artist.

Born in Manchester, England, Ada was brought to the United States as a baby and made her debut at seven in the old National Theater, Philadelphia, singing "Killarney" in a strong, sweet voice that filled the house. As a child prodigy, she appeared in stage shows and made records—as tests only—for the North American Phonograph Company.

In 1904 the singer's real phonograph career began. She was singing in Huber's Museum in New York, when Len Spencer, a famous recorder of comic sketches, engaged her as his assistant. Spencer coached her so carefully that soon her skill in the use of dialects and impersonating various types of characters was considered uncanny.

Almost overnight, she became the most popular woman singer of sentimental ballads.

Ada's vogue was amazing. Although the wife of Hughie Flaherty, a vaudevillian, she was generally believed to be single. Lighthouse keepers in Australia, gold miners in Alaska, plantation owners in Africa, wrote letters of proposal to the "Dream Girl" whose voice came to them out of a phonograph horn. Few had seen her photo, and none of those far-away admirers knew she suffered from epilepsy.

Miss Jones' greatest popularity came in 1907 when she formed a duet partnership with Billy Murray. They worked together 15 years as perhaps the most popular singing team in recorded music's history. A fantastic phase of her career came with periodic rumors that Ada had died. Phonograph companies denied them, but the rumors persisted. Even more oddly, there are record collectors today who insist the soprano is still living, although Ada Jones died in High Point, N. C., May 2, 1922.

Within the past few weeks the alert and resourceful Milford Fargo has been informed by J. Taylor Finley, superintendent of schools in Huntington Station, the school's records give Sheila Flaherty's birth date as January 14, 1906. I thought it would be interesting and amusing to check the Victor, Columbia, Edison and Zon-o-phone supplements for that month and find out what records Sheila's mother was currently represented by at the time that young lady arrived to gladden the lives of Hughie and Ada. My research yielded the following:

Ada's Victor records for January, 1906—made, of course, a few months before being placed on sale—included No. 4548, "My Word," a solo in which she imitated the famous English comedienne, Katie Barry (Miss Jones frequently did imitations of Vesta Victoria and other English music hall favorites, singing their songs as a rule better than they did) and two descriptive specialties with Len Spencer, 4550, "Fritz and Louisa," and 4549, "The Golden Wedding." Len also teamed up on 4554 with the animal imitator, Al S. Holt, who died in London in 1924, to do "Punch and Judy"—a record I haven't found.

Neither Ada nor Len was in the Columbia January list, but in February they were represented by a cylinder, 32868, of "Fritz and Louisa" and a disc, 3314, of "The Golden Wedding." Their January two-minute Edison cylinder offerings were a solo by Ada, No. 9182, "I'm a Woman of Importance" (no doubt the proud young mother felt she was important after producing Sheila!) and a German dialect comic sketch by the pair, 9172, "Fritz and Louisa" (again!) which was vastly popular for years. For Zon-o-phone, Ada alone sang "Have You Seen My Henry Brown?"

(348); she and Len did "The Fair Fisher Maiden and Her Catch" (341) and "The Golden Wedding" (342), and Len on 347 gave an unassisted version of "The Musical Yankee." No doubt they also had records in the January lists of Leeds, American, International and the other "pirate" companies of that day. For the benefit of those who are wondering, "Where's the Zon-o-phone record of 'Fritz and Louisa'? I'll say that Zono didn't get around to issuing it until August, 1906.

These numerous "releases" give an idea of how popular Ada Jones had become, in solos and with the amiable Mr. Spencer, within less than a year after her records first appeared. Now, more than half a century later, the buxom comedienne's ability to charm her hearers has not died—witness her effect on Milford Fargo!—although she has been dead 36 years. Milford's latest discovery is that Ada had two stepmothers and three of her half-brothers are still living.

I have found the following entry in the Imperial record catalog for October, 1906, showing how popular the Jones and Spencer specialties had become in little more than a year and a half. Eighteen of their duets are listed, including one, No. 44567, "The Future Mrs. 'Awkins," which is not well known in this country and may have been made primarily for export to Great Britain. The description reads:

VAUDEVILLE SKETCHES BY LEN SPENCER AND ADA JONES

These duets by Mr. Spencer and Miss Jones are becoming more and more popular. The reason is not hard to find. The public knows the work of these artists is up-to-date in every respect. Their dialogue is bright, catchy and witty, and shows the effect not only of a thorough understanding of what is demanded by the public, but of careful study and a determination to meet the demand.

IV I Hear From Mrs. Yarbray

There still seems something almost fairy-like about the way I finally came into communication with Leonard Garfield Spencer's daughter, Ethel. For years before I wrote the 1947 HOBBIES series I had tried vainly to find out if any members of the immediate Spencer family were still alive and where they were. The nearest I came to obtaining that information was when a veteran Edison official wrote me he had heard that "Mrs. Len Spencer and her daughters are believed to be living somewhere in Arizona," but just where he had no idea. The report was incorrect, for Mrs. Spencer had died before the letter was written and the mother and daughters had not gone to Arizona. They had instead, moved to Texas.

Then came the near miracle. On July 29, 1953, I experienced one of those "thrills of a lifetime," when I received the following letter, forwarded by Bob Johnson, the editor of Musio Views:

Capitol Publications, Inc.,
Sunset and Vine
Hollywood 28, California
Attention: Mr. Robert E. Johnson, Editor.

Dear Sir:

Through a friend connected with the San Antonio Music Company I have read your June, 1953, edition of Musio Views, and found an article of great interest to me. It is headed "Miss Ada Waxed Hot in her day."

My particular interest in this article rests in the fact that the Len Spencer whom Mr. Walsh mentions is my father. I would like to have a copy of this edition and would appreciate your mailing me one and I will gladly pay whatever charges are necessary.

I would also be interested in knowing whether you have published an article on Len Spencer. If so, I would certainly appreciate having a copy of it also. My father died December 15, 1914, and it is rarely that I hear of him or his recordings, so this mention of him really touched me. . . . Sincerely yours, Mrs. James A. Yarbray, 843 Peck Avenue, San Antonio 10, Texas.

Elatedly, I lost no time in writing to Mrs. Yarbray and seeking additional information about that remarkable man, her father, whom I had admired since I was a small boy. Almost by return mail I received a long and memorable reply.

(To be continued)

DO YOU REMEMBER?

By CLARENCE EDWARD HELLER

"That Old Sweetheart of Mine," by James Whitcomb Riley, on every table in 1904?

"Ben Hur," by General Lew Wallace, when it was a book before the play?

"Harper's Round Table," for the year 1898, by Santa Claus, bound to give boys' cheer?

"Youth's Companion," in every boy's stocking, when Grover Cleveland was president?

"Golden Days" and "Golden Hours," with their wonderful effects on childhood's fancies—two of our leading children's weeklies?

When porcelain-lined bath tubs took the place of tin contraptions with wooden sides?

"Hood's Sarsaparilla" Rainy Day Puzzle which you obtained with the box tops?

William Jennings Bryan's "Cross of Gold" speech?

Jim Walsh, author of HOBBIES' "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," which has been a favorite of collectors for many years, was interviewed May 15 on Dave Garroway's coast-to-coast NBC network television program. The upper photograph shows Dave and Jim in action. Dave, with back to camera, is near an Edison cylinder juke box, whose latest patent date is 1893. Jim stands beside an old Victor talking machine with outside horn. Near the Victor machine is an Edison Opera model cylinder phonograph of about 1910.

The lower view shows a close-up of the interview. The part in which Jim appeared was televised from Mill Mountain in the heart of the South Roanoke, Va., residential section.

—WSLS—TV (Roanoke, Va.) photo by Maurice Wright

This photo of Len Spencer's comedy partner, Ada Jones, was taken a few months before her death in Rocky Mount, N. C., May 2, 1922. This is taken from an old photograph, hence the crease mark.

The first president of the Columbia Phonograph Company, Edward D. Easton (probably taken about 1899), and Len Spencer on the right.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Leonard Garfield Spencer

As His Daughter Ethel Lovingly Recalls Him

(And new light on Ada Jones)

Part II

By JIM WALSH

I. Ada Jones' Last Days

If Milford Fargo, tireless researcher that he is into the life and achievements of Ada Jones, continues to unearth more valuable information this series will wind up being as much an Ada Jones saga as the intimate portrayal of her distinguished associate, Len Spencer, which it is primarily intended to be.

Since the first installment was written, Mr. Fargo has obtained material which simply shouts for reproduction. His inquiries caused the Rocky Mount (N. C.) Telegram for Sunday, March 9, to publish a long "feature story" recalling the fact that Ada Jones died in the North Carolina town, and reprinting the 1922 accounts of her illness and death. Since most Len Spencer admirers also admire Ada Jones, I believe they will forgive my delaying the reminiscences of Spencer's daughter, Ethel, long enough to place the 36-year-old news stories in the record.

The Evening Telegram for Friday, April 28, 1922, carried the following advance story:

Rocky Mount is to be treated to a personal appearance of the celebrated phonograph star, Ada Jones, known wherever phonographs are played. Ada Jones makes records for several of the leading companies, among them the Victor and Edison, and hardly a home possessing a phonograph does not have records made by this star. In addition to Miss Jones, on the concert to be given at the Palace tomorrow afternoon and night will be seen Miss Beth Hamilton, a violinist of note, Miss Mabel Loomis, pianist and soprano singer of pleasing voice, and Armstrong, the man of mystery, who will entertain by moments of mystifying and being funny. Altogether it will prove an entertainment of high merit and one to be enjoyed immensely. In addition to this concert of stellar artists will be shown a picture program comprising Dorothy Dalton's latest Paramount photoplay, "The Crimson Challenge," from the widely read novel of Beulah Dix, "Theron of Lost Valley," and a two-reel comedy.

On Tuesday, May 2, the Rocky Mount paper carried a one-column headline, "Phonograph Star Dangerously Ill," with a sub-head reading, "Little Hope Entertained for Ada Jones, Who Is Critically Ill Here":

There is a likelihood that Ada Jones, noted singer and phonograph star, may have sung her swan song when she appeared in concert at the Palace theatre Saturday night, as Miss Jones is now resting in a local hospital after being stricken with a serious illness here yesterday morning before leaving for Tarboro, where she was booked to appear last night.

Hospital attendants and the other members of Miss Jones' special company regard her condition as most serious and entertain grave fears for her recovery. It is stated that she is suffering from a complication of kidney troubles.

Miss Jones, it is stated, collapsed in her room at the hotel yesterday morning and was found in a semi-conscious condition by other members of her company when they joined her before catching a train for Tarboro. She was immediately rushed to a local hospital where she is now receiving medical attention.

That same evening, Miss Jones died, and the next day, May 3, the headline, "Ada Jones, Phonograph Star, Gets Death Summons Here," shocked Evening Telegram readers. The story, on page 1, read as follows:

The smiles and applause that greeted Ada Jones, noted comedienne and phonograph record star, when she sang "Oh Lordy," one of the coon songs that brought her into such great prominence, and then "You Ain't the Man" as an encore at a local theatre Saturday night, proved a farewell tribute to the famous singer of character songs whose name is familiar wherever phonograph records have gone, for the music turned out to be the swan song of the internationally known artist.

Miss Jones, in private life Mrs. Hugh Flaherty of New York, died at St. Mary's hospital last night. Rushed to this institution Tuesday morning after she had been discovered by other members of her company in a semi-conscious condition at her room at a local hotel, the comedienne put up a plucky but losing battle with death Monday, Monday night and yesterday. Attending physicians declared her to be suffering from uremia and little hope was entertained for her recovery from the moment she was stricken. She gradually grew worse and then came the end last night shortly after ten o'clock.

Miss Jones, who was 46 years of age (really 48—J.W.), is survived by her husband, who is a dancer; her step-mother, Mrs. A. D. Jones, of New York, and one daughter, Miss Sheelah (sic!) Flaherty, also of New York. None of these relatives are expected to come to the city as members of Miss Jones' company, which appeared in concert at the Palace theatre Saturday night, are winding up affairs here. Remains will be shipped to New York, the home of the deceased, tonight, and funeral services and interment will take place there. Miss Jones was born in England and came to this country to make her home when a young girl.

Members of Miss Jones' company state that she had shown no signs of illness recently although she appeared nervous and overworked. She attended church services, however, Sunday evening, and was slated to go on to Tarboro Monday morning, where she was booked for Monday night. It was when members of her company went to her hotel room shortly before noon Monday to get her and catch the train for Tarboro that they found she had collapsed into a semi-conscious condition.

While Miss Jones was widely known as a concert artist, her fame lay primarily in the field of producing graphophone records. She had made hundreds of records for the Victor, Edison, Brunswick, O-Kay (sic) and other companies and had probably furnished more genuine amusement with her character and dialect songs than any other graphophone artist. In addition to making a number of solo records she has worked with such internationally known personages as Cal Stewart, Len Spencer and Billy Murray. She enjoyed the distinction of being the first woman to make graphophone records whose voice could be distinctly understood.

Included among her best known records are "Oh, Lordy," "Irish Blood," "You Ain't the Man," "Life's Highway," and "Just Plain Folks," while her duet with Billy Murray, "Peaches and Cream," takes first place for popularity. It was altogether appropriate that her swan song Saturday night should have been two of her inimitable and most popular character songs. Residents of the city generally were grieved to learn of her death, and many messages of condolence from friends and former business associates over the entire United States have come in to members of the company here.

Her remains are reposing at a local undertaking establishment today, but will be shipped to her home in New York tonight.

The Telegram article contains a few rather inconsequential errors. I am unable to find that Ada Jones ever made Brunswick records, and her "Peaches and Cream" duet was not with Billy Murray but Len Spencer. And that once more brings us back to the topic from which we have strayed.

II. A Letter from Mrs. Yarbray

Receiving a letter from the daughter of Len Spencer, the greatest recording artist of the 1890's and early 1900's, ranks high among my treasured experiences. As I read my first letter from Mrs. Ethel Yarbray, my mind went back to September 9, 1948, the morning of the John Bieling Day party for the pioneer recording artists and their admirers at Garden City, Long Island. Once more I seemed to hear the Rev. Edward Vesper remark: "Now if we just had Len Spencer with us today, everything would be perfect!"

Here is Mrs. Yarbray's letter:

August 2, 1953. Dear Mr. Walsh: Your wonderful letter arrived day before yesterday, and I cried with happiness and memories.

To me my father was the most wonderful man in the world—the finest—the handsomest—I adored him! I was Papa's little "Happy Heart!"

It was a shock, though a happy one, to learn that there are folks who remember and admire him, for I have lived in the belief that he was long ago forgotten.

I appreciate all you have written me, and am writing to obtain the articles and magazines of which you wrote in order that I may read and keep them. I remember there was always a copy of Variety at home while Papa lived. I would sincerely appreciate having the new article, "Jottings from the Phonoscope," if you would be so kind.

It is hard to write how much it means to me to learn all that you have written about Papa. I had forgotten about sister Myrtle recording "Mama's Boy" and "Little Eva," but now I vividly recall Papa coaching her to pitch her voice just so for recording. One of the outstanding memories of Papa is of him sitting at the piano, accompanying himself as he sang "Silver Threads Among the Gold" or "When You and I Were Young, Maggie." No sweeter music was ever rendered.

Mother passed away in 1941 and is buried beside my father in Glenwood Cemetery, Washington, D. C.

Sister Myrtle, the oldest daughter, married twice, had no children and died in 1929 of tuberculosis contracted from her first husband.

Sister Clara, the youngest daughter, made a career in commercial art and in oil painting, retiring several years ago due to ill health. There was another daughter, Constance, between Len Spencer (third in the front row) was one of a group of prominent performers who signed exclusive Columbia recording contracts in 1898. Also shown in this faded photo are: Front row—George Emerson, recording technician; George Graham, comedian; Vess L. Ossman, banjoist; Dan W. Quinn, comedian, and Clyde Emerson, technician. George Gaskin, tenor, is sitting on platform. Standing in background are: George Schweinfest, piccolo and flute soloist; Victor Emerson, recording director; Steve Porter, comedian, and Russell Hunting, comedian.

Clara and me, who died as a baby before Clara was born.

As for me, I was the second daughter. I married an Army man, who retired as Chief Warrant Officer almost ten years ago after serving over 44 years of continuous service. We have a lovely daughter, Clara, who is married and has a precious baby girl, Karen, almost eight months old. That is the history of the Len Spencer family since Papa passed away now almost 39 years ago.

I have the two records, "The Lord's Prayer" and "The 23rd Psalm," that Papa recorded two or more years prior to his death and that were played at his funeral. These records were flown down to San Antonio at Sister Myrtle's request and played again at her funeral.

Once again let me thank you for taking time out to write me a letter with which I shall never part. If you are ever down this way, please come by for a visit, for we should be so happy to see you. Sincerely yours,

ETHEL L. YARBRAV.

In a letter written to me recently, on January 20, 1958, Mrs. Yarbray again touches lovingly on her father's fondness for seating himself at the piano and singing in his rich baritone voice songs of a more serious nature than his name is usually associated with:

... One of Papa's outstanding characteristics was his desire to always help the other fellow. I don't believe he ever turned down a request for help and when he passed away his books were a record of unpaid loans and unpaid commissions; and more of his goodness was the fact that the majority of his loans were more like stakes that never were expected to be repaid. It was why Papa never held on to any money.

My fondest memory of Papa was as he sat at the piano improvising chords and melodies and nearly always ending up with "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," which was one of his favorites. Papa had a touch that is given to few and those who were privileged to hear him play never tired of listening. He sang the words as he played and I loved it.

For our pleasure, Papa would sometimes do a little song and soft-shoe dance routine to the words and music of "While strolling in the park one day, in the merry, merry month of May." He had small hands and feet, so that for a large man he was light on his feet and graceful in every move he made. Papa stood over six feet, or six feet one, and weighed right around 200 pounds, without an ounce of excess fat, anywhere. . . . a powerful well-built physique. . . . What a striking figure he made in his top hat and tails, his satin-lined Inverness cape coat and his cane! He had a dynamic personality and acted as master of ceremonies at the annual Motion Picture Exhibitors' Balls, being as much a drawing card as the actors and actresses whom he introduced. . . I adored him—knew his faults—but could so easily overlook and forgive them because to me he was the most wonderful Papa in the world, and of course the handsomest man in the world. Childish of me, maybe, but remember I was just 16 when I lost him, so my love also contained the hero-worship so familiar to small fry where fathers are concerned.

LEN SPENCER, in the early 1890's, when he was making "New Jersey" cylinder records for the U. S. Phonograph Co., of Newark, N. J.

When you write about him don't forget the minstrel show with the phonographs installed in the blackface wax figures at Coney Island that was burned to the ground and cost him thousands!

II. Concerning Coney Island

I believe the Len Spencer Minstrels at Coney Island were a separate attraction from a "live" minstrel show which he seems to have had briefly in the 1890's. It consisted of nine or more "dummies" made up to represent popular recording artists, including Spencer himself as inter-locutor. Columbia "sound-magnifying graphophones," which gave great volume, provided the music. Not long ago I had a letter from Edo McCullough of Arlington, Va., author of a fascinating new book, "Good Old Coney Island." Mr. McCullough's family has been intimately associated with Coney Island enterprises for generations. He tells me the Len Spencer Minstrels were destroyed in the terrible fire that wiped out the Steeplechase Park at Coney Island on July 28, 1907.

Len Spencer wrote and recorded a number of descriptive sketches dealing with Coney. One, by him and Ada Jones, was "Coming Home From Coney Island." Then there was another which purported to reproduce "Cummings' Indian Congress." Concerning it Mr. McCullough comments: "Cummings' Indian Congress was a Steeplechase Park attraction. It was a typical Wild West show with many Indians, cowboys and horses." "Louis and Lena" is staged at Luna Park, and gives Ada an excuse to sing "Meet Me Down at Luna, Lena." In "Peaches and Cream," the blonde heroine, "Peaches," asks her news-boy sweetheart to "take me in bathing down at Coney Island." He agrees, explaining he wants to see what her natural complexion is like. The Jones and Spencer skits sometimes contain pathos but more often they feature comedy, frequently of a rather boisterous kind. To my perception, their funniest line probably occurs in "Every Little Bit Helps," when Len, as a Negro lover, strikes a domineering pose, and Ada acidly retorts: "Who you think you talkin' to? Go count yo'self, nigger—you ain't so many!"

III. Excerpts From Other Letters

Once begun, the correspondence between Len Spencer's daughter and myself flourished and, as the preceding quotation indicates, has continued to this day. It was not long before we abandoned the formal greeting of "Dear Mr. Walsh" and "Dear Mrs. Yarbray," and began calling each other "Cousin Jim" and "Cousin Ethel"—a Southern custom when there is a warm friendship but no kin.

Now I shall quote from other letters of "Cousin Ethel," but for simplicity's sake shall not identify them by dates. At times I may transpose paragraphs from one letter to another, in order to give better structure and more coherence to the gracious lady's recollections of her father.

I have just been looking back to the lines in which Mrs. Yarbray describes the way in which Spencer would do a song and dance to amuse his little girls, and the thought occurs that his attitude toward his children was like that of Charles Dickens toward Dickens' own numerous brood. Dickens used to dance with his daughters and on one occasion, his daughter Mamie relates, hopped out of bed in the middle of the night and practiced some steps he was to perform with them and which he feared he might have forgotten. Indeed, because of the skill with which he portrayed so many types of characters in the limited compass of a phonograph record it seems to me Len Spencer might well be called "The Dickens of the Phonograph." His abilities were so many and varied and everything he did he did so well that had he turned his attention to novel writing, his ability to create character and master dialect might have made him another Dickens.

Back to the letters: Regardless of missing dates and transpositions, the words that follow are those of Mrs. Yarbray herself:

I have been trying to get an opportunity to go through the trunk in the storeroom in which I have some photographs of the family, and was waiting to do this before writing to you, but time flies. . . I have, I believe, a photograph of Daddy, Mama, Myrtle, Grandmother Spencer and little me taken before my younger sister was born—which means in 1901 or 1902. I also think I have photographs of Papa and Russell Hunting in cut-away coats and top hats. (The picture is really one of Spencer and the first president of the Columbia Graphophone Company, Edward D. Easton—J.W.) Many photographs were not marked and in moving, after Mother died, I destroyed many whom I did not remember.

There were several newspaper articles on Father's death in the New York papers and many were incorrect in several details, but at the time we felt it made little or no difference. There was one article that said his daughter had gone to his office to ask for some money to buy a coat, which was entirely untrue. I used to go down sometimes after school or on Saturdays just to be there or to help in the song-slide department or to help the book-keeper post, and I just happened to be standing by Daddy when he slumped over at his desk. Some of the men present put him down on the floor, they called a doctor and then the coroner—and that was it. Mother did not see him until he was at the Campbell Undertaking Parlors. He was buried from the Campbell chapel—or, I should say, he was taken to the crematory from there.

As for George W. Johnson, "The Whistling Coon," I remember his name distinctly but cannot recall any details of his personal life. Nor do I remember his working as a porter for Papa, though of course I wouldn't know that, anyhow, as little as I knew of Papa's business. I also haven't the slightest idea of where Papa and Ada Jones rehearsed. I know very little about their professional association.

Billy Murray is the name I remember best as concerns Papa and his phonograph. It grieves me to know that he is not too well and I have intended writing to him. (Note—This was written before Billy's death in August, 1954.) I do not recall any concerts given by the Eight Famous Victor Artists in San Antonio. Billy Murray played in Atlanta at one time during our stay there, but if I recall right our daughter Clara Elizabeth either had chickenpox or I had the mumps, or Arthur had the flu, or something in the way of sickness kept us from contacting him at that time.

I wonder if you knew that President

Len Spencer

A silhouette study of Len Spencer made in 1902 by the once famous artist, X. Ackley Sackett.

James A. Garfield was Papa's god-father? He was a dear friend of Papa's father. Also a point of interest and pride to us is the fact that Sister Clara had as her godmother Clara Barton, the Red Cross nurse. Papa's mother, Sara Jane Spencer, and Clara Barton were dear friends, and I have a letter or two written by Clara Barton to Grandmother Spencer, who was among the first women to "bob" her hair. I believe the Spencerian Business College was the first to have recordings for instruction and educational use.

Your letter from William Shea, who studied at the college as a boy, intrigued me. I remember the Chinese student he mentions, and somewhere in my possession have a beautifully embroidered silk handkerchief in colors that the said Chinese student brought to Grandma Spencer from China. She in turn gave it to me as a treasured possession when I was a very small child.

Gilbert Girard (the animal imitator, who made many "descriptive sketches," such as "A Scene at a Dog Fight" and "Daybreak at Calamity Farm," with Len Spencer) called on us after Papa passed away, and I have a page in my autograph album, signed, "Yours in barks and growls, Gilbert Girard."

You asked about Uncle Henry. He passed away August 29, 1946, in Washington, D. C., and his wife died many years before he did. I do not know the date of her death.

The Spencerian penmanship was originated by Platt Rogers Spencer, the father of the five Spencer brothers, as was also the Spencerian steel pen.

I think any permanent record of Papa's life should have his Masonic affiliations included. His Blue Lodge was Dirigo Lodge No. 30, F.&A.M.; his chapter was Zerubbabel Chapter No. 147, R.A.M., and his Commandery was Ivanhoe Commandery No. 36, Knights Templar.

I believe it is obvious from the foregoing quotations that family pride was, and is, deservedly strong with the Spencers. After all, the family record is one of achievement and there is a thread of genius running through it which perhaps reached its highest expression in Len. This pride of family is amusingly exemplified in Columbia record No. 645, "The Old Log Cabin Minstrels," made in 1902. It gives Len an opportunity of telling a joke, based on family pride, that I have always found hilarious, and which seems a bright spot with which to close this installment.

A comedian whose voice I am not sure I recognize but who may be Harry Spencer says: "I haven't seen you for six months, Mr. Spencer. Have you been sick?"

Len: "No!"

Comedian: "In trouble?"

Len: "Worse—in jail!"

Comedian: "In jail! Explain!"

Len: "Well, it was all over a game of cards. You see, Brown bet me $100 he could bring two jacks out of the deck together and, sure enough, he did. The two jacks came out together. But I saw Brown stack the cards and had him arrested. The Court heard the case and said, "What's your name?" Not wishing to disgrace the family, I gave my name as Jack Smith. Brown gave his right name, Jack Brown. The Court said: "You are both equally guilty of gambling. Jack Smith, I give you six months. Jack Brown, LEN SPENCER autographed this photo, made around 1900.

I give you a year—and I'll bet you both a hundred dollars you two Jacks don't come out together!"

Next month I shall tell of my face-to-face meeting with "Cousin Ethel" and relate some of the additional information she gave me on that memorable occasion.

(To be continued)

DO YOU REMEMBER?

By MRS. B. S. KIMBALL

When one could buy a midget cone of ice cream for only a penny?

When some staple foods were purchased by the barrel, as flour, sugar, and Boston crackers?

The most popular souvenir at a country fair, a small edition of a buggy whip?

When one possessed an original buffalo fur robe for winter-time buggy rides?

When most ladies carried a decorative silk parasol sun shade?

When a tobacco company offered a premium of "Flags of all Nations," (cotton squares) and they were fashioned into pillow tops, etc.? Ashtrays of glass and pictured beneath them, varied arrangements of cigar bands?

Mattress ticks layered with corn husks for coolness during summer-time?

Linked wire wall racks to hold post cards?

"LOCAL BOY MAKES GOOD"

After Jim Walsh, author of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists, was interviewed May 15 on Dave Garroway's coast-to-coast NBC network television program, Lloyd Grose, manager of Wade's Superette near Jim's home, placed this sign in his window as a "salute" to the new "celebrity." Shown with him is Mr. and Mrs. Grose's son, Michael. The program originated from WSL, Roanoke, Va.

Another snapshot (right) of Jim Walsh in front of Wade's Superette, Roanoke, Va., taken the day after his appearance on the Dave Garroway television program last May. The part in which Jim appeared was televised from Mill Mountain in the heart of the South Roanoke residential section.

We understand that the little "gag" spread. Jim's newsboy was quick to catch on, and made himself a sandwich man sign. One side read, "I deliver Jim Walsh's Paper," and the other side said, "I mow Jim Walsh's grass."

Leonard Garfield Spencer

As His Daughter Ethel Lovingly Recalls Him

(And new light on Ada Jones)

PART THREE

By JIM WALSH

I. A Peep Into The Past

Long before Thomas A. Edison invented the phonograph and Leonard Garfield Spencer became the first popular recording artist, men had longed for a way of preserving the sight of a vanished form "and the sound of a voice that is still." Because of this deep-seated human longing, passages occasionally are found in old manuscripts that almost seem to forecast the development of sound recording.

Elmer Moore of Santa Monica, Calif., has just sent me a copy of an editorial, with the curious title, "The Phonograph in the Moon Two Centuries Ago," from Scribner's magazine for June, 1880. Because of its historic interest, I consider it well worth reproducing here:

THE PHONOGRAPH IN THE MOON TWO CENTURIES AGO.

The editor has been shown a curious old volume which contains a passage showing that there is nothing new under the moon, in the way of the phonograph, at least. The title reads: "The Comical History of the States and Empires of the Worlds of the Moon and the Son." Written in French by Cyrano Bergerac. And newly Englished by A. Lovell, A. M., London: Printed for Henry Rhodes, next door to the Swan Tavern, near Bride Lane, in Fleet Street, 1687."

This book gives an account of the writer's travels in the Sun and Moon. While in one of the cities of the Moon, he meets an inhabitant of the Sun, who had wandered to the Moon, and they take a stroll through the city, discoursing, as they go, pleasantly concerning their new surroundings. The citizen of the Sun is suddenly called away, and before going gives his companion two books. The writer says: "No sooner was his back turned, but I fell to consider attentively my books and their boxes, that's to say, their covers."

"As I opened the box, I found within somewhat of metal, almost like to our clocks, full of I know not what little springs and imperceptible engines. It was a book, indeed, but a strange and wonderful book, that had neither leaves nor letters. In fine, it was a book made wholly for the ears and not the eyes. So that when anybody has a mind to read in it, he winds up that machine, with a great many little strings; then he turns a hand to the chapter which he desires to hear, and straight as from the mouth of a man or a musical instrument, proceed all the distinct and different sounds, which the Lunar Grandees make use of, for expressing their thoughts, instead of language.

"When I since reflected on this miraculous invention, I no longer wondered that the young men of that country were more knowing at sixteen or eighteen years old than the graybeards of our climate; for knowing how to read as soon as speak, they are never without lectures, in their chambers, their walks, the town or traveling; they may have in their pockets, or at their girdles, thirty of these books where they need but wind up a spring to hear a whole chapter, and so more, if they have a mind to hear the book quite through; so that you never want the company of all the great men, living and dead, who entertain you with living voices."

Just before Mr. Moore's letter reached me, I read in Variety that experiments are being made to engrave sight, as well as sound, waves on phonograph records. If this can be done, it will be possible to project a recorded picture onto a screen and watch the performers while listening to the music.

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor. — Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED: Titia Ruffo's Pathe Dlnorah: Sel vendicata—any number, size or coupling; outside or centre start.—Alda Favia-Artsay, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

WANTED: JOLSON MATERIAL. — Dick Bonesteel, 1807 42nd No., Seattle, Washington. o12046

WANTED: Recordings of Ira D. Sankey, C. I. Scofield, F. B. Meyer, or associates in evangelistic work. — Bernard R. DeRemer, Moody Bible Institute, 820 N. LaSalle St., Chicago 10, Ill. o3614

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold. —James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. s3084

Rare Vocals, Operatics, cutout collectors' items supplied. Wants located. Lists available, reasonably priced. — Personalized Record Service, 158 W. 58th St., N. Y. C. s85

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (Stamp please). n3863

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, P. O. Box 155, Verona, N. J. d128801

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists. — Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. n3618

OLD OPERATIC RECORDS of famous singers for sale. — Anthony DeTratto, 7331 S. Winchester, Chicago 36, Ill. s3652

RARE VOCAL RECORDS at auction. Items for the basic collection and the advanced collector. Also early disc and cylinder phonographs. — Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. s4846

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold. — Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. ja68801

Cylinder records, various makes. 4 minute record list (2000 selections) 25c. 2 minute record list (2000 selections) 25c. List cost refunded with first purchase. — Dexters, 421 W. Arbor Vitae, Inglewood, Calif. o3447

Private Collection of 500 operatic vocals on European labels for sale. Reasonably priced. Lists will be sent upon request, but there will be no shippings. If interested write, records will be put aside, come to see them and take them. Earliest postmark or better offer will get the preference. — Brenda Bennett, 309 West 72nd St. (1C), New York 23, N. Y. s1027

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

LEN SPENCER, as a mature artist, photographed January 1, 1903.

How I wish some such process had been available in Len Spencer's day, so that we could view him and his associates as they sang or talked into a horn jutting from the wall like a ship's funnel or, to go even farther back, sending their voices into an assortment of cylinder phonographs lined up on racks!

Since that is impossible, what a pity is that old-fashioned stereoscope views apparently were never taken in recording studios of the 1890's and early 1900's, making it possible to see the pioneer recording artists at their work—just as one may study such views of Abraham Lincoln and almost feel one beholds the living President. Lincoln's voice, of course, is another thing. Since he died 12 years before the Phonograph appeared, we shall never know with certainty what his tones were like.

It would be wonderful to discover that Len Spencer recorded for Edison's experimental sound pictures and that the films and concert size cylinders exist. But I don't think he did.

II. I Meet Len Spencer's Daughter

Since, as I have already said, there is no way of returning to the past and seeing Len Spencer as he was, the next best thing is knowing someone who was near and dear to him and being told some of the great comedian's intimate personal traits. And that brings me to my meeting with his daughter Ethel.

My correspondence friendship with Mrs. Yarbray had been in progress almost a year when I received the welcome news that there was a chance of our soon being face to face. She wrote me that she, her husband, their daughter, son-in-law and little granddaughter were planning to drive through Roanoke the first week of September, 1954, on their way to New York, and hoped to see me.

Nothing could have given me more pleasure than a meeting with Len Spencer's daughter, but for a time it seemed as if the get-together couldn't be arranged and would have to be written off ruefully as a "near miss." I had already promised to fly to West Newton, Mass., during that first week of September to visit the late Mrs. Margaret E. White, and her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Lester L. White. However, after some close figuring, I was able to rearrange my schedule so I could return to Roanoke the evening before my friends from Texas were to arrive.

In spite of my being bowed down with grief and woe at this moment of writing because of troubles caused by weather conditions, I have to laugh when I think of the contrast between the day Mrs. Yarbray came to see me and the one on which I am compelling my nearly frozen fingers to type. Then it was almost unbearably hot; today, Wednesday, February 19, 1958, it's almost unbearably cold, with the temperature only a few degrees above zero as Southwestern Virginia cringes beneath its worst "cold spell" in 20 years. The water pipes in my house are frozen, and, despite the heating system's going full blast, my feet, like my hands, feel as if they are frozen, too. By the time this page appears in print we may be snarling about another heat wave. Certainly, there was no possibility of freezing on that burning, broiling, blistering, sizzling September 7, 1954, when Mrs. Yarbray came to Roanoke.

Seldom can an eagerly awaited meeting have taken place under more unfavorable circumstances. As I left Boston by plane the weather was fairly cool, but when we landed at Richmond, Va., was being suffocated by one of the worst heat waves in its history and in the late afternoon the temperature stood at 102. It wasn't much cooler when I returned home to Roanoke. Just a few days before leaving for Massachusetts, I had moved from Cedar Avenue in Vinton to King Street in Roanoke, and my new house was in a hopeless state of dirt and confusion. Nothing was in its right place. The moving men had dumped my record collection down in great stacks on the floors of the upstairs rooms and it was so disarranged I had little idea where anything was. (Four years later, owing to lack of time for working on the collection, it's still not in much better condition). However, by a lucky chance, they did leave my disc records by Len Spencer in a spot where they were not hard to find. The cylinders I couldn't locate.

Early on the morning of the day Mrs. Yarbray and I were to see each other for the first time, I went to Dr. W. O. Crutchfield's Animal Hospital to bring home my gorgeous black and reddish-gold cat, Roger, who had been left to be boarded and receive a distemper shot during my West Newton visit. Roger, then a tiny kitten with one of the sweetest dispositions I have ever seen in any creature, had made himself the pet of the place and was permitted to make the rounds with Dr. Crutchfield while the veterinarian treated the other "patients". But soon after I brought him home and fed him, he began to display a fractious complaining spirit he had never before shown. I feared the hospital stay had warped his nature or that, being good at imitations, he had picked up whining, peevish qualities from some of the other cats.

In the early afternoon my phone rang and a pleasant feminine voice let me know I was at last speaking to my "Cousin Ethel". She told me she was staying at the Big Oak motel on Williamson Road in Roanoke, and I said I would be out to see her as soon as the bus connections could get me there. I felt it would be a relief to get away from the complainings of Roger, who was wailing ever more querulously as the scorching hot day went on. I was almost completely worn out, mentally and physically, from my recent moving and the trip to and from Boston, or I probably would have realized what was wrong with the little fellow long before I did.

Turning to my diary entry for the next day, I find I wrote:

Yesterday afternoon, following my talk with Mrs. Yarbray, I caught the 2:55 Kenwood bus to Roanoke, then took a Tenth Street Extension express to the Big Oak motel. My 'Cousin Ethel' is tall and vivacious, with gray-ing, long black hair and a charming personality. She told me many fascinating things about her father. After supper at the Cavalier Restaurant, they came here and stayed until 9 o'clock. I played many Len Spencer records and gave her my Zon-o-phone copy of the Transformation Scene from 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.' I made a return visit this morning to the Big Oak. She told me to keep all the pictures she had given me except one which had been left by mistake. We had breakfast at the Canary Cottage, then parted at Campbell Avenue and Jefferson street.

There, condensed into a few words, is a succinct but incomplete account of what I consider one of the memorable experiences of my life. Now I shall set down some of the things Mrs. Yarbray proudly told me about her father.

III. A Daughter's Recollections

I shall never forget the cordial reception I was given by Mr. and Mrs. Yarbray; their daughter, Clara; her husband, Eddie Mockert, and Mr. and Mrs. Mockert's little daughter, Karen, who has a marked resemblance to her maternal great-grandfather. It was a wonderful moment, finding myself in the presence of the daughter of that authentic "Genius of the Phonograph," Len Spencer. Before I left, we posed for some color photos to commemorate the meeting. Naturally, I soon set to work to learn more of what "Cousin Ethel" could tell me about her father and his family.

One thing I learned was that the Spencerian Business College in Washington, where Len was employed before beginning his recording career was operated by Len's father, Henry Caleb Spencer, and his wife. There were five of the older generation Spencer boys and one sister. They also included Platt Rogers Spencer, of New York, a noted attorney; Harvey Aldine Spencer, a handwriting expert who was frequently called on to testify in New York forgery cases, and Lyman C. Spencer, a minister—all dead many years ago. The daughter, Ellen Spencer, married General R. D. Mussey of Orange. N. J. The Spencer family was of the Swedenborgian religious faith, and Len's parents contributed generously to a fund for building the first Swedenborgian church in Washington. Later, the family installed a handsome stained glass window in memory of Len's father.

There has been some confusion in printed accounts of Len Spencer's birth year, but Mrs. Yarbray told me she found a copy of the family Bible which contained the date, in Len's father's handwriting, as January 12, 1867. Another son, Platt Rosson (Rosie) Spencer was born—like Len, in Washington, D. C., February 22, 1871, but lived only a few years. The third son, Henry Caleb Spencer, Jr., usually known as "Harry", and who became, like his more famous brother, a recording artist, was born in Washington, February 14, 1875. Hence, Len was slightly more than eight years Henry's senior.

Mrs. Yarbray said she had trouble disentangling the somewhat complicated status of her father's marriages, but the record indicates the first occurred when he was only 18. Grandfather Spencer recorded in the Bible: "Leonard Garfield Spencer married April 8, 1885, in St. Matthew's Church, Washington, D. C., Margaret Agnes Kaiser, foster child of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Allen. She was born at Lexington, Ky., May 22, 1864. Their first child, Margaret Agnes, died at birth. Their second child, Sara Allen Spencer, was born January 31, 1887."

Mrs. Yarbray believes Margaret Agnes Kaiser, whose foster parents were named Allen, is the "Elizabeth Allen" whom old-time Columbia officials thought Len married in a run-away match, and that the intervening years had caused the name to become confused. She pointed out that it was during the period of this first marriage that he made records for the U.S. Company under the disguise of "Gary Allen".

Following the entry of Len's marriage was one in his mother's handwriting, telling of the death of the second child, Sara Allen Spencer, on February 5, 1891. Len's young wife died July 10 that year, and his father died on August 30, 1891. As Mrs. Yarbray remarked: "What a hard year 1891 must have been for Papa!"

In spite of personal heartbreak, the brilliant young comedian forged ahead as one of the world's first famous recording artists. On July 20, 1892, he married Elizabeth Norris at Norfolk, Va. They separated a few months later, but on July 27, 1895, were remarried in New Church—presumably the Swedenborgian Church already mentioned. It was Elizabeth who became the mother of Len's four daughters: Myrtle, Constance, Ethel and Clara. "Cousin Ethel" said, in remarking, that some of the details of her father's married life were obscure: "It has been over 35 years since I have lived near mother, and she was always reticent about discussing her affairs or Papa's life, or anything, for that matter. Mother was very quiet and felt that the less was discussed, the better for everyone."

LEN SPENCER'S MOTHER—
Sara Jane Andrews Spencer.

Mrs. Yarbray surprised me by revealing that she is partly of Russian descent. Although her mother's family name had been Anglicized to Norris, it was originally Nowicki. Her father was a count in the court of the Czar of Russia. After being exiled, he came to the United States, and married an American girl. He retained the Russian spelling until he died, but his daughter and two sons preferred Norris. Myrtle Lincoln Spencer was the oldest of Len and Elizabeth Spencer's daughters. She was born February 13, 1897, and died

A photo taken late in 1901 or early in 1902, prior to the birth of Len Spencer's daughter Clara. Left to right—Len Spencer; his mother (standing)—Sara Andrews Spencer; Myrtle Lincoln Spencer; Mrs. Elizabeth Norris Spencer, and Ethel Leonora Spencer (now Mrs. James A. Yarbray.)

An interior view of the Spencerian Business College (about 1888), showing Len Spencer (far background) teaching the use of the wax cylinder phonograph in dictation. The Spencerian was the first institution to use phonographs. Notice also the old-fashioned "invisible" typewriters.

of tuberculosis January 16, 1929. She is buried in the Mission Cemetery at San Antonio, Texas.

Mrs. Yarbray said Myrtle married an orchestra director, George Kester, two months after her father's death. After he developed lung trouble, he underwent treatment at a Liberty, N. Y. sanatorium, and they moved to Texas, where he died in 1919. Myrtle married Fred Allen (of course, not the late radio comedian) in February, 1921, and several years later, on a hunting trip, she developed a heavy cold that ended in a long, losing struggle against tuberculosis.

Ethel Leonora Spencer—my "Cousin Ethel"—was born September 19, 1898. Constance, next in order, had only a short life. Clara Barton Spencer, born May 29, 1902, made a career as a commercial artist and an oil painter and now lives in retirement.

In regard to the Washington phase of the Spencer family's life, Mrs. Yarbray recalls:

"We were living in Washington when sister Clara was born in 1902, and Papa made trips and long stays in New York. I remember Mother telling me one time Clara was three weeks old before Papa even saw her. When I was about six, we moved to Dyker Heights, about 1904, and then moved to New York City in 1907 or 1908."

During the little Spencer girls' childhood in Washington, Myrtle was fondly known to her father as "Good Looks", Ethel, as "Happy Heart", and Clara, as "Sunshine". Mrs. Yarbray recollects herself as having been of the carefree disposition suggested by her loving father's nickname. She says she frequently caught glimpses of the Negro slums in Washington—which are probably worse now than they were in the early 1900's—and one of her favorite remarks, after seeing the squalid conditions in which so many unfortunate people lived, was: "I'm so glad I belong to white folks!"

IV. Life in New York

After leaving Washington for New York, where Len could be in closer touch with recording companies and where he established his booking agency, the Spencer family, as already mentioned, lived in Dyker Heights, between Brooklyn and Coney Island. Here the soft command from their mother, "Don't bother daddy!" became familiar to the three little girls, as their father worked in his study, wearing a green eye shade and writing material to be recorded not only by himself but by other artists as well. He had suffered an eye injury when struck by a swinging door in a recording studio and entirely lost the sight of one of his blue-gray eyes. A few years before his death he suffered a slight stroke, and the combined misfortunes caused him to carry a cane for safety's sake, on his blind side.

Mrs. Spencer was a registered nurse before her marriage. She had an aversion to theatrical life, but many of Len's fellow recording artists visited the Spencer home. One of the attractions was the poker games which the genial comedian had relished since his boyhood. Mrs. Spencer always served coffee and sandwiches for these carefree assemblies.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Spencer

During much of this time, Len's formerly strong-minded and rather tyrannical mother, who had been a terror to backsliding students of the Washington business college, lived with her son and daughter-in-law. As she grew older she lost her keen mental grasp. The college began to lose money and she mortgaged it. Len spent large sums trying to save the institution in which he had taught, but was unsuccessful. He fitted an entire upper floor for his mother in his Dyker Heights home and did his best to make her happy, but in her dotage she proved a "problem child". The old lady developed a persecution complex. She suspected people were plot-ting against her, and frequently ordered carriages and other things which she couldn't use and didn't need. She also was a sufferer from diabetes and in 1909, aged 72, she died in the Home for Incurables.

The Spencerian Business College, in which Len Spencer taught before beginning to make records.

As we shall see later, "Harry" Spencer's life ended unhappily, in a way that suggests his mother's pitiful decline.

However, I prefer to end this installment of Ethel Spencer Yarbray's recollections of her father on a happier note. Her eyes took on a reminiscent glow as she recalled her tired father's nightly homecomings from his work. He would get off a trolley car on the corner of the street opposite that on which his family lived. The little girls weren't allowed to cross the street, but they would run to the corner, attracted by a peculiarly distinctive whistle which their father always gave when he got off the trolley. Then they would be hugged and would happily trot home with the big, handsome father whom they idolized.

"Cousin Ethel" laughed as she recalled Len Spencer's fondness for peanuts. He liked to take the children to the beach at Coney Island in an old-fashioned open streetcar, and would sit on a seat facing backwards, eating "goobers" and dropping the shells in the car. Occasionally, for Clara, Myrtle and Ethel's amusement, he would toss one into his mouth and swallow it with exaggerated appreciation. "On these occasions," Mrs. Yarbray said, "he wore a wide-brimmed cap and really relaxed. He was a marvelous swimmer and went out after dark, fighting 'way out beyond the breakers, but coming in refreshed and vigorous. He preferred it that way. He also liked to stand on the porch, with arms folded, watching a storm and appearing to defy the elements. His brother Harry was exactly opposite. Thunder storms frightened him horribly. When one came up he would hide in the bathroom with the shades down until it was over."

(To be continued)

* * *

While the railroads of the United States may have mistakes to answer for, they have created the most effective, useful, and by far the cheapest of land transportation in the world. This has been accomplished with very little legislation and against an immense volume of opposition and interference growing out of ignorance and misunderstanding. It is not an exaggeration to say that in the past history of this country the railway, next after the Christian religion and the public school, has been the largest single contributing factor to the welfare and happiness of the people.

—James J. Hill

* * *

CIRCUS CONTRASTS

By DANA W. STEVENS

Although P. T. Barnum's name is most frequently associated with the circus, it wasn't until he was sixty years of age that he became interested in the world of the Big Top. Quite possibly he never would have touched the land of tinsel with his peculiar brand of showmanship had not two well-to-do show veterans named Coup and Costello approached him with a proposition. The meeting took place in 1870; Mr. Coup was the spokesman. "Mr. Barnum," he said, "we'd like you to join us in staging a circus."

Barnum, always the cautious one, questioned the two men at great length. When he finally made up his mind that they were sound men who thought pretty much as he did, he said to them: "Gentlemen, I'll join you on one condition—that we put on the biggest circus there is."

Coup and Costello agreed and the more Barnum thought about the idea the more excited he became. He paced up and down repeating aloud the idea of the circus being the biggest and the greatest. Finally, he stopped his pacing and his face took on a happy light. "That's it," he cried. "That's what we'll call our circus: The Greatest Show On Earth!" Thus was born the name, the motto, the slogan, whatever you prefer to call it, that has remained synonymous with the Ringling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey Circus down to the present day.

The first opening day of The Greatest Show On Earth was quite another thing, however. The show was a one-ring affair that opened under a tent in Brooklyn on a sunny day in April 1871. Barnum, wearing top hat and tails, acted as the ringmaster to an audience who was seated on crude wooden benches around the single ring.

Many, many years later, as the show grew up to its name, it provided just a few more rings, a few more seats, and a bit more equipment. For example, in the 1947 edition of The Greatest Show On Earth 236 performers of twenty-six nationalities kept three rings, two stages, and a quarter-mile hippodrome track busy for almost three hours. In all fifty-one acts and displays were presented.

In Barnum's opening show the stars were a group of Negroes whose act was the creation of P. T.'s fertile imagination. Barnum called them Man-Eating Cannibals from the Fiji Islands. Actually the man-eaters, twelve in all and probably natives of the South, were dressed in loin cloths and sandals and were made-up to look as fierce and forbidding as possible. They were paraded around the single ring on foot behind Barnum in his carriage.

As the procession moved around the ring, Barnum cracked a whip over their heads and shouted to the spectators that they had nothing whatsoever to fear. Occasionally, he would reach into the back of the carriage and pull out a shotgun and aim it at the man-eaters. "Don't fear," he would roar. "I'll shoot if a single one of them makes a move near you."

Barnum kept his procession moving around the ring for something like ten minutes, all the while bellowing and shouting for everyone to keep calm. Just at the moment when he sensed that the audience was about to panic, he would drive the men out in a hurry and bring in a bareback riding act. Needless to say, despite the near-panic, the crowds kept getting larger at every performance.

The Big One, some fifty-nine years later, provided the public with an authentic importation of strange people from the Congo. They were not cannibals and certainly their appearance with the big show was handled with a bit more dignity than the man-eaters of Barnum. These were the Ubangis, five men and eight women, who proved to be one of the most expensive attractions that Samuel W. Gumpertz ever provided for The Greatest Show On Earth.

The women in particular in this group were quite startling in appearance. Their beauty marks consisted of wooden disks inserted in their lips in childhood and gradually increased in diameter up to eight or even ten inches. A definite duck-bill effect was the result.

The Ubangis were first exhibited with the show in 1930. Three thousand dollars was the price paid to display them. During the second season with the show they became very homesick and very unhappy.

The experience with a hundred or more Somalis who were exhibited with the show in 1914 was somewhat different from that of the unhappy Ubangis. These people came with five school teachers and lived in a house that was rented for them near Madison Square Garden. Their beauty lay in their teeth which they kept filed to a fine point with small sticks. Sheep was the main item of their diet. After returning to Africa they sent back word that they would be happy to appear with the show again. These people were the real thing.

Gumpertz had much better success with a group of nineteen wild men from Borneo that he brought to this country in 1906. Some three-hundred bags of salt was the privilege paid to their chief for their absence from his country. The contract originally stipulated that they were to receive no salary, but were to be given food, clothing, and lodging. Civilization, however, quickly made inroads on their thinking. After observing that other strange people were getting crisp bills and hard cash every week, they demanded a new treaty in which gold replaced the original salt.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

I. Len Spencer's Last Days

This installment concludes Mrs. Ethel Yarbray's recollections of her father, Len Spencer, as related to me in letters and in a personal meeting in September, 1954.

After the comedian suffered a slight stroke a few years before his death he became less active in making records and devoted himself largely to the affairs of his Lyceum or booking agency. He did not give up recording altogether, but his records became fewer and the vastly popular Ada Jones - Len Spencer "vaudeville specialties" gradually gave way to popular song duets by Miss Jones and Billy Murray. However, Spencer's voice was unimpaired and he continued to entertain his family by singing their favorite old songs and playing his own piano accompaniment. Like many popular singers of both the past and present, he could not read music, but he played the piano well and could transpose in any key. He also played the banjo and the ocarina.

Concerning the New York offices which her father maintained, Mrs. Yarbray says: "I have a heavy horn or bone cane with a silver band just across the handle that papa used after he lost the sight of his right eye. It is inscribed in script, 'Len G. Spencer, 16 West 27th Street.'"

"After the 27th street address, Papa moved to 44 West 28th street, from there to a 14th street loft, and the address on 42nd street was acquired less than a year prior to his death. I know nothing about the West 27th street address. The 44 West 28th was in a building occupied by music publishers, and I believe it was in 1909 that he moved into the huge loft over the Crystal Theatre (the theatre had water running under glass stairs in the center entrance, which was 46 East 14th, and where he had the stage and auditorium built for auditions of musicians, vocalists and entertainers.). It was here also that he had his largest collection of song slides, which he shipped all over the country in specially constructed boxes to prevent breakage. Song slides were on the decline when we moved to the 42nd street office, less than a year before we lost Papa."

A few years ago I (Jim Walsh - that is) obtained a letter written by Spencer himself during the years his Lyceum, "The Quick-Action Service," was at the 14th street address. Written April 24, 1912, it reflects Len's characteristic good heartedness and willingness to help others. It is addressed to William C. O'Hare, of the Witmark Music Publishing Company, and reads:

Friend Will: This will introduce to you Mr. Mat McNally, the young man of whom I spoke to you over the phone. Mr. McNally is anxious to master the theory and fundamentals of music and harmony. I could think of no one better qualified to advise him than yourself. It is needless to state that I take a personal interest in Mr. McNally myself and that anything you can do to place him on the right road would be greatly appreciated by

Yours sincerely,

LEN SPENCER

The letter, sent to me by Mr. McNally himself, is signed in Len's beautifully flowing, distinctive Spencerian penmanship.

The letterhead reveals that the Lyceum also had a Scranton, Pa., office at 136 Washington Avenue, with P. J. Dempsey as manager. On the left of the sheet is a column printed in red listing the Lyceum's services. Because of its historical interest, I shall copy its contents:

BOOKING AGENCY. "Musical Talent in All Lines." Vocal and Instrumental Artists for Concert, Vaudeville, Burlesque, Minstrel, Dramatic and Musical Comedy. Lecturers, Vocalists, Pianists, Violinists, Drummers. Instrumentalists and Moving Picture Artists in all lines Provided Upon Short Notice. Special Offices and Studios at Disposal of Managers and Artists. Call, Write, Wire or Phone.

SONG SLIDE SERVICE. Newest, Latest and Best Illustrated Song Slides Bought, Sold, Rented and Exchanged. Special Run - New Run - Standard Run and Commercial Run Song Slide Service at Lowest Rental Rate Consistent With Good Service. Send for Lists and Terms.

ILLUSTRATION BUREAU. Song Slides, Travelogue Slides, Announcement Slides, Advertising Slides, and Lantern Slides of Every Description to order on short notice, at lowest terms consistent with superior work.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS' EXCHANGE. Popularizing "All Songs of All Publishers." Free Song Coaching and Demonstration Daily for Lyceum Artists and Patrons. PROFESSIONAL ARTISTS CORDIALLY WELCOMED. ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO LEN SPENCER'S LYCEUM, 46 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK. MANAGER'S PHONE, STUYVESANT 3480, 3481. ARTISTS' PHONE, 3046 STUYVESANT.

Mrs. Yarbray recalls that she helped with the song slide part of the business and had gone to the Lyceum to work a few hours when her father had the seizure that caused his death. During her teens she and her sister Myrtle also sang in the choir of the Metropolitan Temple Methodist Church, although, as was mentioned in an earlier installment, the Spencer family was of the Swedenborgian faith.

As might be expected, "Cousin Ethel" retains a vivid recollection of her father's death, especially since she was an eyewitness when Len Spencer's life was prematurely ended December 15, 1914, at the age of 47. She was standing beside him while he talked with a woman who was seeking an engagement. Almost without warning he fell over, was laid on the floor, and was dead. He had suffered a cerebral hemorrhage.

Mrs. Yarbray recalls that her mother was not surprised when told her husband had died. Quietly, she said: "I rather expected it. He came back twice this morning to kiss me goodbye and seemed to hate to leave me so badly. I had a feeling that something was wrong."

Len Spencer's body was cremated and the ashes were placed some six months later, in Glenwood Cemetery, Washington, where his wife is now buried beside him.

His death was a tragedy to the Spencer family. Lacking sons or other male relatives to take charge of the Lyceum, Len left his affairs in the hands of his brother Henry. Because of inexperience the business folded within half a year. The insurance money Len had left went to pay debts contracted by the younger Spencer in his mismanagement of the Lyceum.

Shortly afterward, Myrtle married and Ethel got a job with the Mutual Life Insurance Company, while 12-year-old Clara was still in elementary school. In 1919, after her husband was buried in Chicago, Myrtle returned to Texas. In September that year, Mrs. Spencer, Ethel and Clara also moved there. Says Mrs. Yarbray: "Clara had had flu and measles combined at 17, the year of her high school graduation, and I had constant sieges of acute bronchitis. The doctor thought a change of climate would benefit us, so we

(Conclusion)

By JIM WALSH

Leonard Garfield Spencer

As His Daughter Ethel Lovingly Recalls Him

followed Myrtle here to San Antonio. I married James Arthur Yarbray July 25, 1921."

As for Harry Spencer, the remainder of his life had a wierd appropriateness for the man whose most popular record had been "The Mad Ravings of John McCullough," a bloodcurdling impersonation of the insane sounds made by the once famous tragedian before he died in Bloomingdale Asylum, New York. At one time Henry tried to operate a detective agency. He had a motor-cycle concession at Coney Island. He also worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad, and in 1947 Joe Belmont, the now deceased "Human Bird," recalled having run into Harry some years previously in Lancaster, Pa., where he was a train caller.

Finally Henry Spencer lost his mind and died in St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Washington. While in the hospital he wrote a raving letter to Mrs. Yarbray, accusing her and his other relatives of ill-treatment and conspiring against him. It is good to know that Masons and other friends kept the unhappy victim of mental illness supplied with comforts until he died. He, too, is buried in Washington.

Henry Spencer was married to a woman of Italian descent much older than he. Her given name was Gazelle, but Mrs. Yarbray doesn't recall the last name. She does remember her family owned a restaurant in Pennsylvania.

II. A Visit From "Cousin Ethel"

The diary entry I quoted last month mentioned that, after our meeting at the Big Oak motel, Mrs. Yarbray and her family joined me for a meal in the Cavalier Restaurant. They then accompanied me to the house into which I had moved only a few days before and we had a pleasant evening, listening to some of the disc records by Len Spencer, which I had luckily been able to find, and seeing a bit of my collection. The only unpleasant feature, aside from my embarrassment at the place being unavoidably in such a mess, was the peevish behavior of my kitten, Roger, who, as already mentioned, had been querulous all day, and who became almost desperately complaining as the evening wore on. I couldn't determine what was wrong with him, but his almost ceaseless meowing upset me.

I remember playing a Zon-o-phone record of "The Jokesmiths," by Len Spencer and Steve Porter, but it was in poor condition and Mrs. Yarbray found it hard to understand. She mentioned her admiration of her father's interpretation of the Transformation Scene from "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and I gave her my Zon-o-phone version. When I played Spencer's last record, the Edison Diamond Disc of "Uncle Fritz and the Children's Orchestra," Cousin Ethel's eyes brightened and she asked: "Do you have a record as clear as that in which my daddy sings?"

I did have some equally clear singing records, but they were on Blue Amberol cylinders, which I hadn't been able to find. I hope Mrs. Yar-bray will come to see me again and I shall be able to put on "Peaches and Cream" and "Little Arrow and Big Chief Greasepaint."

In both these records, as well as in many others I have, the comedian displays his fine singing voice.

After my guests had gone, Roger resumed his clamoring and I, being almost worn out from my recent plane trip and the still well-nigh unbearable heat, was disposed to be cross with him as I made ready to bathe before going to bed. Then I suddenly discovered why poor Roger had been so unlike his usual radiant self. I had left a lavatory faucet dripping, and Roger suddenly climbed up the side, entered the wash basin and began with feverish eagerness drinking the trickle. After he had swallowed a few drops he started to purr. Then I knew what I had done. That morning I had taken care to feed him, but, not feeling mentally alert, I had overlooked his need for water. So, throughout that blistering hot day and night, the poor little fellow had been suffering acutely for water, and his insistent meowing was to let me know he was parched with thirst. I at once gave him a pan full and after he had drunk his fill I hugged him and, on the point of tears assured him that never again should he suffer for water while he lived with me. Roger nuzzled me, purred and stroked my face with his paw to assure me that he understood my failing was of the head not the heart and that he forgave his temporarily thoughtless "Papa."

LEN SPENCER was one of the performers depicted in a large, handsomely colored poster, "Popular Artists Who Make Records for the Victor," distributed to Victor record dealers in 1908. Victor singers and entertainers, shown on the poster reproduced here, were: Top row—Billy Murray, comedian; Clarice Vance, comedienne; Al H. Wilson, yodler; May Irwin, comedienne, and Harry Macdonough, tenor. Second row—John Philip Sousa and Arthur Pryor, band conductors. Third row—Alice Lloyd and Vesta Victoria, English comedienues. Fourth row—Frank C. Stanley, bass; Corrine Morgan, contralto; DeWolf Hopper, comedian; Ada Jones, comedienne, and Richard Jose, counter-tenor. Fifth row—Emil Keneke, cornetist; Len Spencer, comedian; Arthur Collins, comedian; Byron G. Harlan, comedian, and Darius Lyons, flute soloist. (Jim Walsh, author of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," would like to buy an original copy of this poster.)

HENRY SPENCER, Len's younger brother, who also made records.

I have often thought since of something "Cousin Ethel" said when we had a brief reunion next morning. Speaking of her husband, she said: "Arthur and I consider we've had everything we want out of life. We don't know how much longer we'll be together, but we have had each other for years, loved each other and had a daughter who has been a great pleasure to us. Now she is married to a fine young man and they have a lovely little daughter. What more could we have asked of life?"

What more, indeed!

III. Len Spencer's Early Cylinders

Mrs. Yarbray not only gave me many old family photographs (most of which I have submitted with this manuscript in order that the articles may be well illustrated), but also two booklets which I prize highly. One is a small notebook, with her father's name stamped on the cover — misspelled as Len Spencer — in which, in his own handwriting, are written the names of hundreds of songs. Each title is followed by a number, such as 7210, which seems to indicate a record number, and by letters and figures — C19 is an example — which apparently denotes a filing system of some sort. Reference to an 1899 Columbia record catalog indicates the notebook must have been an index of Len's private collection. For instance, "The New Bully" is followed by 7216, and that is the number of his Columbia cylinder of the same song.

Valuable as this booklet is from the standpoint of possessing something which Len Spencer formerly owned, even more interesting, from the record collector's point of view, is the 1892 catalog which "Cousin Ethel" gave me of records obviously made by the U. S. Phonograph Company, although the firm name does not appear in it. The cover says only "Catalog and Records for Use on the Phonograph" followed by the date, 1892, and the name of the printer, The Holbrook Printing Company of Newark. At the bottom, in what I take to be Spencer's handwriting, is the note, "Sent as marked, Oct. 7, 1892."

ETHEL SPENCER (Mrs. J. A. Yarbray) as she appears today.

Cylinders by Len Spencer monopolize the early part of the book. They are numbered consecutively from 1 to 140, and after the last one appears the notation: "Mr. Spencer is constantly adding to his already extensive musical repertoire. Special records can be furnished to order."

I doubt that even one of these 1892 cylinders still survives, but for historical interest I shall list them here, under the classifications in which they appear in the catalog and following its spelling and punctuation. Besides using his own name, Spencer was also making records under the pseudonym of Garry Allen (Garry, I suppose, from his middle name, Garfield, and Allen from the family name of his wife's relatives), and Larry Leonard — an assumed name of which I had never heard before I obtained the booklet and one which he reserved for comic Irish numbers. "Leonard" of course came from his first name, and Larry I take to be a variant of Garry. "Till the Snowflakes Come Again" was No. 1, and the numbers of the others follow in chronological order:

SENTIMENTAL. Till the Snowflakes Come Again; Life's Story; Just a Little Sunshine; Twelve Months Ago Tonight; Norine Maureen; There's a Light in the Window; Dear Robin I'll Be True; The Song That Reached My Heart; You'll Miss Mother When She's Gone; Annie Laurie; A Quiet Little Home; Her Father Has Turned Her Dear Picture; Marguerite; The Broken Home (Latest Hit); In Old Madrid; A Picture of Her Boy; Mother's Watch By the Sea; Alice, Where Art Thou?; Sadie Ray; Down on the Farm; the Mottoes on the Wall; A Mother's Appeal to Her Boy.

CHARLES T. ELLIS' SONGS. Sunshine Will Come Again; A Buttonhole Bouquet.

WM. J. SCANLAN'S SONGS. Gathering the Myrtle With Mary; The Swing Song; Moonlight at Killarney; Molly O!

IRISH SENTIMENTAL SONGS. Remember Boy You're Irish; Barney, Come Home; Maggie Murphy's Home; Come Back to Erin; Eileen Allanna.

NEGRO SENTIMENTAL SONGS. Carry Me Back to Old Virginia; I'm Gwine Back to Chloe; Old Jasper's Dream; My Old Kentucky Home; I'se Gwine Back to Dixie; Massa's in de Cold, Cold Ground; Old Folks at Home; Old Black Joe; Old Log Cabin in de Dell.

PATRIOTIC SONGS. My Country

LEN SPENCER is at the blackboard in this 70-year-old photograph of the interior of his parents' business college in Washington, D. C.

'Tis of Thee; Hail Columbia; Star Spangled Banner.

WAR SONGS. Tenting On the Old Camp Ground; Marching Through Georgia; Battle Cry of Freedom; The Soldier's Farewell.

DRAMATIC SONGS. Between Love and Duty; the Postillion; Anchored; As Across the Bridge They Go.

TOPICAL SONGS. He Never Came Back; Then You Wink the Other Eye; It's All a Matter of Taste; You're Not in It; In the Dark (Blythe's Latest); It Used to be Proper; I Did It; Mistakes Are Apt to Happen; They Never Told a Lie; Man, Poor Man; They're After Me; It Takes a Girl to Do It; I'll Bet you a Dollar you Don't; I Went With Him.

FROM COMIC OPERAS. Near it "Pearl of Pekin"; Oh! What a Difference "Tar and Tartar"; Ask of the Man in the Moon "Wang"; Bob Up Serenely "Olivette".

DRINKING SONGS. With Chorus. Hi! Waiter; Razzle Dazzle; Have a Glass With Me; We Don't Care If We Do; I Never Drink Behind the Bar.

NEGRO SONGS BY GARRY ALLEN (Nom de Plume). Carve Dat Possum; It's Hard to be a Nigger; Martha's Weddin' Day; De Nigger an' De Bee; Turkey in De Straw; Bran New Little Coon (Monroe H. Rosenfeld's latest success); Put on De Golden Sword; Uncle Billy's Dream; Only Had Fifty Cents; Push Dem Clouds Away (with whistle); Good Bye My Honey.

SONGS AND DANCES (with clog effect) BY GARRY ALLEN. Hello! Babby!; Put on De Bridal Veil; Johnny Get Your Gun; Little Liza Loves You; A High Old Time; Pretty as a Picture.

IRISH SONGS BY LARRY LEONARD (Nom de Plume). When Hogan Paid His Rent; There Goes McManus; Kelly's New Spring Pants; When McCarthy Took the Floor; I Owe Ten Dollars to O'Grady; The Irish Spree; Mickey Brannigan's Pup; The Irish Christening; Come Down, Mrs. Flynn; Patrick Brannigan; McNulty, You're a Daisy.

HARRIGAN AND BRAHAM'S SONGS BY LARRY LEONARD. Take a Day Off, Mary Ann; Wist, Wist, Here Comes the Bogle Man; Paddy Duffy's Cart (Medley); Mrs. Brady's Piano Fortay; The Little Widow Dunn; The Bold McIntyres; The Market on Saturday Night; That Family Overhead.

HEBREW SONGS BY GARRY ALLEN. Solomon Levi; The Sheeny Ball.

MISCELLANEOUS SONGS, BY LEN SPENCER. Ta-ra-ra Boom Der E (with whistle); Paddy Flynn (with Chorus of Shouts, etc.); Drill, ye Tarriers! (with Chorus of Shouts, Blast, Drills, etc.); The Salvation Army (with Chorus, Tambourines, Triangle etc.); Clancy's Trotter (with Trotting of Horse); Song of all Songs (Embracing the Titles of Fifty Different Songs).

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Yarbray and their granddaughter, Karen, taken in 1954
CLARA YARBRAV MOCKERT and her daughter, Karen, in March, 1954. Note the little girl's facial resemblance to her great-grandfather, Len Spencer.

VOCAL SOLOS WITH ORCHESTRA ACCOMPANIMENT, by LEN SPENCER. Sailor's Home Sweet Home; A Buttonhole Bouquet; Only a Picture of Her Boy; Sadie Ray; Maggie Murphy's Home; Down on the Farm; Brighter Days Will Come Again; Dreaming as She Sleeps; A Mother's Appeal; The Mottoes on the Wall.

DRAMATIC. The Postillion; The Old Turnkey.

TOPICAL. They're After Me; It Used to be Proper, But It Don't Go Now; Then you Wink the Other Eye.

COMIC. The Song That Breaks My Heart; Ta-ra-ra Boom Der E.

NEGRO. Good-bye, My Honey, I'm Gone; Martha's Weddin' Day.

IRISH. I Owe Ten Dollars to O'Grady; Since Casey Runs the Flat.

What a parade of now almost utterly forgotten once popular tunes march through the foregoing list! And what a job it must have been to turn out these records, even assuming that the U. S. Company had perfected a duplicating device by this time and that the artist no longer had to sing each number separately! Notice that the greater part of the list is of songs with piano accompaniment, but that some selections were made with the purchaser's choice of piano or orchestra — and it probably was SOME orchestra. A few of the titles later became associated with other artists. For instance, "Turkey in de Straw" and "Bye, Bye, My Honey" today are identified almost entirely with Billy Golden.

Other performers listed in this ancient record catalog are "the popular baritone J. W. Myers"; "the eminent basso, Mr. Thomas Bott"; "the German Dialect Comedian and Yodeler, Mr. L. W. Lipp"; "the Renowned George W. Johnson"; "the Popular Colored Banjoist and Comedian, Chas. A. Asbury"; and there are also "Vocal Solos, with Piano Accompaniment, by Various Artists of Recognized Ability." There are six records by the Original Bison City Quartet — Chas. C. Miller, Ben. R. Cook, Harry C. West and Lester L. Pike.

Under the heading of "Instrumental Records," there is a long list of "parlor orchestra" numbers by Isler's Popular Orchestra. These are followed by band selections, "as played by Gilmore's Band of New York"; cornet duets, "by Messrs. Clark and Dana, with accompaniment by Holding's Military Band of New York"; cornet solos, "By the well-known Cornetist, Mr. Thomas Clark, and accompaniment by Holding's Military Band"; band numbers by Holding's Military Band and Voss' First Regiment Band of Newark; piccolo solos, "by Mr. Geo. Schwenfest, with accompaniment by Voss First Regiment Band; piccolo solos, with piano accompaniment, by Schweinfest; Clarinet solos with piano accompaniment, "by the Popular Soloist and Composer, Mr. William M. Tuson"; cornet solos, with orchestra accompaniment, "As played by the well-known Soloist, Mr. David B. Dana."

Then follow several vocal solos by George J. Gaskin, and 12 numbers by the Manhasset Quartet — Gaskin, Girard, Riley and Evans. Once more there are cornet duets by Clark and Dana. Then come piccolo duets by "Messrs. Atz and Schweinfest"; flute solos by Schweinfest; violin solos by "Signor Spazzati"; chimes records, "from the famous chimes of St. John's Church, Newark, N. J. Extremely loud and brilliant. Unequaled for exhibition purposes."

The late J. A. Yarbray, Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Mockert and their daughter, Karen, in 1954.

I thought I had listed all Len Spencer's records, but now I come to "the O'Grady Records, By Mr. Larry Leonard, with choruses of shouts, cheers, etc." They are: 579, O'Grady's Address to the Montgomery Guards; 580, O'Grady's Speech on Love (with chorus); 581, O'Grady's Speech on Temperance (with chorus); 582, O'Grady on the Labor Question (with chorus, drum and fife corps, applause, etc.); 583, O'Grady's Speech on Free Trade (with chorus); 584, O'Grady at the Guttenburg Race Track (the arrival - the book-maker - "they're off" - the finish - O'Grady "broke.")

Next we have "Vocal Solos by the popular baritone, Allen P. May, of the Howard Burlesque Co."; vocal duets "by the Popular Artists, Allen P. May and Lillian Cleaver"; vocal solos "by Miss Lillian Cleaver, the phenomenal contralto of the Howard Burlesque Co."; and, bless my soul, if here aren't three duets by "Messrs. Spencer and May": 610, The Upper Ten and the Lower Five; 611, The Broadway Swell and the Bowery Bum, and 611½, The Larboard Watch. (Was any other record ever given a one-half number?)

Next are 15 offerings "by the English Minstrel Vocalist, Mr. Will White." Opposite the White records the dealer who apparently sent this catalog to the U. S. Company to have his order filled has written in pencil: "Give us these by Spencer and piano, just as well." This may be what the note on the cover, "Sent as marked, Oct. 7, 1892" refers to.

Charles P. Lowe (spelled in the booklet as Low), who must have been the first xylophonist to make records, is represented by 15. The back cover is devoted to "Army Bugle Calls," by Mr. D. B. Dana ("Announcement Preceding Each"), and to vocal solos "by the well-known Irish Comedian and Vocalist, Mr. Johnnie Carroll."

There is one thing in this old catalog that I regret. My dear friend, the late John Bieling, firmly believed that as a member of the Manhasset Quartet he took part in the first commercial recordings ever made by a male quartet. However, the booklet shows that before John's career began, an earlier version of the Manhasset already was singing for New Jersey cylinders. Two of the members — George Gaskin and John Riley — were in the group with which Bieling was associated. "Girard" is probably Gilbert Girard, the baritone and animal imitator. I can't identify the fourth member, Evans. You may also have noticed that another quartet — the Original Bison City Quartet — was recording concurrently. None of its members' names mean anything to me, except that Harry R. West probably is the Harry West who did a little work for Edison in the early 1900's.

Two other items having to do with the earlier days of Len Spencer's career occur to me. Mrs. Yarbray recalled that her father occasionally gave public demonstrations of how records were made. One of these was presented on Monday, November 28, 1904, for the Capitol Phonograph Company, of 825 Seventh street, Washington. Len's demonstrations of the tricks of a professional recorder's trade must have been helpful to those in his audience who made, or tried to make, cylinder records at home. On a larger scale, that same year he was in charge of the Columbia Company's display at the St. Louis Fair, showing how records were made, and every visitor was given an opportunity to hear his own voice reproduced and permitted to take the cylinder home.

One of the intriguing items which Mrs. Yarbray gave me was a letterhead advertising Len Spencer's Greater New York Minstrels. The illustration at the top shows Len seated as interlocutor and towering over the other performers on each side.

On the left side of the page "Our Comedians" are listed. Those named are Spencer himself, Russell Hunting, Billy Golden, Cal Stewart, John P. Hogan and Frank Somers. "Our Vocalists" are Roger Harding, Steve Porter, Fred Rose (presumably the same Fred Rose who later made Edison cylinders) and William C. Jones. "Our Specialists" are Vess L. Ossman, Wizard Goldin, Spencer Trio, Gilmore Brass Quartet, Diamond Comedy Four, the Three Murray Brothers and Tom Clarke's Brass Band and Orchestra. At the bottom appears: Address all communications, "LEN SPENCER, 36 West 27th St., New York."

Just when Spencer had this minstrel show is a poser. The letter that originally appeared on the sheet has been removed, so there is nothing to indicate the date. The New York address would seem to indicate the show was in operation after 1900, following Len's moving to New York, but the address suggests it was before he set up his first Lyceum on 14th Street. On the other hand, Russell Hunting is included as a performer — but Hunting went to England in 1899, when Len was still in Washington, and didn't return to live in the States for 15 years! This, in turn, suggests the possibility that the show was one using records with Len as the "live" interlocutor — a forerunner of the Columbia Minstrels at Coney Island. If the show used living performers instead of their recorded voices, it must have been restricted to occasional appearances in and near New York, because the expense of giving a traveling production with such famous and high-salaried performers would have been excessive. We probably never shall know the solution now. I imagine the large poster Mrs. Yarbray sent me after she returned to San Antonio belonged to this same phase of Spencer's presumably brief minstrel activities.

But now something else occurs to me. Roger Harding died in 1901, so the show must have been organized at some time prior to his death. I'm afraid I'll have to give up except to hazard the guess that Len may have continued to live in Washington but commuted to New York and maintained a booking agency there. Another thought: The Columbia recording laboratory was at 27th street and Broadway, so the West 27th Street address may have been the Columbia headquarters, which could have served Len as a New York mail address. That seems the most logical solution. The artists mentioned appear to be almost entirely those who, with Spencer, signed exclusive Columbia contracts in 1898.

Concerning Spencer's minstrel activities, Mrs. Yarbray comments: "The 1890 Minstrel Show I know nothing about. I really believe the Len Spencer Minstrels on that letterhead were the dummies at Coney Island. Papa had it at Luna Park and used a huge breathing dragon through which one walked to get to the show. I remember it very distinctly, and I also know there were more than nine dummies. It was a full stage setting. I believe the dummies were named for the famous artists they were supposed to represent. I would have been nine years old at the time they burned."

IV. The Past Four Years

Four years have now passed since my memorable meeting with Mrs. Yarbray, and it has brought to her, as to most of us, her share of both trouble and joy. On June 15, 1955, she wrote to tell me of the serious illness of the husband, whom I called "Cousin James Arthur":

Arthur has been in Brooke Army Hospital for the past five weeks and was in for six weeks from March to Easter. It seems he has a stiff fight still ahead of him, as it was a malignant tumor. Now they are giving him deep X-ray therapy. . . . His reaction will decide whether or not surgery will be necessary. . . . Another "cousin" is due in August, and of course we are all thrilled over the prospect of another grandchild. Clara is doing fine and little Karen is as sweet and adorable as ever.

On October 1, Mrs. Yarbray wrote me the sad news of her husband's death:

Dear Cousin Jim: Arthur passed away yesterday at Brooke Army Hospital, having re-entered on the 2nd of September. God was merciful and spared him much suffering.

. . . . It's been a hard row to hoe and a losing battle all the way, but he passed away peacefully and knew us all on the morning he left.

After her husband's death, Mrs. Yarbray was convinced — as she wrote on April 16, 1956 — that she must "keep my mind and body active to crowd out the awful feeling of loss." so, since she had always enjoyed office work, she obtained a secretarial appointment with the National Guard Branch of the Reserve Components Division at Fort Sam Houston. She commented: "Arthur served his country 45 years and now I am doing my bit to carry on."

There is a bright and cheerful tone to the latest letter I have received from her — the one dated January 20, 1958, from which I have already quoted:

My little family is all well. . . Karen is now past five, Helen is past two, and they are certainly two precious little girls and the pride and joy of my life—though of course my heart belongs to my own gal Clara. Karen is still a little red-head, but Helen is platinum blonde. Eddie is still with Westinghouse and works hard and long. . . He has a level head on his shoulders, so I feel at ease about my kids. As for me, I'm still with Civil Service, having completed my second year with a superior rating of which I am very proud. . . My work is interesting and being with my "Darlin's" Army is a great deal of satisfaction. I feel at home, as you must realize.

I am happy to have had the privilege of setting down for present and future readers of HOBBIES the former Ethel Spencer's recollections of her distinguished father, and I hope that what I have done will not only be informative and entertaining to thousands of collectors of old "popular" records, but will also give pleasure to my cherished "Cousin Ethel" herself.

(The End)

BOOKMARKS

(Continued from Page 25)

Auntie . . . Maggie's Love. This is a beautiful marker, finest perforations, scalloped card—minute stitching in sky blue. For Aunt Mary—mounted on gold perforated card, worked in variegated shades of rose and red wool, and edge of frame worked in one line green cross stitch. A beautiful bookmark, ten inches long, two and one half inches wide. Another large and beautiful one. The Light of Home is Love—lettering in live red, floral center green, yellow, brown and outline of red. Mounted on beautiful wide red ribbon. This type was often used as wall decoration.

Bible quotes or pious sentiments: In God We Trust . . . Holy Bible . . . Search the Scriptures . . . Thou Art My Hope . . . Thou God Seest Me . . . The Lord Will Provide . . . Hope On, Hope Ever . . . The Fear of the Lord is the Beginning of Wisdom. Many of these are breathtakingly beautiful. They are mostly Berlin work.

One unusual specimen depicts a large parent house done in glowing colors, including shade trees, and on either side a smaller home, more than likely the dwelling of married offspring. A custom in olden days. A rare specimen is done in colored beads. A large colonial house in yellow beads, white bead trim, trees and flowers in shades of green, red, blue, etc. It is like a tiny primitive.

Among the sampler type in the collection, is a box filled with small finished pieces depicting squirrels, sailing ships, high smoke stack engines, kerosene lamp and chimney, and topping the group a handsome rooster, flaunting lively feather tints, proclaiming to all and sundry . . . ARISE—'TIS MORN! These may have been the stint set out for the children of the family, and must have furnished many happy moments to the little needlewomen of that day.

About the turn of the century many bookmarks appeared in the Holiday Greeting card trend. Beautifully printed in soft colors, attached to ribbons in colored embossed satin, they embraced Scenic . . . Religious . . . Sentimental and 'Children's series. They were the last mass effort in the nineteenth century commercial production, and were published by Louis Prang, of Boston, Raphael Tuck, of England, later by Rust Craft, and several other well known publishers.

The earliest of the pierced card type are those with embossing. They were made by early publishers as Windsor and Wood, both of whose names are well known to Valentine collectors, and these could have passed as Valentine tokens were the sentiments and groups just a little different. The one marked Windsor is pierced through its entire length, the edge a highly embossed flower border. In a circular cartouche at one end is a family group (Biblical feeling) in high relief, background cut out. They are waving farewell to some unseen person. The words "Aus Leibe" are worked in white silk on the length of the marker, 1840 to 1845.

The second is of a family group, on pleasure bent. A father fishing, a daughter reading a book, seated at the edge of the stream. A mother walking beside a mule on which a small daughter is taking a timid lesson in riding. The mother carries a very tiny sunshade. These figures are in sentimental feeling, in high relief. The word "PATIENCE" worked in a beautiful shade of pink silk thread. To date I have found only two of this type, 1840 to 1850.

Another form of the pierced card-board marker is intricate indeed. The pattern is pressed out between the stamped whole. Usually the design is a cross, which stands alone in the center of the card, and the remainder is pressed out in a lacy pattern. They are extremely beautiful but so delicate that few have survived. I have several perfect ones and several damaged ones, and across the years I hand the palm to the patient designer and the skilled result of her hand and brain. These seem to have been conceived as Easter gifts, for crosses abound, and several have printed lithographed subjects set into a frame-like enclosure. About 1860.

However, Americans are omnivorous readers, and today's trend toward condensed editions, rapid reading courses, etc., has again brought to the fore an awareness of that delightful, delectable time saver . . . The Bookmark . . . So . . .

*Place me between your pages,
And like a sentinel so true,
I'll guard your place and save it,
And hand it back to you.*

ANON.

OBITUARY

ANTHONY L. MARESH, JR.

Anthony L. Mares, Jr., popular member of the younger set in Cleveland, Ohio, recently passed away of a heart attack at the age of 42. At his passing the Cleveland Plain Dealer stated that he had the largest funeral ever held in South Cleveland.

He was president of The Mares & Son Piano Co., "Cleveland's Oldest and Largest Piano and Organ Dealers," the firm founded by his father, 64 years ago. He is survived by his father, mother, wife Vera, six year old son, and a brother.

Anthony Mares, Sr., is a noted Lincoln collector, composer and musician. For many years he was active as president of the Lincoln Association of Ohio. He presented many of his Lincoln documents to the Cleveland Public Library and in later years has assembled a fine group of Lincoln relics which are scheduled for the Western Reserve Historical Society, Cleveland.

Anthony, Jr., took an active interest in his father's collection, and as his father said, "HOBBIES was his favorite magazine."

HOBBIES staff will miss this talented, happy spirited young man, and so will thousands of other people throughout the country, particularly in Cleveland, and in his vacation home of Ft. Pierce, Fla.

JOHN W. GRAY

John W. Gray, Mitchell, Ind., passed away the latter part of July. Prior to his retirement to Mitchell, where he and Mrs. Gray operated an antique shop in their hotel, he was a theatrical furrier in Chicago. He was a member of the Illinois chapter of the Sons of the Revolution, and a member of the Masonic order for 52 years.

He was particularly interested in the diamond as a hobby and wrote "The Historical Romance of the Diamond."

His retirement years were spent between the antique shop and Spice Valley Ranch, near Mitchell, where he and Mrs. Gray raised Palomino horses.

There is but one virtue; to help human beings to free and beautify life; but one sin: to do them indifferent or cruel hurt; the love of humanity is the whole of morality. This is Goodness, this is Humanism, this is the Social Conscience.

—J. William Lloyd

RAY WALKER, as he appears today, surrounded by sheet music of his songs.

AMERICA'S GREAT POPULAR SONG WRITER, IRVING BERLIN, served his country in uniform besides writing patriotic song hits.

ELSIE JANIS, who became "The Sweetheart of the AEF" from entertaining overseas troops in 1918.

RAY WALKER'S RECOLLECTIONS OF ENTERTAINING

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE.—This article is dedicated to my old friend, the veteran song writer, Warren Raymond Walker, who suggested that the patriotic achievements of the theatrical profession in the First World War should be commemorated this month, the 40th anniversary of the signing of the Armistice.

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs and records. Parts and anything pertaining to old phonographs. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. d3882

WANTED: Cecilian Phonograph, upright or table model, walnut or mahogany. Also other makes except Victor, Columbia and Brunswick. Record catalogs, supplements and other phonographic material. Please describe fully and state prices. No bids. — D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. ja3046

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

Rare Phonographs For Sale: Edison, Columbia, Victor and many rare models. New lists. Large list of hard-to-find cylinder records, parts of all kinds, repairs, reproducer repairing a specialty, player piano books and catalogs. 25c for lists. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. d36501

FOR SALE: Phonographs, duplicates of my collection. List 25c. Need Edison Excelsior. — Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. d3042

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia phonographs. Hundreds of cylinder and disc records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppennoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. n3886

Forty years ago, at 11:11 a.m., on November 11, 1918, the shooting stopped in the First War to end war. It is almost no exaggeration to say that the noise from millions of rejoicing men, women and children the world over came close to blowing holes in the sky. Because of that fortieth anniversary, this seems an appropriate time to review the splendid work done by American singers, stage stars, song writers, and other theatrical persons in World War I.

The world of "show biz" stimulated civilian morale on the home front and entertained American fighting men both at home and abroad. Since this department is chiefly interested in recording artists, we'll first mention the activities of a representative few of the men and women who were making discs and cylinders 40 years and more ago.

The tireless work of the late Arthur Fields in recruiting hundreds of members for the old 71st Regiment is still well recalled. Recently I came across an amusing photo of this famous song writer-comedian riding on the back of an elephant from the New York Hippodrome to deliver an "Army and Navy" model of the New Edison phonograph to New York's First Signal Corps. The Edison Company supplied hundreds of these instruments without cost to military camps, and famous stars, including, Anna Case and Alice Verlet, gave direct comparison "tone tests" with them. After one such test by Mme. Verlet, Raymond Hitchcock, the master of ceremonies, who had made Victor and Columbia records, remarked:

MISCELLANEOUS

EARLY CYLINDER and disc phonographs, records, reproducers, catalogs, parts. Bought, sold, repaired. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f6806

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mh122361

EARLY CYLINDER and disc phonographs, records, reproducers, catalogs, parts. Bought, sold, repaired. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f6806

SINGLE or collection cylinder records by Bettini; complete phonographs German, French, American; antique, unusual musical instruments. — Rita Ford, 907 3rd Ave., New York 22, N. Y. mh6407

WANTED TO BUY: Early piano items of all descriptions. Piano catalogues and broadsides, pamphlets and price lists before 1890. Also old New York City Directories. — M. Curtis, Pianos, 362 W. 57th St., New York 19, N. Y. ap64811

PLAYER PIANOS $75 to $500. Standard Player Rolls, 3 for $1. Also Aeolian, Duo-Art and Deluxe. 78 R.P.M. Victrola Records. Some Pathe Sapphire & steel cut.—Berlin's, 660 Neil Ave., Columbus, 8, Ohio. ja3825
(Classified ads continued on page 33)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

THE MAYO "SHOCK TROUPE" UNIT IN FRANCE, 1918. Standing—Lois Meredith, Margaret Mayo, Elizabeth Brice, Will Morrissey and Sgt. Bernard Sobel. Sitting—Thomas J. Gray and Ray Walker.

"Some phonograph! I couldn't tell the artist from the Edison!"

Other Edison artists, including Amy Eilerman, George Wilton, Ballard and Sibyl Sanderson Fagan gave similar tone tests, thus combining entertainment for the men in uniform with good publicity for the New Edison. During 1918 there was a nationwide drive to collect so-called "slack-er" records (records which the average family owned but didn't play) for the pleasure of the fighting forces. During a week-long drive in New York City, recording artists sang repeatedly on the steps of the Public Library, but were concealed inside a huge oak replica of a Chippendale model Edison. A rather amusing account of their activities is given in the December, 1918, issue of Along Broadway:

Marie de Kyzer, who sang several times herself, brought her husband, Mr. Donald Ross Cummings, with her one afternoon. Mr. Cummings is so tall he said he'd feel uncomfortable inside the phonograph—which was about seven feet high—but he consented to sing on the outside with Miss de Kyzer as his accompanist. Vernon Dalhart, too, not only sang but provided another singer. This time it was a cousin—a coxswain in the Navy—whose uniform and his delightful singing of "Caroline" quite captured the audience. Harvey Hindermeyer, Yvonne de Treville, Julia Heinrich, Reed Miller, Gladys Rice, Marion Evelyn Cox, George Wilton Ballard and Betsy Lane Shepherd were others who contributed their services to the movement to send music in its most varied and interesting shapes to the boys overseas. In camps and on ships.

I wonder if Dalhart's cousin were Guy Massey, who was credited with being the composer of that best-selling record of 1924-25, "The Prisoner's Song." Of course other phonograph companies rallied to the nation's service. Victor, for instance, placed the greater part of its factory space at the government's disposal in making war equipment, and many Victor artists, among them John McCormack, Olive Kline, Elsie Baker and Sir Harry Lauder (whose only son, John was killed in the war) were active in recruiting programs and Liberty Bond sales. Lauder was afterwards knighted by the British government and became Sir Harry Lauder.

The famous American violinist, Albert Spalding, gave up his instrument for the duration to serve his country in uniform. The still living Joe White, who became famous on radio several years later as "The Silver-Masked Tenor," enlisted and while in uniform made several Columbia records under the name of J. Malachy White. Another still active singer and song writer, Geoffrey O'Hara was musical director at Fort Oglethorpe in Georgia. He wrote "K-K-Katy." Percy Hemus taught singing to sailors at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

A sailor on recruiting duty, W. J. ("Sailor") Reilley, sang on a few Victor records. Poor Reilley's health failed after the war and he lingered on for many years as an incurable invalid in an Illinois military hospital. A Negro musical group, Lieutenant Jim Europe's 69th Infantry (Hell-Fighters) Band, made a large number of Pathé discs featuring the still popular comedian, Noble Sissle, who also recorded many solos. And we must not forget the war-time services of Sergeant Irving Berlin, who qualifies as a recording artist because of having sung a Columbia disc of one of his compositions, "Oh, How That German Could Love," as long ago as 1910. (This was one of the records I played when I appeared on Dave Garroway's "Today" program last May. It was played in spite of Mr. Berlin's asking me how much I would charge NOT to use it!) Berlin not only wrote some of the best popular songs with a war-time theme—"For Your Country and My Country," "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning," "I Can Always Find a Little Sunshine in the YMCA," and "I've Got My Captain Working For Me Now," among them—but was the guiding spirit of the production of "Yip-Yap-Yaphank" at Camp Upton. His services in World War II were equally great.

Now on to Ray Walker's recollections of the part played overseas by the show business in that outburst of global insanity 40 odd years ago.

II. Ray Walker Recalls

First though, Ray would like to quote from a book, "Entertaining the American Army: The American Stage and Lyceum in the First World War," written in 1921 by a dramatic producer and coach, James W. Evans, and Captain Gardner L. Harding, who was attached to General Pershing's staff at Chaumont in the Intelligence Division of the War Department:

The American stage was one of the powerful forces behind all the Liberty Loans, Red Cross drives and United War Work campaigns. It was directly instrumental in raising hundreds of millions of dollars. It recruited the entertainers from every available source, including actors, lyceum entertainers, lecturers, singers, musicians, song leaders, motion picture stars and operators, vaudeville performers, soldier shows, stock companies—all merging in this achievement, which required the organization of play bureaus, costume and scenic factories, transportation offices and the leasing of many of the most famous theaters in Europe. It enrolled in its operations at home and abroad more than 35,000 men and women. It is estimated that more than 20,000 actors, professional and semi-professional, with lyceum workers, singers and amateur entertainers, appeared before the soldiers in American camps.

Perhaps a majority of the 1918 performers are now dead and the surviving veterans who saw them put on their acts are fast moving out of a middle-age status into the elderly class. But most of the old-time front line entertainers who still survive have keen memories of what they say and did in those long-gone days. One of the keenest memories belongs to Ray Walker.

Ray says the Over There Theater League was organized April 23, 1918, at the Palace Theater in New York City. E. F. Albee, head of the Keith vaudeville circuit, was host. Albee named George M. Cohan as chairman. As a result of the meeting more than 700 entertainers volunteered for overseas service. A good many performers were already in France, but a much larger number was needed. Elsie Janis, who went to France in March, 1918, to appear in a Paris theater, had her contract cancelled, so she volunteered to sing for the soldiers under YMCA auspices. Because of her work among the service men, Miss Janis was called "The Sweetheart of the A.E.F." More than 20 years after the war ended, the "Sweetheart" was making the rounds of veterans' hospitals, telling jokes and singing songs the men had liked. Her overseas piano accompanist was William Januashchek, who went across in December, 1917, before the Over There Theater League was formed.

Ray Walker recalls that Winthrop Ames and E. H. Sothorn went to France in January, 1918, at the suggestion of Mrs. August Belmont who was already there to study A.E.F. entertainment needs. They gave shows, watched shows, mingled among the men and conferred with General Pershing at his headquarters in Chaumont, as well as with YMCA heads in Paris. Returning to the United States they gave a dinner on April 6 at the Metropolitan Club. Among the guests were Albee, Daniel Frohman, and the chairman of the National War Work Council, William Sloane.

The next step was to organize the theatrical managers. A dinner at Sherry's was attended by almost every prominent manager. Included were Cohan, Lee Shubert, Marc Klaw, Abraham L. Erlanger, Frohman and Albee. On April 17, they sent out this proclamation to the entire theatrical profession:

Mr. E. H. Sothorn and Mr. Winthrop Ames have just returned home from a three months' tour through the American camps in France. They report that entertainment, and particularly entertainment sent from "home," is vital to the morale of our troops

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

"PIANOLIN" for sale. Needs restoring but in good condition, $300. Also German merry-go-round organ, $350. National nickelodeon, needs repairing, $175. — Glenn Gould, Jr., Box 25, Shirley Center, Mass. n1842

MELODEONS

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED INSTRUMENTS. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. au126551

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor. — Jim Walsh, Box 478, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinorah: Sei vendicata—any number, size or coupling; outside or centre start. — Alda Pavia-Artsay, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

RECORDS by John McCormack. — James Sanford, 601 N. Broadway, Weatherford, Okla. o12407

there. They bring a message from General Pershing emphasizing the need.

The opportunity has come for our men and women of the stage to serve, in person, our soldiers abroad. This opportunity for service is so important that we feel it should be brought before the American Theater as a whole. Will you attend a meeting at the Palace Theater on Tuesday morning, April 23, at 11 o'clock, to consider the situation? Mr. Sothorn and Mr. Ames will describe the situation in France. The need is urgent. We bespeak your presence.

The appeal was signed by Albee; Cohan, as Abbot of the Friars; Rachel Crothers, president of Stage Woman's War Relief; Walter Damrosch, president of the Musicians Club; Charles Dillingham; John Drew, president of The Players; Daniel Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund of America; Joseph Grismer, shepherd of The Lambs; Mark Klaw of Klaw and Erlanger; Willard Mack, president of National Vaudeville Artists; Lee Shubert, president of Shubert Theatrical Company; A. Augustus Thomas, president of American Dramatists and Composers; and Francis Wilson, president of Actors Equity Association.

The next step was the meeting at the Palace, with more than 2,000 show business personalities attending. Cohan said: "General Pershing has called upon the actor to line up with the rest of the manhood and womanhood of America and now is the time to send him his answer." He read this telegram from President Woodrow Wilson: "I learn with greatest interest of the work you are undertaking in collaboration with Mr. E. H. Sothorn and Mr. Winthrop Ames. It has my most cordial approval and I wish you the best possible success. It is a big undertaking, but I have no doubt you will accomplish it."

Ames explained the situation confronting actors in France. He said they were virtually in Army service and subject to Army discipline. Then he added: "I have no doubt that if any of your performances over there should be bad enough to warrant it, the officers in command might order you out and have you shot at dawn."

III. Over There!

Officers of the Over There Theater League were set up at the Little Theater, where they remained nine months. More than 700 performers immediately volunteered for service and over 15,000 did later. A hall on Ellis Island was the try-out center. The first volunteers under the League program sailed July 31, 1918; the last, May 15, 1919. The League ceased its activities the following July 15, but some performers including Ray Walker remained overseas until all AEF entertainment ended.

Margaret Woodrow Wilson, daughter of the President went to France October 23, 1918, after spending the summer entertaining at camps and army centers at home. She was overseas seven months and sang at practically every center the American army was occupying. Her accompanist was the composer-poet, Mrs. Ross David, whose husband also sang. Many record collectors have Miss Wilson's Columbia record of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Will H. Cressy and Blanche Dayne, well remembered from the stage classic, "The Old Homestead," were in the first company to arrive in France after the Over There Theater League was formed. Others were George Austin Moore; Howard T. Collins (musical director of Victor Herbert's "The Only Girl"), and Helene Davis. Later, Stella Hoban joined the troupe. Their initial performance was given in London at the Eagle Hut and was the first presented abroad by a League unit. Like many others, Cressy was gassed before the war ended, but didn't realize it until he cut himself with an axe almost a year later. Then the latent gas poisoning brought on an infection.

(Continued on next page)

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. ja120061

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold. —James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. d3084

RECORDS: Old popular, jazz bands, personalities, blues, hillbilly and western, comedy, Victor single face, religious. Everything but classical. Send wants to William C. Praster, Sr., 438 N. Broad St., Woodbury, N. J. ja3215

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (Stamp please). n3863

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, P. O. Box 155, Verona, N. J. d128801

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists. —Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. n3618

RARE VOCAL RECORDS at auction. Items for the basic collection and the advanced collector. Also early disc and cylinder phonographs. — George Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. d3234

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold. —Record Collectors' Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. ja68801

FREE "Personalities" catalogs - rare records and broadcasts by radio, stage, screen, television personalities. —Amalgamated Records, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. o126121

GOLDEN - AGE and cut - out vocals, personality discs, band, orchestral and instrumental records, catalogs, books and photos. Write for free monthly lists. Distributors of Roccoco records, LP re-issues of famous voices of the past: Melba, Patti, Caruso, Tetrassini, Gerville-Reache, etc. — Ross, Court & Co., 2098 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont., Canada. n1804

IV. The Margaret Mayo Troupe

The Margaret Mayo Troupe was among the next to go. Miss Mayo, a noted playwright took over the "Mayo Shock Unit," consisting of the comedienne, Elizabeth Brice, former singing partner of the late Charles King, with whom she made Victor and Columbia records; film star Lois Meredith, who joined the company from the Alcazar Theater, San Francisco; Playwright Will Morrissey, who was afterwards briefly married to Miss Brice; and two song writers—the late Thomas J. Gray and our friend, Ray Walker. Ray was also a member of a later group, the "Gloom Chasers," which included Eddie Fredericks, Olive Palmer and Ida Van Tine.

Miss Mayo wrote a book, "Trouping for the Troops," recalling some of the amusing, tragic and terrifying experiences of her group. On one occasion the troupe was sent to within three miles of the firing line, into woods that had been under German occupation for four years. They were to play chiefly to a company of engineers who had not seen a woman in 18 months. The service men were sitting on the wet ground, on logs, around a stage they had built and equipped from German loot. She writes:

It was screened from above by a thick canopy of leaves and boughs so as to escape detection by the enemy planes. Four small German machine guns, also salvaged, served as chairs for us. There was even a piano salvaged from a nearby dugout that had been occupied for four years by German officers. We inspected the dugout later and found it was cement lined, calclimined and wired for electricity. The piano which had been originally captured by the Boche was now to be played by an American musician, Ray Walker. At intervals through it all came the steady boom of the big guns, slaughtering while he played.

In similar vein, Walker recalls that at another time when a show was being given the whole division was ordered to the front lines. The troupe's automobile went with them, and the performers had to walk to the nearest railway station and wait for a box car to take them "home". "We arrived there," he says, "five hours later, at midnight, hungry and freezing."

THE LATE ARTHUR FIELDS, riding a Hippodrome elephant down Broadway, on his way to present the First Signal Corps with an "Army and Navy" phonograph in 1917.

GEOFFREY O'HARA, who taught the soldiers at Fort Oglethorpe to sing, autographs a record for Quentin Riggs in Oklahoma City.

Walker's list of members of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers (ASCAP) who went with the Over There Theater League includes, besides Gray, Morrissey, Elsie Janis and Ray himself, George Botsford, Herman Paley and Dorothy Donnelly. Other song writers were George Spink, Henry Souvaine and Irene Franklin's husband, Burt Green. Other piano players included Ed Porray, Harry Ferguson, Howard T. Collins, Harry Israel, Lucie Bancroft, Diano Kasner, Helen Collay, Henry Marcus, Arthur Downing, Amy Horton and C. Allen Lewis.

V. More Walker Recollections

This seems a good place to pause and insert more of Ray Walker's own personal recollections. They are frequently, but not always, amusing:

Tom Gray was in the lowest class in the draft. He tried to enlist several times but had TB and was always turned down. Will Morrissey had only one eye and they wouldn't take him, either. I was above the draft age, but tried to enlist. At Palham's Bay they turned me down three times. The main reason we went over with the Y was that we thought we might get into the army that way.

One night we were giving a show on a truck when the soldiers started hissing and called us slackers. For five minutes we couldn't talk until a General made them keep quiet. We started the show and in about a minute Tommy and Will got them to laughing and we finished the show with the boys cheering us. Next day we went to the Adjutant and told him we couldn't stand it any more and wanted to enlist. He listened to us and when we got through he said: "You keep up doing the work you are doing. You are doing lots of good by making the boys happy and you would be of no use as soldiers. I heard the show last night and you are braver than I am. I would have quit when the boys began hissing."

In Bar-Le-Duc we were giving a show for French and American soldiers. When Elizabeth Brice finished her song the French soldiers began hissing and the Americans started applauding. It looked like a riot was starting and we got off the stage quick. At last the Mayor of the town got upon the stage and explained in French to the French soldiers that Americans applaud when they like anything. He explained in English to the Americans that the French hissed when they were pleased. Things were peaceful after that.

Elizabeth sang a song I wrote for her in her act and in the wards of hospitals where she entertained. She would pick out the most bashful soldier and sing directly to him. At the end of the song she would kiss him and all the rest of the soldiers would laugh. The title of the song was "I'd Like to be a Sister to a Brother Just Like You." We never published it.

In one ward at the hospital in Chaumont we were entertaining in a ward and she sang to a soldier who was very bashful. He pulled the covers over his head when she pointed at him. All the other soldiers laughed. When she finished the song she went to him, pulled the covers off his head and found him dead. He had died from nervousness while she was singing. She put the covers back over his face and never sang that song again. That was the end of the song and the kissing.

I was standing in the lobby of the Folies Bergere one day waiting for the doors to open. Four American soldiers and four English officers were waiting also. One of the English officers kept looking at the AEF insignia on the American sleeves. One of the English officers in an insolent tone asked one of his fellow officers what the AEF stood for. He kept repeating this about a dozen times. At last one of the American soldiers got mad and told the English officers, "AEF means 'After England Failed.' I got out of the lobby quick for I felt a fight was coming. A battle did start in a few minutes. They smashed the whole lobby and I stood outside watching. Everything was ruined.

In Aix-Le-Bain there was a "leave area" where soldiers went for a rest. Two divisions were there—a few men at a time. They were the "Yankee" 26th Division of New England—the National Guard, who were volunteers—and the drafted 81st Division called "The Wild Cats." One morning one of the Wild Cats wrote on a board in front of the YMCA, "They call us the Wild Cats—81st Division." One day one of the Yankee Division wrote underneath the sign, "They didn't call us—we volunteered." A battle started on the street whenever a Yankee Division soldier and a Wild Cat soldier met.

The Gloom Chasers, with whom I played after the Mayo Troupe disbanded following the armistice, were stationed at Aix-Le-Bain for two weeks to give shows in the YMCA. One night after the show I was on my way back to the hotel when I passed a cafe where a lot of soldiers were singing inside. It was pretty cold, so I thought I would go in the cafe and have a hot rum. When I opened the door all the singing stopped. They thought I was a regular Y man. On my right sleeve there was a big YMCA. On my left sleeve it read "Entertainment," but I sat on the end of the table and they saw only my right arm. I ordered a hot rum and drank it with every soldier as quiet as a mouse. When I finished the drink I ordered another. A few minutes later I ordered still another as it was very cold outside and I was frozen stiff. After the third rum one soldier on my right asked if I was a YMCA secretary. When I told him I was (I didn't mention the entertainment branch) the soldier asked why I was drinking. I explained then I was in the entertainment branch and ordered a round of drinks for all the soldiers in the place.

I offered to show them the sights of the town if they would meet me the next morning. At 8 a. m., they were waiting for me outside my hotel. I took them up to Mt. Revard, and that afternoon I bought each of them an ice cream soda—a glass of seltzer with a dash of sirup. It cost me one dollar each. They were so tired at night they stopped going to the cafe. I was their guide all week until they left the area.

After they left I was standing in the Y hut when I was told the secretary wanted to see me. I thought he wanted to bawl me out for drinking with the soldiers, but when I got the courage to see him he told me he had been watching the work I had been doing. He shook hands and said, "I want to congratulate you. We had been trying to get those soldiers into the Y and you were the only person who succeeded!" I wonder if he knew the hot rums did it!

VI. Other Recollections

Besides contributing these reminiscences, Ray Walker asked some of his "show biz" friends for their recollections. One, Harry Ferguson, recalled he and his wife, Ida May, went across as a team, at the suggestion of George M. Cohan, who himself wrote the greatest American song of World War I, "Over There." The production was called "The Variety Show," and Ferguson says:

I was the manager, emcee and accompanist, besides doing our act which closed the show. The other people with our show were Fred Livingston and Winifred Williams. Some other acts that I remember off-hand are Cantwell and Walker, Mary Boland, Elizabeth Brice, Perry and Wilbur, Cressy and Dayne, George Austin Moore, Hunting and Francis, Burr McIntosh, Elsie Janis, and the Victor recording artists, Horace Wright and Rene Dietrich.

It was tough going over there. No planes to take us anywhere. We had Ford jalopies assigned to us to hold five people—us, the driver and hand baggage. It was an experience we won't forget but wouldn't undertake again. We sailed on the Orduna in August, 1918, and arrived back in the U.S. on the President Wilson in May, 1919. We were in Paris the day of the Armistice, and at 7 in the morning I helped decorate the statue of Joan of Arc opposite Red Cross headquarters. After Christmas, Ida May and I did 75 songs in a hospital outside of Paris one afternoon. Now we are a couple of old-timers enjoying our reminiscences.

The former concert soprano and Columbia recording artist, Amparito Farrar, who is now Mrs. Goodrich Smith of Fort Myers, Fla., recalls doing a "single act." She too, went over in August and was in Paris when the Armistice was declared. "Those," Miss Farrar says, "were rugged days for all of us. The modern troop entertainment is something we couldn't vision, but I think ours was helpful. I retired from the concert stage, married a doctor and now we are both retired and enjoying living in Florida."

Herman Paley, who wrote such popular songs as "Billy," "Cheer Up, Mary," "Keep On Smiling," and "Sweet Little Buttercup," recalled that he left New York in a convoy of 13 ships September 13, 1918, and arrived in Liverpool 13 days later. The figure 13 continued to trail him, for after entertaining in Liverpool and London, Paley sailed for France on November 13, two days after the Armistice. "Finally," he said, "I was assigned to play for a show given by the boys themselves. We called it 'The Victory Players.' I was musical director and pianist. There were about 25 to 40 in the outfit. We traveled all through France, Belgium, Germany and Holland in big army trucks. Ever since then, and I am now 75, that wanderlust possesses me, and will never be stilled."

After the Victory Players broke up and went back to the States, Paley remained abroad and entertained with units of individual artists. Ray Walker also stayed overseas until there was no more need for troop entertainment. He had planned to return home in April, 1919, but at the request of A. M. Beatty of the YMCA's Entertainment Department, he remained until the Theater League disbanded its activities. After he was back in Brooklyn, where he still lives, he received from Madison Cory, Regional Director of the Le Mans Region, a medal commemorating his services. This was accompanied by a letter which Ray treasures, saying:

"I am happy that under such trying conditions you never faltered in giving to the Service all you possessed but with a splendid conception of duty, without any thought of professional standing or your own condition, met every call and request promptly and cheerfully."

That letter gave Ray Walker a warm glow back in 1919, and it still does, almost 40 years later. But our friend's face takes on a wry expression when he recalls what happened when he started back home on the U.S. America, after two years of entertaining the troops, with a trunk full of clothes and souvenirs. On the return trip he played for the men in the "sick bay" and other parts of the ship. But, "When I went for my trunk after landing in Hoboken," he recalls, "I found it contained just one dirty shirt. The Navy took me over and the Navy sure 'took me' coming back!"

Of the entertainers so intimately associated with Ray's overseas experiences, Margaret Mayo, Thomas Gray and Will Morrissey are dead. He believes Elizabeth Brice is still alive (she was operating a tea room on 47th Street, New York, in 1938), but isn't sure what has become of Lois Meredith. Ray himself, though in poor health, a few months ago observed his 60th anniversary as a song writer. During much of the time, since he returned from France, he has entertained in night clubs as a player of the piano and piano-acordion. I hope this glance backward into the exciting days of 40 years ago will please him and that he will soon recover his health and be able to go on giving pleasure to his huge number of friends and admirers.

Orille B. Rhoades

CIRCUSIANA

Questions & Answers

By DANA W. STEVENS

Q: Is there any record of the earliest woman animal trainer?

A: In 1840, an English circus called Hilton's presented an animal act presided over by a Miss Hilton, the owner's daughter. It is presumed the animals were lions because she was called the "Lion Queen." However, another English performer, Miss Nellie Chapman became the most celebrated Lion Queen of that era. She traveled with Wombwell's circus. Miss Chapman left this circus in 1849 to get married, and thus a new Lion Queen had to be found. That person was a young lady named Helen Bright who unfortunately, figured in the first death in a cage. She had a habit of flicking the animals on the face with her whip. One evening in 1850, a tiger, enraged, sprang upon her and bit her so severely on the head that she died shortly afterward. This incident put an end to the use of "Lion Queens" for many, many years. Mabel Stark was possibly the greatest of them all. She handled tigers in the same cage with a black panther. Her body, as she was fond of remarking, "bore more scars than her tomcats have stripes."

Q: Was there ever a clown act under the big top that did an imitation of Amos and Andy?

A: There was, but I must confess that I haven't many specific details concerning this act. I saw this act in person at the Sells-Floto Circus sometime in the early 1930's. As I recall, the two clowns working this presentation were in black face and dressed as Amos and Andy of radio fame. They had a model T-Ford that was covered with humorous signs. The key point of the act was the argument that took place between the two clowns. As they argued they were unaware that their "taxi" moved by itself on around the hippodrome track. Needless to say, audiences loved this fun-making.

Q: What kind of costume does Lou Jacobs wear?

A: Lou Jacobs is a white-face clown. He wears a small derby hat on top of his high false dome. He sports a huge red bulbous nose that is accented by an ear-to-ear grin. His most notable prop is the pint-sized automobile that amuses and yet puzzles everyone. The puzzle stems from the way he stuffs his six-foot, 176 pound frame into his little car.

WANTED

WANTED: Schoenhut "Humpty-Dumpty" Circus Cage-Wagons, Chariots, Tents, Side-show Drops, Equipment, Animals, Performers. Have some for sale or trade.—Charles G. Kirk, 927 West Park Road, Iowa City, Iowa. n1072

NEW JAZZ BOOK

The Collector's JAZZ, Traditional and Swing, by John S. Wilson. Keystone Book, J. B. Lippincott Company, East Washington Square, Philadelphia, Pa. Copyright 1958. 319 pages. Paper bound. Price $1.45.

Here is a book to "guide the neophyte," offer "new paths for the collector," and stimulate the "veteran collector." It covers jazz styles before World War II.

Part II gives the recordings (on 12 inch long-playing disks), their maker and number, and the top artist playing the lead in each. This should be very valuable to collectors.

The first section, THE BACKGROUND, is a brief history of the development of jazz. What it was, who did it, what each jazz leader contributed, and where, are given. The explanation of "what jazz is" is worth anybody's time. This is interesting, informative reading.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted By JIM WALSH

Charles Hart

Tells the Story of His Life to

JIM WALSH

Note By Jim Walsh

HOBBIES readers for many years have urged me to tell the life story of one of the most popular of pioneer recording artists, Charles Hart. Among others, this request has been made by Philip L. Miller, of the Music Division of the New York Public Library.

I am happy that I am now able to fulfill these solicitations with an autobiography written by Charles Hart himself. The tenor has told his story in such a clear and characteristically straight-forward style I believe it has resulted in one of the most interesting articles I have ever published — one that is an auspicious means of bringing to a close the 1958 volume of FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS.

By CHARLES HART

1. In the Beginning

I was born May 16, 1884, on South Halsted street in Chicago and was christened Charley Hart. When I began to sing professionally I took my father's name, Henry, and called myself Charles Henry Hart. Later I used only the middle initial of H. When the Actor's Equity Association came into being I again wanted to call myself Charles Henry Hart, but because they had a member named Henry Hart I was not permitted to use the name of Henry. So I settled for Charles Hart, although Charles Henry Hart is more euphonious.

My parents were born in Germany. My mother, whose maiden name was Elsie Timm, was born in Schoenfeldt, a suburb of Hamburg, December 8, 1857. My father's birthplace was Bielefeldt. I do not know the exact date of his birth, but imagine he was about the same age as my mother.

When Mother was 18 she came to the United States on a sail ship and landed in Baltimore. It took her six weeks to cross the Atlantic. Father came over with his parents when a boy and they settled in Hoboken, New Jersey. Mother was 26 when she met Father in Chicago, and they were married there.

Father was a civil engineer, and talented, but drink ruined what otherwise might have been a fine career. It also brought poverty and misery into our home, and when I was four years old he deserted us, leaving a note in which he wrote that he was of no use to himself or to us and that we would be better off without him. We never heard from him again, and I often wonder what became of him. How right Abraham Lincoln was when he said: "Liquor has many defenders but no defense!"

II. An Impoverished Boyhood

Mother was an excellent cook, and she secured a position in a family where she could have me with her. We now fared better. My father was right. We were better off without him. When he was with us we often went hungry, and Mother made my clothes from her old dresses. A suit with kilts which I had at the age of four she made herself. She must have had quite a wardrobe, for she never had a new dress after she married. Father's earnings were all handed to bartenders.

My mother's first position was with a family by the name of Silverman on the south side of Chicago. The next was on the north side with an evangelist, Merton Smith, and his wife and small son. He was very zealous for the Lord and preached in a mission on Clybourn Avenue which was supported by Dwight L. Moody's church. Mother had a great religious sense. She went to church every Sunday and I to Sunday school. For this I have always been grateful, for it gave me a knowledge of the Bible and an insight into the better side of life.

We next lived with a family named Withrow on the corner of North and Dearborn Avenues. I was now six years old and started grammar school. It was the Sheldon school on the north side of Chicago. When I was seven we went to live with a family on the corner of Oak street and LaSalle avenue. There I went to the Wendell school.

I was then seven years old. In the summer I went barefoot and sold newspapers on the corner of Chicago

SWISS MUSIC BOX

Langdorff & Fils, Fabricants
Geneva (Suisse)

Case in mint condition, Rose and fruitwood. Machine in good playing condition. Is a 4 cyl. 3 in the drawer and one in the playing position. Drum, Bells and Castenets. Price $395.00

WHAT NOT SHOP

7907 Herschel

LaJolla, Calif.

do

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1825

EXPERT REPAIRING

FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

Free estimates, appraisals & lists.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. (Pa. 8-1506) Pelham, N. Y.

tdo

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc).
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record, catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York

tfx

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

THE CRESCENT TRIO — Hart, Shaw and James making a recording

Avenue and Clark Street. When paying their street car fare some of the passengers took transfers, which they didn't need. I would give them a paper for a transfer. Then I sold the transfer for three cents. In this way a rider saved two cents on a five-cent fare. Newspapers, of course, cost only one cent. We were business men in those days.

I was nine when we went to live with an Adams family in Green Bay, Wisconsin, which at that time (1893) had a population of about 5,000. This was a high spot in my life, for it was my introduction to the country and the beauties of nature. With fishing in the Fox river, swimming in the bay and going barefoot, it was veritably a small boy's paradise.

III. An Illinois Newsboy

After a year and a half Mr. Adams failed in business and we went to live with a couple by the name of McCullough in Evanston, Illinois. They were both lawyers, and Catherine Waugh McCullough was well known as an ardent worker for woman suffrage. They had a young son named Hugh. He was then four and I, eleven. He is now a prominent lawyer with offices in Chicago. We lived with the McCullough family for about a year and a half and then Mother got other work and we rented part of a double house. I helped by cutting lawns, taking care of furnaces and delivering papers before school. If Horatio Alger, Jr., had known me he could have used me for one of his hard-working young heroes. Our rent was $20 a month, an incredibly small sum, but the dollar was worth something then. Round steak was ten cents a pound, or three pounds for a quarter, with free liver for the cat and all the ox tails you could carry home from the slaughter houses.

Evanston was a lovely university town of about 25,000, with a YMCA equipped with bowling alleys, a gym and swimming pool — and all this for dues of five dollars a year. I finally finished grammar school and later Evanston Township High School. I also sang in the choir of St. Mark's Episcopal Church and in time became the tenor soloist. We had a wonderful choirmaster, Robert Holmes. He taught us to read music at sight and for this I have always been grateful, for it was valuable knowledge when I came to make singing my profession.

IV. An Aspiring Singer and Cowboy

I had been able to sing from the time I was four, but now I became really interested and began to study. I attended the Chicago Musical College and took dramatic art, fencing and singing lessons. My very first public performance was the role of the smuggler, Dancairo in "Carmen." This was an amateur production given by the Musical College in the Auditorium Theatre in 1902.

In the spring of that year I met a dentist in Evanston, who practiced in the far West. He would go from ranch to ranch and take care of patients in a rocking chair. He suggested I might enjoy working on a ranch and gave me a letter of introduction to a friend who had a ranch near Medina, North Dakota. The Northwestern Railway gave me a pass to Oaks, N. D., the end of their line, and from there I took the Northern Pacific to Medina, not very far from Oaks.

I stopped with my dentist friend's family for a short time and then went to the ranch, where I spent the summer. As I had worked one summer for Chicago & Northwestern RR. they gave me a pass. I received a dollar a day and meals. When I asked where I would sleep they said I could take my choice between the sheep barn and the cattle barn. I tried the sheep's quarters first, but the ewes were lambing, and it was "Baa! Baa!" all night long.

When I couldn't take any more of that I went to the hay loft in the cow barn. After a rat fell off one of the rafters and hit me on the chest I decided to go back to the sheep barn and make the best of it.

I finally learned how to ride and stay on in the saddle, rope and brand, but it was a tough life and at the end of the summer I was quite willing to be a tenderfoot again. I'd had enough horseback riding to last me a lifetime and I have never boarded a horse since. There is no romance in cow punching.

I went from there to Jamestown and worked for a young man who had a shanty alongside the railroad track. His father, who was a prominent man in Bismarck, came down one day for a visit and said he felt I had a good enough education to do something for him. He took me to Bismarck and gave me a job locating the water mains of the city and drawing a plan of them. I had an office in one of the buildings he owned and lived at a very nice boarding house. This job ended at the end of the summer and I went to Mandan, North Dakota, just across the river, and got a job on a cattle train which took me back to Chicago. Mandan was an interesting small city. Near it was Fort Lincoln from which Custer and his troops left for the fatal battle with the Indians at the "Little Big Horn."

Next, I went back to Medina and stopped at the little hotel there for a couple of days. Three meals and lodging cost a dollar a day—75 cents for three meals and 25 cents for sleeping. All the beds were double ones and you never knew before retiring whom you would bunk with. There were always two men to a bed. They put their pants under the pillow so no one could go through the pockets during the night. There was no light in the rooms and you took up a kerosene lamp from a table in the hall.

I worked my way back to Chicago on a cattle train and slept in the caboose. Whenever the train stopped I had to take a pole and get the cattle that had fallen back on their feet. This was child's play compared to what I had been through with the horses.

The big city looked wonderful. My mother had moved to the south side and I enrolled as a student in Armour Institute of Technology for a four-year course of engineering. I ran an elevator at night in an apartment building to help support myself and Mother.

I find this part of my youthful days gracefully referred to in the Victor record supplement for August, 1918. Reviewing the record of "Paul Revere (Won't You Ride for Us Again?)" which I sang with the assistance of the Shannon Four — you'll hear more of them later — the catalog editor said:

"Paul Revere" . . . is an invitation to the great patriot to ride again and rouse us once more with war's alarms. . . . Charles Hart is a good one to sing this song, as before his beautiful voice developed he was a cowboy out West; like Paul Revere, also, he is greatly interested in mechanics. In fact he returned from the West to study electrical engineering at the Armour Institute of Technology in Chicago. His voice proved so effective in entertaining his friends, however, that he moved over to the Chicago Musical College, and developed his powers as a singer. Soon after he joined an opera company and another electrical engineer was definitely lost to the world.

This flattering write-up was headed with a picture of me pushing a wheelbarrow full of leaves. It had a sub-title, "Charles Hart likes to mow his own lawn" — a throwback, though the editor didn't know it, to the days when I mowed lawns and delivered papers to help Mother make a living.

V. On the Stage

The Chicago Musical College was owned and operated by Dr. Ziegfeld and his sons, "Willie" and the famous "Flo," later of Ziegfeld Follies fame. I used to go down to the college occasionally and one day in the spring of 1904 "Flo" asked if I would like to go on the stage. "The Sultan of Sulu," with Frank Moulan, was

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR Sheet Music to 1850 Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colorado. 1e124221

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. d3253

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kansas. ad1214241

DUO-ART upright piano. Excellent condition throughout. Expression perfect. $395 fob.—Harvey Roehl, Vestal, N. Y. d1821

WANTED - 44-note Wurlitzer piano music. 10 tunes to the roll. Also rolls of a music.—Dan Gray, P.O. Box 3181, Fort Worth, Texas. mh4675

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

AIR CALLIOPE WANTED. Playable or repairable condition. Immediate answers to all.—Orchestra Leader, 420 S. Main St., Plainwell Mich. d3403

WANTED: Band organs and rolls. Give model No., condition and price.—Don McElhinney, Box 207, Marlon, Iowa. ja3272

MUSIC ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO music rolls bought, sold and traded. all makes and types.—D. Nickelson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Md. d6276

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale; all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. jel20422

ORGAN FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Electrified Reed organ, in family 75 years. Black walnut, beautifully carved, 70" high, 45" wide, 22" deep. Excellent condition.—Mrs. Lillian Samson, 2223 Goldenrod Street, Sarasota, Florida. f3215

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs and records. Parts and anything pertaining to old phonographs.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. d3882

WANTED: Cecilian Phonograph, upright or table model, walnut or mahogany. Also other makes except Victor, Columbia and Brunswick. Record catalogs, supplements and other phonographic material. Please describe fully and state prices. No bids.—D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. ja3046

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

Rare Phonographs For Sale: Edison, Columbia, Victor and many rare models. New lists. Large list of hard-to-find cylinder records, parts of all kinds, repairs, reproducer repairing a specialty, player piano books and catalogs. 25c for lists.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. d36501

FOR SALE: Phonographs, duplicates of my collection. List 25c. Need Edison Excelsior.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. d3042

MISCELLANEOUS

EARLY CYLINDER and disc phonographs, records, reproducers, catalogs, parts. Bought, sold, repaired.—Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f6806

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mh122361

EARLY CYLINDER and disc phonographs, records, reproducers, catalogs, parts. Bought, sold, repaired.—Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f6806

SINGLE or collection cylinder records by Bettini; complete phonographs German, French, American; antique, unusual musical instruments.—Rita Ford, 907 3rd Ave., New York 22, N. Y. mh6407

PLAYER PIANOS $75 to $500. Standard Player Rolls, 3 for $1. Also Aeolian, Duo-Art and Deluxe. 78 R.P.M. Victrola Records. Some Pathe Sapphire & steel cut.—Berlin's, 660 Neil Ave., Columbus, 8, Ohio. ja3826

WANTED: Reproducing piano rolls, Jazz and ragtime rolls. All types of music rolls except standard player. Roller organs. Literature pertaining to any type of mechanical musical device. Anything unusual in the player line. State price and condition.—Larry Givens, Wexford, Pa. ja3656

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

"PIANOLIN" for sale. Needs restoring but in good condition, $300. Also German merry-go-round organ, $350. National nickelodeon, needs repairing, $175.—Glenn Gould, Jr., Box 25, Shirley Center, Mass. n1842

MELODEONS

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED INSTRUMENTS. Also buy and repair; reasonable.—C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. au126651

VIOLINS FOR SALE

STRADIVARIUS violins for sale, with papers. Write for appointment.—Matile M. Fair, 1120 Ash St., Muskogee, Okla. f3272

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor.—Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinarah: Sei vendicata—any number, size, or coupling; outside or centre start.—Aida Favia-Artasy, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

RECORDS by John McCormack.—James Sanford, 601 N. Broadway, Weatherford, Okla. o12407

WANTED: Premium prices for harp electric recordings, 78 speed.—Joe Kral, 1010 Park Ave., Highland Park, Ill. f3272

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7,500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

EDISON, COLUMBIA cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. d3084

RECORDS: Old popular, jazz bands, personalities, blues, hillbilly and western, comedy, Victor single face, religious. Everything but classical. Send wants to William C. Praster, Sr., 438 N. Broad St., Woodbury, N. J. ja3215

CATALOGUES, BOOKS. Free list, scarce items, reasonable prices.—Bob Foote, 427 Gilham St., Philadelphia 11, Penna. f3662

RARE RECORDS, lowly priced. Free lists. Collections bought.—E. Hirschman, P. O. Box 155, Verona, N. J. d128801

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists.—Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, New York. f3618

RARE VOCAL RECORDS at auction. Items for the basic collection and the advanced collector. Also early disc and cylinder phonographs.—Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. d3234

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold.—Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. ja68801

FREE "Personalities" catalogs - rare records and broadcasts by radio, stage, screen, television personalities.—Amalgamated Records, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. o126121

GOLDEN - AGE and cut - out vocals, personality discs, band, orchestral and instrumental records, catalogs, books and photos. Write for free monthly lists. Distributors of Rococo records, LP re-issues of famous voices of the past: Melba, Patti, Caruso, Tetravini, Gerville-Reache, etc.—Ross, Court & Co., 2098 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont., Canada. ap62381 playing at the Studebaker Theatre, and he said they needed an extra chorus man. Would I care for the job? Of course I would and from that day on I was a full-fledged professional. When the show closed I got a job at the La Salle Theatre in "The Royal Chef." I played there for several seasons in a number of shows. The most outstanding ones were "The Isle of Bong Bong," with Al Shean, and "The Time, the Place and the Girl," with Florence Holbrook and Cecil Lean. In the latter I had a small part and in the next one, "Honeymoon Trail," I did the leading juvenile. Now I was on my way and out of the chorus at last.

VI. First Recording Experience

In spite of rehearsals and the night shows I managed to pursue my studies at Armour Tech. The theater was closed for part of the summer and in the summer of 1906 I was employed by the Columbia Phonograph Company to demonstrate how personal records could be made on the old cylinder machine. The Company had an office in Chicago and H. L. Willson was the manager. I can shut my eyes and see Willson now—a man with an oval face, who wore glasses and parted his dark hair in the middle. On November 20, 1906, he was transferred from Chicago to Columbia's New York headquarters and afterwards became the Company's general manager.

Willson said I had a perfect recording voice and predicted I would be making records for Columbia and other companies. Some ten years later he proved to be right.

After the La Salle Theater engagement I went on the road with the Joseph Sheehan English Grand Opera Company, to sing the tenor roles in "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Martha," "Carmen," "The Bohemian Girl" and "The Mikado." We played the whole summer in Winnipeg, Canada. When the opera company closed I went to New York to join a vaudeville act, which failed. And so, I was stranded in the big city. I borrowed the train fare home from Clarence Dickenson, organist of the Brick Presbyterian Church on Fifth Avenue. I had known Clarence in Chicago, and he was most kind and gracious. The fare was only $16—but that is a lot of money when you haven't got it.

VII. "Charlie Ryan," The Song Slide Singer

Back in Chicago, I got a job singing illustrated songs in a Madison Street nickelodeon, The Alcazar. For those who may not be familiar with this long gone sort of entertainment, let me say the singer was in the dark at the side of the stage with a small light on his music. On the screen were shown slides illustrating the song lyrics. These were flashed onto the screen by the operator in the front booth who ran the moving pictures. I was paid $25 a week at first, then $35. I took the name of Charlie Ryan and became known as "The Irish Tenor." It took me years to live that down, and for a long time afterward I was still known to some people as Charlie Ryan. My advice to artists is to stick to one name. If one sings respectable songs there is nothing to be ashamed of.

But—to look forward several years to my recording career—in the beginning the better known singers did not want to use their names on records. It was Enrico Caruso who removed the "curse." If he could use his right name, anybody could.

Popular recording artists, like myself, however, did use assumed names in singing for the smaller companies, as the larger ones didn't like for us to use the names under which we made records for them. At one time I had yearly guarantees from six companies for $3,000 each. This agreement was made to keep me from signing exclusively with one company. As I remember them, they were Victor, Edison, Aeolian Vocalion, Columbia, Okeh and His Master's Voice of Canada. But I also sang for a good many others, including Pathé, Emerson, Gennett, Brunswick, Paramount and Grey Gull.

While singing the illustrated songs, I also for a time, sang with a mixed quartet from 11 p.m. to midnight in the old "Boston Oyster House" beneath Hotel Morrison. For this I received $25 a week. So with the $35 I finally received from the picture show I was making $60 a week.

When I had paid all my debts and saved a little, I went back to New York and was engaged to sing the tenor role in "The Spring Maid," with Christie MacDonald and Tom McNaughton, husband of the famous English comedienne, Alice Lloyd. We played the season of 1912-13 at the New Amsterdam Theater in New York and toured after we closed there. That was three or four years before I began making records.

I again returned to Chicago, got a church job and sang small oratorio dates. With money I had saved I had already set my mother up in a small business so that she could manage without me. Now I could give my ambition free rein. I had become interested in Free Masonry, so I took the first three degrees and became a Master Mason. The next four degrees made me a Royal Arch Mason. Then followed the Commandery, Knight Templar and Shrine. I was now a member of St. Cecilia Lodge, St. Cecilia Chapter, Chicago Council No. 4, St. Cecilia Commandery, and Medina Temple Shrine. Later I joined the New York Consistory and became a 32nd Degree Mason. Now I had everything except the 33rd, which is purely honorary. I was quite a joiner in those days. But I have never had reason to regret it for in the various bodies I made many wonderful friends.

VIII. Professional Recording Artist

In 1915 I returned to New York and, remembering what Mr. Willson had told me in Chicago about my having a good recording voice I made a test record some months later for a small, short-lived company called the Perma. Fred Hager was the manager. Shortly afterward, I was engaged to do some recording and my very first record was "Little Grey Home in the West."

About this time a bass singer, the late James Stanley got up a male quartet to make records. I was the first tenor, De Los Becker, second tenor, William Simmons, baritone, and Stanley the bass. I can't remember what companies we recorded for, but I think one was Pathé.

In 1917 Victor wanted a new male quartet and Wilfred Glenn was asked to form one. This was called the Shannon Four. I was the first tenor, Harvey Hindermeyer, second tenor, Elliott Shaw, baritone, and Wilfred Glenn, bass. Hindermeyer stayed with the quartet less than a year and was replaced by Lewis James. Harvey died in the fall of 1957, but the rest of us who were associated with the quartet 40 years ago are still around. Bill Glenn has retired to a farm near Charlottesville, Va.; Elliott Shaw lives at Sharon, Conn., and Lewis James is a program director for WGN in Chicago. On occasion, when three voices seemed better suited to a song than four, Hart, Shaw and James made records as the Crescent Trio.

In 1923, Cesare Sodero, who was musical director of the Edison Company, arranged an audition for me with Mr. Polloco of the Chicago Civic Grand Opera Company. I was engaged to sing tenor roles and made my debut in December of that year in "Koenigskinder," by Humperdinck. In the cast were Claire Dux and Alexander Kipnis. That year I left the Shannon Four or Shannon Quartet, as it was now called. Franklyn Baur took my place as first tenor and was followed by James Melton. Baur was instrumental in getting the boys to do jazz numbers and the name was changed in 1925 to the Revelers. For a considerable length of time Ed Smalle made our arrangements, and later Frank Black took over as arranger and accompanist. Frank Banta accompanied the boys on a trip to Europe in 1928.

When I started recording for Perma I was tenor soloist in the First Methodist Church of Mount Vernon. I also sang in a synagogue on Washington Heights, besides singing in a picture house on Eighth Avenue for $25 a week. So I was doing pretty well. Being a member of the new Victor male quartet, I had an opportunity to make a test record and they engaged me to record regularly. The first song that I recorded for Victor was "It's Time for Every Boy to be a Soldier."

I must not omit mention of a male quartet which the Edison company organized in 1920 to record jazz and comedy numbers and which stayed together until about the time I left the Shannon Four. I was first tenor, Billy Jones, second tenor, Steve Porter, the baritone, and Harry Donaghy, bass. Steve Porter was jokingly called the "silent baritone." He would cup his right ear in his right hand and almost rest his chin on the horn. We had long horns in those days in place of the microphone and electrical recording had not yet been thought of. Porter's voice must have blended in, for the records had a good vocal balance. But I don't believe that anyone actually ever heard Porter's voice. He had invented an earphone for the hard of hearing (it was suggested by his mother-in-law's being deaf) and it was called the Portophone. He did quite a business, but no one could have heard Steve's voice even with one of his Porto-phones!

This photo of Charles Hart was illustrated in the August, 1917, Victor Record Supplement

Of course, in a male quartet, the baritone, being an inner voice, is unimportant. The same thing is true as in a mixed quartet—the contralto is the least important voice, but it must be there for the tonal blend. In a regular standard male quartet the first tenor and bass are the important voices, for the first tenor carries the melody and the bass is the foundation. It is like figured bass in harmonic progression. In popular music it is different, for the second tenor usually carries the melody and the first tenor tops it.

IX. The Lambs—Early Radio Days

Again looking back to my early recording days, I had a most interesting experience in 1918. There was a Liberty Loan rally, sponsored by the Victor Company, in Carnegie Hall. Caruso and Farrar both sang. As I was doing a lot of Victor recording, they asked me to appear on the program. That night I met Caruso and had a short talk with him. It was a genuine thrill.

In 1920 I joined The Lambs, a theatrical club, and there I met an old man named Ferguson. He had been call boy at Ford's Theater in Washington the night Lincoln was shot, and he told me all about it.

The famous composer, Victor Herbert, and the noted prize fighter, Jim Corbett, were both Lambs and good friends of mine. I had lunch at the club with Victor the day he died. He left me, went home, had a heart attack and passed away. He was an Irishman educated in Germany and spoke with a German accent. Can you imagine that?

Jim Corbett loved to tell me all about his fights. He said that when he trained for his fight with John L. Sullivan he worked in the gym for one year. The first day he put in 10 minutes and at the end he was doing five hours. Jim was in fine shape at 60. He said that when Jim Jeffries fought Jack Johnson he was in Jeffries' corner. It looked bad for Jeffries from the start and in one round he yelled to Johnson: "Don't you dare knock him out, Jack!" He said Jack leaned over Jeffries' shoulder and with a broad grin displaying a lot of gold crowned teeth said: "How long shall Ah let him stay, Mistah Corbett?"

The fight with Jeffries took place on a July 4th, when I was singing the illustrated songs. A saloon stood next to the little picture house, and between songs I went into the saloon to look at the ticker tape and see how the fight was progressing. In those days a man would come down with 20 cents, looking for a job. He'd allot 10 cents for carfare, five cents for the movie show and five cents for a glass of beer with all the roast beef, baked ham and rye bread he could eat. One day a man brought along an alarm clock, set it and put it under his seat in the show, so as not to be late for a job. It went off in the middle of my song. Ah, those were the days!

Now here's something that staggered me. Just before the New York Hippodrome was torn down, I sang in a performance of "Aida." As I passed the front of the house I saw an announcement that Jack Johnson would appear in the opera. I couldn't believe my eyes. Jack Johnson in a grand opera! Well, at the end of the second act, where the Ethiopian captives carried me seated on a throne, there was Jack Johnson as one of the slaves helping to lug me on stage! I spoke to Jack afterwards and he remembered Corbett yelling at him not to knock Jeffries out.

The first radio program ever broadcast in the metropolitan New York area went on the air in 1921 from a WJZ studio in a factory in Newark, New Jersey. Those who took part were myself, Elliott Shaw, Lewis James, Wilfred Glenn and "The Happiness Boys," Billy Jones and Ernie Hare. Tom Cowan was the announcer, and he is still announcing for WNYC in New York City. There is a picture of the group in one of the studios at NBC, New York.

This picture was taken in St. Louis when Charles Hart was with the Municipal Opera Co., there in the summer of 1924.

My very first introduction to radio was in the home of Herbert Berliner in Montreal. From time to time I used to go to Montreal to record for him. He had the His Master's Voice of Canada company. Herbert had rigged up a "sender" in the recording studio down town and a receiving set in his home. After dinner he said: "Now I'm going to give you a surprise. I shall have records played in the studio and we shall hear them in this room." It was fascinating. We all remarked how wonderful it was for the sound to come through the air and through the brick walls of the house.

X. Abroad And At Home

In the summer of 1924 I sang tenor roles in "The Prince of Pilsen," "The Lilac Domino," "The Fortune Teller" and "Naughty Marietta," with the St. Louis Municipal Opera Company.

In 1925 I went to Berlin, Germany, for radio broadcasting and to make records in German for the Electrola company (the Victor of Germany). Returning to New York, I resumed recording and was engaged by the Shuberts to play and sing the part of Dr. Engel with the original company of "The Student Prince." In 1927 the Opera Comique of Paris came to New York for a short season, and I sang the tenor role in "Girofle, Girofla" with them at the Johnson Theater, which is now called the Century. The beautiful old Century Theater was on Central Park, West, but it was torn down to make way for an apartment building. More profitable, I suppose.

George Gershwin had composed a grand opera called "135th Street." I was engaged to sing the part of Joe, the gambler. Paul Whiteman and his orchestra provided the musical accompaniment. We gave two well received performances in Carnegie Hall. It was rather a unique kind of grand opera.

(Continued on page 49)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

CHARLES HART TODAY

In 1929 I again went to Germany with my wife, three children and mother. So as not to change the language in their education, I put the three girls in English boarding schools—the first in Southampton, the next in Buxton and the third in Banks, England. For some five years I sang in the opera houses in Berlin, Dresden, Breslau and Mannheim and also made Electrola records. I lived there three years under Hitler, but since I was an American and kept my mouth shut, I was never molested. Germany was becoming so nationalistic I realized it held no future for me, so in October, 1934, I returned with my family to the U.S.A.

Five years in Europe made a better American of me. As a nation, we have our faults, but there is no country in the world so good and free as the good old U.S.A. Of all the European countries I liked Germany best — until the Nazi rough-house started. I used to go to the Sports Palace in Berlin to hear Hitler speak. It was a lot of rubbish. But there was something magnetic about the man. He could hold an audience for an hour and 40 minutes.

When I went to Berlin in 1925 the Germans were recovering from the inflation. They looked back with horror on the first World War, but when you mentioned inflation they shuddered. Most of the people who had been wealthy had been brought low and had lost everything. Just imagine this: 40,000 marks had been a lot of money. It was about $10,000 in our coinage, yet when inflation came it wouldn't buy a ride on the subway.

A telephone operator told me she had a room with a formerly wealthy family. In her room were two chairs and a settee, but she had been using only one chair. One day when she came home there was a rope tied from arm to arm on the chair, so she couldn't sit in it. The lady told her it just would not do to sit in only one chair. She must sit in all of them, so that they would all wear out a little, and not just one.

"And," said the operator, "there is a young man working here in the American Consulate who had this experience. He was living on a pension. The first Sunday morning he decided he would lie abed for a while and make up some sleep. Then there came a knock at the door and a voice said it was time to get up. He said he was going to stay in bed a while longer, whereupon the voice said in that case he would have to pay a little extra per week, as remaining in bed an unusual length of time would cause extra wear to the bed linen and he would have to pay for that extra wear."

The telephone operator worked in the American Consulate. This story, incredible as it sounds, is true. The former rich wanted the money for rental, but they wanted to keep their things just as in former days. Poor Germany! And just when they had almost recovered, came Hitler and the whole country was ruined. You can't blame the German people. It was go along or go to a concentration camp. To buck a man like Hitler calls for a leader of the opposition—and there was none.

(To be continued)

DEATH OF MRS. REED MILLER

(Nevada Van Der Veer)

HOBBIES readers who read the article in the March, 1958, issue, about the tenor, Reed Miller, will be sorry to learn his wife, known professionally as Nevada Van Der Veer, died September 26 in French Hospital, New York. She was 74.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller conducted the Van Der Veer-Miller Summer School at Lake George, N. Y., from 1920 until Mr. Miller's death in 1923. From 1934 to 1950 she was head of the voice department of the Cleveland Institute of Music. She taught privately after returning to New York.

We are also sorry to learn of the serious illness of the baritone, Albert Edmund Brown, who was the subject of a Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists biographical sketch in June and July, 1952. We are sure Dr. Brown would be glad to receive letters from his admirers. His address is: Valley-Hi Nursing Home, 4686 Asbury Circle, Denver, Colo.

MUSEUM NEWS

(Continued from page 44)

cabinet with 34 Sèvres plaques, a side table, an occasional table, and four secretaries variously of satinwood, rosewood, amboyna wood, and marquetry, all of the Louis XVI period (1774-1789).

The 55 superlative examples of Sèvres porcelain are colored in the favored turquoise-blue, royal blue, apple-green, and rose-Pompadour hues with medallions of painted scenes; they include, among others, two extraordinary boat-shaped potpourri vases, a pair of elephant vases, and various garnitures.

There is also in the Kress gift a royal Savonnerie carpet made for the Palais du Louvre at the order of Louis XIV. In addition to clocks, wall barometers, and candelabra, the Kress gift contains a suite of furniture (four pieces bearing the stamp of Georges Jacob) and matching wall hangings made for Marie Antoinette.

The interior of the room from Croome Court is complete in all its architectural elements—wood paneling, mahogany doors, mirror and elaborately carved frame, inlaid console table, marble mantel with its central slab of lapis lazuli, ornamental plaster ceiling, and oak flooring—as well as its furnishings, in chief its celebrated set of tapestries and tapestry-covered settees and chairs.

Croome Court is in Worcestershire, the seat of the Earls of Coventry. About 1760 Robert Adam was called in by the sixth Earl to decorate the interior of Croome Court. Some of the designs by Adam are now preserved at the Soane Museum in London.

The famous tapestries were woven to specification by Jacques Neilson at the Royal Gobelins Manufactory in Paris, between 1766 and 1771. Their pictorial panels with the loves of the gods were designed by François Boucher and the floral surrounds by Maurice Jacques. They were woven to hang edge to edge, so as to cover the entire wall-surface above the dado. The tapestries consist mainly of a rose-colored, simulated silk damask with a floral pattern, and the nominal subject of the tapestry is rendered in the guise of a small framed painting, partially outlined by "shadow" and apparently hanging on a wall covered with the material. The illusion is further heightened by the woven designs of enframement, with birds, flowers and hunting horns, at the edges of the tapestries. This method of hanging tapestries was peculiar to England and was unknown in France. Among the several other tapestry-covered Adam rooms of this type in England is that, of a decade later, at Osterley Park.

Soon after 1900 the tapestries and the matching furniture were separated from the room itself. They were sold to a French collector and remained in France for a number of years until they came to this country, where they were purchased by the Kress Foundation.

Now the room and its celebrated furnishings will be reunited for the first time in over half a century at the Metropolitan Museum. The room will be shown to the public in several months.

Samuel H. Kress was a long-time trustee and benefactor of the Metropolitan Museum. He died in 1955. At the time of his death he had served on the Board of Trustees for nearly twenty years.

Charles Hart

Tells the Story of His Life to

JIM WALSH

PART II

(Continued from the December Issue)

Note By Jim Walsh

HOBBIES readers for many years have urged me to tell the life story of one of the most popular of pioneer recording artists, Charles Hart. Among others, this request has been made by Philip L. Miller, of the Music Division of the New York Public Library.

I am happy that I am now able to fulfill these solicitations with an autobiography written by Charles Hart himself. The tenor has told his story in such a clear and characteristically straight-forward style I believe it has resulted in one of the most interesting articles I have ever published — one that is an auspicious means of bringing to a close the 1958 volume of FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS (See Dec. Issue) and starting off the year 1959.

By CHARLES HART

XI. Later Years

On my return to America, I sang for a time with the San Carlo Grand Opera Company and other small companies, and also did some radio broadcasting and miscellaneous singing. Many strange and humorous things happen in grand opera. It is so close to burlesque that if one departs from the serious vein there's likely to be trouble. I recall that during a performance of "Faust" with a small Italian company the following incident occurred. Faust has pledged his soul to the devil in exchange for his youth. Near the end of the opera Mephisto puts his cape around Faust. They both step on the trap which is supposed to take them to the lower regions. This night the trap stuck and there we were with only our heads and shoulders showing. Whereupon a boy yelled from the gallery: "My God, they can't get in! Hell is full!" That ruined the rest of a very serious opera.

I was now getting along in years and I realized that one cannot sing forever, but you can play dramatic parts until you fall over, so I began to look for dramatic engagements. I will give a brief list of the shows I have appeared in:

"Sing Out, Sweet Land," with Alfred Drake and Burl Ives; "Catherine Was Great," with Mae West; "Spring in Brazil," with Milton Berle; "The Iceman Cometh," by Eugene O'Neill; "Come Back, Little Sheba," with Shirley Booth; "As You Like It," with Katherine Hepburn; "The Silver Whistle," with José Ferrer; "The Girl of the Golden West," with June Havoc; "Oklahoma," and "The Witness for the Prosecution," in which I played the judge on tour.

When I was playing at the Harris Theater in Chicago with "The Witness for the Prosecution" in 1956, I made a tour to all the places where I had lived as a boy some 66 years before. The houses were all there, but some in a dilapidated condition. To quote a well known author, "My thought did walk down the corridors of time," and I felt a real affection for Chicago, where I had spent many happy years and some sorrowful ones.

My mother passed away in 1945 at the age of 88. I owe her so much I am grateful that in her older years I was able to take care of her. My three daughters are married and I have ten grandchildren. My life has been a happy one and the world owes me nothing. Singing is a joyous occupation.

And now, a few odds and ends: I have served as soloist in the following New York churches: The Old First Presbyterian and the Park Avenue Baptist, which is now the Riverside church. When I sang there, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., often invited us to his home for supper after the Vesper service. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick was the minister, and what a preacher he was! I remember a line from one of his sermons: "The drama was once a child of the church; it is now a prodigal in a far country, feeding swine." I wonder what he would say today! In 1929 I was soloist in the Second Church of Christ, Scientist, New York City, and I have served as soloist in the Mother Church, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston. I also enjoyed singing in many reformed synagogues and have sung many a Requiem Mass. All this taught me how various religions worship God.

The only dog I ever had was in Green Bay, Wis., and the fox terrier's name was Toby. A picture of Toby and myself, which I hope can be reproduced, was taken when I was about eight years old. What an old dog Toby would be if he were still here! I have never owned a cat, but they are sweet and lovely creatures.

CHARLES HART, aged 8, in 1892, with Toby, his dog. Toby looks like a forerunner of the Victor trademark dog, "Little Nipper."

Writing this story of my life's experiences has brought back pleasant memories. If you enjoy reading about them half as much as I enjoyed the writing I shall feel richly rewarded.

XII. More About Hart's Recordings

I am sure you who are reading this have enjoyed Charles Hart's account of his life and career as much as I have. However, I'd like to comment briefly on some phases of the recording activities of my dear friend, "Charley," whom I have not yet met in person, but with whom I am hoping to clasp hands before another year has gone.

Although the tenor, whose voice is still clear and youthful, says his first Victor record was "It's Time for Every Boy to be a Soldier," that recording does not come first in numerical sequence. The Hart record with the lowest number is 18283, "'Forever' Is a Long, Long Time." However, its release was held back for several months and it did not appear until the November, 1917, supplement. Meanwhile, in July, Victor had issued No. 18294, "Thou Shalt Not Steal (A Heart Away)" and Crescent trio; left to right, James, Shaw, Hart.

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted by JIM WALSH

CHARLES HART, 1912, as Baron Rudi in "The Spring Maid."

18300, "It's Time for Every Boy to be a Soldier." These early recordings constitute the singer's first Victor catalog appearance.

The first Victor record on which Charles Hart sang both sides appeared in August, 1917, together with an excellent photograph of him. The number was 18319 and the titles, "A Tear, a Kiss, a Smile" and "That's Why My Heart is Calling You." The catalog editor said: "Charles Hart has a fine lyric tenor which he uses to advantage in these two numbers."

The Shannon Four made its first Victor appearance in September, 1917 on No. 18333, singing "I May Be Gone for a Long, Long Time," which was coupled with the American Quartet's version of the greatest American song hit of World War I, "Over There." The Shannons were back in October, singing "Wake Up, Virginia," and in November with a revival of Charles K. Harris' Spanish-American War song, "Break the News to Mother." Hart also had another double-faced coupling that month: "Somewhere in France is Daddy" and "So Long, Mother." The quartet sang three titles in December—"Come Back Home," "Hello, Aloha, Hello" and "Melody Land." In January, 1918, it did its famous version of "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," while Hart offered a solo, "Somewhere in France is the Lily." By this time both the tenor and the quartet were Victor favorites.

Another view of Hart, 1912, as Baron Rudi in "The Spring Maid."

Mr. Hart does not mention his recording partnership with Elliott Shaw, which for five years made Hart and Shaw rank with Albert Campbell and Henry Burr as one of the two most popular duet teams singing popular ballads. The first Victor duet by the pair, "My Belgian Rose," appeared in that same August, 1918, supplement which contained the already quoted brief biographical sketch of Hart. Oddly, Shaw's name was placed first, but always afterwards the team was known as Hart and Shaw instead of Shaw and Hart—no doubt because "Hart and Shaw" has a smoother sound.

Hart also sang duets with other artists for Victor. Among them were Lewis James, Helen Clark, Elizabeth Spencer and Louise Terrell (Elizabeth Lennox).

Undoubtedly three of the most popular records he ever made were in duet form: "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles," with Shaw; "Till We Meet Again," with James; and "Let the Rest of the World Go By," with Miss Spencer. In 1920 Hart and Shaw remade three 12-inch records which had been originally sung many years before by Frank C. Stanley and Harry Macdonough: "The Crucifix," "Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah" and "My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

The Shannon Four sang four Edison Diamond Discs about the same time the quartet made its first Victor records. The titles were "Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here," "I May Be Gone for a Long, Long Time," "Katy Mahone" and "Lullaby." The latter featured Helen Clark as soloist with the quartet's assistance.

Although the Shannons continued to make Diamond Discs, their name, for Edison purposes, was changed to the Lyric Male Quartet. In this guise the foursome served as assisting artists to several distinguished operatic and concert singers, among them Anna Case, with whom they sang "Good-bye, Beloved, Good-bye," "How the Gates Came Ajar" and "Love Lifted Me." They also sang with Virginia Rea in "Good-bye, Beloved, Good-bye"; with Frieda Hempel in "Hush, Little Baby, Don't You Cry," "Kentucky Babe" and "Vesper Hymn"; with Maggie Teyte in "Tse Gwine Back to Dixie," and Marie Rappold in "Little Bunch of Honeysuckle."

Charles Hart's name appeared for the first time as an Edison artist in 1918 when he sang "Life's Railway to Heaven," with "Edward Allen"—a disguise for the famous Metropolitan Opera bass-baritone, Arthur Middleton. His first Diamond Disc solo was 80444, "Molly Darling."

Hart and Shaw made only a few Edison duet records, but the tenor probably did more general duet work for Edison than for any other company. Besides Shaw and Middleton, he sang for Edison with James, Miss Clark, Miss Spencer, Leola Lucey, Betsy Lane Shepherd and Harvey Hindermeyer. He also did several duet records with a sweet voiced soprano, Esther Nelson. Hardly anyone who bought the records knew Miss Nelson in private life was Mrs. Charles Hart.

It was Edison alone among the major recording companies which gave the tenor a chance to show what he could do as an opera and oratorio singer. His photo appeared on the cover of the February, 1924, Edison supplement, which listed, as Diamond Disc No. 80774, his superb versions in English of "Celestial Aida" and "Oh Paradise" from "Africana." There was a brief comment: "Hart has just been engaged by the Chicago Opera. Good luck, Charles!" In that same year Hart and Miss Nelson remade the record of the Miserere from "Trovatore," which had been in the Edison catalog for years as sung by Agnes Kimball and Hart's old friend, Charles Harrison. He also remade "A Dream," which had originally been sung by the English tenor, Hardy Williamson, and he, Elizabeth Spencer and Vernon Archibald did a remake of the "Silent Night" record previously made by Spencer, Archibald and John Young. Even that was a remake, for the first version was by Miss Spencer, Royal Fish and Thomas Chalmers.

In August, 1928, our tenor friend showed the fine range and heroic quality of his voice on an electrically recorded Diamond Disc (No. 52324) of two oratorio compositions by Sir John Stainer: "King Ever Glorious," from "The Crucifixion," and "My Hope is in the Everlasting," from "The Daughter of Jairus."

Hart did not make any more Victor records after returning from his first trip to Germany, but resumed singing for Edison and other companies. In the Edison company's closing years he sang the refrains of many dance records.

Although Mr. Hart says the Harmonizers were organized because of Edison's desire for a new comedy quartet, the ensemble never appeared in the Edison catalog under that name. Instead, on Edison records it was called the Premier Quartet—a name which had been used for a group headed by Billy Murray. When Murray signed exclusively with Victor in 1920 it became necessary to find a new quartet. Steve Porter was the only singer who was a member of both Premier Quartets.

The late Harry Donaghy told me that "Oh By Jingol" was the first Harmonizers' record, but there are several others with lower catalog numbers in which Billy Jones sings the lead. Since the Edison catalogs lumped all the records together under the Premier Quartet heading, regardless of which group made them, I think it worth while to list here those that were by the Harmonizers:

50607, Floatin' Down to Cotton Town; 50621, I Love You Just the Same, Sweet Adeline; 50666, Oh By Jingol; 50683, There's a Typical Tipperary Over Here; 50737, I've Got the Blues for My Old Kentucky Home; 50741, My Mammy; 50769, I Want to be the Leader of the Band; 50771, Blue Jeans and Hey, Paw; 50782, I Was Born in Michigan; 50790, Down Yonder; 50818, Melon Time in Dixieland; 50897, Down in Midnight Town, and 50917, Darktown Quartet Rehearsal. The latter is one of the most amusing of the lot. A supposedly colored quartet is rehearsing "Way Down Yonder in the Corn Field." Hart takes a ringing high note, whereupon Porter, "the Silent Baritone," exclaims: "Oh, peaches, cream and honey! Let me die listenin' to dat boy sing!"

The Harmonizers appeared in the Victor list for the only time in February, 1921, assisting Billy Jones (who then called himself "Victor Roberts" on Victor records) in "For Every Boy Who's on the Level There's a Girl Who's on the Square," and "My Home Town is a One-Horse Town." They did more work for some of the other companies, and on Columbia assisted Harry C. Browne in a Negro comedy number, "Dar's a Lock on de Chicken Coop Door." Their Pathe record of "Casey Jones" called them the Country Harmonizers.

Incidentally, after Pathe issued two records by the Shannon Four, the Quartet's name was changed, as far as Pathe was concerned, to the Acme Male Quartet. The Crescent Trio became the Orpheus Trio. It is likely that the male quartet which James Stanley organized recorded only for Pathe, for two of its members—Stanley and William Simmons—had exclusive Pathe contracts for several years. Many of Hart's Pathe solos appeared under the alias of Charles Cinway, and his duets with Shaw were sometimes disguised as being by Arthur Wilson and Frank Sterling. On Emerson records he and Lewis James sang duets as George Gordon and Robert Bruce, and on Regal records, also made by Emerson, they were called Harry Curtis and Edward Burke. On National Music Lovers records, issued by Grey Gull, Hart was David Harris (a name NML used for several tenors) and Shaw was Thomas Edwards.

It is worth noting that among Hart's Columbia records is one on which a trio composed of himself, Elliott Shaw and Everett Clarke sing two numbers, "The Sheik," and "Granny, You're My Mammy's Mammy." Too, since he made records in German for the Electrola Company while abroad, it's intriguing to see that the 1923 Gennett catalog contains No. 10063, with two songs rendered in German by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hart. The titles are "Abschied Der Vogel" and "Du Du Liegst Im Herzen." I wonder if Mrs. Hart was the soprano identified only as "Bates" who joined the tenor in singing "While the Years Roll By" and "For the Sake of Auld Lang Syne?" on Gennett record 4946.

If space were unlimited, I could go on writing about Charles Hart's recording career, but I suspect both he and the general reader will think I have already said enough. So I shall end here with my warmest thanks to the accomplished tenor for his kindness in preparing his fascinating autobiographical sketch and with the hope that many years of health and happiness await him.

—0—

Since the foregoing article was submitted, Mr. Hart has recalled several other facts which he believes should be included for the sake of completeness. They are appended here, out of chronological order.

The tenor says he has sung in the following grand operas and in the indicated languages: "Rigoletto" - Italian; "Il Trovatore," Italian and English; "La Traviata," Italian and English; "Aida," Italian and German; "Pagliacci," Italian and German; "Cavalleria Rusticana," Italian and German; "Faust," French, German and English; "Samson et Dalila," French; "La Gioconda," Italian; "La Boheme," Italian; "Tosca," Italian and German; "Madame Butterfly," Italian and English; "Carmen," French, Italian, English and German; "Tannhauser," "Lohengrin," "Walkure," and "Koenigskinder," all in German. "The role of Don Jose in 'Carmen,' he says, 'you will notice I have sung in four languages.

—0—

"I made my debut in Germany," Mr. Hart continues, "singing Don Jose in Mannheim for the first time in German. In the second act a cut frequently is made where Carmen sings 'Tra la la,' etc. Don Jose breaks in at the proper place, telling her he must go back to camp for the night. At the Mannheim performance it was agreed the cut should be made. This was a difficult cue for me, so I had learned Carmen's part as well as my own to make sure I wouldn't make a mistake. Carmen forgot to make the cut this night, and I saw a look of anguish come over the conductor's face. However, knowing the thing so well, I came in exactly where I should have, as if she had made the cut. After the performance the whole company was called on stage, and the conductor said: 'You should be ashamed of yourself, Carmen. A tenor from America, singing his part for the first time in German, has to save the show.' I thought it the greatest compliment I had ever been paid.

"Here is how it happened I was engaged to appear in 'The Spring Maid.' While I was singing in the picture house the first 'Spring Maid' company played Chicago. A friend with whom I had sung in the Joseph Sheehan Grand Opera Company was singing the baritone lead. He told me they were looking for a tenor for the role of 'Baron Rudi,' for the second company with Mizzi Hajos I sang for the manager and was at once engaged for $65 a week. I was told they weren't satisfied with the way the part was being played and they wanted me to play it as it was done in the first company. I demurred and said it might get me in trouble with the star to do so. They said they would send a letter to the manager of the second company, explaining to him how they wanted me to play the part. This letter was never sent. I joined the company in Nashville, Tenn. Right from the start I was in trouble and when we got to Milwaukee I got my two weeks notice. I closed in Sioux City, Iowa, and I was furious. It was Holy Week, and at that time they paid half salary for that week. To add insult to injury, I had to pay for a berth for a sleeper jump we had that week. They had to pay my fare back to Chicago, because I was sent from there.

"I immediately bought a ticket and went to New York. The first company was playing there in the old Grand Opera House at 23rd Street and Eighth Avenue. Werba and Luescher were the owners and had offices in the old New York Theater building on Broadway between 44th and 45th streets. I was still boiling over what I considered the greatest injustice I had ever suffered. Mr. Luescher would not see me. I shoved the office boy aside and entered his office. I said, 'Mr. Luescher, I have been treated badly.' He replied: 'Well, the report we got was that you were very bad in the part.' So I said: 'You are playing the Grand Opera House and tomorrow is Saturday. Let me play the part at the matinee and you can judge for yourself just how bad I am. After you see how good I am in the part I feel sure you will apologize to me for the treatment I have received.' He agreed. After the performance he said, 'I do apologize, Hart, and if it's agreeable to you, I would like to have you continue, since the man we have wants to get away. We will play the Tremont theater in Boston for the summer and I will raise your salary to $75.' And that's how I happened to get with the first company of 'The Spring Maid' with Christie MacDonald and Tom MacNaughton. I was fresh in those days and had plenty of nerve. I wouldn't call it conceit, for I knew exactly what I could and could not do. I had plenty of confidence and that has carried me over many a tough spot. Show business is no place for a shrinking violet.

"We went on tour after Boston, came back to New York, played the New

CHARLES HART looking over the music of the first solo he recorded for Victor in 1917, "It's Time for Every Boy to be a Soldier."

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record, catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

tfx

ANTIQUE
MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1925

EXPERT REPAIRING

FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

Free estimates, appraisals & lists.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. (Pc. 8-1506) Pelham, N. Y.

E-L-E-C-T-R-I-F-Y

PLAYER PIANOS & REED ORGANS

with a low-cost

LEE SILENT SUCTION UNIT

Write

Lee Music Mfg. Company

10630 Hillhaven Ave., Tujunga, Calif. 955p

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

CHARLES HART in 1951 as the Sheriff in the "Surrey With the Fringe on Top," scene from "Oklahoma."

Amsterdam Theater and continued the tour. When the first company closed I went back to the second company for my $75 a week and had a nice long season. By that time Mizzi Hajos had left the company, although later we became good friends. You see, Christie played the part as a prima donna and Mizzi clowned it for comedy. Had I been smart I would have ignored my instructions from the first company and played the part to fit what Mizzi was doing. At least, I should have compromised. But I was still quite young. It takes time to acquire wisdom.

"When I first went in for grand opera, and after I had learned an opera, I was glad of an opportunity to sing it somewhere for a small company, to 'break in.' Performances are given all over New York by companies put together for one or two appearances. Italians get a thirst every now and then to hear one of their native operas, so an impresario gets the necessary singers together and takes a chance on making or losing a little money.

"I was singing the tenor role, Ra-dames, in one of these. Because of his love for Aida he has been a traitor, and is tried, condemned and sentenced to be buried alive in a tomb under the altar of the goddess, Isis, in the temple. Here he will eventually suffocate. The first line he sings is: 'The fatal stone is closing over me. Here is my tomb. Never more shall I see the light of day!' After I sang the line, 'Aida, oh where art thou?' an Italian in the gallery yelled in a Sicilian dialect: 'In the washroom!'"

One unusual experience the Crescent Trio had in 1922 was assisting the comedian, Byron G. Harlan, sing two "rube" songs composed by the Okeh recording director, Fred Hager. On Okeh record 4622 Harlan and the trio sang "Carnival Night" and "Under the Mulberry Tree." This record does not turn up often.

Finally, Mr. E. C. Forman, manager of the Special Services department of the RCA Victor Record Division of the Radio Corporation of America, has supplied information concerning Charles Hart's first Victor solo records. He says:

"Record No. 18294, 'Thou Shalt Not Steal a Heart Away' and No. 18300, 'It's Time for Every Boy to be a Soldier,' were both recorded April 23, 1917. Record No. 18283, 'Forever is a Long, Long Time,' was recorded June 29, 1917. The only explanation I can offer, and it's purely a guess, is that the number 18283 was assigned to the selection considerably in advance of the actual recording. I believe that was done at times, but I am quite certain it was not a general practice."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

ROGER, GRAY and LITTLE NIPPER are anticipating a Purr-fectly HAPPY NEW YEAR

I am always abnormally busy during the holiday season, serving as publicity chairman of the Christmas Seal sale in Roanoke besides doing my news writing work for WSLS-TV and radio. Because of this I never have time to send Christmas and New Years cards or to thank HOBBIES readers for the many I receive.

So here, with the cooperation of my cats, Roger, Gray and Little Nipper, whose photos many readers have asked me to publish, is a holiday greeting to everybody—especially those of you who tell me you always look forward to reading Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists. I hope to continue writing it for many years to come and to be blessed with the companionship and devotion of three of the sweetest "children" any proud father has ever possessed. Please accept this warm token of appreciation from

ROGER,
GRAY,
LITTLE NIPPER
and
JIM WALSH

jax

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs and records. Parts and anything pertaining to old phonographs. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. mh3882

WANTED: Cecilian Phonograph, upright or table model, walnut or mahogany. Also other makes except Victor, Columbia and Brunswick. Record catalogs, supplements and other phonographic material. Please describe fully and state prices. No bids. — D. Miller, Box 392, Long Beach, California. Ja3046

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

Rare phonographs for sale: Edison, Columbia, Victor and many rare models. Large list of hard-to-find cylinder records, parts of all kinds. Repairs. Reproducer repairing a specialty. Stylus (needle) installed, reproducers for sale. Will pay $6.50 and up for any good cylinder reproducer. 25c for lists. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. mh32721

FOR SALE: Phonographs, duplicates of my collection. List 25c. Need Edison Excelsior. — Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. mh3042

The Age of Romance has not ceased; it never ceases; it does not, if we will think of it, so much as very sensibly decline.

—Carlyle

Virtuosos of the Cornet

Walter B. Rogers and Jules Levy

By JIM WALSH

At 5:20 P.M. on Christmas Eve of 1939, a 74-year-old musician died in his home at Brooklyn, N. Y. His passing created little attention, but the elderly man had been a prominent figure. He had been a band and orchestra leader, a composer, a musical director for talking machine companies and one of the great cornet soloists of his time. He was Walter Bowman Rogers.

When a representative of the New York Department of Health's Bureau of Vital Records and Statistics filled out a death certificate his information was somewhat meager. The certificate gives Rogers' full name and says he lived at 182—68th Street in Brooklyn. He was married and his wife's first name was Florence. No children are mentioned. He was born October 14, 1865, and when he died was 74 years, two months and 10 days of age. His profession was described as musical conductor and 1929 was listed as the last year in which he worked at this occupation, which he had followed for 40 years.

Rogers' birthplace was given only as the United States, but Charles V. Foreman, of Aurora, Colo., who has compiled much information about band and orchestra personalities, says he was born in Delphi, Ind. He had lived in New York for 58 years. His father, William Rogers, was born in England, as was his mother, whose maiden name was Nancy Bowman. He had been ill for three years with chronic myocarditis—inflammation of the muscular area of the heart wall. His body was reduced to ashes in the crematory at Fresh Pond, Long Island, on December 27, 1939.

What a sad Christmas that must have been for Mrs. Florence Rogers!

II Young Musician

I know nothing of Walter Rogers' earlier years, from his birth in Delphi, Ind., until he went to New York, seemingly at the age of 15 or 16. His youthful musical activities were summed up in a biographical sketch which appeared in Victor record catalogs for a good many years:

The career of this brilliant young conductor has been one of uninterrupted success. After some years of study in the Cincinnati College of Music, he joined Cappa's Seventh Regiment Band of New York as cornet soloist, and during the years that followed he was one of the great features of that famous band. On the death of Bandmaster Cappa, Mr. Rogers became the leader of the band and served four years in that capacity. In 1899 John Philip Sousa made him a flattering offer and he became the cornet soloist of Sousa's Band. After five successful years with Sousa, the Victor Company induced Mr. Rogers to leave the band and become its general director of music.

The foregoing seems to indicate Cappa died in 1895, but his death must have occurred a year or so earlier. I have a copy of the 1894-95 catalog of the Phipps Musical and Lyceum Bureau, which represented many of the noted musicians of more than 60 years ago. A page is devoted to advertising "Rogers' Famous Seventh Regiment Band and Orchestra . . . of New York City." The advertisement said the Seventh Regiment Band had played for 15 years "in Central Park, New York City, and at all the leading Expositions, Fairs, Commencements, etc." It added that all engagements were "under Mr. Rogers' personal direction." Apparently, Rogers had assumed direction at some time before 1894. An illustration shows him wearing a typically "Gay Nineties" mustache. He was then in his late twenties.

III Rogers as a Recording Artist

Probably Walter Rogers' first records were made about the time he became Sousa's cornet soloist. The bearded Mr. Sousa despised sound reproducing devices and may have originated the derisive term "canned music." Although he permitted his band to make records he did not personally conduct its phonograph engagements in the '90's and early 1900's. That menial job was left to his sub-conductor, Arthur Pryor, who founded his own band in 1904 and entered into a warmly intimate relationship with the Victor Company that lasted a generation. Sousa's Band made many 7-inch Berliner discs, and I imagine Rogers also recorded Berliner cornet solos. However, I cannot recall any, off-hand.

What cornet player, I wonder, did Sousa have in mind when he appeared in 1906 before the Joint Committee on Patents of the U.S. Senate House, which was considering a new copyright bill? Sousa made a savage attack on the phonograph companies because they were not paying royalties for the use of his Marches as well as the music of other composers. In an obvious jab at Victor, for whom his band was then actively recording, Sousa said "these talking machine managers will pay Caruso $3,000 to sing one song for them," but would pay one of his best cornet players only $4 a record.

Sousa's statement must have been an exaggeration. It is hard to believe any famous musician would have accepted a fee of $4 a record, especially from Victor, which was usually more generous in payment than the other companies. Edison's standard fee for a solo cylinder, even in the earliest gold-moulded days, was $40. But what player was Sousa thinking of? I would suspect Rogers except that he had left Sousa two years before the Committee hearing to become Victor's musical director.

The Victor record catalog for February, 1902, listed Rogers as having signed an exclusive contract with the Victor Talking Machine Company, which Eldridge R. Johnson had organized only the year before. In those days, single-faced seven-inch records were known as Victors and 10-inch as Monarchs. Here is the list of Rogers' 1902 cornet solos. Where an asterisk precedes the number the record was made in both seven and 10-inch sizes. A "V" before the number means it was issued solely in seven-inch, and an "M" that it was 10-inch only:

*525, A Southern Dance. *524, A Soldier's Dream. V375, Auld Lang Syne. M3241, Minne-ha-ha Waltz. V348, Souvenir of Naples. M3262, When You Were Sweet Sixteen.

The foregoing records were made with an accompaniment by Sousa's Band. Two, "A Southern Dance" and "Minne-ha-ha Waltz," were Rogers' own compositions. Another list had piano accompaniments:

M3418, Absence Makes the Heart Grow Fonder. M3419, Bonnie Sweet Bessie. V529, Concert Polka. V531, German Sounds. V3423, Old Black Joe, with variations. V523, War Songs, with variations. V532, Yankee Doodle, with variations. Rogers and Pryor had made a cornet and trombone duet, M3415, of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and he and Darius A. Lyons also teamed up in a cornet and flute duet, on M3424, of Titi's Serenade.

Herbert Clarke was represented by 12 cornet solos in the 1902 catalog. Since he was with Sousa, he may have been the "$4 man." Probably both he and Rogers were irritated if they read the description which accompanied a list of seven records (made in both seven and 10-

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Conducted by JIM WALSH

inch sizes) by their highly touted rival, Jules Levy:

The world's greatest cornetist has come from Chicago at great expense to make records for us. This is only one of the many instances that illustrate our policy of obtaining the best artists in all classes to make our records, regardless of expense. Levy says the Victor machines and records are the surprise of his life in quality of both vocal and instrumental music. The great cornetist plays as well if not better than he did twenty years ago, and his records are positively wonderful. No extra charge will be made for them.

Notice the amusing ambiguity of the remark about Levy's coming from Chicago "at great expense" to make records. One is left wondering whether this means Victor paid Levy a lot of money or whether he took an expensive means of traveling from Chicago to Camden. The boast about obtaining the best artists, "regardless of expense," doesn't sound as if Levy were paid a beggarly four dollars a solo! His records, with piano accompaniment, were:

1052, Absence Makes the Heart Grow Fonder; 1059, Blue Bells of Scotland; 1056, German Air and Variations; 1065, Leviathan Polka; 1060, Must We Then, Meet as Strangers?; 1062, Medley of National Airs; and 1052, Our Own Make—Polka.

Until recently, I owned a copy of "Must We Then, Meet as Strangers?" but finally parted with it to a Rhode Island collector, Steve Gilman, who wanted it worse than I did. In spite of the blurb about Levy's Victor discs being "simply wonderful," the recording of this one was pretty bad, with an annoying pitch waver. A bland voiced gentleman, presumably not Levy, gave a spoken introduction in which he said the number was played by "the world's greatest cornet soloist, Mr. Jules Levy." Such statements also likely irritated Rogers and Clarke, if they heard the records.

IV Victor Musical Director

Walter Rogers' engagement as Victor's musical director in 1904 was the result of the company's deciding to establish its own permanent orchestra instead of engaging musicians by the "date." It also tied in with a new policy, established in 1903, of using an orchestra, rather than the piano, to accompany most vocal records. (For more information about the Victor Orchestra under Rogers see the Charles D'Almaine article in the December, 1957, HOBBIES).

On August 31, 1904, about the time Rogers assumed his Victor duties, a new catalog was issued, in which the number of cornet records had greatly increased. Some of Rogers' 1902 titles remained, but nearly all had been remade, and given new numbers. Those which formerly had piano accompaniments now appeared with orchestral support. The 1904 list was prefaced by the statement that "Mr. Rogers' brilliant tone and fine execution are exhibited to perfection in these records." Those with orchestra accompaniment were:

M2706, Absence Makes the Heart Grow Fonder; 2701, Bonnie Sweet Bessie; 2694, German Sounds; 2736, Old Black Joe; 2748, Souvenir of Naples ("one of Mr. Rogers' most brilliant compositions"); M2737, Toyland; M2695, War Songs; and 2705, Yankee Doodle, with variations.

The following were accompanied by Sousa's Band:

M1435, A Little Boy in Blue; 524, A Soldier's Dream; 2469, I Need Thee Every Hour; 2439, Lullie Waltz; 1202, Minne-ha-ha Waltz; 2470, Tale of a Sea Shell; M2663, The Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Halls; and M1429, The Volunteer Polka—another Rogers composition.

The list of cornet and trombone duets by Rogers and Pryor had now grown to six, one of which, 2593, "Cheerfulness," was accompanied by Pryor's new band. Others were: 1548, "A Song of Home;" M837, "Answer;" 1521, "Nearer, My God, To Thee;" 1550, "Oh How Delightful!" and 1547, "Polka Caprice." Titl's "Serenade," formerly by Rogers and Lyons, had been remade by Rogers and Marshall P. Lufsky, then the flute soloist of Sousa's Band. The number was changed to 2476.

Herbert Clarke's cornet solos had

JULES LEVY (1848-1903), frequently referred to in his lifetime as "the world's greatest cornet player."

all been cut out, but there was an augmented list, in the seven and 10-inch classifications, by Jules Levy, who had died the preceding November:

2106, Bonnie Sweet Bessie.. M1056, Du Du, with variations; V2102, Home, Sweet Home; 2103, In the Gloaming; M2105, Killarney; 2529, Nancy Lee; 1066, Nearer, My God, to Thee; M1055, Non e Ver; 2496, Our Own Make Polka; 1706, Robin Adair; 2104, Tale of a Bumble Bee—King Dodo; 1708, The Last Rose of Summer; M1065, The Leviathan Polka; 1707, The Low Back'd Car; and 1709, Within a Mile of Edinburgh Town.

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DELUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York

tfx

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1925

EXPERT REPAIRING

FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

Free estimates, appraisals & lists.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. (Po. 8-1506) Pelham, N. Y.

tfx

E-L-E-C-T-R-I-F-Y

PLAYER PIANOS & REED ORGANS

with a low-cost

LEE SILENT SUCTION UNIT

Write

Lee Music Mfg. Company

10630 Hillhaven Ave., Tujunga, Calif.

095p

MUSIC LOVERS!

Without fanfare we announce publication of a 500 page deluxe book that every lover of old songs will want to own.

TIN PAN ALLEY BY GASLIGHT is the final authoritative word on all popular songs from the 1870's down thru 1910; story of writers and song pluggers, excerpts of music and many pictures help recreate the "saga of songs that helped make the gay 90's gay." With intro. by ASCAP President Otto Harbach. Mr. Marcuse's opus is a fit companion to our Famed BLUE BOOKS OF TPA, BROADWAY, etc. and another star in the leading Americana publisher's crown.

HURRAY - HURRAY - pre-publication price of only $8.50 postpaid.

HAVE YOU FORGOTTEN SOMETHING? Order our Old Music Shop (on all instruments) (1.25) and Player Piano Scrapbook (3.00); both for $4.00 postpaid. Money back guaranteed! stamp for full catalog, if not yet convinced.

CENTURY HOUSE, Pub'rs., Watkins Glen, N. Y.

1c

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tfx

Rogers examining the finished master record of the Lucia Sextet.

Rogers decides the Sextet record must be made over.

Walter Rogers conducting a Victor recording of "The Lucia Sextet" on December 8, 1915. The singers are Harry Macdonough (hands clasped behind back), Marguerite Dunlap, Olive Kline, Wilfred Glenn, Lambert Murphy and Reinald Werrenrath.

In 1903, Victor introduced its $1.50 De Luxe series, the first 12-inch discs ever made. There were three of the large size by Rogers. The catalog editor said: "Mr. Rogers is the Solo Cornetist of Sousa's Band and undoubtedly the most brilliant player now before the public. His execution is at times so wonderful that it excites amazement in the mind of the listener. Mr. Rogers plays variations which have always been considered impossible." His 12-inch records, all accompanied by Sousa's Band, were 31110, "The Harp, That Once Thro' Tara's Halls"; 31111, "Minne-ha-ha Waltz," and 31112, "Lulle Waltz." On 31114 he and Pryor once more played "Nearer, My God, To Thee." Levy was represented by 31176, "The Merry Birds," which Victor apparently considered the best of his records; Emil Kennecke (as the catalog spelled Keneke's name) played 31178, "Remembrance of Prague," accompanied by the Victor Military Band; and on 31077, Clarke's Providence's Band played "The Bride of the Waves," featuring a cornet solo by its leader, Herbert L. Clarke.

It is not generally known that in 1903 Victor also introduced a 14-inch single-faced record, the De Luxe Special. Only about two dozen titles were issued, and the series lasted only a year or so. However, two of these $2.00 offerings were by Jules Levy. On 41021 he played Rosini's "Inflammatus" from "Stabat Mater" and on 41022, "The Lost Chord." Apparently Rogers made no 14-inch records.

The 1904 Victor catalog marks the peak of Walter Rogers' activities as a cornet player. Like Harry Macdonough and S. H. Dudley, who became manager and assistant manager of the Victor Artist and Repertoire Department and found they had less and less time for singing, Rogers' duties as recording director soon occupied him so fully he laid his horn aside. By the time the 1909 record catalog was issued, his number of solos, with no new titles included, was down to six: "Absence Makes the Heart," "Bonnie Sweet Bessie," "German Sounds," "Old Black Joe," "War Songs" and "Yankee Doodle." Meanwhile, Keneke, Clarke and Bohumir Kryl were represented by two solos each.

But Jules Levy, "the world's greatest cornet soloist," was down to only one, "The Merry Birds." Even it was offered with a half-apologetic note which read:

Although this record is not quite up to our present standard of recording, having been made several years ago, it is kept on our lists as a memorial to this great cornetist, who died in 1905.

The record remained in the catalog through 1919, its listing always accompanied by a slightly altered version of the foregoing:

NOTE—Although this record is not up to our present standard of recording, having been made in 1904, it is kept on our lists for those who wish to possess it as a memorial to this great cornetist, who died in 1905.

The latter "note" is inaccurate in at least two respects. Levy died in 1903, the year in which his recording of "The Merry Birds" was made.

Besides his solos, Rogers had two duets with Pryor in the 1909 catalog—the already familiar "Nearer, My God" and on 4513, the Miserere from "Trovatore." There was also a cornet duet with Keneké, No. 4780, "When Life Is Brightest," and a cornet trio by Clarke, Rogers and Herman Bellstedt, "The Three Solitaires." A description of the latter number, appeared in the October, 1905, supplement:

Seldom indeed has such a galaxy of talent been employed in the making of a record. Here is a merry and rollicking cornet trio composed by Victor Herbert, played by the three foremost cornetists in the world, and accompanied by Sousa's Band. It is almost needless to state that this could only happen in the Victor Laboratory. The trio is a most delightful composition and makes a unique record.

In December, 1905, the Rogers-Pryor duet of the "Miserere" was thus described:

A smooth and perfect record of a favorite operatic duet by two of the most famous players in the world. It is of great volume, yet the two instruments blend perfectly.

Rogers' talent for making unusual arrangements of popular songs was displayed in the February, 1906, Victor list, when he produced, on No. 4577, a "musical burlesque" on "Everybody Works But Father":

A side-splitting instrumental description of a few episodes in the daily life of father. The familiar melody is played in several different styles, including a ponderous treatment by the basses, and is followed by "Bits of Other Father Songs," "Father, Dear Father, Come Home," etc. The scene suddenly shifts to 7 A.M., as father is soundly sleeping after a hilarious night out. The town clock strikes 7, the tuba plays a solemn lullaby, accompanied by melodious (?) snores from father's bedroom. The entire family is gathered outside the door in a vain endeavor to make father wake up, but even the barking of the dog, the dinner-bell and terrific pounding on the door fail to interrupt the snores. Whatever father may or may not have done, it is certain that Mr. Rogers "worked" in making this arrangement, which is a most clever one.

Perhaps because the recording process through which his records were made had become outmoded, Rogers by 1910 was down to three solos: "Absence Makes the Heart Grow Fonder," "Old Black Joe" and "Yankee Doodle"—none of which gave much opportunity to display his virtuoso accomplishments. In the January, 1912, catalog, his representation had dwindled to one record, No. 16794, on which the Miserere duet with Pryor had been coupled with "Chant Sans Paroles," by the Vienna Quartet. The double-faced record stayed in the catalog through 1922—six years after Rogers' association with the Victor company had ended.

V Activities as Musical Director

I have often thought the late Calvin Child, who organized the Victor Red Seal department and brought most of the great opera singers into that company's catalog, must have been one of the world's most accomplished diplomats. The nervous strain resulting from dealing with so many temperamental song birds, many of them with an imperfect knowledge of English, could only have been tremendous. What finesse must have been required to soothe the jealousies of sopranos who just knew they were being slighted in favor of Alda, Farrar or Galli-Curci, or to tame tenors who suspected their Victor royalties didn't compare with those of McCormack or Caruso!

Rogers, too, must have been a diplomat. Where Child restricted himself to dealing with "celebrities" and snootily decried the "Coney Island" atmosphere of the "popular" artists, Rogers conducted recording sessions for all types. The Black, Purple and Blue Label performers perhaps were not quite so much stuck on themselves as the "Red Sealers," but their human frailties must have occasioned the recording director many tense moments.

Whatever his powers as a diplomat, Rogers certainly was a versatile arranger and many novelties in the Victor catalog were of his invention. He arranged and directed most of the early dance records. It was he who thought of the idea of organizing a staff ensemble to sing "gems" from musical comedies and grand opera. The group was called the Victor Light Opera Company when it sang relatively light music and the Victor Opera Company when its efforts were more serious. The first record by this aggregation was No. 16326, which came out in August, 1909. It coupled "Hello, People" from "Havana" with Ada Jones' version of "The Yama Yama Man." This was the first and only ten-inch record by the Victor Light Opera Company and the only one devoted to an entire song rather than a medley. Among the voices to be recognized in it are those of Frank C. Stanley and S. H. Dudley. A soprano is probably Elizabeth Wheeler. The first 12-inch "Gems," which followed shortly afterward, were 31744, "Gems from Havana" and 31745, "Gems from 'The Beauty Spot.'"

The first photo of the Light Opera Company included Rogers as its director. Members were Lucy Isabelle Marsh, Reinald Werrenrath, Harriet Keyes, William Wheeler, Harry Macdonough, Inez Barbour, Elizabeth Wheeler, Elise Stevenson, Marguerite Dunlap, William F. Hooley, Steve Porter, Frank Stanley, S. H. Dudley, Billy Murray, John Bieling, Frederick Gunster, John Barnes Wells, Ada Jones and George Carré. After 1912, the personnel was mostly a blending of the Orpheus and Lyric Quartets—Olive Kline, Elsie Baker, Lambert Murphy, Werrenrath, Macdonough and Hooley. Other artists, such as: Marsh, Dunlap and Wilfred Glenn, were sometimes used.

Somewhat similar to the "Gems" were the medleys of "Songs of the Past," which Rogers introduced in 1915. He made the arrangements for the various old-time songs, which grew to comprise a series of 12 double-faced records. Many other medleys of popular and standard songs also bore his touch, and he arranged and conducted most of the early Victor dance records.

A good idea of Rogers' adaptability may be found in the following:

One of the best selling records in phonograph history was Victor 16483, combining a rendition of the comic song classic, "Casey Jones," by Billy Murray and the American Quartet, with "Moonlight in Jungle Land," by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan. (Incidentally, "Casey" Jones' widow died in Jackson, Tenn., on November 21, 1958, only nine days before this article was written. She was 92).

Murray and the quartet recorded "Casey Jones" on March 11, 1910, and the record was issued in May. However, after several thousand copies had been pressed, Victor officials decided the quartet wasn't heard strongly enough, and sent telegrams to the four members—Murray, Bieling, Porter and Hooley—telling them to come to Camden and do it over. Porter, the baritone, didn't receive his, so after the other three had waited a long time and were growing impatient, Rogers remarked:

"Well, I can sing a little baritone in a pinch. I'll take Steve's place."

Which, stepping down from the podium, he did. This recording "date" was on May 13, 1910. Still another version of "Casey," and the best of the three, was made on October 10, 1911, with Steve Porter back in his accustomed baritone role.

Rogers probably conducted several recordings of ensemble operatic numbers, such as the Lucia Sextette, featuring Caruso and other bygone greats. He certainly officiated at a session in Camden on December 8, 1915, when the Sextet was sung by the Victor Opera Sextet, consisting of Kline, Dunlap, Macdonough, Murphy, Werrenrath and Glenn. Pictures were taken of every stage of the procedure, from the arrival of the artists at the laboratory in a 1915 model car through the recording session and Rogers' verdict that because of a flaw in the master, the singing would have to be done over. Olive Kline says the Opera Company singers used to have such a noisy good time coming down to Camden on the train that they called themselves the Victor Uproar Company!

VI Rogers Leaves Victor

In 1916, when he was 51 years of age, Walter Rogers' 12-year association with Victor as its musical director came to a serio-comic end. He left the largest talking machine company to become recording manager of a small firm, the Paroquette Record Company.

Paroquette, which made seven-inch, double-faced, vertical cut records that sold for 25 cents each, was the brain child of the most popular tenor ballad singer in the phonograph's history, Henry Burr. An idea of forming a company to turn out a small, inexpensive record had been in Burr's mind for a considerable time. The late Albert Campbell told me he signed a contract to sing for Par-o-ket records on August 23, 1915. However, the firm didn't go into production for more than a year.

I have mentioned Calvin Child's prowess as a diplomat and said Rogers must have had gifts of the same order. But it almost seems Burr must have been the champion diplomat of all time. He enticed Victor's musical director away, but still went on making "His Master's Voice" records. Not only that, but in spite of operating a recording company of his own whose product was intended to under-cut the prices of the larger concerns, he also continued singing for every American company of the time except Edison, with which he had quarreled over recording fees in 1915. It was an amazing achievement.

Although Burr was the instigator and chief financial backer of the Paroquette Record Company, probably Rogers also invested some money in it. At any rate, he supervised the recording sessions and the catalog contained a good many records by Walter B. Rogers' Military Band. Meanwhile, the May, 1916, catalog was the last in which Rogers was identified as Victor's musical director. The October, 1916, catalog retained the biographical sketch, but ended it by saying: "After 5 successful years with Sousa, the Victor Company induced Mr. Rogers to leave the band and become its general Director of Music, a position which he filled for many years." The sketch was omitted in the next, May, 1917, issue. Rogers had been succeeded by the late Josef A. Pasternack (known to the musicians who sweltered under his autocratic baton as "Old Monkey Face"), a versatile genius of wider musical knowledge than Rogers. Pasternack played every orchestral instrument except the harp.

The Paroquette Record Company did not last long. The seven-inch platters played three minutes, had excellent tone quality, with as much or more volume than the Edison Diamonds Discs of the period, and with their black labels they looked something like miniature Diamond Discs. But the majority of phonographs were made to play only lateral cut records like Victor or Columbia, and a profitable business could not be done in a little-known vertical cut disc. After about a year, during which a few more than 100 titles were issued, the business was discontinued toward the end of 1917, and Par-o-ket records joined other losing ventures in which Burr sank his large income as a recording star. A silver fox farm, a banjo factory, and a sheet music publishing firm, were among the others. Only his "Eight Famous Victor Artists" troupe was consistently profitable.

Rogers' activities of the next few years are involved in almost as much obscurity as the early days of "the immortal Pickwick" or Walter B.'s own boyhood. However, he may have become musical director for the Paramount Company, which also made vertical cut records, but switched to lateral after the Victor-Columbia patent monopoly was broken in 1919. In 1918, dance records by Walter B. Rogers' Band appeared on the Paramount label.

Possibly, too, he also was associated briefly with the Emerson Company, whose musical director was Arthur Bergh. In the December,

ROGERS' Famous 7th Regiment BAND AND ORCHESTRA,

N. G. S. N. Y.

Of New York City,

ASSISTED BY ALL HIS FAMOUS SOLOISTS.

The 7th Reg't Band has played for fifteen years in Central Park, N. Y. City, and at all the leading Expositions, Fairs, Commencements, etc.

All engagements under Mr. Rogers' Personal direction.

First-Class Music FURNISHED FOR ALL OCCASIONS.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS, PARADES, SERENADES, CONCERTS, FAIRS, EXCURSIONS, RACES, DRAMATIC ENTERTAINMENTS, MEETINGS, BALLS, &c.

For Terms, Open Dates, Press Notices and Full Particulars, address,

The Phipps Musical and Lyceum Bureau.

PHIPPS & ALPHEUS, Proprietors.

This page from a Phipps Musical and Lyceum Bureau catalog of 1894-5 shows Walter B. Rogers as a young man in his twenties. He was then the conductor of the Seventh Regiment Band.

1921, Emerson supplement there is a record, No. 10459, of "Kiddies' Patrol (Christmas Eve)" and "Kiddies' Dance (Christmas Morning)," both composed by Rogers, and performed by the Emerson Concert Band. It is possible he had a band which played as a "house group" for more than one company.

VII Recording Director for Brunswick

Not later than 1921, Walter Rogers became recording director for the Brunswick Company, which had begun making lateral-cut records in 1919. (Some vertical Brunswicks had appeared as early as 1917). The 1922 catalog contains three double-faced records by Rogers and his Band, and this list was steadily augmented during the next seven years. On 2132 the band played "American Patrol" and "General Mix-Up, U. S. A. March"; on 2145, "Legion of Honor March" and "On the Campus March," and on 2160, the "Washington Post" and "El Capitan" marches.

Rogers' Brunswick association may have begun earlier than 1921, for in the January, 1921, supplement appears record 2054, a coupling of the two compositions, "Kiddies' Patrol" and "Kiddies' Dance," already mentioned on an Emerson record. They are listed as played by the Brunswick Concert Band, and the description says:

Walter Rogers, the scholarly musician who painted this delightful tone-picture, is assuredly a member of that cult of the child which includes such names as Schumann, Stevenson and J. G. Browne in its membership. The companion-piece to "Kiddies' Patrol," written by Mr. Rogers, is full of speaking toys just for the "kiddies" of America whom he loves and so truly understands. These same children offer Rip Van Winkle's toast to you, Mr. Composer—"Your health! May you live long and prosper."

Brunswick, like Victor and Columbia switched to electric recording in 1925. Rogers, with almost 30 years experience of the horn method, may have found it hard to adapt to the new system. It is hard to account otherwise for the uniformly unfavorable reviews which his work received for a time in The Phonograph Monthly Review, a record collectors' magazine published in Boston from 1926 to 1932, and the more laudatory comments that appeared later. Perhaps as time went on Rogers achieved a mastery of microphone methods.

In April, 1927, the P. M. R. said:

Brunswick 3429 and 3430—William Tell Overture, played by Walter B. Rogers and his Band. . . The Rogers band seems rather small and although it plays well this version is hardly as interesting as the recent one of Fryor for Victor. . .

A much harsher criticism appeared in August, when Brunswick issued a 12-inch record, 20054, containing four marches—"Baltimore Centennial," "Boston Commandery," "Manhattan Beach" and "High School Cadets":

Walter B. Rogers and his Band choose a group of selections that would be hard to surpass for effectiveness and then, unfortunately, play them in a way that would be hard to surpass for ineffectiveness. The recording itself is very good, but the band is small and while from a tonal standpoint it is not bad, the slipshod performance which must be blamed to the very slack conducting unquestionably does the fine pieces more harm than good. . . Another striking example of the fact that no matter how good the recording may be, or how well the musicians play, in the end it is the life—or lack of it—of the conductor's reading that will decide the work's fate.

In November, 1927, Brunswick Record 3539, "Pride of the Wolverines" and "Gridiron Club" marches received this acidulous note:

"Pride of the Wolverines" is a great march, but it is not within Mr. Rogers' grasp yet, nor, from the evidence of this and several earlier records will be for a long time. His talents must lie in other directions: all his records so far are but mediocre at their best.

The reviewer probably knew nothing of Rogers' brilliant achievements as a conductor of Victor bands and orchestras. But in January, 1928, his remarks were more favorable:

Brunswick 3622. El Capitan and

Washington Post Marches. Rogers at last redeems himself with two excellent march performances. As before, his band is not very large nor does it strive for exceptional brilliance, but it is well balanced and plays with meritorious (sic) rhythmic and tonal coloring. Hardly a startling band record, this is decidedly a most satisfactory one.

Real acclaim came in May, 1928:

Brunswick 3515. Stars and Stripes Forever and National Emblem Marches. Given a band of larger size, Rogers might put Creators and Sousa to shame, so effectively does he handle his present small organization. An excellent disc on all points.

This seems a good place to part company with Walter Rogers. No doubt the depression which began in October, 1929, and caused the record business to fall off to almost nothing was the cause of his parting company with Brunswick. From that time, he seems to have lived in retirement until his death ten years later. Perhaps there is a sort of appropriateness in the fact that the genial man who liked to write "descriptive specialties" about the joys children experienced on Christmas Eve and Christmas Morning was relieved of his last years of suffering on Christmas Eve, 1939.

VIII Jules Levy and His Records

Although Jules Levy was never so intimately associated with recorded music as Walter B. Rogers, he was from the standpoint of glamour and "color" the reigning cornet player of his day. Just as Caruso surpassed all other opera tenors not necessarily from the standpoint of voice and artistry but from that of glamour, so Levy overtopped all other cornet players. He might, in fact, be called "The Caruso of the Cornet."

It would be difficult at this late date to chronicle the great Levy's career in detail, but some notes concerning his life and recording activities should not be amiss.

The January, 1904, Etude contained this succinct death notice:

JULES LEVY, the celebrated cornetist, died in Chicago November 28, 1903, aged 66. He was born in London, England, April 28, 1838. While still a small boy he showed a love for the cornet and at 17 was an accomplished artist. In 1866 he made his first trip to the United States. After that he played in all parts of the world and was considered the greatest living artist on his instrument. Several years ago he made his permanent residence in this country.

The Etude chronology is wrong. If Levy were born in 1838 he could have been only 65 when he died in 1903.

Levy was a short, heavy, bearded man with a remarkable chest development. In 1879 and 1880 he was star soloist with Patrick Saarfield Gilmore's Band at Manhattan Beach and was such a sensation Gilmore began to resent his success. This led to his importing a great trombone player from Paris, Frederick Innes, to "take the edge off" of Levy's acclaim. This in turn, led to a historic feud between the two temperamental virtuosos, but Levy and Innes afterwards became close friends.

Levy was probably the first distinguished musician to play in competition with a phonograph. Less than one year after Thomas Edison invented his squeaky, tinfoil "device of the devil," it was demonstrated in Irving Hall, New York. From July 3rd through the 8th, Levy played along with it (thus anticipating the Edison "tone tests" of 40 years later) and a contralto, Emily Wissant, also sang duets with her metallic-sounding recorded voice. One observer reported: "There was many a grin at the somewhat tinny reproduction of sound that issued from this early phonograph."

Jules Levy was one of the first recording artists about whom a phonograph company ever splurged superlatives. It was probably in 1895 that the Columbia company, then with headquarters at 919 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, issued an undated circular phrased in terms of almost hysterical excitement. The purport of the hurrahing was that Jules Levy had consented to toot his horn into the Columbia recording mechanism and that Levy two-minute cylinders could be bought by a music-loving public for $2 each.

Levy, however, was not the first cornet player whose records had sold at a premium price. The record catalog of the New England Phonograph Company for August 1, 1893—almost 66 years ago—offered cylinders by "the late Walter Emerson," who was born in 1856 and died a few months before the catalog came out, for $3.00 each. No titles were listed and the higher price no doubt was caused by the fact that the New England Company had no duplicating process. When the dead man's records were sold there could be no more.

For the sake of historical interest—and for entertainment—the ancient Columbia circular is worth quoting. Its language is reminiscent of that of the already quoted 1902 Victor catalog:

THE GREAT AND ONLY LEVY!!
SUPERB! INCOMPARABLE!

LEVY—THE WORLD'S GREATEST CORNETIST—The one artist whose mastery of his instrument has made him greater than the instrument—the man who has thrilled millions by the power of his marvelous execution—can now be brought to you to render his choicest gems at your pleasure. He had never performed for the Graphophone before, and so charmed was he with its accuracy of reproduction of every tone and note that he carried a Graphophone away with him when he left us, that he might always hereafter, "hear himself as others hear him."

You may have this Prince of Cornetists at your service now whenever you wish. Millions have paid high prices for standing room to hear him play. For the price of a seat at one of his concerts you can procure a record of his superb music to be reproduced long after the artist is dead and gone—for Levy is about to retire from the concert stage, and to many millions of people this is the first as well as the last opportunity to hear him. If you have a talking machine; if you haven't one now but intend to get it in the near future (however remote), or if you have friends or acquaintances who possess them and who will permit you to use theirs, you should invest in one or more of these records.

We may not be able to replenish the stock of these remarkable records; therefore, the opportunity is NOW!

The Levy records were not numbered, but were prefixed with letters from A. to N. as follows:

A. The Blue Bells of Scotland (with variations); B. Hearts (Beautiful Waltz Song by the Author of "After the Ball"); C. The Palms; D. The Old Folks at Home (Swanee River); E. Nearer, My God, To Thee; F. The Star Spangled Banner and Yankee Doodle; G. Ben Bolt; H. Then You'll Remember Me; I. Say Au Revoir But Not Good-Bye; K. (why was J omitted?) Du Du (German Song, with Superb Variations arranged by Levy); L. My Country 'Tis of Thee (Played in Four Octaves—Marvelous Execution); M. Alice, Where Art Thou?; N. Home, Sweet Home.

One wonders if a solitary example of these 68-year-old cylinders has survived until today. Columbia cylinders catalogs from 1898 to 1907 do not give names of artists, so it is impossible to tell whether any of the cornet solos listed in them are by Levy. Probably not, judging by the following quotation from The Columbia Record of October, 1904:

Cornet records have been made by all the great masters of that instrument, one of whom—Jules Levy—has recently passed away. He was probably the greatest cornet player that had ever lived up to the time Bohumir Kryl made his appearance. (I believe Kryl is still living—Jim Walsh.) Both of these great artists have made records for the Columbia Phonograph Co. and now that Mr. Levy is dead a sad and peculiar interest attaches to those that were made by him. We are able to supply those named below and they are well worth having as souvenirs of a great artist who will return to us no more. Besides that, the records are of excellent quality. They come in ten-inch discs only: 918, Alice, Where Art Thou? 920, Du Du (with variations); 921, Nearer, My God, To Thee; 917, Palm Branches; 919, Robin Adair.

In a further comment on the Levy records the Columbia 1906 disc catalog said:

In their way these records are inimitable and it is extremely gratifying that his last perfect work was done after the metal master had been invented; for through this permanent method of record making Mr. Levy's records can continue to be furnished even though the great artist himself is no longer with us.

Two of Levy's single-faced records were taken over into the double-faced Columbia catalog. "Du Du" appeared on A183, coupled with "Bugle Calls, U.S. Army" by Vincent Buono. No. 180 combined "Palm Branches," by Levy, with "Bugle Calls of the Rough Riders." (Why didn't they make one double-faced record of bugle calls and couple the Levy numbers?) These records were discontinued after the 1909 catalog, but "Palm Branches" was issued on A880 with the "Stabat Mater—Inflammatus," by Buono, and held on until 1912. After that the name of "the world's greatest cornetist" disappeared from record catalogs with the exception of Victor's record of "The Merry Birds." He seems not to have made Edison cylinders.

Levy's son, Jules Levy, Jr., also was a skilled cornet player and for several years was leader of the Jules Levy, Jr. Brass Quartet. Both as a soloist, and as one of the quartet, he made records for several companies including Edison, Emerson and Pathé. Later he went to Hollywood and entered the movie business, becoming, I believe, a director.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

The Happiness Boys . . .

Billy Jones and Ernest Hare

(Dave Kaplan at the Piano)

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE—This series is dedicated to Charles Lindsley, of San Francisco, Calif., who for years has urged me to write the life story of Billy Jones and Ernie Hare.)

Damon and Pythias!

For more than 2,000 years (although the Encyclopedia Britannica says Pythias was really Phintias) those two names have meant the ultimate in friendship between man and man.

Nowadays, however, insofar as the world of the theater is concerned, the place of Damon and Pythias as symbols of never-failing harmony and brotherly love might well be taken by the late Billy Jones and Ernest Hare. While I do not believe there is such a thing as predestined friendship, the association of Jones and Hare seems almost to have been intended from their birth. They had many things in common: Both were born on the same day of the month, or within one day of it, with Hare six years the elder; both had mothers whose maiden name was Roberts; both were the same height and, until Jones became portly, they weighed the same.

Long-standing partnerships, of course, have not been uncommon in the theater, but they have not been necessarily accompanied by congeniality. Gilbert and Sullivan quarreled bitterly; Weber & Fields often hardly spoke to each other for months; and, in the field of phonograph recording, Collins and Harlan, although they had a genuine affection, sometimes engaged in explosive differences. But from the moment William Reese Jones of New York City met Thomas Ernest Hare of Norfolk, Va., in 1920, until Hare's death 19 years later there seems never to have been a tremor of controversy between them. Their "pal-ship" was so great that anyone who met either of the pair alone was likely to ask in surprise: "Why, where's Billy?" - or Ernie, as the case might be. Ham and eggs or pork and beans are no more a natural affinity than were tenor-voiced Billy Jones and basso Ernie Hare.

The artistic status of the song birds equalled their harmonious qualities. I do not think anyone could seriously challenge a statement that Jones and Hare were the most accomplished pair of singing comedians ever to be heard on radio. Nor, in their own field of seemingly spontaneous comedy, were they ever equaled by any duo on records. (They probably recorded at least 4,000 duets as well as making many hundreds of solos.) Both were famous before they met, but neither was so good alone as he was with the help of the other. Within a year of their first singing together, their style had neared perfection, insofar as anything human can come close to being without a flaw. Perhaps there is a note of frustrated ambition in the fact that both the tenor and the bass had voices of operatic caliber and both had hoped for opera careers, only to be sidetracked into what was, for them, the more remunerative field of making people laugh. Because they are remembered chiefly as comedians, their fame today is not so great as it might be if they had enjoyed distinguished careers at the Metropolitan and La Scala, but there is no doubt that, from the standpoint of "the greatest good to the greatest number," they did more to benefit their fellow men than if they had confined themselves to the higher walks of music.

Jones and Hare's recording career, as a partnership, was confined almost precisely and entirely to the 1920's, a period which now seems to be considered almost a legendary golden age - as indeed it was when the state of popular music and the abilities of public entertainers of that decade are compared with the conditions prevailing now. And it was Billy and Ernie's destiny to serve as light-hearted historians, chronicling all the fads, foibles and foolishness of those bewitching ten years. Whatever was gay, giddy or gruesome in the Twenties they satirized. The flapper, the "gold digger," prohibition, radio, mah jongg, the Model A Ford; the "so's your old man" epidemic, short skirts, bobbed hair, Dr. Coue, eccentric dance steps, grandmothers trying to pass as teen-agers—all the foam and froth that arose above the surface of normal everyday life they treated with gentle satire or, just as often, broadly burlesqued. But there was never a sting to their comedy, and everybody who knew and loved them felt that the last thing in the minds of the two smiling gentlemen, harmonizing to Dave Kaplan's brilliant piano accompaniment, was harming or hurting the feeling of anyone. I am serious when I say that any earnest historian in the approaching 1960's, wishing to gain a clear conception of how the world wagged 30 to 40 years ago, could not do better than to take a thorough course of the recordings of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare.

Since the two comedians were so devoted to each other, I suspect

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.
Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

ROSEWOOD MELODEON

One of the much sought after Melodeons mfg. by Geo. A. Prince & Co., Buffalo. Reconditioned by Grand Rapids Hobby Shop. Controls at each end of keyboard, an artist said sounded like a pipe organ. Music rack. Octagon legs. Beading around the outside. A very outstanding article and in perfect condition. For Sale - $300. Snapshot 25c. Packing and shipping extra.

MRS. F. C. DUNN — Salda, California

mhp

Their other special assets included the lilt of their singing voices, their mock-serious tones (which they could use to advantage when engaged in such pursuits as hurling defiance at the dictates of Emily Post, as in "Etiquette Blues"), and their absolutely uninhibited sense of buffoonery. Their individual stamp was on everything they touched, even when using "normal," rather than specially written, material. Take for example the deathlessly irrelevant snatch of dialogue that opens "It Won't Be Long Now" ("... Do you file your nails?" ". . . No, I just cut them and throw them away.")

The world to which the Happiness Boys belonged was fast slipping away when they died: by now it is completely gone and rather foreign to us. But it seems well worth dipping back into it on occasions — back into that far-off time when, so it seems, everything and everyone was very fresh and young and susceptible to bright songs and snappy patter.

I might mention that the "Do you file your nails?" gag was used by Jones and Hare on several records. When I talked with Billy Jones in his New York office little more than a month before his death, he told me the joke was one that he and Bert Grant, the song writer, had used when they were partners in vaudeville. The thought occurs: if Jones and Hare were alive, at the peak of their powers, how they could make a career in television or radio? Song writers no longer write comedy numbers, and popular music is no longer aimed at an adult audience. If the comedians were seeking a name for themselves today they would be swamped by the caterwaulings of Elvis Presley and other such "singers," and their sweet notes would be submerged by the primitive idiocy of "rock'n' roll." Jones and Hare were lucky they lived when they did. Their clean comedy would be out of tune with current trends.

III More Background Material

"Radio Personalities, a Pictorial and Biographical Annual, 1936," gives the following brief biographical sketch of Jones and Hare:

Born in Norfolk, Virginia, Ernie Hare entered the Peabody Conservatory of Music at Baltimore. Soon afterward he obtained his first theatrical engagement and later played in 14 musical comedies.

Billy Jones hails from Manhattan. He worked in a bank, herded sheep in Wales, mined ore, climbed telephone poles and made cables, meanwhile singing in clubs and musical shows. While recording for a phonograph company he met Ernie.

They made a record together, and its success was so instantaneous that they formed the team whose jests and jokes later brought them fame. First known on the air as "The Happiness Boys," later as "The Interwoven Pair" and "The Flit Soldiers," Bill and Ernie have been broadcasting together for twelve years and were heard from WOR in the Purily Bakery broadcasts. Sixty of their electrically transcribed programs have been released throughout the country. For 18 weeks they were held over at the Roxy Theater. Their birthdays, heights and weights are the same.

Concerning Jones and Hare's birthdays, it was always reported in publicity material during their lifetimes that Hare was born March 15, 1883, and Jones March 15, 1889. You will have noticed that the long-play record says Hare was born March 16. Perhaps he was, but it was thought better publicity to give them the same birth date, just as George M. Cohan, "The Yankee Doodle Boy," claimed July 4 as his birthday, although it seems to have been July 5. The article from which I have just quoted didn't mention that in the early 1930's they sang on NBC, sponsored by Hellman's Mayonnaise, as Billy Jones and Ernest Hare were among the first recording artists Jim Walsh (Then known as Ulysses Walsh) wrote to when he began seeking information for a book he planned. (The book's place has been taken by the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists series in HOBBIES.) Jones and Hare took it turn about, writing the message on this photograph.

"the Go'd-Filled Tenor and the Silver-Plated Baritone."

From various sources I have put together some other interesting background material concerning Jones and Hare.

Most radio authorities agree the first real broadcast comedy program . . . that of the Happiness Boys — was the result of Ernie and Billy's accepting an invitation to make their first appearance on the air from the red-brick Westinghouse factory in Newark, New Jersey. That was on October 18, 1921. After entering a small third floor room hung with a tarpaulin they looked rather bewildered at some outlandish new mechanical devices, but when the signal was given began indulging in a series of songs and jokes over Radiophone Station WJZ. This they kept up for 90 minutes, ad libbing all the way.

Fan mail poured in from persons who listened with crystal sets. Jones and Hare were fascinated by radio and it wasn't long before they were singing each week as a comedy and singing team for the Happiness Candy Stores over Station WEAF. In 1924 they adopted what would nowadays be called their theme song:

How-do-you do, everybody,
how-do-you-do. . . .

Don't forget your Friday date,
Seven-thirty unto eight. . .
How-do-you-do, Everybody,
how-do-you-do!"

As one student of radio has pointed out, the Happiness Boys were the first successful radio comedy team; they apparently were the first to entertain for a commercial sponsor; and they were the first to use a team name with sponsor identification. They were on radio for 18 years until Hare's deplorable death. During Ernie's final illness and for some time after his death, his 16-year-old daughter, Marilyn, took his place.

At the peak of their popularity, Jones and Hare received 700 or more fan letters a week, with the answers being attended to by their faithful and efficient secretary, Ann Perkins. When they broadcast "I'm Looking Over a Four-Leaf Clover" in 1927 ardent admirers sent them several pounds of the supposed good luck plant.

One writer made an amusing misstatement by saying that Jones and Hare met in the Victor studios, became fast friends and soon were highly popular in the "then rapidly growing phonograph industry." The same commentator also says the Victor Company objected strenuously to their going into radio, fearing their broadcast work would impair their popularity as a recording team. He mentions, too, that Jones had been a jack-of-all trades until Lew Fields, of Weber and Fields, gave him a chance in a musical comedy, "Step This Way," after which he went on concert tours and did vaudeville work. His first Victor records were made under the name of Victor Roberts. Of Hare we are told he appeared in ten musical shows at the Winter Garden and was Al Jolson's understudy in "Sinbad."

It is not true that Jones and Hare met for the first time at Victor. It is true that Jones began making records under the name of Victor Roberts in 1920 (the Victor was taken from the name of the company and Roberts from his Welsh mother's maiden name), but, as I have already said, the first Victor duet by Billy and Ernie was issued as a part of the June, 1924, supplement. Up to that time, although Hare had sung for virtually every other American record company under his own name and a variety of disguises, his name had never appeared in a Victor list and his voice had not been heard on a Victor record.

Nor is it true that the phonograph business was a rapidly growing industry at the time Jones and Hare made their first Victor record. The truth is that by 1924 records and record players had suffered almost a mortal attack from radio, and Victor's sales that year were only about half what they had been four years before. Only the introduction of electric recording and new instruments to play the microphonic records caused the talking machine industry to flourish again until the 1929 depression almost wiped it out. As for the statement that Victor objected to Jones and Hare doing radio work (when Hare was not even a Victor artist) — well, in the title of a comedy song the Happiness Boys used to sing, "That's a Lot of Bunk." Or, if you prefer, "It's All a Lot of Baloney."

The most trustworthy evidence indicates Jones and Hare crossed paths for the first time in the Edison studios, and the Edison Company afterward proudly proclaimed that they had never sung together until they made their first Diamond Disc. However, Edison was mistaken. Billy Jones told me their first duet record was an Irving Berlin song, "I Like to Do It," which they recorded for Vocalion.

But I have since discovered Billy himself was wrong, and that they made another record, to be mentioned later, and which he apparently had forgotten, several months before the Vocalion offering appeared.

IV. What the Death Certificates Tell

I have obtained from the New York Health Department copies of the death certificates of both Billy Jones and Ernest Hare. (On a few records his first name was spelled as Ernst.) Since Hare was the older and died first, I shall begin with the information contained in his certificate, although Jones made records before Hare, and usually, but not always, his name took precedence on their duet records. It was the custom to give a tenor's name, as a rule, before that of his baritone partner.

As has already been said, Hare's full name was Thomas Ernest Hare. He died March 9, 1939, in Queens General Hospital, 82-68 164th Street, Jamaica, Long Island. He lived in Flushing at 144-16 35th Avenue. His wife's name is given as Mary Hare, but, oddly, his date of birth is not recorded, although his age is set down as 56. He actually had about a week to go before reaching his 56th birthday. The certificate says he had been employed 17 years as a radio artist, the last day he worked being January 22, 1939. His birthplace is given only as "U. S. A.," and he had been, according to the certificate, a resident of New York for 30 years.

Hare's father's name is given as Thomas U. Hare and the maiden name of his mother as Ida Roberts. Both were born in this country. The almost indecipherable medical diagnosis of his fatal illness indicates he died of pneumonia. He was buried March 12, 1939, in Cedar Grove Cemetery, Norfolk, Va. The undertaker was Hallett and Hallett, Inc.

Jones' certificate gives his name as William Jones, omitting the middle name of Reese. He lived at 215 West 88th street, Manhattan, and his wife's name was May Jones. (Billy married a very few years before his death. As long as his widowed mother lived, he made a home for her and remained single.) The date of his birth also isn't given, but his age appears as 51 and his profession as radio artist employed by the National Broadcasting Company. He had been a lifelong resident of New York and was a veteran of World War I. His father's first name was Thomas (as Hare's had been) and the birthplace of his father was given as "Wales, England" (!) His mother was Sussanna Roberts, and she too was born in "Wales, England." Jones had died of a heart attack — "coronary arterio-

(Continued on page 64)

A Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch artist's conception of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare doing a black-face minstrel number in Al Jolson style. Hare was born in Norfolk, Va., not far from Richmond.

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs and records. Parts and anything pertaining to old phonographs. Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. mh3882

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

Rare phonographs for sale: Edison, Columbia, Victor and many rare models. Large list of hard-to-find cylinder records, parts of all kinds. Repairs. Reproducer repairing a specialty. Stylus (needle) installed. reproducers for sale. Will pay $6.50 and up for any good cylinder reproducer. 25c for lists. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. mh32721

FOR SALE: Phonographs, duplicates of my collection. List 25c. Need Edison Excelsior. — Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. mh3042

FOR SALE: Edison, Victor and Columbia phonographs. Hundreds of cylinder and disc records, many rare, hard to find numbers. Send dime for either two or four minute cylinder, or disc record list. All three lists for 25c.—Coppertoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. ap3886

PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

sclerosis" - while walking on Broadway, and 1627 Broadway was given as the place of death, on the afternoon of November 23, 1940. He was buried four days later in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City, with the Frank E. Campbell Funeral Church, Inc., in charge.

And that is the extent of the information on the death certificates.

V Billy Jones Begins Recording

There seems some reason to believe that Billy Jones, before he found himself as a singer and comedian, was regarded as something of a "ne'er-do-well," for a time he was even sent to Wales to visit relatives and spent part of his time herding sheep.

When I talked with him during that long conversation in October, 1940, Billy told me he did his first commercial recording in 1918, but had taken part in 1912 in some of the talking picture experiments Thomas A. Edison was then making at West Orange, N. J. He mentioned the recording was done on concert size cylinders and that, in order to keep the performers from being huddled together, Edison had developed a huge horn, well out of camera range, which picked up sound from 30 or 40 feet away.

Jones' initial recording was done for Edison under the name of Reese Jones. The Edison files show his first record, "Bring Me a Letter From My Old Home Town," was sung on May 6, 1918. Backed by the Harmony Four's superb rendition of "We'll Do Our Share While You're Over There" (the mixed quartet was composed of Gladys Rice, John Young, George Wilton Ballard and Donald Chalmers), it became Diamond Disc 50494 and Blue Amberol 3549. Jones was in military service, and my lamented friend, the late Fred Rabenstein, who used to look up so much Edison information for me, said he thought Billy was stationed in a submarine chaser off Sandy Hook.

Other Reese Jones records were Diamond Disc 50698, "I'd Love to Fall Asleep and Wake Up in My Mammy's Arms" (coupled with "Mammy's Good-Night Lullaby," sung by the Crescent Trio), and 50716, "Wonderful Girl — Wonderful Boy," a duet with Helen Bell Rush, a soprano from Scranton, Pa. Jones and Miss Rush recorded this song for several companies, but he called himself Billy Jones on other labels. The other side, "My Home Town" is a One Horse Town," was sung by Jim Doherty.

(To be continued)

IVES, IVES-BLAKESLEE, Carpenter, Kenton, Hubley, N.N. Hill Brass Co., Gong Bell Manufacturing Co., Shepard Hardware Co., J. & E. Stevens Co., Kyser, Rex and Wilkins. Want any catalogs issued by these companies. See my large ad in the Old Mechanical Banks Department of this issue. — F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

WANTED: Old iron hitching posts and old tin tobacco tags. — R. F. French, 507½ Highland Drive, Marshalltown, Iowa. f122511

ITEMS OF POLISHED STONE or quartz such as lamps, bowls, figures, chess sets, flowers, etc., signed Tiffany not gold color. — Rita Ford, 907 3rd Ave., New York, N. Y. mh6468

CIVIL WAR, Slavery, the South. I will pay fair prices for anything in these categories (books, pamphlets, documents, broadsides, soldiers' letters, portraits of generals, Confederate currency, Confederate imprints, slave documents and deeds - anything). — D. R. Spaight, Book-seller, Waterford, Va. ap3428

OLD AMERICAN COINS, stamps, & envelopes with stamps wanted. Also Long Island, N.Y., material before 1900, such as old letters, documents, post cards, pictures, books, newspapers, antiques, etc. Need large cents, Indian heads, scarce Lincoln's, one dollar gold pieces, etc. Please state what you have in your first letter and state price for entire lot. No offers. I buy for resale. — Marakowski Stamp & Coin Shop, 612 Jericho Tpke., New Hyde Park, L.I., N.Y. au60042

SPECIAL WANT in old cast iron toys: Horse drawn fire chief wagon. Horse reel wagon with the two fat heavy walking horses. Royal Circus giraffe cage wagon. Nodding head wagons. Small Royal Circus cage wagons. Seeing New York Autocar 899. Fancy carriages. I am no dealer. — A. H. Mundis, 731 Wallace St., York, Pa. my62971

WANTED, Schoenhut circus animals: cat, gorilla, seal, wolf, hyena. — Clara Morearty, 810 So. 59th, Omaha, Nebr. ap3652

SOUERS grandfather clock. — Prof. W. H. Miley, Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio. mh169

PLEASE NOTE my display ad in Mechanical Bank Department of this issue, listing various wants. — F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

SHAVING MUGS, vases in pairs, Mary Gregory items and toys. — Walter J. Henry, Adamsburg, Pa. f12069

WHISKEY AMERICANA: bottles, ads, posters, licenses, books, magazines or anything relating to pre-prohibition whiskey business. — Barton Distilling Company, 134 North LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. au6008

WANTED: Antique clothing, 1895-1920, men and women. Describe and price in first letter. — Doyer, 1626 No. 46th St., Phoenix, Arizona. mh120801

BOTTLES, FLASKS and bitters. Buy or sell. List 25c. Wanted New England Pineapple oval dish, handled mugs and cruets. — The Empty Bottle, Box 27, New London, Conn. ap128271

MEDICAL INSTRUMENTS: Bleeders, etc. — J. Koeliker, 4610 Wood St., Willoughby, Ohio. d12497

FORT LARNED, KANS.: Any information or historical material concerning soldiers stationed at Fort 1859-1882. Letters, diaries, photos, military or Indian relics from vicinity. Especially want photos of young Thomas McGee and Isaac Marrs 1864. Write Mrs. H. C. Campbell, Box 486, Larned, Kans. mh1253

TOP CASH PAID for letters and documents of famous people. Also want interesting old diaries, letters about Indians, pioneers, whaling, etc. Immediate decision! Immediate payment! Ask today for free brochure, "How to Sell Your Autographs." Catalogs issued. — Charles H. Hamilton, 515 Madison Ave., New York 22, N. Y. Eldorado 5-3464. tfx

FOR SALE

WHOLESALE FURNITURE. Write for Free Dealers Lists. Early American, Penna. Dutch, Marble tops, sinks, chests, cupboards, Cane & Plank Chairs, etc. Visit us. Large stock. — Deaven Antique Shop, Main St., Jonestown, Penna. ¼ mi. South of U.S. Route 22. my6612

WHOLESALE DEALERS. New shop open. Please stop by. — Antiques, Inc., Route 16, Knoxville, Tenn. mh3422

BOTTLES, FLASKS and bitters. Buy or sell. List 25c. Wanted New England Pineapple oval dish, handled mugs and cruets. — The Empty Bottle, Box 27, New London, Conn. my128271

POWERFUL 4-sectional brass telescope. Dated 1865. Excellent. $26. Polished ivory snuff flask of 1810 from whale tooth. 6" long. Silver mounted. Rare. Beautiful. $26. Double barrel Civil War pinfire pistols. Good. $25 each. Five antique flintlock pistols. Complete and in fair condition $26 each. Matched pair flintlock pirate pistols. Brass trim. Excellent working order and condition. $127. Small copper pistol powder flasks. Rare. Excellent. $15 each. Send for antique firearms list. 25c. Many bargains. — Tontz Country Store, Elstnore, Calif. mh30821

JOHN ROGERS GROUPS, collection of twenty different groups for sale. — C. K. Johnson, Hurley, New York. ap6215

OLD SOUTHERN ANTIQUES. Furniture, glassware, china, primitives, firearms, anything. Sister scouts for the South. Bargains every day. — Garnetts Outlet Sales, Starkville, Miss. au124431

I am selling my antiques by mail at low prices. List for stamp. — Florence M. Alexander, 606 California St., Newtonville, Mass. mh3405

IMPORTED laces, Point de Velas, thread Valenciennes. Costume items. Genuine Japanese prints. Oriental items. List for stamp. — Ox Shoe Treasure Shop, Helena, Mont. mh3863

ANTIQUE Ivory hand carved chess set, king ¼", rest in proportion. If interested, write — Mrs. W. McKim, Morrison, Ill. ap3633 PEWTER: Some pieces marked. Qt. cans or open tankards, $17.50 each; 10" plates, $12 each; 9" plates, $10 each; 14" round charger, $27.50; 4" bowls, $7.50 each. Two primitive clipper ship oils, write. Map on parchment, dated 1699, $45. Two half-models, write. 9" disc Polyphon box with 12 records, $60. Postage extra, inquiries invited. — Herbert Callister, 920 West Great Falls St., Falls Church, Va. mh1025

WANTED

MECHANICAL BANKS, gold coins, Indian relics, music boxes, old guns — Romey, Box 291, Bluffton, Indiana. my120441

PETROLEUM: Books, pamphlets, magazines, maps, catalogs, photographs, letters on American petroleum before 1910. Describe and price. — W. R. Johnson, 416 Wheeler, Ardmore, Okla. ap3863

CIVIL WAR bugle and other Civil War relics wanted. — Walter A. Holloway, 303 W. Ontario, Chicago 10, Ill. my3882

WANTED: 14" colored hanging lamps, original G.W.T.W.'s, weather vanes, old store signs, miniature lamps, barn and street lamps, silver napkin rings with animals, Edison horn phonographs, hanging iron match boxes, tealeaf china, country store items. — Yankee Trader Antiques, Carson City, Nev. my3276

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

The Happiness Boys . . .

Billy Jones and Ernest Hare

(Dave Kaplan at the Piano)

(Part 2)

By JIM WALSH

The name of Billy Jones, didn't appear in the Edison lists until the summer of 1921, when he and a male chorus (apparently the Harmonizers, of which he had become second tenor) sang perhaps the greatest of all comic songs, "Casey Jones." His version was patterned closely on Billy Murray's great Edison cylinder version of the same classic, but it was not as good as the Murray rendition. It brought out an unpleasant habit Jones had in his early recording days of singing with a hissing sound on certain syllables and occasionally evincing a trace of a lisp. This disappeared after his partnership with Hare. By the end of 1920 Jones was singing for nearly every American record company (unless some on the West Coast might be excepted) under the name of Billy Jones. However, his first Brunswick records appeared in a disguised form as being by William Reese. He didn't appear in the Victor list until June, 1920, when he sang, on 18670, "My Sahara Rose" and "Oh, How I Laugh When I Think That I Cried About You." The record displayed a pleasing tenor voice but a rather affected style of which he soon afterwards rid himself. His Columbia debut was postponed until the spring of 1922 when he sang (on No. 3551) "Feather-Bed Lane," with Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw rendering "Mammy Lou" on the reverse.

By this time he had struck up his partnership with Hare, and the very next number, 3552, combined their first Columbia record, "Lalawana Lullaby." The Shannon Four obliged with "Ka-Lu-A," to fill the other side of the platter. It is amusing to recall that some veteran record buyers resented the idea of a singer calling himself Billy Jones. They suspected that because of the great popularity of Ada Jones and Billy Murray he had trickily taken the Billy from Murray's first name and the Jones from Ada's family name. However, Billy Jones of course was a name to which he was lawfully entitled. And neither Ada Jones or Billy Murray bore him any grudge. One of the last records Miss Jones ever made was Edison Diamond Disc 50852 on which she and the male Jones sang duets of "On a Little Side Street" and "When Francis Dances With Me." The Edison company had planned to make duet partners of them, since Billy Murray had signed up exclusively with Victor, but Miss Jones' death in May, 1922, intervened.

As for Billy Murray, then at the crest of his popularity, he made one Victor duet record with Jones while the latter was still calling himself Victor Roberts for Victor use. It was 18723, on which they sang "Down By the O-Hi-O," coupled with Murray's solo of "Marimba." Murray, Jones and Hare became excellent friends.

VI Ernest Hare's First Records

Ernest Hare also probably made his first records for Edison. Fred Rabenstein's research indicated his first Edison work was done in November, 1918. He sang "A Good Man is Hard to Find," a comic "coon song" written by Eddie Green later famous as "the singing waiter" on the "Duffy's Tavern" radio program. It was rejected, because of some flaw, for issue as a Diamond Disc but appeared as Amberol cylinder 3690. In February, 1919, Ernie had another try with better luck. He sang an extremely amusing Negro dialect song, "Satan, I'm Here (I Can't Stand for No Triffin' Man)" which was issued as one side of Diamond Disc 50542 and as Amberol 3746. The other side of the disc was occupied by Al Bernard, then just beginning to make a reputation as one of the greatest white "blues" singers of all time, holding forth with "The Nigger Blues." It appeared in the August, 1919, supplement of Edison "Re-Creations."

What might be considered one of the turning points in Hare's recording career occurred a month later when Edison issued No. 50558, his first duet with Al Bernard, "I Want to Hold You In My Arms," a side-splitting "coon" duet written by Bernard and J. Russell Robinson. The other side, "Oh! Lawdy (Something's Done Got Between Ebacaneer and Me)," was a masterly "coon" song interpretation of another type by Ada Jones.

The Bernard and Hare duet was one of the popular song recording sensations of 1919 — and it was inspired because Bernard and Hare lived in the same apartment house and Ernie wanted to borrow an egg one night from Al. But that's a story to be told later. It resulted in a long series of comic songs and sketches written by Bernard and recorded by him and Hare, to steadily widening popularity.

I could devote a great deal of space to relating in detail the professional association of Bernard and Hare, which continued to some extent even after Jones and Hare had discovered each other. However, since Bernard, as the author and composer, was the "top man" of the Bernard-Hare duo, I shall withhold such information for a later series which will give that brilliant comedian's life story. I have often wondered why, when the Bernard and Hare duets were so popular on Edison, Brunswick, Emerson, Pathe and other brands, the team was never called on to record its inimitable skits for Victor and Columbia. They were certainly among the funniest records ever made — far funnier, in my opinion, than those by The Two Black Crows, who came along nearly a decade later.

But that's in passing. Both as a soloist and as Bernard's duet partner, Ernest Hare was well established as a recording artist by the time he met Billy Jones. Already, like Jones, he had begun to record under a variety of names, but there was no mistaking that rich voice that ranged from a fairly high baritone, chock-full of overtones, to a sepulchral bass. However, he never, so far as I can recall, made a solo Victor record (his work for Victor consisted entirely of duets with Jones), nor did he make a Columbia solo recording until 1924. Meanwhile, Jones, beginning in 1922, had made a good many solos and also sung the refrains in a spate of Columbia dance records.

We have now reached the point where we may begin consideration of the formation of the historic Jones and Hare partnership — an association that is still so memorable and redolent of the peculiar fragrance of the 1920's that when Jimmy Hatlo, the famous cartoonist of "They'll Do It Every Time," decided a few years ago to introduce a nostalgic touch into one of his delightful panels, he had a rooming house occupant complaining that the covers on his bed hadn't been changed "since the days of Ernie Jones and Billy Hare." Jimmy later autographed an original of that 1953 drawing for me, and I have submitted it for reproduction (by permission of King Features Syndicate) with this series. (See page 34 March Issue). Hatlo explained he didn't get the singers' names mixed up but makes it a rule never to use anyone's exact name in his comics. Therefore Billy and Ernie's last names were deliberately switched.

The chances are that Billy Jones and Ernest Hare met for the first time in the late fall of 1920 at the Edison recording studio, 79 Fifth Avenue, New York. As was said last month, they did not do their first recorded duet work for Edison (despite that company's belief to the contrary); however, my frequently quoted Edison friend, Fred Rabenstein, wrote me he was present at the meeting when the future Damon and Pythias of the Phonograph and Radio shook hands for the first time.

One legend is that Billy and Ernie felt attracted to each other when they swapped reminiscences and each confided he had originally hoped to be an opera star. The story goes on that they amused themselves by singing snatches from operatic arias in a burlesque fashion and discovered their voices blended remarkably well. This led them to decide, perhaps, that they would make a congenial duet team.

When Billy Jones first looked at Ernest Hare he saw a man with an oval shaped face, whose hair was thinning, who wore rimless glasses, and whose lofty forehead gave him an appearance of intellectuality. Hare was 37. Jones was 31, round-faced, freckled, blue-eyed and already inclined to be chubby. Both were rather short, about five feet seven. (Jones gives his height in the pair's last Victor record, "Happiness Boys Going Abroad.") Both had broad smiles when they were amused, with Ernie's being a trifle wider.

Besides doing solo work for various record companies under several names, Hare was still singing as a partner of Al Bernard, even though Bernard had also formed an alternate association with the popular yodeler, Frank Kamplain. Hare was chiefly regarded as a comedian, in which capacity he had recorded some of the songs - among them "I'll Say She Does" and "I Gave Her That" - in which he had understudied Al Jolson. However, at least one company, Brunswick, used him mainly as a ballad singer. Brunswick boasted that Hare's record of "Old Pal, Why Don't You Answer Me?" was the best issued by any company, but its sale probably was small in comparison with Henry Burr's Victor version, which had the advantage of a Campbell and Burr duet of "Feather Your Nest" on the reverse.

It is interesting to compare records by Hare and Jolson and to discover how much superior as a singer the understudy was to the star. Jolson apparently had a knack of sending his personality across the footlights in a way that no other performer could equal, but he didn't have much of a voice. As his records reveal, it was harsh and rasping and marked by eccentric tricks of style. Hare, on the other hand, had one of the finest voices of his day, one worthy to hold the center of any operatic stage, but must have lacked Jolson's electric magnetism for stage work. In my opinion, the very qualities that made Jolson a poor recording artist (his success on the stage is another matter) caused Hare to be a superlative one.

BILLY JONES AND ERNEST HARE as broadcasting stars in the 1920's. Whoever the piano player may be, it's obviously not Dave Elman.

As for Jones, he also was singing for nearly every recording company and using an assortment of names. Though not established as anyone's regular duet partner, he was the second tenor of the Harmonizers Quartet, which had Charles Hart as first tenor, Steve Porter, baritone, and Harry Donaghy, bass. (More information about the Harmonizers may be found in the Charles Hart article in HOBBIES for December, 1958).

Fred Rabenstein accounted for Jones and Hare's not having begun their duet partnership with Edison by saying it was always necessary to "get a date" in advance for a recording session. He pointed out that orchestrations must be prepared and other arrangements made before the actual record making could be done. Even so, it seems strange that the first Jones and Hare duet for Edison, "Down at the Old Swimming Hole," was not recorded until June 25, 1921. This appeared as Diamond Disc No. 50841 and as Blue Amberol cylinder 4391. It became one of the 300 best selling Diamond Discs.

Here is what the booklet, "Edison Records of Music That Lives," said about it. Notice the cautious way in which the statement that this was the first Jones-Hare duet is qualified:

The engaging topic of the song, "Down at the Old Swimming Hole," will surely appeal to all boys from nine to ninety. As sung by those jolly songsters, Jones and Hare, one is carried away, indeed, to the scenes of one's childhood, when life was just one good time after another.

Jones and Hare, you know, are the celebrated "Happiness Boys" of radio fame, and, to our knowledge, we do not believe that Jones and Hare were ever paired together until they made this record.

"Down at the Old Swimming Hole" was one of a series of "kid songs," written by Al Wilson and the late James A. Brennan (we'll hear more of Jim Brennan later), which Billy and Ernie considered ideal material for their talents. Others that came a little later included "Down by the Old Apple Tree" and "In the Little Red School House." It was also the first song which the pair recorded for several companies. Their work is good, but any listener familiar with all stages of their career can tell it was made at a period when they had not been together long and hadn't perfected their duet style. The voices do not blend so admirably as they did later and there is still an occasional sharp, hissing quality that detracts from the rounded beauty of Jones' tenor.

II. The First Jones and Hare Duet

I believe, but am not sure, that Billy Jones told me in my talk with him that he and Hare did meet for the first time at Edison. However, in spite of that and Fred Rabenstein's recollections, I am not convinced that the Edison encounter was their initial meeting. There is a chance that they originally ran into each other at Brunswick. If so, and it was a recording director who had the inspiration of teaming them, the credit probably goes to Walter Haenschel.

This photo of DAVE KAPLAN, director of Kaplan's Melodists, who became Jones and Hare's accompanist in 1925, is reproduced from the February, 1926, Edison record supplement.

At any rate, although Billy told me the team's first duet record was "I Like To Do It," for Vocalion, the fact remains that record wasn't issued until June, 1921. In February, 1921, four months earlier, Brunswick had marketed the earliest Jones-Hare duet I have been able to find. This is 2063, "All She'd Say Was 'Umh-Hum,'" coupled with "Feather Your Nest," by the Amphion Quartet, which was probably another name for the Harmonizers. The Brunswick supplement said:

"All She'd Say Was Umh-Hum," according to that prize song-comedian, Ernest Hare, a statement that is musically concurred in by his friend, Billy Jones. It's a mighty good song with words that bring more than inaudible smiles. Both sing well and the accompaniment is splendid. It appears that Mr. Hare met someone "that thrilled him through and through," and he confesses in his richest baritone range that he "met his Waterloo."

Despite this praise the record is indifferent by later Jones-Hare standards. There is little harmony and Jones doesn't have much to do. A few months later the boys did better when they teamed up on a Brunswick record of "Down Yonder," L. Wolfe Gilbert's song that had a big revival a few years ago owing to Del Wood's piano rendition. When the revival was at its height a disc jockey wrote to The Billboard that he had been playing the old Brunswick record because Jones and Hare sang "Down Yonder" better than any of the latter-day artists.

The Vocalion record, which Jones believed to have been the comedians' first, was No. 14174. The other side had the Harmonizers singing "I Lost My Heart to the Meanest Girl in Town."

III. On Their Way Up

To repeat: "Down at the Old Swimming Hole" really gave Jones and Hare their start as a successful duet team. They sang it for several companies, and the team name was now usually appearing as "Billy Jones and Ernest Hare," even though both the Brunswick and Vocalion records we have just discussed gave Hare first place. However, their names were changed on the label of the Phantasie record of the song to "Lyons and Heilman," although their identity was given away by their calling each other "Billy" and "Ernie" in the record. Phantasie was a disguise for Lyric records. New labels were applied over the Lyric ones (which had a trademark showing a cat making an unsuccessful effort to scratch a record), and false names were given the artists. For instance, Gladys Rice was called Victoria Marsden.

Not long afterward (as related last month) Billy and Ernie made their radio broadcasting debut. The Shannon Four — Charles Hart, Lewis James, Elliott Shaw and Wilfred Glenn appeared on the same experimental program. A short time later came their first sponsored program, for Irving Fuerst's Happiness Candy company — a fact which resulted in their attaining their greatest radio success as the Happiness Boys.

For the next several years the paths of Jones and Hare, on radio, records and in personal appearances led steadily upward. They were the most popular feature on radio for several years and their records continued to be large sellers despite the fact that they could be heard each week by "wireless."

A 1924 Billboard mention of their broadcasting activities said:

Ernie Hare and Billy Jones, known on radio as The Happiness Boys, will start their broadcasting again, Friday, September 19. These popular artists have done much to popularize songs, and their phonograph records continue to sell at a surprising rate. One thing about this team is that it doesn't sign up with any particular publishing house, but knows a good song when it hears it, regardless of whose it is.

About this same time, The Billboard published a news item that I find hard to believe. It said Jones and Hare were in such great demand by so many companies for making records that they had taken out insurance against forgetting to fill a recording engagement. The idea was that if an annoyed company sued them for not showing up on schedule they would be protected against being sued. The "story" was probably "planted" by a press agent, but it gives a good idea of the remarkable popularity they had achieved.

Of considerably later date is the following review in a New York newspaper (I'm not sure which) of a typical Jones and Hare broadcast. It was written by David Bratton:

The Interwoven Pair, the finest team on the air for good humor and lively program, were pleasing to the extreme over WJZ last night. A couple of humorous songs put just the proper amount of spirit into the program and the pair sang several ballads in a manner that proves beyond a doubt the boys have many years ahead of them as radio stars. The wise cracks and gags were rendered with freshness that is exceedingly bright in comparison with most of the other radio humor teams. We liked the bit about Venice and not being able to see much of the place on account of the flood. Not new, but put across in a pleasing manner. That new song, "Singing in the Bathtub," proved to be a good one.

ETHEL MERMAN AND MARY MARTIN, in their famous impersonation of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare on the Ford television program.

ERNEST HARE in a relaxed mood. (Reproduced from the Vocalion Record Supplement for March, 1920).

The reference to the duo as "The Interwoven Pair" and mention of "Singing in the Bathtub" sets the date of this review as 1929, a time when — although they probably didn't realize it — Jones and Hare had reached and passed the peak of their popularity as radio and recording attractions.

IV. Great Teamwork

The year 1923 saw this country swept by two comic songs with "funny paper" connotations. One was "Barney Google" and the other, the year's greatest hit, "Yes, We Have No Bananas," whose title was taken from a slang term. T. A. Dorgan introduced into his "Indoor Sports" cartoons. Jones and Hare did their share in making both popular. 1923 was also the year in which phonograph and record manufacturers began to view with concern the steadily advancing inroads of radio. It was likewise the year in which Edison Diamond Discs, now bearing easily read white labels instead of the formerly almost indecipherable black ones, became known by the plebeian term of Edison Records instead of the pretentious Edison Re-Creations. Columbia records, formerly notorious for their scratch, now came out with new labels and almost silent surfaces. Recording continued to be by the horn method, with the electric process still two years in the future.

By the beginning of 1923, Jones and Hare had perfected their duet style. Their singing was now so polished that cultured persons who ordinarily disliked popular music and cared nothing for comedy could listen to them with pleasure for the sake of hearing the superb blend of their fine voices. There was no "strong" and "weak" man in the team. The work of both was of equal value. If Hare's vocal equipment was perhaps somewhat superior to Jones', the tenor, with his higher, more flexible voice, had a greater gift for dialect interpretations. Bowery, English, Negro, German, French, Irish, Italian, Jewish, Greek — Jones was the master of any type of dialect and Hare was not far behind him. Occasionally they sang in mock-operatic style, as in their amusing Edison and Vocalion records of "Operatic Syncopation," in which they "rag" familiar operatic melodies — just as tradition says they did at their first meeting. They even made one Edison record in which there was no singing, but in which they talked all the way through in Negro dialect — a forerunner of "The Two Black Crows." It was "From de Ol' Home Town (The Meeting of Lincoln and Glascoe)," and to my perception is not up to the Jones and Hare standard.

Anyone wanting a double-faced record showing the comedians at their best should get Edison No. 51155, coupling "Barney Google" and an even more amusing and tuneful Harry Von Tilzer song, "Old King Tut." (The discovery of King Tut's Egyptian tomb was one of the topical sensations of 1923.) This record is also the best possible illustration of the superiority of Edison recording to any other of the pre-electric day. Billy and Ernie sang "Barney Google" for at least a dozen companies, but in no other records do the results approach those obtained on Edison. The needle-cut records all fail to discriminate clearly between the two voices. Hare sounds almost as high as Jones, and the rich overtones are missing from his voice. On the Edison there is never any doubt as to which is which. There is also a flash of brilliant piano playing (probably by Dave Kaplan) that could not have been duplicated on any lateral cut disc.

Not only were Jones and Hare recording hundreds of duets each year, they were doing an equal number of solos, as well as occasionally singing with other artists. Hare still sang an occasional duet with Al Bernard, and one of their 1923 specialties, "Samuel Johnson, Get Thee Gone From Here" deserves to rank with their 1920 classic, "Henry Jones, Your Honeymoon Is Over." Jones sang a duet with Gladys Rice, "My Old Girl," but the Edison label gives his name as "Eugene Harold." Hare did a couple of gospel hymn duets with Helen Clark, also for Edison, in which he is disguised as "Roy Roberts" (the "Roberts" obviously being taken from his mother's maiden name, just as Jones had called himself "Victor Roberts" on Victor records). The beautifully sung "sacred duets" are "The Old Rugged Cross" and "Waiting and Watching for Me." Both Jones and Hare sang occasionally in the Edison ensemble known as the New York Light Opera Company.

ERNEST HARE and another important member of his family—from the August, 1920, Vocalion Supplement.

V. Assumed Names

This is probably a good place to give a list of the various names under which Jones and Hare recorded. Most of them had been used before the advent of microphonic recording in 1925, but a few were not adopted, mostly for use on the cheaper brands of records, until after the electric era began. It seems ridiculous for records by two such popular comedians to have been issued under "aliases," but this was probably done because manufacturers of the more expensive records objected to having their stars compete openly on cheaper brands with the better grade discs. Billy and Ernie were certainly among the most prolific free-lance recorders of the 1920's (probably ranking from 1925 to 1930 just below Vernon Dalhart), and their total sales for all companies must have been far in excess of those of singers like Gene Austin, Billy Murray and Henry Burr, who during most of this period were exclusive to one company. Other leading free-lances were Irving Kaufman and Arthur Fields, with Jack Kaufman and Charles Harrison not far behind.

Jones seems to have used a great many more assumed names than Hare, but this list is not represented as being complete. There may be a good many others I haven't yet run across. At any rate, Jones was Harry Blake on Pathe, Actuelle and Perfect records, and Billy de Rex on several brands, including Gennett. On Actuelle he also recorded a mock operatic performance, "La Banana Aria," under the almost unbelievable pseudonym of "Ugesso Gargolo." I haven't heard this, but have seen it described as "a riot." The Edison name of Eugene Harold has already been mentioned, and he, like several other tenors (and also like Hare) was disguised as David Harris on National Music Lover records, which probably were made by Grey Gull. On seven-inch records for children he was sometimes called either "Uncle Billy" or just "Mr. Jones." He was also Reese Jones on Edison and Willy Jones on some of the cheaper brands. Pathe-Actuelle was particularly set on giving him different names, which beside those already mentioned included Dennis O'Malley, William Rees, Melvin Strong and Carlton Williams.

(Continued on page 64)

PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

Jones was William Reese on Brunswick and Victor Roberts on Victor, and names he used on Regal, Banner and other "off-brands," included Bertram Smith, Bob Thompson, Joe White (not to be confused with Joseph M. White, "the Silver-Masked Tenor"), Billy West, William West and Frank Williams. I formerly thought he was "Howard Lewis," who sang "Yes, We Have No Bananas" on the Black Swan records made by a Negro company, but the "Bananas" singer was really Arthur Hall. Jones' Edison record of "Yes, We—" included amusing impersonations of a Greek fruit seller and an English food store "clark."

Hare appeared as Wallace Daniels on Actuelle records. For that same label and others with Pathe affiliations he was also Arthur Grant, Robert Judson and Frank Mann. On children's records he was known as "Uncle Ernest" and "Mr. Hare" and, like Jones, he was sometimes called "David Harris" on National Music Lovers. He was Henry Jones on Regal records (the name obviously was borrowed from his famous impersonation of the Negro "Henry Jones" character), and on miscellaneous brands he was Curt Phillips, "Radio Joe," Ernie Spencer, Bob Thomas, John Thomas, and Allen Turner (again, not to be confused with the English baritone, Alan Turner.) Roy Roberts on Edison has already been mentioned. Brunswick even issued a record, "Santa Claus Hides in the Phonograph," in which he is identified on the label, for the children's benefit, as Santa Claus himself. However, the words, "Ernest Hare," appear parenthetically in smaller type. For Edison, Hare made a record of "Santa Claus Proves There is a Santa Claus," and Jones teamed up on the other side with Steve Porter in an excellent version of Steve's famous comic sketch, "Christmas Morning at Clancy's." Jones and Porter did several comic sketches for off-brands, and Hare assisted Byron G. Harlan in an Okeh record of Cal Stewart's original skit, "Uncle Josh at the Dentist's."

As a team, Jones and Hare were called "Reed and Griffin" on Silver-tone records, Jones and Harold on Moonshine, and "The Romeo Boys" on Romeo discs. Their accompanist, Dave Kaplan, seldom had liberties taken with his name but on a Silver-tone record he is changed to "Dave Landis." Hare was only occasionally given a chance to show the full range of his basso profundo, but he took advantage of the opportunity in two Edison records — an old minstrel number, "A Bullfrog Am No Nightingale" and the standard nautical display piece, "Bells of the Sea."

Even after Jones and Hare ceased to be the Happiness Boys on the air and were sponsored by Interwoven Socks, they were still called the Happiness Boys on records. Victor always catalogued them by the team name with their individual identities being given in parentheses, but other companies laid more emphasis on Jones and Hare as individual personalities and subordinated their radio affiliation.

Perhaps before closing this discussion of assumed names I should mention that Hare's daughter, Marilyn, told Quentin Riggs of Oklahoma City that her father made records under the alias of "Hobo Jack" Turner. However I believe the young lady is mistaken. "Hobo Jack" was John C. Turner, a well-known folk singer at various Western radio stations. He died nine years ago in Denver. His deep voice had a quality much like Hare's, and Marilyn probably heard some of his records and took them to be by her father. Listening closely to the Turner records, one detects a Western accent whereas Ernie Hare's voice never entirely lost a trace of the pronunciation of his native Virginia.

(To be continued)

WANTED

MECHANICAL BANKS, gold coins, Indian relics, music boxes, old guns — Romey, Box 291, Bluffton, Indiana. my120441

PETROLEUM: Books, pamphlets, magazines, maps, catalogs, photographs, letters on American petroleum before 1910. Describe and price. — W. R. Johnson, 416 Wheeler, Ardmore, Okla. ap3863

CIVIL WAR bugle and other Civil War relics wanted. — Walter A. Holloway, 308 W. Ontario, Chicago 10, Ill. my3882

WANTED: 14" colored hanging lamps, original G.W.T.W.'s, weather vanes, old store signs, miniature lamps, barn and street lamps, silver napkin rings with animals, Edison horn phonographs, hanging iron match boxes, tealeaf china, country store items. — Yankee Trader Antiques, Carson City, Nev. my3276

IVES, IVES-BLAKESLEE, Carpenter, Kenton, Hubley, N.N. Hill Brass Co., Gong Bell Manufacturing Co., Shepard Hardware Co., J. & E. Stevens Co., Kyser, Rex and Wilkins. Want any catalogs issued by these companies. See my large ad in the Old Mechanical Banks Department of this issue. — F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

WANTED: Old iron hitching posts and old tin tobacco tags. — R. F. French, 507½ Highland Drive, Marshalltown, Iowa. f122511

WANTED: One twin size walnut bed. Headboard height near 60" with carving. — Mrs. Winford Carlisle, Box 1386, Lovington, New Mexico. je3023

CIVIL WAR, Slavery, the South. I will pay fair prices for anything in these categories (books, pamphlets, documents, broadsides, soldiers' letters, portraits of generals, Confederate currency, Confederate imprints, slave documents and deeds — anything). — D. R. Spaight, Bookseller, Waterford, Va. ap3426

OLD AMERICAN COINS, stamps, & envelopes with stamps wanted. Also Long Island, N.Y., material before 1900, such as old letters, documents, post cards, pictures, books, newspapers, antiques, etc. Need large cents, Indian heads, scarce Lincolns, one dollar gold pieces, etc. Please state what you have in your first letter and state price for entire lot. No offers. I buy for resale. — Marakowski Stamp & Coin Shop, 612 Jericho Tpke., New Hyde Park, L.I., N.Y. au60042

SPECIAL WANT in old cast iron toys: Horse drawn fire chief wagon. Horse reel wagon with the two fat heavy walking horses. Royal Circus giraffe cage wagon. Nodding head wagons. Small Royal Circus cage wagons. Seeing New York Autocar 899. Fancy carriages. I am no dealer. — A. H. Mundis, 731 Wallace St., York, Pa. my62971

WANTED, Schoenhut circus animals: cat, gorilla, seal, wolf, hyena. — Clara Morearty, 810 So. 59th, Omaha, Nebr. ap3652

BOTTLES, FLASKS and bitters. Buy or sell. List 25c. Wanted: New England Pineapple oval dish, handled mugs and cruets. — The Empty Bottle, Box 27, New London, Conn. ap128271

MEDICAL INSTRUMENTS: Bleeders, etc. — J. Koelliker, 4610 Wood St., Willoughby, Ohio. d12407

OLD BEAD PATTERNS, instruction books, such as those by Priscilla, etc. — Peggy Allen, 318 Bluff Ave., La Grange, Ill. je3882

WHISKEY AMERICANA: bottles, ads, posters, licenses, books, magazines or anything relating to pre-prohibition whiskey business. — Barton Distilling Company, 134 North LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. au6008

WANTED: Post cards. Large or small collections before 1913. Unpicked cards only. Price and description in first letter. — Herbert Hulse, Cuddebackville, N. Y. s63637

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs and records, horn type phonographs, and any parts. Describe fully and price wanted. — Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. je3253

PLEASE NOTE my display ad in Mechanical Bank Department of this issue, listing various wants. — F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

SHAVING MUGS, vases in pairs, Mary Gregory items and toys. — Walter J. Henry, Adamsburg, Pa. f12069

FOR SALE

WHOLESALE FURNITURE. Write for Free Dealers Lists. Early American, Penna. Dutch, Marble tops, sinks, chests, cupboards, Cane & Plank Chairs, etc. Visit us. Large stock. — Deaven Antique Shop, Main St., Jonestown, Penna. 14 mi. South of U.S. Route 22. my6612

BOTTLES, FLASKS and bitters. Buy or sell. List 25c. Wanted New England Pineapple oval dish, handled mugs and cruets. — The Empty Bottle, Box 27, New London, Conn. my128271

PROOF 13" rose medallion vase, circa 1890, $12.50. Tortoise-shell 5" fluted edge dish, heavily embossed with gold pelican diving for fish in swamp, $2.15. Chinese horn spoon, 4" long, $1.25. Stunning replated 3-piece after dinner coffee set, chased design, gadroon edges, pot, sugar and pitcher. List for stamp. — Ox Shoe Treasure Shop, Helena, Montana. ap1844

EMILE GALLE pottery vase; Swedish marine painting; 60" cranberry trumpet vase; French clock set; Schoenhut animals and clowns; sword cane; candy containers; Lenox Bealek vase; Tiffany black marble clock. — Anthony Gohl, 566 So. Fairview, St. Paul 16, Minn. ap1882

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

VI. Praise From Catalogs and Critics

Almost from the beginning of their recording careers, the exceptionally fine voices of Billy Jones, the former telephone company lineman, and Ernest Hare, who had been a baking powder salesman for a brief time as a young man, won praise from the writers of record supplements and catalogs as well as critics who reviewed their records. This was especially true of Hare.

In the Vocalion Record Bulletin for November, 1920, the editor, Pearl Spaulding, said:

In the voice of a singer of popular numbers, one has learned to expect quantity rather than quality. Ernest Hare is fortunate enough to possess both.

When Jones and Hare sang "Operatic Syncopation" for Vocalion, the May, 1922, supplement remarked:

Ernest Hare's deep bass voice booms out some wonderful notes in "Operatic Syncopation," sung with Billy Jones. Opera in jazztime this is, and very amusing.

The June, 1923, Edison Diamond Disc supplement said, in reviewing Hare's record of "Down By The River":

We don't know of any voice that we like better than the virile bass-baritone of Ernest Hare. This favorite artist is blessed with a voice of natural beauty that is rich with overtones.

Being only human, Billy Jones probably wouldn't have been greatly pleased with the following possibly joking comment from the November, 1922, Brunswick supplement:

Billy Jones, the one and only Billy, in association with four male friends who sing better than Billy, records "Mary Dear."

But there should have been consolation in a review published by the English magazine, The Gramophone, of his 1924 Edison record, "When It's Night-Time In Italy It's Wednesday Over Here":

Billy Jones is always good, and his fruity tenor is really delightful in a bit of "O Sole Mio."

Billy greatly delighted in using that "fruity" tenor to sing snatches of opera, usually somewhat burlesqued, and many of his records contain such harkings back to his frustrated operatic ambitions. He gave the same sort of treatment to "O Sole Mio." By contrast, in his Edison record of "I'll Make the Pies Like Mother Made (If You'll Make the Dough Like Dad)" he introduced a medley of old Harry Von Tilzer tunes.

The 1922 Brunswick record catalog contained flattering sketches of both singers. Of Jones, shown wearing a straw hat with a black band, it says:

There is just one "Billy Jones," even if his name is, so to speak, rather common. A good singer, a clever comedian and a bad man to listen to when he tells a funny story—with or without music—for you may never stop laughing. Jones is just—well he is just the celebrated singing-comedian Billy Jones whose records sell wherever people like to laugh. He is qualified by nature to bring health and happiness to pale people and he does it and puts real love in the work. May his tribe increase if they are all as good, clever and musical Indians as Billy Jones.

When I come to the proper place, I shall relate my own experience of hearing Billy Jones tell a humorous story. Meanwhile, I have just recalled the remark of a newspaper paragraph years ago that there were only four famous Joneses in history: John Paul, Bobby, Billy and Casey. He forgot Ada!

Here is the Brunswick tribute to Hare:

Ernest Hare in his double role of the earnest singer of songs of sentiment and capital singer and actor in humorous character sketches is widely known through his splendid records. Hare is like his superb baritone voice, big, sincere and direct. He is liked as well in the recording laboratory as he is outside of it (and that is no little remark), and is just the man and the artist to sing his way into the heart of the American home as he is rapidly doing.

Moving forward a few years to 1926-27 when, I think it is fair to say, the Jones and Hare popularity was at its zenith, the Happiness Boys were often the subjects of good-natured joking in humorous publications. Either Life or Judge published a cartoon under some such title as "Private Life of the Happiness Boys," showing them in grouchy moods, throwing plates at waiters, quarreling with their wives, and the like, then appearing with their characteristic expansive smiles to sing "How Do You Do?" One of the humor magazines also contained an article purporting to be a conversation between Jones and Hare just before broadcast time. Hare was bemoaning the sorry state of the world, to the ready sympathy of Jones, and both quoted learned authorities on war, poverty, malnutrition and similar depressing subjects. Then it was time to go on the air and Jones announced, to Hare's appreciative laughter, that he would now sing a classical number, "I Fell In Love With The Acrobat's Daughter (But She Wouldn't Give Me A Tumble").

My nomination for the finest American humorous writer of the 1920's, Harry Leon Wilson, in one of his novels, "Lone Tree," had Miss Ellis, a nurse, remarking that her patient had been in such a jovial mood he reminded her of the Happiness Boys in one of their half-hours of mirth and melody. When Paul Whiteman's Rhythm Boys made a Columbia record of "That's Grandma" in 1928, they mentioned a party which Grandma attended. Part of it went:

"... All the celebrities were there.

First on the program came Billy Jones and Ernest Hare." The Rhythm Boys (who included Bing Crosby) then sang a bit of the Jones-Hare theme song, "How Do You Do?"

Billy and Ernie introduced a satirical reference to themselves in one of their funniest records, "Twisting the Dials." Jones, pretending to be a radio announcer at a prize fight, said he wanted "to mention some of the celebrities who are here tonight." Among them, he listed "Cross-Eye Kelly" (referring, of course, to "One-Eye" Connolly, the formerly famous gate-crasher at athletic events), and The Crepehangers—those sorrowful boys, Billy and Ernie, with big broad smiles."

Still advancing nearer the present day, a woman reporter, Vera Connol-

The Happiness Boys . . .

Billy Jones and Ernest Hare

(Dave Kaplan at the Piano)

Continued

By JIM WALSH

ly, gives an interesting glimpse of the Jones and Hare personalities in an article, "Bagging Radio Lions," published in The Delineator for September, 1930. After telling of calls on Walter Damrosch, Amos and Andy, Vaughn De Leath, Harry Reser, and other radio notables of the early depression days, Miss Connolly wrote:

The scene of my lion hunting was suddenly transferred to the studio where the Intertwined Pair (formerly the Happiness Boys), Billy Jones and Ernie Hare, were rehearsing. "When it's Sweet Onion Time in Bermuda."

As I came in, one of these lovable comedians was saying to the other:

"Look here, I studied singing in Brussels."

"That's nothing. I studied singing in valm."

They stopped rehearsing to chat with me. They stood leaning against the piano, while I sat on the bench with my note-book against the keys. It was a comical interview.

The team has been on the air since 1923. Mr. Hare is married, Mr. Jones is not; his elderly Welsh mother lives with him, and before he leaves home to broadcast, he sets the radio for her, so she can sit cozily in her big arm-chair and hear her son sing and joke. These two men were born on the same day of the month; they are the same height and they look alike. Both started as choir boys. Both are accomplished singers.

"We used to weigh the same!" said Hare sarcastically, with a mean wink.

"Now—none of your ugly cracks!" returned Jones, who has recently grown stout.

I questioned them about television.

"We'll have it in our homes in two years," prophesied Hare.

"That's what you thinies say," retorted Jones. "You don't suppose we fatties want to see it come, do you? Can you imagine me playing Hamlet then?"

"Don't worry, pet; you'll never play Hamlet, anyway."

"Oh, no? What about you? You started out to be John McCormack. But I notice you're not," Jones flung back.

"What am I?"

"Just a radio clown!"

"Well—you're my team mate," was Hare's complacent retort.

It was gorgeous foolery, just for my benefit. The interview ended in a laugh.

Ernie Hare obviously was far off base when he predicted American homes would have television by 1932. Even if it had been available, comparatively few people then could have afforded TV sets. Probably though, it would have become commercially feasible years sooner than actually occurred if World War II hadn't intervened. Miss Connolly's comment on the prospect of television is worth quoting:

Television, television! One hears nothing else. Radio artists who are not physically alluring dread its arrival. Singers able only to "croon" fear it too. Many broadcasting officials, foreseeing that it will turn the broadcasting industry upside down, introducing costumes, scenery and acting, naturally regard it with foreboding.

A brief interview was granted me the next day with Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company. I brought up the question of television at once.

"Oh, yes. It will come," he replied quietly. "When, we do not know. It's not ready yet for general use. Frankly, I think the anticipation is greater than the actuality will be. Playlets, operas—these may prove more interesting than now. But television cannot improve the playing of a great orchestra or the voice of a fine singer.

Harry Reser, greatest master of the five string banjo, played accompaniments for many Jones and Hare records. Reser (left, front row) is shown here with members of his banjo quartet.

And I am inclined to think the public's imagination, now, evokes persons and settings as lovely—if not more beautiful—than any that can be produced artificially. However, no matter what our individual views are, television undoubtedly is on the way."

So spoke the president of the National Broadcasting Company more than 28 years ago.

Neither Jones nor Hare lived to see television become the dominant form of American home entertainment. But the personalities revealed by their records and remembered by those who heard their broadcasts are still so vivid that when two popular present-day stars — Ethel Merman and Mary Martin — appeared as guests on the Ford program several years ago they caused one of the biggest sensations in TV history by singing a medley of old-time popular songs in a manner which they admitted was based on the Happiness Boys' style. They even made up to impersonate Billy and Ernie, although the result was pretty far wide of the mark. However, the success of their television appearance and of the long-playing record which preserves that singing act remains a tribute to the artistry of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare, whose voice blending was so admirable and some of their vocal effects, even in comedy numbers, so exquisite, that the Victor supplement for September, 1925, said their record of "I Miss My Swiss" contained harmony "as delicate as musical icing."

Part 3

I.

Last month, in tabulating assumed names under which Billy Jones and Ernest Hare made records, I forgot that some of their Vocalion discs were issued by the Aco Company in England and attributed to "the Webster Brothers." Whoever thought of calling Billy and Ernie brothers must have had an instinctive perception of the depth of their devotion. Their love for each other was much deeper and more unquestioning than the affection of many brothers by blood.

As the partnership continued and prospered, Jones and Hare began to use many personal references in their recordings. This was especially true after they adopted "How Do You Do?" as their theme song in 1924. By this time they had a large office at 1674 Broadway, New York, which was to remain their place of business until Jones' death, and they were far advanced toward the peak of their popularity. Almost from its first appearance, "How Do You Do?" whose words they changed to suit themselves, was identified almost entirely with the Happiness Boys.

However, they were not the only artists who recorded it. In fact, they appear to have made only a few duet versions. Art Gillham sang it for Columbia and Billy Murray and Ed Smalle for Victor. The Murray-Smale combination also did some revising, as in the following amusing lines:

"Late at night when you're in bed
And someone turns on Bill and Ed,
Don't you wish that we were dead?"

How Do You Do?

Oddly, Jones sang the number alone on an Okeh record, to a ukulele accompaniment by Harry Reser, and undoubtedly annoyed some listeners by pronouncing "neither" in the line, "neither one has met Gillette," as "nye-ther." Pathé recorded the song on Actuelle and Perfect records as a fox-trot by Max Terr's orchestra with Hare singing a refrain.

Brunswick's version by Billy and Ernie, had a banjo accompaniment by Reser and Phil Ohman at the piano. Reser and Ohman, both of whom are still living and active, were associated with the Happiness pair in a good many records, chiefly for Brunswick.

It is a pleasure to know that, more than 30 years later, my good friend Harry Reser is making a hit on television. He was the greatest player of the tenor banjo in the 1920's and remains the greatest today. Under the heading, "Banjo Comeback Is Being Pushed By Sammy Kaye," the following article appeared in a December, 1958, issue of the Richmond Times-Dispatch:

The banjo, whose great popularity in the roaring '20's faded with the ascendancy of the guitar, is zooming back into favor again. Booming its stock is maestro Sammy Kaye.

Strumming the banjo for Kaye is one of the great show-business names, Harry Reser, whose Cluquot Club Eskimos were the top radio band from 1926-1934. In the intervening years Reser has become one of the busiest of all recording musicians, having played on more than 2,000 recordings during the past 20 years. He has also done considerable arranging for various orchestra and recording companies.

When Kaye heard that this great banjolist was available, he signed him to a contract and began to build a banjo "spot" for each of his dance shows. Reser is also featured with Kaye's band at the Roosevelt Grill.

Reser's latter-day success is the more gratifying to me because his band is one of my two favorite dance organizations. The other is Harry Roy's English group on the old blue label Decca records. Especially good are the Reser records made for Brunswick under the name of the Six Jumping Jacks, with vocal refrains by Tom Stacks, who was burned to death while playing in a restaurant that caught fire after he left Reser.

On Edison records the orchestra was called Earl Oliver's Jazz Babies and Stacks was disguised as Tom Howard. The group played for virtually all companies and to me their records, mostly emphasizing comedy, are almost an infallible cure for the blues. Actually, they amounted to much the same thing in orchestral music that Jones and Hare did in vocal, and often the band played the same songs that Billy and Ernie chose for their inimitable comedy work. Stack's voice lacked the quality of the Happiness Boys', but he had a gift for making his listeners laugh and feel in a better mood.

If asked to name the most "relaxing" popular records—those best calculated to make a man with the toothache forget his troubles—I should select the Jones and Hare duets, many of Frank Crumit's solos, dance numbers by Roy and Reser, and an infusion of ragtime piano by Johnny Maddox, Del Wood, Frank Banta, and other masters of that informal style.

The Edison record of "How Do You Do?" revealed Jones and Hare at their rollicking best. It begins by saying: "How do you do, everybody, how do you do? How do you do, everybody, how are you? We are here, we must confess, just to bring you happiness—hope we please you more or less—how do you do?"

Hare then sings, "How do you do, Billy Jones?" to which Jones replies on one copy I have, "pretty good," and on the other, "pretty well." He in turn sings, "How do you do, Ernie Hare, how are you?" to which Hare robustly replies, "All right!" Hare then says, "Bill, I hope you like this song," and Jones replies, "Well, I hope it's not too long; am I right?" Hare returns, "No, you're wrong. How do you do?"

As the catchy tune goes on, the boys pay their respects to "Misses Hen," "John Chinaman," "Old-timers" who could remember "way back when girls were girls and men were men—it's so different now from then." They deplore the fact that nowadays—that is, in 1924—"even grandmas learn to swear; they also smoke and bob their hair."

At the end, the duo sings: "good-bye, Edison fans, goodbye . . . Billy and Ernie are nearly through singing this little song to you, so we'll say goodbye-di-by, goodbye."

It was probably the Edison record that made "How Do You Do?" so

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DELUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.)
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York

tfx

E-L-E-C-T-R-I-F-Y

PLAYER PIANOS & REED ORGANS
with a low-cost

LEE SILENT SUCTION UNIT

Write

Lee Music Mfg. Company

10630 Hillhaven Ave., Tujunga, Calif. 095p

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1925

EXPERT REPAIRING

FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

Free estimates, appraisals & lists.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. (Po. 8-1508) Pelham, N. Y. tfo

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

A smiling, youthful Billy Jones is shown on the cover of the Edison Amberola Monthly for September, 1921.

popular Jones and Hare decided to adopt it as their theme song. The other side was a solo by Jones, "Cross Words (Between Sweetie and Me)," a satire on the then prevailing crossword puzzle craze. Whatever fad or foible showed its head in the '20's, it was sure to meet with the satirical attention of William Reese Jones and Thomas Ernest Hare!

II. "That's My Happiness"

Many of the Jones and Hare duets referred jokingly to Hare's being a happy married man and Jones a contented bachelor. In their 1926 Edison disc of an attractive Irving Berlin song, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," Billy asks: "Ernie, is your wife a blonde or a brunette?" To which Ernie replies: "Well, really, I can't say, for I haven't seen her since I left home this morning."

That "gag" was typical of the spoken comedy in the pair's recordings—short and snappy and rather obvious. Most of their quips seemed new and fresh at the time they were put on records but have since become rather stale from repetition.

One of the most revealing records from the standpoint of depicting Jones and Hare's individual personalities is "That's My Hap-Hap-Happiness," which they freely adapted for their own purposes before singing it for Victor and Edison. Billy as an unabashed bachelor declares his chief delight is in such things as prize-fights and baseball.

On the Victor record he says: "When Gene Tunney swings his hand and I see that old glove land—that's my hap-hap-happiness." On the Edison this becomes: "When the pugilist swings his hand." Farther on he refers, in the Victor version, to his joy "When Babe Ruth walks to the plate." The Edison reference is to "the Home Run King." One wonders why Edison preferred not to mention Tunney and the Babe by name.

After the first chorus, Ernie remarks: "But you know, Bill, you're a bachelor and you don't know anything about home ties," to which Billy replies: "Well, if that was a home tie your wife gave you for Christmas I don't want to know anything about them Ernie." Hare then paints a picture of his domestic life by singing of the joy he finds in the companionship of his little daughter, Marilyn who was about three years of age:

Ernie: Every meal I sit beside
My sweet baby girl, my pride,
And that's my hap-hap-happiness.

Billy: She loves potatoes, the little dear,
She sticks them in your nose
and your ear,
And that's your hap-hap-happiness.

Ernie: She brings me joy, but, boy,
She breaks every toy her two eyes can see

And when we bought a new baby grand she broke every key.
Billy: But when she breaks things you're not sore,
You go out and buy her more!

Ernie: And that's my hap-hap-happiness.

I am reserving another chorus of "That's My Hap-Hap-Happiness" for later quotation.

The personal touch is again to the fore in their 1927 Victor record of "You Don't Like It—Not Much," made when the Happiness duo was at the zenith of its recording career. The final chorus:

"People write us and they delight us;
They boost our singing and such,
And we don't like it—no, we don't like it—

Not much!
They befriend us, some gifts they send us

That often get us in Dutch,
And we don't like it—no, we don't like it—

Not much!
Records that we make they say sell real good,
So splendid!

We hear that news and get offended!
We visit stations without vacations,
We go to Europe and such,
And we don't like it—no, we don't like it—

Not much. . . Too much!"

The reference about going to Europe puzzles me, since I haven't been able to find that Billy and Ernie filled European engagements. Perhaps they did during summer months when most popular radio performers took time out from their regular broadcasting.

In their 1927 Okeh record of "I Scream, You Scream, We All Scream For Ice Cream," they give a satirical cheer for "the Happiness Boys," and end by exclaiming, "Are we crazy? You should guess! Billy and Ernie, yes, yes, yes! . . . There!"

III. Dave Kaplan Joins The Boys

Something new and attractive was added to Jones and Hare records in 1925 when Dave Kaplan became their piano accompanist. Kaplan, who survived Jones and Hare by a good many years, was a brilliant ragtime piano player whose experience went back to Spanish-American War days.

When he joined Billy and Ernie he was, and had been for several years, in charge of the orchestra that played accompaniments for Edison "popular" records. (Cesare Sodero directed the "classical" numbers). Kaplan's Melodists was one of Edison's most popular dance orchestras. The group also made a few records under the disguise of McNalpak's Orchestra and I suspect it of being the Atlantic Dance Orchestra, just as Vincent Lopez's Orchestra was called the Broadway Dance Orchestra on most of its Edison performances.

As entertaining as the Happiness Boys' duets always had been with orchestral backing, they were even more so with Kaplan's sparkling piano work. For the first time it occurs to me to wonder why Edison, whose piano recording was incomparable, didn't issue solos by Kaplan.

Kaplan was frequently made the butt of kidding remarks. Either Jones or Hare would intone some such expression as "Play on, Dave!" or "Play, slave!" He is directly addressed in the Edison record of "The Farmer Took Another Load Away," when he was still merely the orchestra conductor instead of accompanist. This record has an amusing interlude in which Jones pretends to forget what he is doing and to think he and Ernie are giving a broadcast.

On radio the pair frequently used an interchange such as, "I'll tell 'em in the high voice. This is—'No Bill,' Hare would interrupt, 'I'll tell 'em in the low voice.'" In this record Jones says: "I'll tell 'em in the high voice. This is Billy Jones and Ernest Hare broadcasting—" Whereupon Hare interrupts and says: "Bill, pull yourself together and stop wandering. We're not broadcasting—we're making a phonograph record!"

Examples of personal references might be jotted down almost indefinitely. Hare was smooth shaven, but in the Victor and Edison records of "Must You Wear a Mustache?" he pretends to have a flourishing upper lip growth. Toward the end he says: "You know, Bill, I strut around like some movie star," and Jones retorts: "Take 'em off! Take 'em off! I know you, Ernie Har'!" In "Who's That Pretty Baby?" on Edison and Columbia, Jones, declaring his love for the "pretty baby," exclaims: "I'll get her or break my bones!" and Hare comes back, "Well, fifty-fifty, Mister Jones!"

The jovial jesters had favorite jokes, which they used more than once. The gag about filing one's finger nails has already been mentioned. Another, appropriately introduced in the Edison version of "Lunatic's Lullaby," involves Jones' assertion that he has a sister who is a waitress in a lunatic asylum. . . . "She carries soup to nuts."

In the Victor of "Why Aren't Yez Eatin' More Oranges?" Billy takes a ribbing concerning his status as a clean-living young bachelor. Hare pretends to be a doctor and Jones asks him how he can live to be a hundred. When Billy admits he never smokes, drinks, stays out late at night or "runs around with the flappers," Ernie inquires: "Well, what on earth do you want to live to be a hundred years old for?" When the "doctor" reminds Billy that he owes him for four visits, the "patient" replies: "Well, put it all on one bill, Doc, and I'll disappoint you in a lump!"

In the Edison record of "Go Home and Tell Your Mother That I Love You" Jones pretends to be Hare's girl friend, but with seeming anxiety he asks Ernie to realize, "This is only an imitation. Don't take me serious!" One of the funniest effects they achieved is in the Edison of "I've Never Seen a Straight Banana." I have had two "takes" of this record. In one, Hare sings "banana" straight. In the second version, which must have been made later, he has an inspiration and intones "ba-na-a-na" to imitate the bleating of a billy-goat. Jones gives a startled laugh, and the effect is hilarious.

Another mirthful production is the Diamond Disc of "Speech!" in which the comedians take turns at delivering eloquent orations in fox-trot time. It begins with Hare saying, "I now call on Mr. Billy Jones for his address." Jones replies, "My address is 804 Tenth Avenue, over the fish market." The orchestra shouts, "Speech! Speech!" and Billy obliges. Hare then comes through with one, after which they impersonate an oratorical deaf man, a stutterer, and a patriotic Italian.

IV. Some Of Their Best Edisons

I find pleasure in casually reading the titles of Jones and Hare records, for the mere names bring back many happy memories of the first-rate singing and sparkling comedy. Too, the humor was always clean. Nick Kenny was thinking of the wholesome quality of the Happiness Boys' comedy as he wrote a few years ago:

"When filth and smut befoul the air I long for the days of Jones and Hare."

A hurried run-down of the comedians vast recorded repertoire should begin with their Edison records, for Edison was the company with which Billy and Ernie had the most intimate, if not necessarily, the happiest associations. Too, they considered their Edison records their best. Jones remarked in my conversation with him that Edison recording was not only better than the other companies, but "they made us work a lot harder." Then, too, the four-minute length of the records against the usual 2½-minutes of needle-cut discs allowed them more opportunity for exercising their funny bones.

One of the "craziest" titles which Jones and Hare recorded for Edison, and Victor was "As The Porcupine Pines For Its Pork That's How I Pine For You." This screwball number was written in 1925 by the late Art Walsh, who was then at the head of the Edison artist and repertoire department, and Anthony Paganucci. Art Walsh wrote the words and Paganucci the music.

Art, who called me "Cousin Ulysses," although we were not able to discover any real kinship, became vice president of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and a Senator from New Jersey. Paganucci was born in Brooklyn, attended the Pacini Institute at Lucca, Italy, and was the composer of an opera bouffe, "The Opera King," and "The Laughing Cavalier," an operetta.

Enrico Caruso sang Paganucci's song, "Black Eyes," to the composer's accompaniment on the concert stage. He had been an opera conductor at the Manhattan Opera House and the Brooklyn Academy of Music and at the time he collaborated with Walsh was Edison's musical director. Paganucci died January 22, 1954, at his home in New York. He certainly stepped down from his role as high-brow composer when he contrived the tune for the frivolous "Porcupine" song!

Billy and Ernie also made a special recording of another Art Walsh composition. It is a disc not represented in the collection of the average Edison enthusiast. The song, recorded in 1927, was called "Say It To The Ediphone," and commemorated the 50th anniversary of the invention of the phonograph together with a "plug" for Edison dictating devices. The record was sent as advertising matter to Ediphone dealers, and I have seen only one copy. It, of course, did not appear in the Edison record catalog. On the other side was a talk by Charles Edison.

One of the Boys' most amusing Edison records is their 1924 version of "He Looks At Her And Then He Goes ha-ha-ha-ha-ha!" This is a ridiculous account of the happy married life of a huge fat woman and her sawed-off husband. We are told that "he looks, when he's on her lap, like a button on a cap. You can't keep a good man down!"

Another funny comment: "He looks like a jumping jack when he has to scratch her back. Love will always Take life too seriously, and what is it worth?

If the morning wake us to no new joys, if the evening bring us not the hope of new pleasures, is it worth while to dress and undress? Does the sun shine on me today that I may reflect on yesterday? That I may endeavor to foresee and control what can neither be foreseen nor controlled—the destiny of tomorrow?

—Goethe

find the way!" The chorus, with a hearty laugh between almost every line, is broad satire on American life as it appeared to the humorists of 35 years ago:

"I love to pay my income tax!

Ha ha ha ha ha!

I love those acrobatic acts!

Ha ha ha ha ha!

Invest in oil, you can't go wrong!

Ha ha ha ha ha!

I love to hear a mammy song!

Ha ha ha ha ha!

Things are cheap at bargain sales,
Women hate the Prince of Wales—
We have prohibition now—

Ha ha ha ha ha!

One wonders what the lyricist would have to say about today's income tax. And in my opinion the repeal of prohibition has been no laughing matter.

In the 1925 Edison record of "How's Your Folks And My Folks Down In Norfolk Town?" Ernie (you will remember he was born in Norfolk) has an opportunity to impersonate a train caller whom he heard as a boy announcing the names of stations as the train approached Norfolk. Hare pronounces Norfolk as "Naw-f'k," the way the average Virginian does, but Jones, being a New Yorker, calls it "Nor-fork."

This seems an appropriate time to copy a biographical sketch of Hare from the 1923 Gennett record catalog:

"Ernest Hare hails from Virginia. For this reason he has been able through contact with the colored folks in that state to make a study of their humorous mannerisms which has made him invaluable as a recorder of character songs for Gennett records. He has been associated with the New York Winter Garden for several years. You'll enjoy his records because his character and personality shine right through his singing."

The 1924 record of "Laff It Off!" is another irresistible laughing song. In the 1926 Edison of "Sing, Katie, But Leave The Piano Alone," the comedians introduce the name of one of the recording artists of the early 1900's when they refer to "little James McCool, the smartest kid in school." James McCool was an Irish tenor who made records for Victor, Edison and other companies.

Perhaps as characteristic a Jones and Hare record as any is an Edison with the inspired title, "You Never Get Nowhere Holdin' Hands." (Reser and his Six Jumping Jacks recorded the same number for Brunswick as a fox-trot with a refrain by the tragic Tom Stacks). The Edison begins with a flourishing piano introduction by Dave Kaplan. Jones says, "That's wonderful!" and Hare inquires, "What's wonderful, Bill? The way Dave plays the piano?" and Jones retorts: "No. The way the piano stands for Dave's playing!"

Jones decides that before they sing "this classical selection," he needs to test his voice. He says, "Give me something to work on, Dave," and then

(Continued on page 43)

N. H." with railroad engine in the center.

No. 20 - Another "Whooper" Pin-back, rendered in red and black on white.

No. 21 - "Carter & Churchill" Over-all button: this company no longer manufactures work clothes but specializes in sports wear, using the Profile for a trademark.*

No. 22 - Concord Fire Department: convex, silvered with raised design.

You may notice that one famous New Hampshire character is missing from this group: the Old Man of the Mountain has a group to himself!**

Button mountings of this kind are fun because they are free from restrictions; there are no rules and regulations about them. You may use whatever buttons you wish—so long as they pertain to the subject—and may combine them in any way that pleases you. While some states are richer than others, in button material, I venture to think that there is no state in the United States which could not furnish an interesting and varied display.

But please do not feel that you have to group State Buttons in this way! Any suggestions that I make are suggestions only; there is nothing compulsory about them! Special buttons, like State Seals, are always effective when grouped by themselves.

WANTED

WILL PURCHASE rare buttons at half list price. — Mrs. Edna Cunningham, 407 Valley Drive, Syracuse, N.Y. jyl2618

WANT inch modern satsumas in lavender flowers, heads & figures in scarlet robes. — Myrtle Scallon, 78 Clark Hill Road, Milford, Conn. my1621

WANT political and military buttons. Metal and celluloid. Especially Confederate. Have British and American military buttons for sale. — Thomas Woronick Corp., 149 West 44th St., New York 36, N. Y. my3082

BUTTONS FOR SALE

ONE POUND $1.25; 10 unused calicoes $1.50; % calicoes 35c each; old glass; large and small pictures; 10 small pictures $1.25; 15 jewels $1; Vt. Light Infantry and Militia. Approvals. References. — Mrs. T. B. Wakefield, 76 Greene St., Burlington, Vt. jly3864

Just Published: "Buttonhooks, To Trade-To Treasure." Abundant information, fully illustrated. $1 postpaid. — Bertha Betensley, 5042 N. St. Louis, Chicago 25, Ill. jyl20291

ANTIQUE BUTTONS, direct European imports, collectors' items, 18th century buttons, pictorials, crests, dress-earrings, sets, cuff links. — Mrs. Margot Jacoby, 260 W. 94th St., New York 26, N. Y. my122971

OLD BUTTONS, for beginners or advanced collectors, good value British Military. On approval for references. — Mrs. R. E. Turney, 2128 Douglas St., Rockford, Ill. jyl3882

FOR SALE: Rather large collection of buttons. Write. — Ella Campbell, 1714 6th Ave., S.E., Cedar Rapids, Iowa my3291

A collection of State Flowers, too, makes a pleasing project. Pictures of State Capitols may be combined with the foregoing. When it comes to button manufacturers, some states—like Massachusetts and Connecticut—are richer than others; but buttons made in the state are only one of many possibilities.

There are wooden buttons shaped like states: (I have seen Texas, Minnesota and New Hampshire). There are buttons made from native woods: Redwood from California, myrtle from Oregon, holly from Washington. There are Indian silver and "gemstone" buttons from the West; Shell buttons from Florida; "Fresh-water Pearl" buttons from Iowa; souvenir buttons from many different parts of the country. Any of these could be included in its appropriate group.

All you really have to do, to arrange an interesting "State" display, is to choose your state; and whether it is North, South, East or West, you will soon find that, as far as buttons are concerned, it can be a State of much pleasure and satisfaction!

*I cannot be positive that these work clothes are still being manufactured, in 1959. Perhaps I should have said, "are or were" made.

**See HOBBIES for September, 1956.

100 GOOD OLD BUTTONS $1. Others on approval, also goofies. — Ruth Griffith, 632 S. Cochran, Charlotte, Mich. s6804

150 GOOD. Some exceptional. (from old store closed 25 yrs.) $1, plus 4 stamps. — Lone Star Hobbies, Box 118, Bellaire, Texas. jyl3252

$1.50 BUYS 10, 20, or 50 good old buttons including one large picture button. Send for my $1.10 value. Money-back guarantee if not satisfied. — Mrs. A. S. Campbell, 788 Bonaventure Ave., N.E., Atlanta 6, Ga. jyl3024

EXTRA GOOD OLD BUTTONS: 100 assorted, 50 assorted and 1 large picture button, 6 small pictures, or 25 uniform for $1.10. Poke boxes and approvals. — Minerva M. Miner, Sherburne, N. Y. jly3654

MODERN large porcelain picture buttons, high fired with imported decals of persons and scenes of bygone days. Size, 1 1/4", 1 3/4", 1 1/2" diam. Each set consists of four different pictures. Not to be confused with old buttons. Priced from $1.10 to $2 set. Each button dated 1959. Send name for complete list and description of 25 sets. Approvals. — Theresa Rarig, 302 Rothsay, Minneapolis, Kans. my3828

30 OLD BUTTONS or 50 old mixed for $1.25. Poke boxes. — Muriel Kalil, Hampstead, N. H. jyl3291

200 OLD MIXED extra good values for $1.50. Poke boxes. — Muriel Kalil, Hampstead, N. H. jyl3180

OLD BUTTONS, 100 for $1. Others. State wants. Good values. — Mrs. Karl S. Gerstenlauer, Broadway Rd., Milton, Pa. jyl3402

NICE OLD BUTTONS, 125 plus two small picture buttons for $1 plus 15 cents postage. — Mrs. Albert Netting, 259 So. Main St., Mansfield, Ohio. jyl3882

THREE BOOKS ON GOOFIES at $1 each. Contains photographs, descriptions and index. Price list included. — E. Packard, 825 So. 98th, Tacoma, Wash. jyl6826

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

goes: "Me-me-me-me!" His voice is pronounced to be in good condition, but Hare discovers he has a "frog" in his throat, and says he'll have to use the atomizer. He pretends to spray his vocal passages and then begins singing vigorously. Jones asks him where he got the atomizer and Ernie says his rich uncle left it to him. Billy gets off the outrageous pun toward which they have been working by exclaiming, "Atta miser! Atta miser!" Then they sing the song.

An exceptionally good 1928 Diamond Disc is the one which combines the presidential campaign song, "Mr. Hoover and Mr. Smith" (Hoover gets the best of all the personal exchanges) with the idiotically entertaining "I Love to Dunk a Hunk of Sponge Cake."

Among the pair's miscellaneous contributions to the Edison catalog, not in association with each other, Hare helped Steve Porter revive Len Spencer's famous old specialty, "The Arkansas Traveler." Jones assisted Porter in Steve's almost equally well known sketch, "Christmas Morning at Clancy's," and did some other comedy numbers with Porter for Grey Gull. Hare sang an old black face minstrel number, "I Wasn't Scared But I Just Thought That I Had Better Go," on the back of the Edison record of "The Wreck of the Old 97," which started Vernon Dalhart on his career as the greatest of all recorders of hill-billy songs.

Jones' 1925 Edison of "Christoforo Columbo (Thought the World Was Round-O)" is one of the funniest he ever made. In collaboration with his former vaudeville partner, Bert Grant, he wrote one of the earliest songs about broadcasting, "Love Her By Radio," which he recorded in 1923 for Edison. Another radio song is his Edison of "Tune In On L-o-v-e," in which the call letters of such early stations as WEAf and KDKA are mentioned.

His 1922 version of "When You and I Were Young, Maggie, Blues," amounts to a clever vaudeville sketch. He begins by warbling a snatch of opera, but Edward Meeker demands that he sing an old-time number. After a little demur he agrees and a charming-voiced soprano, probably Gladys Rice, exclaims, "Atta Billy!" Jones then says he'll sing a syncopated version of "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," and asks for help, first from the male bystanders and then from the ladies. The girls sing a "straight" version of the old song while he "rags" it.

(To be continued)

NICHOLLS BUTTON BOOKS

BUTTON HAND BOOK ..... $ 3.50
Supplement I to Hand Book ..... 1.50
Supplement II and Index ..... 2.25
Supplement III and Index ..... 3.00
All four ordered at one time — $9.00

ORDER FROM
J. C. NICHOLLS

318 S. Albany St.

Ithaca, New York

d590

The Happiness Boys . . .

Billy Jones and Ernest Hare

(Dave Kaplan at the Piano)

Continued

By JIM WALSH

V. Other Good Ones

Of course not all the outstanding Jones and Hare records were confined to Edison Diamond Discs. They made hundreds of superb needle discs, and it is one of the pleasures of collecting their records that they are still easy to find at reasonable prices. They can often be bought for five or ten cents each in second-hand stores and can be obtained in excellent condition from such reliable HOBBIES advertisers as Gertrude Heyman for 50 cents or so apiece. No one who has a quantity of Jones and Hare records should think he has the nucleus of a fortune, but he does have the makings of a great deal of wholesome light-hearted entertainment.

One of the outstanding characteristics of the offerings of these inimitable comedians is the seeming nit-wittedness of many of their songs. They possess a quality that, for lack of a better term, I shall describe as "intellectual idiocy." A prime example of this quality is their Okeh record of "Oh My Yes, Us Boys Must Have Our Fun," sung to a ukulele accompaniment by Harry Reser.

Interspersed with the nonsensical lyrics they sing snatches of children's play songs. An elderly woman for whom I played the record laughed helplessly and then exclaimed: "Just think of two strong grown men singing such stuff!" That is one of the unfailing charms of the Jones and Hare records. Superficially, it does seem hard to conceive of two mature men singing such foolishness, but the listener at the same time is aware of the overmastering sense of humor and the keen intelligence behind the performances.

A special word should be said for the tone quality of "Oh My Yes." It was made about a year ago before the advent of electric recording, but the sound is so brilliant it is hard to believe a microphone wasn't used. For several years prior to 1925 Okeh had the consistently best recording of any company making lateral cut discs.

It is hard to decide in what record the Happiness pair reached the ultimate in buffoonery. If the distinction doesn't go to "Oh My Yes," it may be deserved by their delightfully imbecilic Columbia of "I Love to Catch Brass Rings on a Merry-Go-Round." I defy any normal person, no matter how much of a grouch he may be sporting when the record begins, to keep from laughing before it ends. Two other mirth-inducing Columbias, combined no one disc, are "She'll Never Find a Fellow Like Me" and "She's the Sweetheart of Six Other Guys."

Among their acoustic Columbias, "So This is Venice!" is outstanding. It ends with their deciding to use a gondola for a taxi and summoning its owner by exclaiming, "Hey Wop!" The other side is their version of Wendell Hall's 1923 comedy classic, "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'." Hall himself sang "It Ain't Gonna Rain" for Victor, Edison and Gennett, but Jones and Hare did a "second edition" for Edison. Brunswick called on the pair to sing the vocal refrain of a dance version of "The Wreck of the Old 97" by Carl Fenton's Orchestra.

In discussing Jones and Hare's Columbias I almost overlooked what is probably their best for that company, excepting the "Brass Rings" masterpiece. It is "Since Henry Ford Apologized To Me," a song which they also sang for Victor and some of the minor companies, and which perpetuates in burlesque form a bit of the colorful American history of the late 1920's.

Henry Ford's weekly newspaper, The Dearborn Independent, had been carrying on a wrong-headed, unfair campaign against the Jews, both as a race and as individuals, and one of them, Aaron Shapiro, sued Ford. The suit ended with a public apology by Ford to Shapiro. Song writers Billy Rose, Dave Stamper and Ballard MacDonald seized gleefully upon the incident and turned out a comedy song classic—at least it deserves to be considered a masterpiece after being modified and improved by Jones and Hare.

From the first words, Jones' "oy, oy, gevelt, gevelt!" and Hare's "Vot's der matter Abram?" the whole thing is a masterpiece of Yiddish dialect and interpretation — heavily burlesqued, of course. Among other things

Jones, who impersonates the man who received the apology, says: "I told the superintendent that the Dearborn Independent doesn't have to hang up where it used to be" and rapturously proclaims that "since he changed his point of view I like even Edsel, too!" Probably Thomas A. Edison's friendship with Henry Ford kept Edison from issuing a Diamond Disc of this song.

Perhaps Okeh led in giving Billy and Ernie odd assignments. One of Billy's best Okeh solos bore the senseless title, "I Want a Phos Phos." Hare helped one of the pioneer recording comedians, Frank Kennedy, whose career went back to the 1890's, in a talking skit based on funny paper characters, "Mutt and Jeff on Socialism." He also recited "Jack and the Beanstalk" on a record for children.

One of the most unusual jobs Hare did for Okeh was to serve, so to speak, as master of ceremonies for a harmonica solo. Joe Ross played "The Barking Train Blues," on his mouth-harp while Ernie explained what it was all about. He was frequently called on to make records specially for children and for Brunswick he did a medley of Children's Playroom Songs with a group of boys and girls as assistants. The other side is an account of the adventures of Peter Rabbit.

For Columbia, Jones and Hare were masters of ceremonies on a 12-inch record, "Studio Stunts," designed, Billy said, "to show the multitude the tone qualities of the new Columbia Viva-Tonal phonograph." Other artists in this 1927 record were Franklin Baur, tenor; saxophonist, Arnold Brillhart; Freddie Rich's Orchestra; the Cavaliers, who specialized in playing waltzes, and the Shannon Four, also doubling as the Singing Sophomores.

Until this moment I had overlooked an unusual record in which Ernest Hare took part. It is a 1926 Edison of a pseudo-moralistic song, "Too Many Parties and Too Many Pals," sung by a group called the Metropolitan Entertainers. The trio sang together on only this one record. It consisted of Elizabeth Spencer, Charles Harrison and Hare, who takes the part of "a stern old judge" in a courtroom scene. Ernie was also called on by the Grey Gull company, which made a cheap "off-brand" record, to sing old-time songs, such as "Home, Sweet Home," and even gospel hymns.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

A real novelty is the Cameo record called "Tuning in with Ruby Norton," combined with Jones and Hare singing "Will the Spearmint Keep Its Flavor on the Bedpost Overnight?"—a title worthy to rank with their Okeh of "The Coat and Pants Do All the Work but the Vest Gets All the Gravy." The "Ruby Norton" side is a satire on the radio programs of 1924, and it is by Jones and Hare although their names don't appear on the label.

However, there was a vaudeville performer named Ruby Norton and it may be she, rather than Billy, who gives the imitations of a screechy operatic soprano. In effect, the Cameo is a try-out for the memorable Victor of "Twisting the Dials," one of the funniest records ever issued. It was reviewed in the January, 1929, issue of the Phonograph Monthly Review:

"This two-part satirical delineation of a quiet evening with the radio is without doubt the funniest record since the memorable first release of the Two Black Crows. . . This masterpiece of caricature is consistently funny from the first squeal of tubes and rasp of static to the signing off. And this concludes our program for this evening—and forever."

"The operatic soprano, the prize fight, the jazz band, the bedtime story man (with his hair-raising lion story followed by the injunction for the kiddies to have pleasant dreams), all the familiar 'raddio' artists are caught with broad sure strokes. The lowbrow will enjoy it as burlesque; the highbrow as satire. Anyway you take it, it's unqualifiedly good. Let us hope the signing off is not 'forever;' the subject can bear reworking."

"Twisting the Dials" deserves to be called a masterpiece. Everything goes wrong. The "announcers" invariably "fluff" and make the wrong introductions. The sound effects man is equally erratic. When a lion's roar is needed he produces the high-pitched call of an elephant, and when the elephant should be heard the lion roars. There is a New York announcer with a "tough" accent, who says "On Der Rud Tuh Manduleh" will now be "sung for de foist time on any raddiyuh." (Instead we hear a horrible version of the Lucia Sextette).

A bit of a hill-billy record by the Carter Family is introduced. There is a physical culture professor with a German accent and a woman announcer who sounds as if she is about to burst into tears—patterned after one who was heard from WSAI, Cincinnati, in the early days. Hare gives a broad burlesque of the late Graham MacNamee announcing a prize fight. He is also "Daddy Scarem," who frightens the wits out of tiny tots with his gory bedtime story. Jones is "Miss Louder Screecher," an operatic soprano. The 12-inch record, not an easy one to find nowadays, is one long laugh.

VI. Decline Of Recording Career

If, as has several times been said, 1927 marked the peak of Jones and Hare's recording career, there was a perceptible decline in their phonograph popularity during 1928. They continued to make many records but not so many as in former years and the records didn't sell as well.

The downward trend was even more marked in 1929. Brunswick had ceased making records by them, and their last Columbia, which appeared in March that year, was an excellent version of Frank Crumit's great Victor hit, "A Gay Caballero," combined with a splendid rendition of "All By Yourself in the Moonlight," sung as a couple of English comedians might do it.

Frank B. Walker, then in charge of Columbia's popular recording activities and now president of MGM records, attributed the comedians' decline in recorded popularity partly to their having given up their Happiness Candy program and become the Interwoven pair. The late Frank Doran said they lost out because people could tune them in so frequently on radio they didn't see any need of hearing them sing the same songs on records.

Victor continued to use them through 1929, but after the stock market crash the record business began speedily to go to pieces, and most high priced artists were dropped. (I should have mentioned before this that Columbia frequently put Jones and Hare records on the back of solos by that very expensive star, Al Jolson).

Their final Victor record appeared in October, 1930. It was "Happiness Boys Going Abroad" and "Happiness Boys in London," mediocre talking sketches with almost no singing. The monthly record supplement, however, said: "These clever comedians are unusually entertaining in their dialogue relating to their first European trip. You'll get a good laugh when you hear Going Abroad and The Happiness Boys in London. Here are wise-cracks and jokes galore."

In 1929 Billy and Ernie signed a contract to make the new Edison needle-cut records as well as Diamond Discs, but the Edison company abandoned the record business after the needle discs had been on the market only about three months, and that removed one of the most consistent markets for the team's services. Jones and Hare may have made a few records for Domino and other minor companies after 1930, but I have not seen them.

What appears to be the final recorded appearance of either Jones or Hare was made in April, 1932, when Columbia issued two solos by Ernie—"Gene, the Fighting Marine" and "Those Good Old Days Are Coming Back Again." Surprisingly, and for no apparent reason, this combination was issued in the Columbia hill-billy series. "Gene, the Fighting Marine" does not refer to Gene Tunney, as I imagined it did until I found a copy of the record. "Those Good Old Days" was a prediction that, some time or other, the terrible depression of the early 1930's would end. Fewer records were sold in 1932 than in any other year since the beginning of the century, so there probably are not many copies of Ernie Hare's last disc still in circulation.

PART IV

I. Some Preliminary Corrections

As a rule, in writing HOBBIES articles that are to extend through several months, I prefer to complete the manuscript before mailing it. Having the entire production before me makes it easier to strike out repetitious matter and arrange installments of more nearly equal length.

Circumstances, however, have compelled me to write about Billy Jones and Ernest Hare from month to month, and I am glad they have, for this has made it possible to publish some interesting material that otherwise would not have been used. After the first installment appeared, I received some valuable letters and two charming photographs from Ernie Hare's daughter, Marilyn, as well as communications from other persons who had known the Hare family. I shall make use of these windfalls in preparing the final portion of this series.

I also now have the opportunity of correcting a couple of errors. By a mental lapse, when I wrote the cut lines for a photograph of Jones and Hare in the April HOBBIES, I said: "Whoever the piano player may be, it's obviously not Dave Elman." What I meant to say was the accompanist couldn't be Dave Kaplan, who played for Jones and Hare on records. Veteran radio listeners may recall Dave Elman as a man who had a network program, "Hobby Lobby," 20 years or so ago.

I have also learned that when I mentioned Ernest Hare's last recordings for Columbia in 1932, I overlooked one disc of about the same date as the already mentioned "Gene, the Fighting Marine." It is No. 2602, "New 21 Years" and "Fifty Years."

A more serious slip occurred in the February issue when I identified a man rejecting a test recording of the "Lucia Sextette," by the Victor Opera Company, as Walter B. Rogers. Actually, I have been informed, the gentleman turning thumbs down was the head of Victor's Red Seal recording division, Calvin G. Child. The mistake came about through ambiguous wording in the Victor house publication, Voice of the Victor, from which the photos were copied. It said merely that "the chief" was called in to decide, whether to accept the master. Since Rogers had conducted the recording session, I assumed "the chief" meant him instead of Child. Jesse T. Bastian, of Hollywood, Calif., says the man with Rogers was Victor Recording Engineer, Harry Sooy.

Shortly before the February issue appeared, I learned of the death of Marguerite Dunlap, who sang contralto in the Sextet and is shown in one of the photographs. In private life she was Mrs. Joseph E. Garabrandt, wife of a retired marine engineer, and lived at 271 Montclair Avenue, Upper Montclair, New Jersey. She was 71. I was never able, during my lifetime, to learn what had become of Miss Dunlap, who was a native of South Carolina, and in 1910, began making records for Victor, the only company for which she ever recorded. For the next ten years she shared honors with Elsie Baker as one of Victor's most popular contraltos. Miss Baker was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 27, 1886, and died in New York, April 28, 1958, also at the age of 71.

With these preliminaries out of the way, I now can proceed to tell the remainder of the life stories of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare.

II. Later Radio Days

Although Jones and Hare's recording career was virtually over by 1930, as the depression caused sales of records to tumble, they retained a considerable measure of radio popularity and remained network attractions until late in 1932. They also sang for the new-fangled "talkies" (not exactly new to Jones in view of his work for the experimental Edison talking pictures of 1912), and had become such masters of improvisation that once, when Billy forgot his lines, he "invented" new words for the song they were singing and he and Hare went along as if nothing had happened.

When the makers of Heilman's mayonnaise decided to give up sponsoring the pair as "The Best Foods Boys" in those dark days of 1932, their network activities came to an end for a few years. But Billy and Ernie were still in demand for personal appearances and set out on a coast-to-coast tour, during which they frequently were treated as conquering heroes. On one of their visits to California, Gov. James Rolfe, Jr., appeared on a radio program in which they appeared "to pay the respects of the State." In San Francisco, Mayor Angelo J. Rossi honored them by a visit.

By 1934 they were again in New York, not on a network but doing well over a local station. Their good friend, Vaughn De Leath, "The Original Radio Girl," wrote an article, "Are Listeners Loyal?" for the June 16, 1934, issue of Radio Guide, in which she said: "Jones and Hare, long known as the Happiness Boys, were as such at one time the biggest attraction on radio. Then their popularity waned. Recently they have swung back into public favor with new material and an enthusiastic sponsor." The lovable Vaughn herself was making a comeback in 1934.

The network return for which the now middle-aged "Boys" were hoping came in the fall of 1936. The Gillette Safety Razor Company decided to sponsor a community sing program over the Columbia Broadcasting System, with the present day veteran, Milton Berle, then a brash young comedian, as master of ceremonies. Wendell Hall, "The Red-Headed Music Maker," also was a feature, as was a small girl, "Little Jolly," known today as Eileen Barton. Andy Sanella's Orchestra furnished the instrumental part of the offering. Jones and Hare were placed in charge of the community singing. A community sing booklet issued by Gillette showed photos of Billy and Ernie, wearing top hats, and contained the following comment:

Billy Jones and Ernie Hare are the exact height, wear the same size shoes, celebrate March 15 as a mutual birthday, have mothers whose maiden names were Roberts, and are often mistaken for brothers. And small wonder, the Gillette Gentlemen have been inseparable since 1919. Famed as recording artists before their radio debut in 1921, Billy and Ernie, then known as the Happiness Boys, were radio's first outstanding singing and comedy team. Their appearance on the Gillette Original Community Sing is another milestone in their careers.

In passing, I'll say, I don't believe Jones and Hare had met as early as

(Continued on page 43)

These pictures, reproduced from a 1939 issue of Radio Guide, show (top:) Billy Jones and Ernest Hare as "The Gillette Gentlemen," on their last network program; and (bottom), the "new" team of Jones and Hare as 15-year-old Marilyn Hare substituted for her father during his fatal illness.

Union Jack - the combined Crosses of St. George, St. Andrew and St. Patrick; a Fleur-de-Lis might be appropriate for French buttons (or for Boy Scout buttons); an Anchor for Naval (or Rhode Island) buttons; a Lyre for Musicians' buttons; a fireman's helmet for Fire Department buttons, etc. There is considerable scope for ingenuity and originality in such mountings, but they are most effective when the design is symmetrical and as simple as possible.

The Canadian Uniforms shown are just a sample of the many which may be acquired, and which are delightful additions to any collection. Like practically all British buttons, they are beautifully designed and finely made. And behind the devices they bear is a wealth of history and tradition.

No wonder our neighbors to the north are proud of their symbol:

"Then swell the song both loud and long,
'Til rocks and forest quiver,
God save our Queen and Heaven bless
The Maple Leaf forever!"

* See HOBBIES for February, 1946.

WANTED

WILL PURCHASE rare buttons at half list price. — Mrs. Edna Cunningham, 407 Valley Drive, Syracuse, N.Y. je12618

BUTTONS FOR SALE

ONE POUND $1.25; 10 unused calicoes $1.50; 1/2" calicoes 35c each; old glass; large and small pictures; 10 small pictures $1.25; 15 jewels $1; Vt. Light Infantry and Militia. Approvals. References. — Mrs. T. B. Wakefield, 76 Greene St., Burlington, Vt. jly3864

Just Published: "Buttonhooks, To Trade-To Treasure." Abundant information, fully illustrated. $1 postpaid. — Bertha Betensley, 5042 N. St. Louis, Chicago 25, Ill. je120291

ANTIQUE BUTTONS, direct European imports, collectors' items, 18th century buttons, pictorials, crests, dress-earrings, sets, cuff links. — Mrs. Margot Jacoby, 250 W. 94th St., New York 25, N. Y. je122976

OLD BUTTONS, for beginners or advanced collectors, good value British Military. On approval for references. — Mrs. R. D. Turney, 2128 Douglas St., Rockford, Ill. je3882

100 GOOD OLD BUTTONS $1. Others on approval, also goofies. — Ruth Griffith, 632 S. Cochran, Charlotte, Mich. s6804

150 GOOD. Some exceptional, (from old store closed 25 yrs.) $1, plus 4 stamps. — Lone Star Hobbies, Box 118, Bellaire, Texas. je3252

NICHOLLS BUTTON BOOKS

BUTTON HAND BOOK ..... $ 3.50
Supplement I to Hand Book ..... 1.50
Supplement II and Index ..... 2.25
Supplement III and Index ..... 3.00
All four ordered at one time — $9.00
ORDER FROM

MRS. FLORENCE N. APOSTLE
4806 Fitzhugh Ave.
Richmond 26, Virginia

d59p

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

1919. But I can still vividly remember the thrill I felt at hearing them back on the air when the first community sing program was given. I recall Berle's saying they were such inseparable pals they lived in adjoining apartments separated only by a towel. He told of calling on the team. "Jones," he said, "poured me a drink; Hare drank it."

Jones, apparently wandering aimlessly through the audience, came upon the Metropolitan Opera tenor, Charles Hackett, who no doubt had been "planted." Billy asked Hackett what he had been doing during the summer and Hackett said he had been rehearsing some new roles for the Metropolitan. "Oh boy, I envy you!" Billy exclaimed, and then proceeded

$1.50 BUYS 10, 20, or 50 good old buttons including one large picture button. Send for my $1.10 value. Money-back guarantee if not satisfied. — Mrs. A. S. Campbell, 788 Bonaventure Ave., N.E., Atlanta 6, Ga. je3024

EXTRA GOOD OLD BUTTONS: 100 assorted, 50 assorted and 1 large picture button, 6 small pictures, or 25 uniform for $1.10. Poke boxes and approvals. — Minerva M. Miner, Sherburne, N. Y. jly3654

100 and 1 good old buttons for $1. Large selection, write. — Mrs. Emma Smutnick, Box 145, Abington, Conn. au3024

CIVIL WAR Battlefield found buttons for sale. Will buy Military and early state buttons. Relic list 10c. — Sam McClaren, Route No. 3, Richmond, Va. je1831

30 OLD BUTTONS or 50 old mixed for $1.25. Poke boxes. — Muriel Kalil, Hampstead, N. H. jly3291

200 OLD MIXED extra good values for $1.50. Poke boxes. — Muriel Kalil, Hampstead, N. H. jly3180

OLD BUTTONS, 100 for $1. Others. State wants. Good values. — Mrs. Karl S. Gerstenlauer, Broadway Rd., Milton, Pa. jly3402

NICE OLD BUTTONS, 125 plus two small picture buttons for $1 plus 15 cents postage. — Mrs. Albert Netting, 259 So. Main St., Mansfield, Ohio. jly3882

THREE BOOKS ON GOOFIES at $1 each. Contains photographs, descriptions and index. Price list included. — E. Packard, 825 So. 98th, Tacoma, Wash. jly6825

OLD BUTTONS and Goofies. — D. Barts' Antiques, 75 Centre St., R.F.D. 3, Bradford, Mass. au3291

FOR SALE: 50 old buttons, including metal and black glass. $1. — Mrs. Julius Kibler, 54 Lake St., LeRoy, N. Y. je1621

WE HAVE an outstanding collection of buttons of all types, materials and designs. Plan to pay us a visit this summer and spend an afternoon or evening in my Button Room. No mail order on buttons - just come and see for yourself. — Western Reserve Antique Shop, Florence Gage White, Route 20, Mentor, Ohio. Tel. Bl. 5-3855. je1633

40 OLD BUTTONS $1.25. Assorted materials, types, pictures. Worth more. Other buttons on approval, with references. — Rachel Price, 17 So. 8th, Stroudsburg, Pa. je1831 to do a brief bit of operatic singing of his own, which Hackett pronounced "very nice." Finally, Billy pulled a terrible pun by handing his fellow tenor a new Gillette razor, and saying: "Always shave your face with this. Then you'll be sure you won't hack-it!" I also remember Ernie's coming upon his wife in the audience and kissing her to the noisy gratification of the onlookers.

After their engagement with the community sing program ended, Jones and Hare did more touring, then returned to working on a local station basis in New York. They had regained much of their formerly vast popularity before Ernie succumbed to his fatal attack of pneumonia, following an illness of several weeks.

III. Death of Ernie Hare

The New York Times for March 10, 1939, published a long death notice of the brilliant comedian, news of whose passing brought tears to both my late mother and myself when we heard of it. I shall quote the Times write-up but condense it in order to omit, as far as possible, information that has already been given:

Ernest (Ernie) Hare, whose resonant baritone voice was heard over a period of 18 years in the familiar song-and-comedy patter of the "Happiness Boys," pioneer radio funnyman, died early yesterday in Queens General Hospital of complications resulting from bronchial pneumonia.

Many "firsts" were claimed by the smiling Ernie Hare and his more rotund partner, Billy Jones, since they made radio history on Oct. 18, 1921, by singing into a "tomato-can" microphone. They received credit, before the "big broadcast" era, of being the first successful radio comedy team, among the first to entertain under the auspices of a commercial sponsor, and the first to adopt a team name identifying themselves with their sponsor's product.

In later years, when radio drafted such established stars as Eddie Cantor, Al Jolson, Ed Wynn and Jack Benny from the stage, the popularity of the "Happiness Boys" waned. The partners, however, took it smiling. They attempted a comeback in 1936, essayed long coast-to-coast personal appearance tours, and before death broke up the act were doing Sunday afternoon programs over Station WMCA, singing songs and cracking jokes in their old-time manner.

In the last three weeks of her father's illness, his 16-year-old daughter, Marilyn, who never before had undertaken professional appearances, substituted for him on the radio program. For Billy Jones, however, the team of Jones and Hare is broken. "I'll try to go on alone," he said, "but, as far as I am concerned, I'll never have another partner."

Born in Norfolk, Va., he (Hare) attended the Xaverian Brothers' School. He started earning his living as a baking powder salesman, but he discovered, by singing in a church choir, that he had a voice. In 1909 he was on Broadway, singing in various productions, which included ten Winter Garden shows. He teamed with Jones almost 20 years ago, just before their radio career began, when a talking machine company, in need of a tenor and baritone duo, brought them together. The two men found they not only sang well together but enjoyed each other's company, so they formed a permanent partnership.

In 1936 the Columbia Broadcasting System called them back to radio to lead the "Community Sing" programs

(Continued on page 62)

BIRCHLANDS

12 North Main Street

Essex, Connecticut

Telephone South 7-1377

ETHEL HALL BJERKOE

1. For a rare and interesting wedding gift. Sterling silver double wedding cup. Overall height 7". The groom's cup size of large goblet with arms extending downward to hold the bride's cup, held in place with pivots, allowing it to be moved into position so that the groom and bride may drink a toast simultaneously. The bride's cup is size of wine glass. Both cups are gilded within. Each cup, as well as arms, is decorated with heavy repousse scrolls and cartouches. Bride's and groom's initials on cups with date 1898 but these could be removed and replaced with others. Piece well hallmarked. Has one tiny dent at base of groom's cup. Including tax, $33.
2. Metal replica of the Obelisk of Luxor presented by the Khedive of Egypt, Mohammed Ali Pasha, to the Government of Louis Philippe and erected on its present site in the Place de la Concorde in Paris in 1834-36. The designs on three sides of the column base represent the history of its embarkation in 1831 and its transit from Egypt to Paris. The hieroglyphics on the column itself are to the glory of Rameses II (14th century B.C.). On the front face of the replica column is a thermometer with reading in centigrade and Fahrenheit. The obelisk is on a base 5" square and there is a small picket fence around the base 1/2" in from edge, held in place by pins that fit into corresponding holes in base. Overall height 14 1/2". Thermometer in working condition. $12.50.

3. Chinese porcelain blue and white fish dishes to be used as ash-trays. Length approximately 5". Shaped and decorated like a fish, hollowed out with tail slightly upturned. (4) $2.50 each.
4. Robin's egg blue opaque glass hand tray with flowers at wrist. About 4" long. Attributed to Union Glass Works, Somerville, Mass. Considered to be about 70 years old. (2) $3 each.
5. 30" string of graduated round ivory beads with ivory clasp. Beads have yellowish tinge of old ivory. $6.50.
6. Round hoop style ivory bracelet, carved. Opening 2 1/2". Yellowed. $3.
7. 30" string of very dark reddish-amber beads. Beads are oval, faceted, very light in weight. Largest bead is 1" in length. $8.50.
8. Carnival glass shallow bowl with scalloped edge. 8" diameter. Orange with rich blue-green-purple opalescent. Grape pattern. $2.75.

Everything guaranteed as advertised.

Postage extra. No C.O.D.

Jex

EARLY SUMMER OFFERINGS

- U.S. FROSTED COIN COV. SUGAR $132.
Same 7" Cov. Compote on Standard $178.
Same SAUCES - Quarters 4 ea. ----- 28.50
DIAM. THUMBPRINT GOBLET ----- 118.00
PR. BLACK SLAG Cdl. Ionic - rare ----- 32.50
LG. CRANBERRY D.Qlt. BASKET - thorn hdl. Ribbon Crown - ex. fine old one 37.00
FAIRY LAMP W. Combined Flower Holder
Ex. as Tibbitt Pl. 111 No. 2 8 1/2" ----- 117.00
PINK MLK. Gl. Matchholder - great rarity 16.00
RAINBOW VASE - Brilliant Coloration
Flared Rim 8" - Here's a rarity of the first water-Handled ----- 274.00
STEVENGRAPHS - several ----- Write
Extra SPECIAL - Mkt rare and interesting
AHL 120 word Letter by Washington - official business ----- 390.00
Lacy Sandwich MINIATURES ----- Write
TIPFANY - Mkd. Many Colored Extra Lg. Roso Bowl (No Iriscence) ----- 28.00
CRANBERRY CRUET 7 1/2" - Inverted Panels App. Sunburst Handle ----- 28.50
STERLING PEPPER GRINDER ----- 11.75
COV. 3-Face COMPOTE - 9" - On High Standard ----- 47.00
CREAMER - 3-Face with Faces under hdl. and Spout - rarest of the series ----- 48.50
LG. SALTGLAZE Wat. Pitcher, altover raised motif - proof ----- 34.00
MINIATURE SATIN GL. Lamp Font 4 1/2" Apple Shape - Frost. Feet ----- 37.00
M.O.P. TUMBLER, Apricot - Diam. Qlt. 29.00

- AMBERINA FTD. TUMBLERS 8" sold as Set. ea. 5" hg. ea. ----- 22.00
HIST. PLATE - ALLOVER BLUE - MacDonough Victory 8" ----- 22.50
BLUE MINIATURE HOBNAIL Set - Lee 83 Cov. Sug. Butter, Spoon, Creamer ----- 42.00
PR. ROBIN EGG BLUE Large VASES - Enam. Flowers & Birds, Life size - 15" - Just Handsome this pair ----- 44.00
CORNER LUST. PITCHER - Gadrooned Rim Wide Blue Band w. Raised Varicolor Plaques 5 1/2" - a beautiful thing ----- 42.00
XMAS DATE SHAKERS w. Agitators, 1 Blue, 1 Amber, pr. ----- 21.75
AMBERINA SQUATTY VASE W. Peacock Tail Crown 5" - extraordinary item ----- 33.00
OLD TOYS - Horseshoe on Rd. Platform - Toile - Music - rare article ----- 22.50
BELLINGER - Plg. Sways striking two belts 7" lg. ----- 23.75 Large FIRE ENGINE - 3 Big Horses - see Hertz Pg. 28, 1st. item 19" - Iron ----- 56.75
BETTY LAMP ALL BRASS ----- 29.00
MECHANICAL BANKS - I have decided to sell these two rarest of banks - UNCLE REMUS No. 230 $495. BREADWINNER No. 24 $595, each worth $100 more.
LISTS AVAILABLE for Art Glass, Glass Toothpicks and Candy Con't's, Rare Documents, Master Etchings, Fairy Lamps & Sandwich Lacy Glass 8C in Stamps Please.
MUFFINIER - CRANBERRY - Bulbous Base Ornate Silvered Top ----- 14.50 *Stks.

ARTHUR GABLER

395 Broadway,

Trumbull, Conn.

Jec

HEMLOCK HOLLOW ANTIQUES

R.D. 1, Lowellville, Ohio

JEAN BURNS

8 miles east of Youngstown, Ohio

Phone: LE 6-6323

1. Signed Cameo Glass Daum-Nancy small rose bowl, dull finish of green and gold applied metal ring at base and metal detail extending up the sides of the bowl, choice. $40.00
Galle vase, 5 1/2" landscape with tree & shrubbery, sunset in background ----- 30.00
Galle pomade jar with matching lid, ovoid shape, ferns, tones of green and browns ----- 32.50
Le Gras dull finish vase, floral sprays, in shades of pink, 7" ----- 20.00
2. Northwood Chrysanthemum covered butter, good gold ----- 25.00
3. Small Iron dog and a small Iron kitten used as paperweights, paint good, each ----- 2.50
4. Flow Blue Alaska sugar and matching creamer, each $1.50, set ----- 14.00
5. Painted Cherry cracker jar 6 1/2"x8" wide Eyewinker open compote, proof 8 1/2"x7" ----- 10.00
Emerald green Inv. Strawberry butter lid ----- 4.50
2 Strawberry goblets, each ----- 4.50
Peacock Feather butter ----- 5.00
Royal Ivy tumbler ----- 11.00
Royal Ivy sugar base, no lid ----- 10.00
Jewel and Dewdrop bread plate ----- 6.25
6. Torpedo covered butter, few rough spots on eyes, unnot. ----- 6.00
7. Placques covered mustard, marked, Retriever dog in clear glass, tall chip and another rough spot ----- 8.50
8. Sunbonnet pitcher 9" ----- 15.00
Girl mounting stairs, candle in hand, sugar bowl ----- 6.25
Poppy mayonnaise ----- 6.00
Spade shaped box, pink roses ----- 5.50
9. Sugar shakers with orig old lids: Pink apple blossom with fishnet ----- 9.50
Turquoise blue quilted ----- 9.50
10. Shrines champagne, bowl mounted on swords ----- 5.00
11. Haviland & Co. Autumn Leaf on smooth blank, 12 plates 9 1/2", $3 ea.; 12 c/s, $5.50 ea. exc. condition.
12. Punch cups green beaded swirl $2; Button Arch, souvenir $2; 2 Orange Carnival each $1.50; 6 Pressed glass, pinwheel, very nice, each ----- 1.50
13. Bent wood spice set, never used ----- 4.25

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 43)

originating from Boston. A year-long tour followed this engagement, and then came the WMCA contract about a year ago that was to continue until Ernie Hare's death.

Jones and Hare did not seem quite as much at home before the microphones of today as they did in the earlier days. Such things as scripts never worried them much as they ad-libbed their way through a program, packing their dialog with spontaneous humor. Nowadays, with radio time bought, paid for and timed to the exact second, they were forced to prepare scripts and follow them pretty closely. It hampered their technique. But with the aid of a third man, who sat at the piano and added his voice to choruses, they gave their Sunday afternoon listeners much the same type of entertainment that they purveyed during the 1920's, and radio station officials said they had attracted a good following.

Besides his daughter, Hare is survived by his widow; his mother, Mrs. Thomas E. Hare, and a sister, Mrs. J. C. Morgan of Norfolk.

(To be continued)

ROSE BALL ANTIQUES

1908 Post Rd.

Noroton, Conn.

Come see us when traveling this summer. Coming north, leave New England Turnpike at Exit 10, turn right, few short blocks to Boston Post Rd., there you are; or send for descriptive map card.

Quite a time keeping up with requests for good flint glass at sensible prices, but shall continue reconnoitering. In the meantime, this single rarity: Diamond Thumbprint cov. butter dish, chip on finial, $34.

Early clear non-flint blown Stiegel type mug, barrel shape, engraved design, $8.50.

Lovely pr. 10 1/2" tall Pairpoint (unmkd.) glass candlesticks, blown, with polished engraving, $20.

Quaint framed sampler, all about boiling water properly for tea, $10.

Fred Cozzens framed water color, boat scene off Cape Cod, $40.

Scarce item in early Staffordshire, sepia 6 1/2" bowl, Sower pattern, Adams, straight sides, $15.

Pewter soup ladle, English, mkd. Lielewellyn & Ryland, $8.75.

Brass flour or sugar scoop, dated 1868, $5.

Handsome bronze elephant, uplifted trunk, 3 1/2" length, 6" tall, extremely heavy weight, $35.

Transportation extra.

Jec

MRS. SADIE GAWTHROP

121 Dietrich Avenue Galesburg, Illinois

2 pair Mercury glass tie backs, frosted grape dec. dia. 3" pair $6.50; - Early Staffordshire Child's Tea Set, 6 plates, 6 cups/s, teapot, creamer, sugar, perfect except for 1 mended cup, small chip on top edge teapot, brown and white, MAY pattern, set $35; - pair Sandwich drawer pulls w/ orig. screws, pr. $7.50; - 6 tear drop drawer pulls, complete w/ brass fittings, set $7.50; - Doll's old home made PINE cradle, re-finished but crude, $12; - Prices net. No C.O.D.'s; No inquiries ans.; Refund guarantee always if dissatisfied.

Jec

MRS. WALTER G. EITLE

5179 Mayview Rd. Cleveland 24, Ohio

D.Q. Cranberry Syrup, clear handle, good silver top, mkd. Patent Dates 1881, 1882 22.50
Blown Frosted Green Satin Vase, 7" high, flared scalloped top, deep white loopings, camphor leaf feet ----- 17.50 Unusual Rockingham Wall Vase, 8 1/2" long, 3" wide at top, beautiful coloring, design Glass Wheelbarrow, 7 1/2" barley pattern, metal wheel, mkd. "Pat. Appl. For" ----- 7.50

Transportation Extra

Jec

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

The Happiness Boys . . .

Billy Jones and Ernest Hare

(Dave Kaplan at the Piano)

Continued

By JIM WALSH

IV. The New Jones and Hare Team

Dave Kaplan had ceased some time before this to be associated with Jones and Hare. Their new pianist was James A. Brennan, who as mentioned earlier in this series, had written some of the duet team's most successful hits.

Not long after Ernest Hare's death, Radio Guide published a touching article, "Pinch-Hitting for Hare," with a sub-title, "Ernie's Marilyn Sings on in the Hare Tradition." It tells how, despite Billy's statement that he would never have another partner, little Marilyn stepped in for a brief period to sing with him so the team could still be known as Jones and Hare. Later, she and her mother went to California, and she became a movie "starlet." In shortened form, the Radio Guide article said:

It was the hardest program Billy Jones had ever had to do. For 20 years, in vaudeville, on records, in radio, he had worked as a partner in the team of Jones and Hare — singing, comedy, patter. Then, suddenly, he was left to face the microphone alone. There was no genial Ernie Hare across from him, and he missed the friendly presence. It didn't help any to remember that, even as he went on with his patter and comedy, down in Norfolk, Va., they were burying his friend and partner. Life had been unable to drive a wedge between them. They had watched other teams of their day split up for various reasons — money, jealousy, old age. Jones and Hare seemed to go on forever . . . until death struck.

Ernie should never have made his last two broadcasts. His face had been flushed with fever and he could hardly keep on his feet. "I'm probably walking around with pneumonia," he laughingly remarked, and it wasn't until Billy finally forced him to go to a doctor that he learned how true his laughing remark had been. He WAS walking around with pneumonia, and only the stern tradition in which he had been steeped — the show must go on — had kept him from falling over.

Of course you've heard Jones and Hare. Maybe you remember them from the highly popular recordings they used to make — their comic duets and sentimental ballads. Or, if you're of a later generation, you'll know them from radio. For ten years their clean-cut comedy and blended voices were welcomed in every home that boasted a receiving set.

In 1936 the Gillette Razor Company put them on a show over the Yankee Network and later moved them into New York to appear with Milton Berle over CBS on "The Community Sing" program. When that series was over, the team went to WMCA, where they did a show for Sachs Furniture Company. It was here pneumonia caught up with Ernie.

The first week that Ernie missed, a substitute act was put in the team's place. Then the doctor told him it would be a long time — if at all — before he would be able to take his regular place in the team. It was then that he hit upon his big idea, an idea that Billy Jones heartily approved. His daughter, Marilyn, would take his place.

On that first broadcast Marilyn sang "Deep in a Dream." The next week she sang another request number for her father—"Deep Purple"—and, hurrying home that day after the program, arrived just as they were taking Ernie away in an ambulance. The doctor had ordered him removed to a hospital hours earlier, but he refused to go until he had heard Marilyn. That was the last time he heard her sing. Ten days later he died.

So now, even at the hour they were burying Ernie, Billy carried on alone. He had wanted to go down to Norfolk to be with his friend on this last occasion, but they had a contract to fulfill and Ernie had contracted his fatal illness in striving to fulfill it. The least Billy could do was to carry on alone. There were no substitutes for Ernie this day. It was a memorial program, and in the middle of it Billy broke down in spite of himself.

The next day "We, the People," contacted him. They wanted him to come on their program and tell the story of his famous team that had pioneered the airways. They wanted Marilyn, too. As Jones and Hare, they pattered back and forth in Jones and Hare style, sang their famous theme song, "How Do You Do?"

The mail response to this program was overwhelming. And almost every letter begged this new team of Jones and Hare to stick together. There was nothing else to do. The public wanted it, WMCA wanted it, the sponsor wanted it. But most important, both Billy Jones and Marilyn knew that Ernie Hare would have wanted it that way.

Now Billy and Marilyn — the new Jones and Hare — are broadcasting locally over Station WMCA in New York, confidently awaiting an opportunity to stage a big-time radio comeback.

V. A Chat with Billy Jones

In October, 1940, I spent two weeks with Billy Murray at his home in Freeport, New York. On the last day of my visit I went with another famous pioneer recording artist, the late Albert Campbell, to call on three singers whom I had hoped to see before I left the city—John Meyer, who had been the basso of the Peerless Quartet; Aileen Stanley, who wasn't in her office, and Billy Jones.

When Al and I entered the large office at 1674 Broadway, which Billy had continued to occupy despite his partner's death, I noticed the walls were covered with hundreds of photographs showing the team of Jones and Hare in almost every imaginable activity. At first, I didn't see anyone, but a moment later a man whom I recognized as Billy Jones emerged from what I suppose was a smaller back room. His face was florid and he appeared to me to be under some sense of strain. He looked rather puzzled at first as he came forward and said "Something for you?" but the expression changed to a smile as he recognized Al Campbell. Al introduced me and a lively conversation was going at once.

I told Billy he and Ernie were among the first recording artists I had ever written to and the notes I had received from them were signed by "a girl named Ann Perkins." He smiled again and nodded his head toward one corner of the room. "She used to sit right over there," he said.

I mentioned how much I had treasured the autographed photo he and Ernie had sent me when I lived in Marion, Va., and was surprised when he said he remembered it. "We took turns writing the message," he said. "If you look closely at it you can tell our writing apart because Ernie made one kind of small 'e' and I made another." Then he spoke feelingly of the years of hard work and good fellowship they had enjoyed together.

Al asked Billy, "How's the little girl getting along out in California?" and Billy replied: "Fine! The film company has renewed her option and it looks like she's going places in the movies. Her mother's out there with her. I hated to see Marilyn go, but the prospects for her in California seemed too good to pass up."

Another man came in, as did a girl with golden hair. The man was introduced as "Mr. Brennan," and I asked, "J. Keirn Brennan?" recalling the lyricist of that name who wrote the words for many of Ernest R. Ball's ballads. "No," Billy replied, "James A. Brennan—wrote, 'Down at the Old Swimming Hole,' 'In the Little Red School House,' and some of the other songs Ernie and I recorded. He works with me as my partner now." He also introduced me to the girl, who said she was from Tennessee and was appearing on a hill-billy radio show. Apparently Billy was her business manager. The subject of the approaching presidential election came up, and the young lady boomed lustily when every man in the room said he was going to vote for Willkie. I have often thought it remarkable that during my entire New York stay I met only two persons, both women, who said they would vote for Roosevelt, and yet how easily he carried both the city and the nation a few weeks later.

Recording processes, old and new, were discussed, and Al asked Billy if he had ever heard how "hard-boiled" the Edison musical director, W. H. A. Cronkhite, had been with some of the formerly popular phonograph performers, especially Ada Jones and Byron Harlan. Billy's face became even more florid at the thought of that legendary boogie man, Cronkhite, and he found it necessary to express his sentiments in profanity that took on a lyrical note.

"Our Edison records," Billy said, "were the best Ernie and I made before electrical recording came in. Edi-

Marilyn Hare was one of a group of American theatrical personalities who entertained American fighting men in Italy during World War II. She is shown here in a party enroute to Capri. Members of the group who can be identified include Ed Gardner, "Archie" of "Duffy's Tavern," wearing a cap; Don Hutson, immediately behind him; Miss Hare, at right of Gardner, Howard Hammersley, and near extreme right, Jinx Falkenburg.

son had by far the best recording process. That was one reason they were better. But another reason was the way the Edison people worked us. We could make a dozen records for any other company while Cronkhite was having us go through a song over and over at Edison. No matter how tired we were it didn't seem to show up in the record, but I used to feel like I'd drop dead before Cronkhite got through with us." And here he went on to heap some more choice compliments on the memory of the late Mr. Cronkhite. In that respect he was no different from almost any other artist I have known who had worked for Edison under Cronkhite's supervision. That man, who stood in great awe of the irascible Mr. Edison, must have been a slave-driving perfectionist.

For the sake of recorded history, I'll mention here that Jones and Hare's last duets for Edison were "It Ain't No Fault Of Mine" and "She Has a Little Dimple On Her Chin," which they recorded on May 23, 1949. This coupling was issued both as a Diamond Disc and an electric needle-cut record. Concerning the latter, The Phonograph Monthly Review for September, 1929, said: "The Happiness Boys . . . repeat their well-known performances of 'She Has a Little Dimple On Her Chin,' and 'It Ain't

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS of GREAT SINGERS on ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DELUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York

tfx

E-L-E-C-T-R-I-F-Y

PLAYER PIANOS & REED ORGANS

with a low-cost

LEE SILENT SUCTION UNIT

Write

Lee Music Mfg. Company

10630 Hillhaven Ave., Tujunga, Calif. 095p

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1825

EXPERT REPAIRING

FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

Free estimates, appraisals & lists.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. (Po. 8-1506) Pelham, N. Y. 100

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs and records. Parts and anything pertaining to old phonographs. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly3882

WANTED: an Edison disc phonograph, with double spring motor. Chippendale or Adam, or any other in that series. — H. A. Ferguson, 427 So. Olive St., Los Angeles, Calif. jly1612

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

Rare Phonographs for sale: Edison, Columbia, Victor and many rare models. Large list of hard-to-find cylinder records, parts of all kinds. Repairs. Reproducer repairing a specialty. Styli (needle) installed, reproducers for sale. Will pay $6.50 and up for any good cylinder reproducer. 25c for lists. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly32721

FOR SALE: Surplus antique phonographs from private collection, cylinder and disc. Send for free list. — R. J. Baker, Fort Gray Dr., Lewiston, N. Y. jly3253

EDISON cylinder record players. Sell, trade for old pistols, gold, silver or copper U.S. coins. — Gun Shop, Hallowell, Maine. jly1061

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: Edison talking doll, Columbia Grand, Edison Concert, hurdy gurdy, street piano. Describe, price. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. au3023

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mh122361

MUSIC BOXES, singing birds, early phonographs and collectors items. Let me find it for you for your price. Send stamped envelope please. — J. E. Koehler, 416 College Ave., DeKalb, Ill. au3262

DISPOSING of Jenny Lind and musical collection. Listing 10c. — Morales, 37-16 55th St., Woodside, N. Y. jly1631

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 4, Colo. je126921

WHAT AM I OFFERED? Sheet music: Allied Waltz, picturing Queen Victoria, Prince Albert, Napoleon III and Empress, and other collectors songs. Write for list. — Odelia Surmson, 308 W. Bell Ave., Houston, Texas. jly1652

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos. — Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kans. ap124661

WANTED: 44-note Wurliitzer pianolino music. 10 tunes to the roll. Also rolls of "A" music. — Dan Gray, P.O. Box 8181, Fort Worth, Texas. d6367

Wanted: Ampico & Duo Art piano rolls. — Thomas Grattelo, 860 Sunnyside Road, Oakland, Calif. jly3633

WANTED: Ampico rolls, $1 each, my choice from your list. Send title and pianist. — Daggs, 725 N. Columbia Place, Tulsa 10, Okla. jly 3253

No Fault of Mine' (14010). Both of these discs are recorded with unusual clarity and brilliance and both should be popular. 'It Ain't No Fault Of Mine' is one of the best of the Happiness Boys' many skits." On July 29, 1929, Hare made his final Edison solo, "Believe Me, That's Love."

VI. Billy's Hold-Up Story

One of the popular Edison singers, Horace Ruwe, who recorded under the names of J. Donald Parker and Jack Parker, had died a few days before, and Billy recalled an amusing anecdote about him.

It seemed that while Parker was still a struggling young singer he made a promise to himself that if he ever became a success he would treat himself to the most expensive hat in New York. After he signed his Edison contract in 1927 he decided success had come, so he paid $150 for a hat and wore it to his next recording engagement in the Edison laboratory at 79 Fifth Avenue. He decided to return home in the subway and sat beside an open window. The train stopped at a station and a man on the platform reached through the window, deftly yanked the hat off Parker's head and ran away with it. The tenor afterwards said he certainly didn't think he got his $150 worth!

Somehow Jones' former operatic ambitions were mentioned, and that reminded him of what I learned later was one of his favorite stories. He said he was on his way to the Astor Hotel, where he was staying at the time, after seeing a late show. It was about midnight and he was on Broadway near the Metropolitan Opera House when a man stepped up and pointed a gun at him. In a business-like manner and in a voice that smacked either of Brooklyn or the Bronx he informed Billy this was a stick-up and he wanted his money.

Billy accordingly stuck up his hands and the man rifled his pockets. Then the hold-up specialist told him he could go. As Billy started walking away, his ever-present sense of humor surged up and he looked back over his shoulder and began singing: "Goodbye forever, goodbye forever—!"

This irked his new acquaintance. "Say," he snapped, "if youse don't cut out makin' all dat noise it will be 'goodbye forever' for youse! Come back here!"

"Say," exclaimed the hold-up man as Billy came back to him, "dat voice of yours sounds familiar! Ain't you dis guy Billy Jones dat sings on de raddiyuh ever' Friday night wit' Oinie Hare?"

"Yes," Billy modestly admitted, "I'm Billy Jones."

"Well, ain't dat sumpin'!" rapturously returned his admirer. "Say, I listens to youse guys all de time! Wouldn't miss you for nuttin'! I can't take dis money offa youse after all de pleasure your singin' has give me and me ol' lady!"

That sounded good to Billy. "Well, of course," he said, "I WOULD be glad to get the money back. I do have a lot of bills to meet, and—"

Suddenly the hold-up man's eyes hardened and his voice took on an added rasp. "Yea," he snarled, "I guess you would be glad, but you ain't goona git it back! I hear you raddiyuh characters makes more money in a week than a hard-workin' stick-man gits in a year! Lemme frisk you again!"

He went through Billy's pockets a second time but found nothing. To recompense himself for his disappointment, he removed Billy's wrist watch, saying, "Dis'll do me more good than it does you!"

"Now," said the hold-up man in conclusion, "take off dem shoes! Looks to me like you an' me wears de same size kicks! An' sometimes hep characters like youse hides money in dere shoes! I'll take de feetgear too, Mister Jones!" Which he did, leaving Billy to hobble along to his hotel as best he could in his bare feet.

Al Campbell and I left the Jones-Hare office with a cordial invitation from Billy to "come back any time." When we were outside Al laughed and said: "Billy has told that hold-up story dozens of times and he improves it every time he tells it. I wonder how much of it is really true?"

(To be continued)

MUSIC ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO music rolls bought, sold and traded, all makes and types. — D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Md. je124431

OVER 200 Duo-Art fully reproducing classical piano rolls. Chopin, Beethoven, etc., by Paderewski, Rubinstein, others. For information write William Pilkey, 100 Warwick Road, Jamestown, N. Y. s3234

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale: all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. je120422

RECORDS . . . PHONOGRAPHS . . . MUSIC BOXES . . . ANTIQUE

INSTRUMENTS . . . PIANOS & ROLLS . . . MELODEONS . . .

NICKELODEONS . . . SHEET MUSIC . . . ORGANS . . . MUSIC ROLLS

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Billy Jones and Ernest Hare

The Happiness Boys . . .

(Dave Kaplan at the Piano)

Continued

By JIM WALSH

VII. Death of Billy Jones

Only a few weeks later, on the morning of November 24, 1940, I was lying in bed at my home in Johnson City, Tenn., indolently reading the Sunday morning paper when I was shocked to find a brief item saying Billy Jones had dropped dead on Broadway the day before. Saddened by the loss of the friendly comedian with whom I had talked such a short time before, I obtained a copy of the Sunday NEW YORK TIMES for the sake of the death notice I knew it would publish. I quote it here in somewhat abbreviated form:

Billy Jones, of the erstwhile popular radio team of Ernie Hare and Billy Jones, the Happiness Boys, died of a heart attack last night while walking along Broadway near Fiftieth street. He collapsed in front of 1627 Broadway and was carried by passersby into a nearby restaurant where he was pronounced dead by an ambulance doctor from Metropolitan Hospital. His age was 51.

Identification was established at once by a radio script in his pocket. It was the script for his part in the Three Little Sachs program, 2 to 2:30 today over WMCA. His body was removed to the new West Fifty-fourth Street station house, and efforts were made to reach his wife who is believed to be in Philadelphia.

After the death of his mother several years ago, Mr. Jones, who was considered by his intimates to be the perennial bachelor, was secretly married. He and his wife operated what they called a "general store" in a little Pennsylvania town near Philadelphia, and it was always to this destination that Jones started when he finished his regular Sunday broadcast.

Mr. Jones was born in New York on March 15, 1889, and was educated in schools here. His first job was in the Custom House, and after two years he became an employee of the Bank of Commerce. He decided that banking was not his forte, so boarded a boat for North Wales, where he operated briefly as a sheep herder on his uncle's farm at Towyn, Merionethshire. He returned to New York, he told friends later, because he could not handle the tongue-twisting Welsh vocabulary.

Back in New York he went up-State to work in an iron ore mine. Later he strung poles for the American Telegraph and Telephone Company and pulled copper wire for Western Union. He worked as a carpenter on the New York Central and even went in for blacksmithing before he discovered his rich tenor voice.

It was in a phonograph recording studio that he met Ernie Hare. They teamed up for recordings and remained an inseparable pair until Hare's death. Toward the end of their Happiness contract they also were doing Flit Soldiers for Standard Oil of New Jersey and then the Interwoven Pair for the Interwoven Stocking Company. The Happiness Boys reappeared, to be followed by the Taystee Bread program and a program for the Gillette Safety Razor Company. At his death Mr. Jones was doing the program for Sachs Furniture.

The Times also published this paid death notice:

JONES, Billy, suddenly on Nov. 23; survived by his beloved wife, May; his sister-in-law, Bessie, and nephews, Stuart and William. He was a member of New York Athletic Club, Winged Foot Golf Club, Vice Commander American Legion Post #54 and The Niblicks. Services at Funeral Church, Madison Ave. and 81st St., Tuesday evening, Nov. 26, at 8:30 o'clock. Interment Woodlawn Cemetery, Wednesday, Nov. 27. Cortege leaves Funeral Church at 10 A.M.

The Associated Press news story of Jones' death said: "The famous Jones-Hare radio partnership broke up on March 9, 1939, when Hare died just a week before his 56th birthday. Sadly, at that time, Billy recalled that he and Ernie had made 4,000 phonograph records together — "Good Lord, I suppose at least that!" On November 25, another AP item said:

"A memorial program was broadcast today over Station WMCA instead of the scheduled one starring Billy Jones, pioneer radio entertainer, who died in Times Square of heart disease. Marilyn Hare, 16, whose late father, Ernie Hare, and Jones once comprised the famous "Happiness Boys" team, and James Brennan, pianist and song writer, appeared on the program."

I was surprised to learn from the NEW YORK TIMES that Jones and his still surviving wife had a hobby of operating a country general store. He didn't mention it to me. Since his office was at 1674 Broadway, he probably either was going to, or coming from, the office when he dropped dead at 1627 Broadway.

Jim Brennan survived Billy Jones by almost 16 years. He died in his home at Middleboro, Mass., after a long illness, on August 24, 1956, at the age of 70. A death notice in VARIETY said he began his song-writing career in 1910 after operating a commercial art studio in his native Boston. He wrote the music for the 1918 song hit, "The Rose of No Man's Land." According to VARIETY, Brennan was a pioneer in radio, and "his first commercial program was the 'Imperial Imps,' featuring Billy Jones and Ernie Hare."

VIII. Some Random Recollections

After the first installment of this series appeared, I received a letter from a valued correspondent, Mrs. Edna E. Sheldon, of Long Island City, N. Y., from whom I have been hearing occasionally for years. Considerably to my surprise, Mrs. Sheldon revealed in the following passages that she had been well acquainted with Ernie Hare and his family:

HOBBIES came today and I just sat and edited it from cover to cover. Noticed of course what data you gave about Ernest Hare.

His only sister lived in Ocean View, Va., a suburb of Norfolk. I lived in her cottage one summer, next door to Ernest Hare's mother's year-around house. His sister and her family lived with his mother. This was in 1920. She - the sister - had four children: Two boys; one, John Carl Morgan, was for some years an announcer in the '30's at Norfolk's radio station. There was Ernest Hare Morgan also.

Ernest Hare was close to his mother and sister. I met him when he spent his vacation with his family and was then understudy for Al Jolson. He brought along the music of a new popular song, "The Love Nest," and his sister accompanied him on the piano time and time again while he warbled. His sister would play his Vocalion records for me and tell of the critics' praise of his singing. His sister played the piano at the Catholic church nearby, on First street, Ocean View.

I kept some contact by mail at Christmas time and an occasional letter, and visited his sister also in 1936. After 1940 I lost track of her. His sister and her family were proud of their famous uncle. I think his wife's name was Marie. She had been a show girl—

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

Rare phonographs for sale. Edison Concert, Berliner, Pathe', Edison Maroon Gem, Eldridge Johnson, early phonograph with ear tubes and others. Cylinder records, parts of all kinds. Reproducer repairing, styli (needle) installed. Reproducers for sale. Send 25c for lists. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o36501

FOR SALE: Surplus antique phonographs from private collection, cylinder and disc. Send for free list. — R. J. Baker, Fort Gray Dr., Lewiston, N. Y. o3253

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: Edison talking doll, Columbia Grand, Edison Concert, hurdy gurdy, street piano. Describe, price. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. au3023

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minneapolis, Pa. mh122361

MUSIC BOXES, singing birds, early phonographs and collectors items. Let me find it for you for your price. Send stamped envelope please. — J. E. Koehler, 416 College Ave., DeKalb, Ill. au3262

WANTED: Lowery Organo attachment for piano; Ampico rolls; player pianos in fair condition; player organs and rolls; coin operated gum and candy machines. Animated displays of any kind before 1900. Please send pictures of displays. Must be in working condition. Price, etc. — F.R.P., Box 188, Westboro, Mass. o3637

FROM A FORMER EDISON dealer's stock that had been in storage, I was able to find some original Edison styluses (needle) in both sapphire and diamond. Have a small surplus and will sell some while they last. Also, Diamond Disc reproducers at $5 each. Send for free brochure on cylinder reproducers. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3219

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 4, Colo. je126921

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos. — Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kans. ap124661

WANTED: 44-note Wurlitzer pianoino music. 10 tunes to the roll. Also rolls of "A" music. — Dan Gray, P.O. Box 3181, Fort Worth, Texas. d6867

Wanted: Ampico & Duo Art piano rolls. — Thomas Grattelo, 860 Sunnyside Road, Oakland, Calif o3633

SIMPLEX piano player, plays any piano. Has been electrified. About 50 rolls. $150 crated. — Richard Bissell, Rowayton, Conn. o3882

WILLIAM JENNING BRYAN'S "Estey" Baby Grand Piano for sale. Write Stephenson's Antiques, Huntsville, Ohio. o3291

a very nice looking woman. When I lived in the Morgan-Hare cottage, it was on Avenue B, Ocean View, I believe. I can still remember the cottage's name, Auganax — a combination of three names.

Ray Wile, a staff writer for RECORD RESEARCH and an authority on Edison Diamond Discs, who lives at Flushing, New York, wrote me:

Your current series on Jones and Hare is interesting. Ernest Hare lived in the block behind my family (168th street in Flushing) for several years. At about the time the Happiness Boys began working for Filt the Hares moved to the 150 series of streets in Flushing.

I was at Ernie's funeral. His death had shocked all of us. Incidentally, his wife's name was Marie—not Mary, as his death certificate stated. Later his family moved to Hollywood and Marilyn was a contract player for Universal. I think she subsequently married Rudy Vallee's press agent. I believe Marie Hare is dead. I cannot say since we lost contact years ago.

You will observe that both Mrs. Sheldon and Ray Wile say Mrs. Hare's given name was Marie. However, as one of the letters to be quoted from her daughter will reveal, the name was originally Mary, but was changed to Marie for "show business" reasons.

In view of Mrs. Sheldon's saying Ernie constantly practiced singing "The Love Nest" during his 1920 vacation, it is surprising that I have not been able to find that he recorded it for any company. It is the sort of song in which Vocalion and Brunswick would have been most likely to use his fine voice, but Brunswick assigned the number to other singers and Vocalion appears not to have recorded it.

IX. Letters from Marilyn Hare

One thing I hoped to do when I began this series about "The Damon and Pythias of Show Business" was to write accurately enough to please Ernie Hare's daughter. Even so, I had no communication with Marilyn until after she had been sent copies of the first installment.

However, the articles did not come as a surprise to her. Several years ago Charles Lindsley told her I was contemplating such a series and Quentin Riggs of Oklahoma City mentioned my plans when he visited California in 1957 and talked to her by phone. On September 20, 1957, Quentin wrote to me concerning the telephone conversation:

"Marilyn's married name is Parker and her husband's name is Joseph. For a while she had a regular TV show, but now she is devoting her time to her family (she has four children — three of her own and

VIOLIN BOWS

BOWS by Heinz Doelling, endorsed by Menuhin and Oistrakh, internationally acclaimed by leading artists as the modern Tourte. Now available through K. W. Jones, sole U.S. Agent, 2855 Carter Rd., Treviso, Pa. s3216

MUSIC ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO music rolls bought, sold and traded, all makes and types. — D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Md. je124431

OVER 200 Duo-Art fully reproducing classical piano rolls. Chopin, Beethoven, etc., by Paderewski, Rubinstein, others. For information write William Pilkey, 100 Warwick Road, Jamestown, N. Y. s3234

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale: all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. je120422

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale: all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. jly120422

VIOLINS—REPAIRS

VIOLINS - New, used; Italian, German, etc. French bows. Repairs, appraisals. — K. W. Jones, 2855 Carter Rd., Treviso, Pa. au3882

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED. Edison and Columbia cylinder phonographs and records, Disc phonos with horns, roller organs, music boxes, and melodians. Private collector. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. s3844

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Melodeon: 2 Rosewood: 1. Estey 1856, plays, needs cabinet repair, $160. 2. Restored and refinished, $210. Crating free. Freight extra.—Mrs. M. H. Grimmett, 107 Country Club Drive, Concord, N. C. au1462

MELODEONS

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. au126661

OLD MASON MELODEON, wonderful condition, $95. Write for appointment. — Mrs. Ruth Nelson, 46 Auburn Street, Malden, Mass. s3272

RECORDS . . . PHONOGRAPHS . . . MUSIC BOXES . . . ANTIQUE
INSTRUMENTS . . . PIANOS & ROLLS . . . MELODEONS . . .
NICKELODEONS . . . SHEET MUSIC . . . ORGANS . . . MUSIC ROLLS

one stepson) and to making occasional TV commercials. She was very charming and friendly when I talked to her, and I wish I could have met her. She has a beautiful speaking voice — very deep-pitched, resonant, etc., quite similar to her father's. I have never heard her sing, but if she sings as well as she speaks she must be very good.

Early in March, 1959, I was delighted to receive a long and informative letter from Marilyn herself, from which I shall quote:

March 9, 1959. I was glad to receive your letter today. I had already received a copy of HOBBIES and was so happy with the story thus far I did want to tell you how accurate and well done it is. I am sure both Billy and my Daddy would be proud, grateful and pleased.

Mother, Mrs. Ernie Hare, formerly Marie Flood of the Shubert musical days, passed away in Hollywood on Thanksgiving Day, 1956. It was very sudden, as she had been in perfect health—went to bed on Wednesday evening and apparently suffered a painless cerebral hemorrhage at approximately 9 A.M. She had been very active during the war years at the Hollywood Canteen. You can understand that this was a great joy to her as in this place, where almost every star, old and new, appeared at some time or other, she had a marvelous opportunity to renew many memories.

I have show biz in the blood, brain and heart, so I am still carrying on somewhat. This year I was on "Queen for a Day," doing Jeanne Cagney's fashion commentary while she was on a maternity leave for six months. I have done a number of half hour dramatic shows and lots of commercials. I always think how strange I should now be "selling soap," as the saying goes, when Daddy was one of the first

LEFT TO RIGHT

Marilyn Hare Parker, daughter of Ernest Hare, as she appears today.

Marilyn Hare, movie and television notable, sent this autographed photo to Jim Walsh after reading the first installment of the current Jones and Hare series. The inscription reads: "To Jim Walsh, in grateful remembrance of all the wonderful things you've said of Jones and Hare. Marilyn Hare, 1959."

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor.—Jim Walsh, Box 478, Vinton, Virginia. txf

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinorah: Sei vendicata—any number, size or coupling; outside or center start.—Alda Favia-Artay, 60 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. txf

RECORDS by John McCormack.—James Sanford, 601 N. Broadway, Weatherford, Okla. o12407

PIANO ROLLS WANTED: all types, send list, receive cash offer by return mail (list returned).—M. Montgomery, 722 Spring, Ann Arbor, Mich. je128041

WANTED: HILLBILLY RECORDS by Carter Family, Uncle Dave Macon, Monroe Brothers, Cliff Carlisle, Jimmie Davis, Malvers Mountaineers, Goebel Reeves, Gene Autry, etc.—Don Wahle, 1128 Keller Ave., Louisville 13, Ky. au3084

WANTED: Glenn Miller material. Civilian and Air Force orchestras. Air shots, air checks, V-discs, 16" transcriptions, (original dubs or tapes); home recordings of radio broadcasts. Also articles and pictures.—Donald Whyte, 416 Parkside Ave., Buffalo 16, N. Y. au3426 to see the possibilities of entertainment as a sales media. Of course I am practically completely involved in TV since there is disc jockey radio only, though I have a few radio commercials running locally.

My family life is Number One of all. I am, as you know married to Joe Parker, a motion picture director. You may have noticed his credit on "D. A's Man," "The Texan," "Highway Patrol" and the new up and coming "Pete Kelly's Blues." On April 16th be sure to watch for the director's

(Continued on page 33)

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's. including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide lists 7500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold.—James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. s3084

OVER 100,000 hard-to-get records. 1903 to LP.—Jack's Record Cellar, 400 Haight Street, San Francisco 17, Calif. d126121

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists.—Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 13, N. Y. au3618

FREE "Personalities" catalogs - rare records and broadcasts by radio, stage, screen, television personalities.—Amalgamated Records, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. o126121

FOR SALE: Hundreds of disc and cylinder records, many types of phonographs. 25c for lists, refunded when ordering.—Coppernoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. au4006

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (Stamp please). s3253

CLASSICAL VOCAL RECORDS at mail auction. Also phonographs, autographed photographs, books on music and record catalogs.—Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. s3863

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold.—Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. au3066

Advance Collectors desiring rarities as Bassi, Bellincioni, Caruso, Carelli, Fabbri, Rossi, Wermez, etc., are advised to communicate with the Gramophone Trading Co., 5810 Biscayne Blvd., Miami, Fla., for quarterly auction listings. au3447

RARE UNUSUAL operatic records for sale, mostly French imported. Lists on request.—Collectors' Haven, 1131 Bergen St., Brooklyn 16, N. Y. s3633

OLD RECORDS FOR SALE: Kreisler, Caruso, Curci, Heink, McCormack, Lander, Williams and others. Best offer.—Mrs. Stephen Tredennick, 56 Chestnut St., Boston, Mass. s3863

WANTED: Radio transcriptions, AFPS recordings, records of all types by Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo, Blue Barron, Bill Kenny & Ink Spots. Top prices paid.—Paul Scriven, 238 West State St., Niles, Ohio. au3215

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

in flight. All in all, such a bell must at one time have made a most suitable gift, for every detail bespeaks the wish for a long life. Indeed, the inscription itself when translated expresses this same wish.

A variation of this bell has the tortoise carrying an elephant on his back. The elephant in turn, an emblem of strength and sagacity, carries on his back a dome-like bell representing the world.

Most commonly the tortoise is shown with a crane astride his back, a bell in the bird's beak. These attractive call bells have long been popular in Oriental households as inexpensive symbols of the family's wish for a long life.

To the Oriental mind, each creature has a special symbolic value and serves to express some thought, usually felicitous, when adorning a bell or other art object. The sheep is the symbol of a tranquil retired life; the horse is emblematic of speed and perseverance; the monkey stands for good luck. Two other animals frequently represented on both Chinese and Japanese bells are the deer—meaning happiness, and the fox—mischievous.

The peacock signifies grace and charm, and sometimes poses as the handle on a bell. Mandarin ducks and wild geese, especially in pairs, have become symbols of conjugal fidelity because they are thought to mate for life. A graceful pair of geese, with necks arching, forms the handle on an unusual bronze bell having pellets enclosed within it. In shape the bell resembles a child's toy iron except that it is "lacy" perforated so that the sound can be heard.

Fish, in general, stand for wealth and success and perseverance—for as legend tells us, their struggles and leaping against the rapids in the Yellow River have always been greatly admired by the Chinese. The carp in particular forms a favorite motif and there are many life-like creations of it in ivory, jade, wood, and metal.

The carp is not only a prime leaping fish but is also credited as a first rate message-carrier. The idea of the carp as a message-carrier was first recorded by a poet of the Han dynasty, who told how he "was brought some carp by a boy, and cutting open one, found in its belly a letter from his beloved, declaring her love and wishing him happiness."

Later poets have carried on this fantastic legend, even crediting the carp with the power to carry prayers. High over the entrance to a temple there often hangs a large bronze bell shaped like a carp. A tug on the lengthy tassel indicates the worshiper's wish that his prayers be carried forth by the messenger-carp.

Among mythological creatures the dragon and the phoenix are of special interest. The phoenix, an imaginary bird living in the highest heavens, has always been the special emblem of royal personages. It signifies eternal youth and vigor.

The dragon as a symbol has now been widely replaced by the lion (Dog of Fo) as the orthodox guardian of Buddhist faith. But the dragon for centuries was the dominating symbol of Chinese culture. As such it stood for all that is powerful, magnificent, terrible, and glorious—a genuine symbol of imperial power.

Actually, there were nine types of mythical dragons. However, those shown by craftsmen were invariably either the royal dragon (P'u Lao) or the musical dragon, the latter being especially appropriate on bells.

Even the elements of nature have symbolic attributes in Oriental art. Representative of a thunderbolt is the Tibetan Dorje used as a handle on lamasery bells. Four prongs curve gracefully over a center prong, the five signifying indestructible power. Fire rays are symbolized on many shrine bells by numerous long spikes.

BELLS FOR SALE

LIST of bells for sale, and bells wanted, 10c. — Stonecrest Antiques, Marlborough, Conn. F. O. East Hampton, Conn. s3272

FOR SALE: Bronze Bell from s/s "Claremont" 1906. With clapper, crate and ship F.O.B. $50. — Albert Carriere, 8234 Apple St., New Orleans 18, La. o3483

Travel Search for Bells

By A. C. Meyer — $2.50

A story about the Meyers' personal search for bells. A down-to-earth summary of a fascinating hobby.

Published by

LIGHTNER PUBLISHING CORPORATION
1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

BELL CATALOG $1.00

Illustrated with 353 Bells and prices I pay!
Sell a Bell to me!

Catalog is yours for FREE!

Your $1.00 refunded on my first purchase!

LAWRENCE ALTMAN

SHERMAN PARK ANTIQUES

5088 Easton Ave.

St. Louis 13, Missouri
St. Louis 13, Missouri

BILLY JONES & ERNEST HARE

(Continued from Page 31)

credit on the Academy Awards as Joe has had that chore for the past three years. Joe started in radio here in Los Angeles in 1936 and was producer-director on some wonderful shows like Fibber McGee and Molly, Amos and Andy, etc., not to forget his last radio bit with Rudy Vallee, who was, as you may know, a good friend of Jones and Hare. Rudy was best man at the Parker wedding in Chicago April 13, 1947, and is godfather to our first born, Stephen Ernest, now aged 10.

That brings us to the children. They are: Stephen Ernest, born Sept. 11, 1948; Christopher Joseph, born May 14, 1951, and Germaine Marie, born May 7, 1955. We think they are all pretty special and though Steve bears the Ernest name, it is Chris who bears the physical resemblance to Ernie Hare. Both the boys are musically inclined. Steve is pretty good on the piano and Chris has the blessed Hare vocal chords, though all this talent is at this point reserved for home consumption. Germaine is too young to tell us of her abilities except that she is "the princess with the personality" to all of us.

Oh yes, you might like to know how the Joe Parker—Marilyn Hare romance blossomed. I was overseas, entertaining troops all over Italy and Africa with Ed Gardner of "Duffy's Tavern." We landed in Naples, Italy, and Joe and Ed renewed their old radio acquaintance and Joe and Marilyn started a new friendship which was renewed upon Joe's return to the States in 1946.

We hope that one day the Happiness Boys story will be on the screen. There has been much interest from time to time and I am certain one day the time will be right. I hope I have answered a few of the questions you asked. Use what you will. We'll be looking for the next installment eagerly. Thank you for caring so much for the ones I love so. Sincerely, MARILYN HARE PARKER.

With her letter, Marilyn enclosed a biography prepared by the NBC Publicity Dept. After telling of how she took her father's place as Billy Jones' partner during his last illness, the biography says:

Republic Pictures brought Marilyn to Hollywood. Within three years she had starred in 21 motion pictures. She was borrowed from Republic by the producers of the musical hit, "Meet the People." She co-starred with a young and coming comedian, Jack Bailey, now the star of NBC-TV's "Queen for a Day." . . . During the war years Marilyn appeared in more than 600 camp and hospital shows. . . . With the advent of television, she starred in "Admiral Hollywood Revue," telecast from the stage of Pantages Theater, Hollywood, in 1948. She followed this with her own daily show from a Hollywood station. Later she appeared on "The Red Skelton Show," "The Bob Crosby Show," "Art Linkletter's House Party," "The Buster Keaton Show," "The Danny Thomas Show" and "Queen for a Day." Her latest motion picture credit is "Eighteen and Anxious" with Martha Scott, Jim Backus, William Campbell and Mary Webster.

The sketch says Marilyn attended Flushing High School in New York and the University of Southern California; that she is 5 feet, 3½ inches tall, has blonde hair and brown eyes and her hobbies are "children, swimming and golf — in that order."

A later letter from Marilyn gives

(Continued On Page 35)

WANTED:

Old, rare and unusual
TOYS, TRAINS, TROLLEYS:

Tin and cast iron horse-drawn Tally Ho's, brakes, landaus, surreys, cabs, buckboards, chariots, gigs, beer wagons, ambulances, fire engines, large Hygeia ice wagons, Royal Circus wagons, walking horses.

Mechanical banks, animated cap pistols, steam toys.

Toy train catalogs, Sears, Butler Bros. catalogs.

Brass auto lamps, horns, auto radiator emblems, catalogs.

Give complete size, description and price, with photo if possible.

SCRANTON HOBBY DISTRIBUTORS

331 Adams Ave. Scranton, Pa. mh6c

We are accepting orders for

REPAIR SERVICE

on

MECHANICAL

BANKS and TOYS

We Also Buy Old Banks

GEORGE W. BAUER

P. O. Box 145

Pottstown, Pa. tfo

$10 to $250 and up paid for mechanical penny banks. New revised list of prices I pay, 25c.

E. L. ROMEY

Box 291

Bluffton, Indiana tfo

MECHANICAL BANK BOOKLET

A new booklet useful to both dealer and collector. Complete listings and new grading system. In seven parts covering the complete field of American, foreign, semi-mechanical, patterns, recasts, fakes, and variations. NOW AVAILABLE PRICE $2.

F. H. GRIFFITH

Harris Pump and Supply Co.
Pittsburgh 3, Pa.

MECHANICAL BANKS
REPAIRED

Buy! Sell! Trade!

PARTS FURNISHED: COIN TRAPS; — WILL BUY BROKEN BANKS; PARTS; OLD COINS; GLASS MARBLES, etc.

V. D. HOWE

395 W. Utica St., Buffalo 22, N. Y. tfo

WANTED

PLEASE NOTE my mechanical bank display ad in this section, listing various wants.—F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

Mechanical Banks — Leslie DeVoe,
4010 Washington Blvd., Indianapolis 5, Indiana. ja12675

MECHANICAL AND STILL BANKS
wanted for resale. Describe fully and state price. — A. Hotze, 9326 McKenzie Rd., Afton 23, Mo. ja120821

WANTED TO BUY: Old cast iron still banks for personal collection. No repairs or repaints. Highest prices paid.—Larry Shrimplin, Rt. 1, Conesville, Ohio. s3483

IRON MECHANICAL BANK and Iron toy parts - sales and service. — Kurtz Antiques, Sanatoga, Pa. au6844

MECHANICAL BANKS WANTED.
Only good, clean, originals desired. Top prices. — Donna J. Fisher, Sellingsgrove, Pa. o3042

FOR SALE

HAVE nice selection of still banks and few mechanicals. Please enclose stamp for list.—A. Hotze, 9326 McKenzie Rd., Afton 23, Mo. au6407

MECHANICAL BANKS for sale. Send stamped addressed envelope for list. — Gordon Grimes, 14091 Highway 39, Westminster, Calif. au1631

OLD BANK BARGAINS!

Iron Elephant Bank, $4. Bank Building Bank, $4.50. Large Iron Goat (Oscar) Bank, tail and horns missing, $8.50. Large Safe Bank (combination) front and back, iron, 8½x6", $9. Red Tin Safe Bank (quaint boat scene) key gone, $2. Registering Bank, tin (Reg. to .10), $2. Green Mail Box Bank, tin, no trap, $2. Postage extra.

THE PRISCILLA ALDEN HOUSE
720 Skyline Drive York, Pa. auc

MECHANICAL BANKS & TOY PISTOLS

Especially Want Mechanical Banks:

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| • TURTLE(Sticks head out)                     | • TOMMY BANK(Prone Soldier Shoots Gun) |
| • BOWERY BANK                                     | • JOHN BULL BANK                           |
| • PRESTO(Mouse on roof)                       | • BULL &amp; BEAR                          |
| • WIMBLEDON                                       | • BANK                                     |
| • JONAH &amp; WHALE(Jonah emerges from whale) | • COASTING BANK                            |
| • BOWLING ALLEY                                   | • MUSICAL SAVING                           |
| • BANK  | • BANK(You pay—I play)                 |
| • RED RIDING                                      | • PREACHER IN                              |
| • HOOD  | • THE PULPIT                               |
| • FOOTBALL(Colored man kicks ball)            | • TARGET                                   |
| • SCHLEY BOTTLEING UP CERVERA                 | • WINNER SAVING                            |
| • PRESTO(Penny changes to quarter)            | • LITTLE JOCKO                             |
| • JAPANESE BALL                                   | • MUSICAL (tin)                            |
| • TOSSER(Tin wind-up)                         | • RIVAL                                    |
| • SHOOT THAT HAT                                  | • SMYTH X-RAY                              |
| • BANK  | • SNAKE &amp; FROG                         |
| • FOOTBALL BANK(Man Kicks Coin In House)      | • BRITISH LION                             |
|  | • (Tin)                                    |
|  | • TOAD IN DEN                              |
|  | • (Tin)                                    |
|  | • PERFECTION                               |
|  | • REGISTERING                              |
|  | • BANK                                     |

PISTOLS:

- |                          |   |
|--------------------------|---|
| • CAMERA          | • TWO DOGS ON                    |
| • DOLPHIN         | • BENCH                          |
| • TORPEDO Shooter | • OSCAR WILDE                    |
| • HUMPTY DUMPTY   | • BOMB                           |
| • SAILING SHIP    | • TAMMANY PISTOL(Tiger Head) |

Also want Cast Iron horse drawn carriages, animated bell ringing pull toys, old toy automobiles and old catalogs showing banks and toy pistols.

F. H. GRIFFITH

HARRIS PUMP & SUPPLY CO.
Pittsburgh 3, Pennsylvania tfx

BILLY JONES and ERNEST HARE

(continued from page 33)

the following additional information:

Ernest Hare had brown eyes and brown hair. My paternal grandparents are both deceased. There are two of Daddy's sister's children in Norfolk—Ernest Morgan and Louise Morgan Farrar. One cousin, John Carl Morgan, is in radio at Vicksburg, Va., and one, Ida, somewhere in Virginia—I don't know where.

Mother was born Mary Flood but used Marie Flood in the theater and Marie Hare ever after. She was born Feb. 27, 1886, in Huntington, Pa., and passed away Nov. 26, 1956, at 70.

Billy Jones' widow is residing in Lancaster, Pa. Billy and May were married in 1937.

I was born Oct. 23, 1923, in Flushing Hospital, Flushing, N. Y. As you mentioned, I have three children and one stepchild, Ronald, 16. I am dark blonde with brown eyes.

X. In Conclusion

And now, having chronicled the achievements of the younger generation, as exemplified by Marilyn Hare Parker, we have reached the conclusion of the saga of those two most lovable gentlemen of the entertainment world, Billy Jones and Ernest Hare. Their memories deserve to remain ever green not only because of their great abilities and the happiness their performances brought to millions but because their association so well exemplifies one of the greatest virtues—brotherly love. I hope their life stories will soon be told on the stage, TV or the screen. Meanwhile, I can think of no more appropriate way in which to sum up their attitude toward their fellow men and the good they did while they lived than by quoting the final chorus of their Edison record of "That's My Hap-Hap-Happiness":

(Continued on page 43)

WANTED
ANTIQUE

MECHANICAL BANKS

Toy Jobbers Catalogs

Describe fully and state price

LEON J. PERELMAN

COLLECTOR

339 Winding Way

Merion, Penna. jly06c

I will pay top prices for

MECHANICAL BANKS

Damaged Banks if rare will be accepted.

HARRY G. MILLER, Collector

1418 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo. tfo

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

Key to "CANTERBURY BUTTONS"

13. Head of Unknown Lady (with elaborate hair-do) in Plastic Horn.

14. Black Glass Waistcoat (?) button with dull finish, incised pattern.

15. "Liberty Head" in hard rubber. (Nos. 13, 14 and 15 are shown against lighter colored mounts).

16. Gold-plated Filigree button from a wedding dress, c. 1898.

17. Overall button: "Carter's, Lebanon, N. H."

18. Moss Rosebud in pressed brass, tin back.

19. Hand-painted plaster-of-Paris button, made by D.F.B., showing church, etc. as in picture above. (This is the only button in the group that didn't come from Canterbury place, but this seemed an appropriate place to put it).

20. "Venus and Cupid": brass with applied figures, tin back.

21. "Butterfly": two-piece Czech "Paperweight" in several colors, c. 1915.

22. "Rosebud": same type and age as number 21.

23. "Steeplechaser" in brass with tinted background.

I know where every one of these buttons came from; I remember the circumstances under which each was acquired. I shall never forget the friends and "friends' friends" who proffered their button bags and boxes and urged us to "take all you want!" (Sometimes I wish I had availed myself of that generous offer! But in those days, we were anxious not to be thought greedy!)

I am sure that most collectors have buttons such as these, which are dear to them for personal reasons. Mounting such buttons together is like meeting old friends, for as we look at them we remember days that are gone, and enjoy them, even in retrospect. Such buttons may be arranged in various ways, as individual taste suggests. I have seen "Family" buttons grouped together; or buttons mounted beside pictures of those who wore or donated them. I have seen them carded in rows, isolated in daguerreotype cases, mounted and identified in albums. It doesn't matter how they are arranged—what does matter is the pleasure they can give, the joys and memories they can revive.

WANTED

WILL PURCHASE rare buttons at half list price. — Mrs. Edna Cunningham, 407 Valley Drive, Syracuse, N.Y. ja12618

BUTTONS FOR SALE

TEN SMALL PICTURES, $1.25; 10 unused Calicoes $1.50; % Calicoes 35c ea.; 15 Jewels $1; old glass; large and small pictures; lustre pictures; Vermont Light Infantry and Militia. Approvals with references. — Mrs. T. B. Wakefield, 76 Greene St., Burlington, Vt. o3004

100 GOOD OLD BUTTONS $1. Others on approval, also goofies. — Ruth Griffith, 632 S. Cochran, Charlotte, Mich. s6804

$1.10 BUYS 10, 20, 50 or 100 good old buttons including 10 worth $1 free or 1 large picture button free. Money-back guarantee. — Mrs. A. S. Campbell, 788 Bonaventure Ave., N.E., Atlanta 6, Ga. s3024

EXTRA GOOD OLD BUTTONS: 100 assorted, 50 assorted and 1 large picture button, 6 small pictures, or 25 uniform for $1.10. Poke boxes and approvals. — Minerva M. Miner, Sherburne, N. Y. jly3654

100 and 1 good old buttons for $1. Large selection, write. — Mrs. Emma Smutnick, Box 145, Abington, Conn. au3024

CIVIL WAR Battlefield found buttons for sale. Will buy Military and early state buttons. Relic list 10c. — Sam McClaren, Route No. 3, Richmond, Va. je1831

ANTIQUE BUTTONS. direct European imports, collectors' items, 18th century buttons, pictorials, crests, dress-earrings, sets, cuff links — Mrs. Margot Jacoby, 250 W. 94th St., New York 25, N.Y. jly124431

THREE BOOKS ON GOOFIES at $1 each. Contains photographs, descriptions and index. Price list included. — E. Packard, 825 So. 98th, Tacoma, Wash. jly6825

OLD BUTTONS and Goofies. — D. Barts' Antiques, 76 Centre St., R.F.D. 3, Bradford, Mass. au3291

I have many buttons which are showier than these "Canterbury Buttons," many that are more valuable, in a money sense. But these are the kind of buttons I like best: they are not "outstanding"; they are not museum material; they are buttons such as any collector might have—and might cherish for similar reasons.

To me, they are Memories-in-miniature and unchanging souvenirs of "happy highways," that I can never travel again.

"When Time who steals our years away
Shall steal our pleasures, too,
The memory of the past will stay,
And half our joys renew."

BILLY JONES and ERNEST HARE

(Continued from page 35)

On Edison records Jones and Hare Entertain you folks out there,
And that's our hap-hap-happiness!
Just to know the things we do
Makes us feel we're pleasing you—
That's our hap-hap-happiness!
Each one beneath the sun should do his share while he's here,
Spreading all around him a little sunshine and cheer.
If we've failed, at least we've tried,
But if you feel satisfied,
That's our hap-hap-happiness!

THE END

Now that the Jones and Hare series is concluded, there are one or two odds and ends I should like to add and an error or so to correct.

Bob Pye, of Penticton, British Columbia, has added two more names to the list of those under which Jones and Hare recorded. Mr. Pye has a Silvertone record on which they are called Lewis James and John Marron—a puzzling choice of names, since the late Lewis James was one of the most popular recording tenors of the Jones and Hare period. Says Bob Pye: "It's Billy and Ernie, with Dave Kaplan. They even identify themselves with some patter." Another Silvertone record lists them as the Radio Kings.

In the May issue, the cut lines beneath the photo of Harry Reser's Quartet incorrectly referred to him as "the greatest living master of the five-string banjo." This, of course, should have been "tenor banjo." His group should not have been referred to as a "banjo quartet" since Reser was its only banjo player and he was holding another instrument in the picture. Harry plays the guitar and ukulele in addition to the banjo.

Two or three typographical slips should be noted in the June article. In the first column, where it is said the record of "Oh My Yes" was made "about a year ago before the advent of electric recording," "ago" should be omitted. The record was made in 1924.

In the third column Franklyn Baur's first name is misspelled as Franklin. Baur always spelled it with a "y." On page 35, the statement that I was never able, "during my lifetime," to learn what had become of Marguerite Dunlap, obviously should be "during her lifetime."

NICHOLLS BUTTON BOOKS
 BUTTON HAND BOOK _____ $3.50
 Supplement I to Hand Book _____ 1.50
 Supplement II and Index _____ 2.25
 Supplement III and Index _____ 3.00
 All four ordered at one time — $8.00
 ORDER FROM
MRS. FLORENCE N. APOSTLE
 4806 Fitzhugh Ave.
 Richmond 26, Virginia

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

LAMBERT MURPHY

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE: This article is written at the request of, and dedicated to my friend of long standing, Miss Aletta Reed, of Fort Myers, Fla., who has been a Lambert Murphy admirer for many years).

LAMBERT MURPHY, at the beginning of his recording career

I. A Word on Arthur Godfrey's Cancer

I am writing on Sunday, May 3. For the past several days millions of Americans have been concerned over the health of the comedian, Arthur Godfrey, who recently underwent an operation for removal of a lung cancer. His plight recalls the fact that Lambert Murphy, an artist of a wholly different type, was a victim of a malignant growth on his vocal chords. An operation ended a brilliant career by reducing Murphy's voice to a whisper, but it arrested the disease, and Murphy lived a useful life for years afterward.

Knowing this, we may hope that Arthur Godfrey will also be spared.

II. In the Beginning

Lambert Murphy, who was one of Victor's top tenors for almost 20 years, beginning in 1911, and who also had four successful years as a member of the Metropolitan Opera, was born April 15, 1885. He died in Hancock, N. H., where he had made his home for a good many years, on July 24, 1954. It hardly seems possible, when one studies his boyish appearing photos in the old Victor catalogs, that he was 69 years of age when his life ended.

For more than ten years the Victor publications contained this summation of Murphy's career:

Lambert Murphy is an American and was born in the city of Springfield, Mass. As a boy he sang in church choirs, and later, while at Harvard University, took much interest in musical matters. During his senior year at Harvard he commenced his concert career, continuing it for two seasons after his graduation in 1908, and filling many important engagements, including concerts of the Boston Festival Orchestra (three successive seasons), and the Handel and Haydn Society. He was soloist at St. Bartholomew's Church, New York, but resigned his position there when he went to the Metropolitan in 1911, in order to devote his time entirely to operatic work. Mr. Murphy is naturally endowed with a tenor of unusually pure quality, which, during his professional career, has developed in richness, warmth and color.

From the MacMillan Encyclopaedia of Music and Musicians I glean the additional information that Murphy was a pupil of a noted pianist and teacher, Isidore Luckstone, as well as of Herbert Witherspoon, the distinguished basso who afterwards became a Victor recording artist and manager of the Metropolitan.

Two years after Victor introduced electrical recording in 1925, the Blue Label record series in which Murphy's offerings had been cataloged was discontinued and he, like Olive Kline and Elsie Baker, was promoted to Red Seal status, as Reinald Werrenrath had been six years before. His biographical sketch was transferred to the Red Seal section of the catalog, and the 1929 edition tells us that "his career as a singer began as a choir-boy, in which occupation, as an alto, he was greatly outshone by his brother, who had a soprano voice. He 'grew up' and went to Harvard, where . . . he 'made' the Glee Club. Not so long afterward, at the instance of Riccardo Martin, he was heard by, and taken into, the Metropolitan Opera Company. Since leaving there, he has sung at concerts, festivals, and with the symphony and other important organizations everywhere in America."

Lambert Murphy's brother, who "outshone" him, was Ray Dickinson Murphy. At the time of the tenor's death he was living in Upper Montclair, N. J., and was president of the Equitable Life Assurance Company. There probably is almost no risk of error in surmising that when he made his Victor records under the disguise of Raymond Dixon, Murphy used a modified form of his talented brother's two given names.

III. Death Notice

Additional information about Lambert Murphy's life and achievements is contained in the death notice, with a Springfield, Mass., date line, which the New York Times published July 25, 1954:

Mr. Murphy made his debut at the Metropolitan at the age of 26, but resigned four years later to take up concert work. At about the same time he became one of the Victor recording artists. He once estimated that he had made 200 recordings.

In later years, Mr. Murphy taught voice at the Malkin Conservatory in Boston and also conducted classes weekly in New Haven and Springfield. During World War II, after the conservatory had closed, he conducted voice classes in Springfield and worked in a local war plant. Mr. Murphy also had been a soloist at the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York.

His singing and teaching were brought to an end when he underwent a serious throat operation in the early Forties.

Mr. Murphy married Jesse Stewart Rowe in 1921. Also surviving are two sisters, Mrs. Jesse Washburn and Miss Marion C. Murphy, both of this city, and a brother, Ray Dickinson Murphy.

Lambert Murphy made his debut at the Metropolitan Opera on November 17, 1911, singing the role of the sailor in "Tristan und Isolde." His other roles included Joe in "The Girl of the Golden West," Vogelgesang in "Die Meistersinger" and Froh in "Das Rheingold." He created the roles of Caradoc in Horatio Parker's "Mona" and of "Montfleury" and "Cadet" in Walter Damrosch's "Cyrano de Bergerac" and he was the Majordomo of Von Faninal in the first American performance of Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier."

Except for one brief period, throughout his career, record buyers had scant opportunity to hear Lambert Murphy in operatic roles, especially such relatively unfamiliar ones as those mentioned in the obituary. If the tenor estimated his recordings at 200, I am sure he under counted. He not only made a long list of solos but also sang in many duets and quartet offerings and was one of the standbys of the Victor Light Opera and Opera Companies. It is a pity space is lacking to undertake a comprehensive tabulation of his recorded output.

IV. Murphy's Recording Career Begins

The first solo record by the tall, broad-shouldered, athletic appearing young tenor appeared in a special group of new musical comedy offerings which Victor issued early in November, 1911. His identity was concealed under the assumed name of Raymond Dixon on the 12-inch double-faced record which contained his version of the oddly titled "Hm! She is the One Girl" from Leo Fall's light opera, "The Siren," coupled with the Victor Concert Orchestra playing "Gypsy Love Waltzes." Listed on the back page of the Dec., 1911, Victor supplement, only brief information was given about this record, but "Hm!" was described as Donald Brian's song hit in "The Siren," "by the Victor's new tenor, Mr. Dixon."

As part of the regular December issue, "Dixon" was represented by a ten-inch double-faced Black Label record, on which he sang "You Are the Ideal of My Dreams," with Reed Miller's version of "All That I Ask of You is Love" occupying the A side. Editor Sam Rous commented: "Two favorite ballads of the past season which are still high in favor. This combination of both songs, given by two new singers, should prove one of the most popular features of the December list."

In January, 1912, "Dixon" accomplished something of a more ambitious nature. On a 12-inch single-faced disc he sang in English a "Ave Maria" adapted to the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana." The supplement said:

Few instrumental compositions have become so popular with all classes of people as this beautiful intermezzo, which Mascagni wrote to divide his CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA into two parts. Because of the great vogue of the number, it has been set to words by the English writer, F. E. Weatherly, and the result is a most impressive song. The Victor's new tenor, Mr. Dixon, who has made a very great success with Victor audiences, has given a fine rendition.

In more conventional vein, Dixon was also represented that month by a Theodore Morse ballad, "If This Rose Told You All It Knows." Again his companion was Reed Miller, singing "For Killarney and You." In February, Victor issued his first gospel hymn record, "Nearer, My God, To Thee." On the reverse, the baritone, Frederick Wheeler, better known then as James F. Harrison, sang "Flee as a Bird." The supplement said: "Both Mr. Dixon and Mr. Wheeler are well-known choir singers in leading New York churches."

In April, Murphy, alias Dixon, probably took part in the Orpheus Quartet record of "The Long Day Closes," and "Ho! Jolly Jenkins!" A month later the Orpheus obliged with "If All My Dreams Were Made of Gold." Besides Murphy, the members were Harry Macdonough, second tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and William F. Hooley, bass. It is likely that by this time Murphy had begun to sing in the Opera Company records, and he may have been the tenor in the Purple Label record of the Rigoletto Quartet, by the Victor Opera Quartet, announced in July, 1912.

The name of Raymond Dixon was now to disappear from Victor supplements and was not seen again for another two years.

V. Murphy Records Under His Own Name

"Dixon's temporary banishment undoubtedly was caused by the decision to begin issuing records by Lambert Murphy under his own name, on the Purple Label, at a higher price than the Black Label records sold for. On page two of the October, 1912, supplement appeared a photo of Murphy (no picture had been shown of Dixon), and a heading: "A New Metropolitan Tenor Makes His First Victor Record." The record was No. 70080, Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger." It was sung in German. The supplement said:

A notable addition to the Victor's list of artists is Lambert Murphy. This young American tenor joined the forces of the Metropolitan Opera Company last season, and he has won great praise from both press and public by the masterly manner in which he has acquitted himself in many important roles. A brilliant operatic future is predicted for this young singer, who has just made an exclusive contract with the Victor.

In November, 1912, Murphy sang the Weatherly-Denza song, "Call Me Back," and in December he had a seasonal offering with a Christmas flavor, "The Birthday of a King."

VI. Some Operatic Recordings

It is hard to understand why no more Murphy records (aside from two or three numbers by the Orpheus Quartet in which he presumably sang) appeared for almost a year. Not until Nov., 1913, was the name of Lambert Murphy again seen in a Victor supplement. This time he sang a 12-inch version in Italian of "O Paradiso" from "Africana."

A month later, Murphy was heard in "Ah! leve toi soleil!" (Fairest Sun, Arise!) from Act 2 of Gounod's "Romeo et Juliette." This time he sang in French, bringing to four the numbers of languages in which he had recorded. The editor said: "Mr. Murphy's rendition of this lovely Gounod air is a beautiful one, and it is hoped that he will soon be heard at the Metropolitan in such roles as Romeo, for which his voice is admirably adapted."

The most ambitious recording Murphy had undertaken was issued in January, 1914, when he and his baritone friend, Werrenrath, joined forces in a 12-inch Purple Label production of "Solenne in quest' ora" (Swear In This Hour) from Verdi's "Forza del Destino." The names of Caruso and Scotti automatically come to mind when his difficult operatic duet is mentioned, so no wonder Sam Rous began his comment by saying:

The Caruso and Scotti rendition of this number has had an enormous vogue all over the world. There are, however, many customers, who have felt unable to possess this record, and it is mainly for these that we now issue a splendid rendition in the Purple Label class, which is worthy of a place in every collection. The Purple Label record of the duet is an excellent one, exhibiting the fine voices of these two young singers to much advantage.

Murphy and Werrenrath sang in Italian. A month later, in February, they aired their duet prowess with another Italian opera air, this time "Ah, Mimi, tu piu" (Ah, Mimi, False One) from act 4 of Puccini's "La Boheme." Mr. Rous said: "Mr. Murphy and Mr. Werrenrath . . . give an admirable rendition of this effective duet."

The prominence accorded to Murphy's operatic repertoire at this period may have been a reflection of the high regard which Calvin Child, chief of the Victor Red Seal division, had conceived for him. Murphy and Billy Murray were among the few male Victor recording artists aside from the classical galaxy, whom Child frequently entertained in his home. He may have been "grooming" Murphy for later Red Seal honors. There is no reason to think he ever meditated Red Seal status for Murray, but Billy's quiet, gentlemanly demeanor appealed to him.

VII. Dixon Again Takes Over

It is rather amusing, but somewhat puzzling, to observe how Raymond Dixon and Lambert Murphy alternated in Victor recording lists. After the splurge of operatic airs by Mur-

(Continued on page 62)

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: Edison talking doll, Columbia Grand, Edison Concert, hurdy gurdy, street piano. Describe, price. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. n3023

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minneapolis, Pa. mh122361

BUY, SELL OR TRADE 12" & 16" Radio Transcriptions of all types, radio transcription catalogs, anything & everything regarding radio transcriptions. — Paul Scriven, 238 W. State St., Niles, Ohio. n3464

WANTED: Lowery Organo attachment for piano; Ampico rolls; player pianos in fair condition; player organs and rolls; coin operated gum and candy machines. Animated displays of any kind before 1900. Please send pictures of displays. Must be in working condition. Price, etc. — F.R.P., Box 188, Westboro, Mass. o3637

FROM A FORMER EDISON dealer's stock that had been in storage, I was able to find some original Edison styluses (needle) in both sapphire and diamond. Have a small surplus and will sell some while they last. Also, Diamond Disc reproducers at $5 each. Send for free brochure on cylinder reproducers. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3219

ORGANS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Reed organ, piano cabinet, Cornish made about 1900. Good condition. — Lucille Russell, 1007 Arapaho Trail, Alamogordo, N. M. n3003

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Edison Concert Phonograph any condition, describe and price. — Everett A. Schlenker, Box 147, Gaston, Indiana. n3652

BELLS

(Continued from page 55)

L. O. Gannon studies one of the many large Oriental bells to be found in the halls of the building. This one is located in the "First Corridor" of the underground "catacombs." With changes now under way it will probably be moved to a new location where the bells are being concentrated for display and cataloging.

every kind: paintings, bronzes, ceramics—even mounted animal heads and a large, very large array of fine dolls. Bringing this entire accumulation under control will be no small task.

After visiting the curio shop to secure a few distinctive additions for my own (now modest) collection, including a large cast-iron crown-topped "Father Serra" memorial bell and one of the original tin decorative bells from a remodeled part of the Mission Inn Hotel itself, along with some small cast bells, souvenirs of the hotel, I forced myself to turn toward the road again. On passing through the tropic gardens where fountains play, it was with reluctance that I took a last look at the sun-brightened tower and the vine-covered arcade of mission bells. The giant "Bell of Nanking," I noticed, is now almost covered by lush living verdure, the letters have weathered away from its painted nameplate, making it a stranger to all but those who read about bells.

NOTHING

Our forefathers did without sugar until the 13th century, without coal fires until the 14th century, without buttered bread until the 15th century, without potatoes until the 16th century, without coffee and tea and soap until the 17th century, without pudding until the 18th century, without gas and matches and electricity until the 19th century, without canned goods until the 20th century, and we have had automobiles for only a comparatively few years. Now what was it you were complaining about?

—Anon

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 32)

phy, he dropped out of sight, as far as Victor supplements were concerned, and was not heard of again for a year.

But in August, 1914, "Dixon" came back, after an absence of more than two years, and contributed steadily to the catalog for the next several months. Victor had begun an extensive series of "educational" records intended mostly for use in public schools, and the majority of the Dixon records, from 1914 on, were the educational type. In August he sang "Over the Summer Sea," to the melody of "La donna e mobile," from "Rigoletto;" "Rory O'More" and "The Girl I Left Behind Me," and in September, two compositions of the Civil War era, "Battle Cry of Freedom," and "Song of a Thousand Years." In October he was represented by "Under the Greenwood Tree," from "As You Like It," and in January by three more Shakespearean songs combined on one double-faced Black Label record: "Come Away, Death," "Take, Oh Take Those Lips Away," and "O Mistress Mine." Besides that, he and Macdonough did a duet version of "It Was a Lover and His Lass," also from "As You Like It."

Lambert Murphy was back in February, 1915, and "Dixon" went into a short eclipse. Murphy's Purple Label record was "A Beam From Yonder Star," concerning which the supplement said:

The progress of this young singer is being watched with much interest, and a brilliant career is being predicted for him. During his two years at the Metropolitan his voice gained in power and beauty, and he filled many roles with distinction. Mr. Murphy's success is all the more gratifying because he is American taught and has reached his present high position without the supposedly necessary European training and reputation which have always been thought essential to a success in opera in America.

One month later Murphy's alter ego, Dixon took over with another educational Shakespearean record, "Sigh No More Ladies" from "Much Ado About Nothing." In May he took part in five songs recorded by trios of male voices: "The Duke of Marlborough," by Macdonough, Dixon and Werrenrath; "When That I Was a Little Tiny Boy," and "Hold Thy Peace," by the same group; and "Come Unto These Yellow Sands," and "Green Sleeves," combined on one record side, by Werrenrath, Dixon and Hooley. In June, on record 17760, "Dixon" sang four French folk songs.

In March, Murphy, as Dixon, had been allowed to make one of his infrequent contributions to Victor's popular song list. On No. 17715 he sang "Good Bye, Girls, I'm Through" from "Chin Chin." This disc reveals the tenor's principal singing weakness. He was not adept at interpreting the lighter, more colloquial type of popular music, and his style was too heavy for such a song as "Good Bye, Girls." One need only compare it with his old friend, Billy Murray's singing of "Ragtime Temple Bells," on the B side, to understand why. There is no need to analyze the vocal equipment of the two, but Billy sings the lilting "Temple Bells" as it should be, while "Dixon's" approach is out of character. Of course, Murphy sang opera in a manner Murray would not attempt.

(To be continued)

OLD VEHICLES

(Continued from page 55)

VEHICLES PARADE

A nostalgic fifty years paraded before the eyes of old car lovers, on a recent Sunday, as the Newark Museum, continuing its 50th Anniversary celebration, held an Antique Auto Meet.

The afternoon event started with some sixty of the early vintage cars assembled at Washington Park, directly across from the Museum. There the autos were available for public viewing. Judging of the antique autos and announcements of awards took place at the Museum.

Highlight of the afternoon was a colorful motorized parade of all entries from Washington Park down Broad St. to Lincoln Park and back.

The parade and auto meet, sponsored by the Newark Museum with the cooperation of the New Jersey Chapter of the Antique Auto Club of America, was only one of many special events being held at the Museum, in celebration of the Museum's fiftieth year.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

VIII. Height of Career

Lambert Murphy reached the peak of his recording career when he was transferred from the single-faced Purple Label records to the double-sided Blue Label which eventually supplanted the Purple. His first 12-inch Blue Label record was issued in March, 1916. It combined "Mavourneen Roamin'" and "The Sunshine of Your Smile," and must have been one of his best sellers. The supplement said:

Admirers of this young tenor, who has left the Metropolitan to devote himself entirely to concert work, will be gratified at the announcement of two new songs by him. These two excellent new numbers, which have found great favor with concert audiences, are excellently given by Mr. Murphy, whose beautiful voice and splendid diction have won him great popularity.

Also in March, there was a Black Label "Dixon" record of "Underneath the Stars."

LAMBERT MURPHY

PART II

By JIM WALSH

The Orpheus Quartet was at the height of its popularity from 1913 to 1918. As its first tenor, Murphy sang in support of a number of popular Red Seal stars, including Frances Alda, Alma Gluck and John McCormack. The quartet was disbanded after the death of its versatile basso, "Bill" Hooley. Known as "the little man with the big voice" (he was only five feet seven inches tall), Hooley was born in Cork, Ireland, April 16, 1861, and died in New York, Oct. 12, 1918.

Besides continuing to make educational records, some of them in foreign languages, Murphy recorded under his own name many ballads and concert songs, and a number of popular hits, such as "Tell Me," "Memory Lane," and "Rose-Marie." He was one of a group of Victor Blue Label and Red Seal artists who took part in a music festival sponsored, in 1918, by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. of Cincinnati. Husky-looking Evan Williams, a Red Seal tenor as popular as Murphy, was among the party but died unexpectedly a few days after the festival ended. Murphy's former teacher, Herbert Nitherspoon and his wife (Florence Hinkle) were also included.

In the Oct., 1922, Victor list, Murphy offered what was probably the first record ever made of Stephen Foster's "I Dream of Jeanie With the Light Brown Hair," a song that was to become a nation-wide plague nearly 20 years later when radio stations had their bitter battle with the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers. It sometimes seemed "Jeanie" and other Stephen Foster songs were the only things on the air. The Murphy record was doubled with "My Days Have Been So Wondrous Free," composed by Francis Hopkinson, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. The supplement termed "Jeanie" "one of Stephen Foster's best lyrics. It was lost for many years and only recently discovered."

During this period, Murphy helped re-make a few records that had originally been sung by other artists. In 1920 he and "Edna Brown" (Elsie Baker) made over "Those Songs My Mother Used To Sing," which had been done years before by Corinne Morgan and Macdonough. The Dixon disguise was used for this re-make, as well as the one of "Near the Cross," which he and "Alice Green" (Olive Kline) sang in 1922 to replace the original version by Mr. and Mrs. William Wheeler. Another Elizabeth and William Wheeler offering succumbed in the 1925 catalog when their record of "Dear Lord and Father" gave way to one by Kline and Murphy—this time under the singers' real names. This was the only Black Label record on which Murphy's true name had been used up to that time.

IX. A Red Seal Artist

Lambert Murphy became a Victor Red Seal artist in 1927. His first record with the red label was No. 4004, issued in April. It contained electric recordings of two of his former hits, "Roses of Picardy," and "Lonesome—

LAMBERT MURPHY was a member of the American Singers who were heard on radio and made records in the late 1920's and early 1930's.

Left to right: Murphy, first tenor; Charles Harrison, second tenor; Vernon Archibald, baritone and Frank Croxton, bass.

Reading from Right to Left: Evan Williams, Florence Hinkle, Lambert Murphy, Rudolf H. Wurlitzer, Mabel Garrison, Clarence Whitehill, Reinald Werrenrath, Herbert Witherspoon and Giovanni Martinelli—Taken before the huge record rack in the Rudolf Wurlitzer Company's store in Cincinnati during the May festival of 1918
Williams died a few days after the photo was taken.

That's All." Virtually all his Red Seals were electrical versions of songs he had previously sung into the horn. Besides those already mentioned, titles in the 1928 catalog included "Hark! Hark! the Lark," "I Dream of Jeanie," "Just An Ivy Covered Shack," "Rose-Marie," "My Days Have Been So Wondrous Free," the Serenade from "Blossom Time," and "Winding Trail."

The 1929 catalog added a few more Murphy records, and Raymond Dixon was still being heard from with electrical versions of educational songs in English, French and Italian. However, the end of Murphy's career as a star Victor soloist was at hand. When the New York banking house of J. W. Seligman and Co. bought the Victor Talking Machine Company in 1927 (not long afterward control passed to the Radio Corporation of America). Most high-priced stars lost their contracts. Murphy, Olive Kline, Elsie Baker, Reinald Werrenrath, Lucy Marsh, Billy Murray, and Henry Burr, were among those who were told their services were no longer required. After the 1929 depression began, as little as possible was spent on artists. When the pitifully thin 1933 Victor catalog was issued only three Murphy titles were left: "Hark! Hark!", "Serenade," and "Rose-Marie." Some time later, Victor issued record 4083, containing "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton," "Sally In Our Alley," and "Ye Banks And Braes," and this held on through the 1948 catalog.

At some time between 1933 and 1938, as business improved, most of the Murphy Red Seal records which had been cut out of the 1933 catalog were reinstated. Moreover, he was represented, under his own name, by several educational records in the Black Label section. All these presumably had been recorded before his contract lapsed.

X. With the American Singers

After Murphy lost exclusive status with Victor, he became a member of a fine male quartet, the American Singers, which had originally consisted of Redferne Hollinshead, a Canadian tenor; Charles Harrison, Vernon Archibald and Frank Croxton. Hollinshead soon dropped out, and Murphy took his place. The quartet was popular on radio and made some excellent records for Victor, Columbia and Edison, but as the going became harder in the early 1930's it disbanded and the members devoted themselves largely to teaching. Its Edison discs, made during the Edison Co.'s last year of recording, are especially hard to find. They include 52512, "When Song Is Sweet," and "Vale;" 52615, "Carry Me Back To Old Virginny," and "My Old Kentucky Home;" and 52636, "Darling Nellie Gray," and "On the Banks of the Wabash."

A newspaper article about the American Singers said Murphy liked to spend as much time as possible on his New Hampshire farm with his collection of firearms, and his prize hunting dog.

XI. A Letter from Lambert Murphy

I was privileged to receive only one communication from Lambert Murphy—a cordial reply, dated June 5, 1948, to a letter I had written him asking him to attend that year's John Bieling Day party for pioneer recording artists at Garden City, N. Y. He surprised and gratified me by revealing that he regularly read my articles in HOBBIES. Written from 417 Maple Road, Longmeadow, Mass., the letter said:

Dear Mr. Walsh: I was delighted to get your letter, and before going further I want to say that I feel quite well acquainted with you already, because of your page in HOBBIES, to which my wife subscribes, inasmuch as she is something of an "antiquer."

I was particularly interested in the fine things you had to say of Jack Macdonald (Harry Macdonough), who was an intimate friend over many years. In fact his family and mine spent their summers together for at least ten years, both at Ogunquit, Maine, and at Munsonville, New Hampshire. Also it was through your page in HOBBIES that I learned of Sam Rous and later heard of the death of both him and Mrs. Rous. Of course they were good friends of a bygone age. I am sending you under separate cover the autographed photo you asked for.

It is one from my singing era, as you will of course know.

Now I am going to have to tell you the sad news (as far as I am concerned) that I cannot come down to the dinner. It comes just exactly in the middle of my vacation for which I have already made previous arrangement. I shall certainly miss seeing you and so many of my old friends! Olive Kline, Werrenrach, Harrison, Croxton and Hindermeyer were all buddies of mine, also Billy Murray.

Richard Crooks dropped in on us recently and told us that Jim Stanley (the Peerless Quartet bass) had the same thing happen to him as I had, and that we both make the same sort of noises. The handicap of having a loud whisper instead of a voice is considerable from the angle of teaching voice. So much so that I am not even trying. But from other angles it isn't too bad, even if it is necessary to split up the phrases.

All kinds of best wishes for the dinner, which I KNOW will be a success. Please give my best to all my old friends, and many, many thanks for your letter and the invitation to attend! Very sincerely, LAMBERT MURPHY.

I do not know what was the cause of the tenor's death—whether it came about by a recurrence of his throat cancer or something else. But I have long admired him as a singer and I treasure the letter I have just quoted, while regretting that we never met. He lived for many useful years after the malignant affliction ended his singing.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 29)

for his treatments based on suggestion of hypnosis.

Relieved of his depressed state Rachmaninoff took a trip to Italy, and when back in Russia, produced his Second Piano Concerto in C Minor, which he gratefully dedicated to Dr. Dahl. This magnificent work was first performed with tremendous success by Ziloti, with Nikisch conducting in St. Petersburg, March 28, 1902.

In 1904, at the instigation of Chaliapin who had recognized Rachmaninoff's genius since the days at the Mamontoff Opera, Rachmaninoff was offered the conductorship at the Bolshoi, which he accepted. Opinions conflicted as to his work on the podium.

During his two-year stay at the Moscow Imperial Opera, no liberties were allowed the singers when he led the orchestra, and the composers' intentions were faithfully carried out. Moreover, the orchestra ceased to be a supporting instrument and acquired a voice of its own in the operatic scheme of things.

Rachmaninoff's remaining two operas "The Miserable Knight," and "Francesca da Rimini," were first performed under his baton at the Bolshoi, on January 11, 1906. His other vocal works include many songs (some very beautiful), "The Bells"—a choral symphony with soloists and chorus, "The Spring"—a cantata for baritone and chorus, etc. Among his instrumental compositions are three symphonies (D Minor, E Minor, and A Minor), "The Isle of the Dead"—Symphonic Poem, "The Rock"—a Fantasia, four piano concerti (F-sharp Minor, C Minor, D Minor, and G Minor), "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini," a Sonata for Cello, and numerous short pieces highlighted by ear-catchers like the preludes in C-sharp Minor, and G Minor.

Rachmaninoff's extensive tours finally took him to the United States. On November 28, 1909, he gave his first concert here, with the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch, playing his Third Piano Concerto which he composed especially for the occasion.

This appearance was followed by others in the capacity of pianist, and also as conductor of his own compositions in Philadelphia, Chicago, and Boston. Acclaimed by critics and public alike, he returned to America one year later, after bidding a last adieu to his country of birth in December, 1917.

This uprooting from native soil marked for Rachmaninoff the beginning of a new life. His composing had by then slowed down, but his concert work kept him constantly busy in America and abroad. Fame and Glory were completely his now—undisputed, effulgent, and boundless.

After years of unceasing triumphs, four days before his 70th birthday, on March 28, 1943, Sergei Rachmaninoff succumbed to cancer at his home in Beverly Hills, California. To many like myself that sad day marked the end of the noble line of incomparable pianists, and of truly great pianists—composers as well.

* * * * *

ADDENDA TO FANNY ANITUA DISCOGRAPHY

Through a regrettable oversight on my part, the list of artists supporting Fanny Anitua in the Columbia "Carmen" set—part of a Discography by Wm. J. Wilson, Jr., August HOBBIES—was omitted. I am very sorry for this omission, and here is the complete cast:

Carmen - FANNY ANITUA
Micaela - INES MARIA FERRARIS
Frasquita - ROSA GARAVAGLIA
Mercedes - LUISA GARAVAGLIA
Don Jose - LUIGI BOLIS
Escamillo - CESARE FORMICHI
Dancario - LUIGI BALDASSARRI
Remendado - CARLO PALTRINIERI
Zuniga - ENRICO SPADA
Morales - LUIGI BALDASSARRI

Chorus and Orchestra of La Scala (name of the conductor not given).

For this information, as well as for the titles and numbers of the recordings, we are indebted to Dr. Frank Garcia Montes, of Cuba.

A. F. A.

MARIO ANCONA

(See page 30, No. 13, September, 1959" Due to lack of space, this illustration could not be included in that number).

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: Edison talking doll, Columbia Grand, Edison Concert, hurdy gurdy, street piano. Describe, price. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. n3023

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mh122361

BUY, SELL OR TRADE 12" & 16" Radio Transcriptions of all types, radio transcription catalogs, anything & everything regarding radio transcriptions. — Paul Scriven, 238 W. State St., Niles, Ohio. n3454

WANTED: Lowery Organo attachment for piano; Ampico rolls; player pianos in fair condition; player organs and rolls; coin operated gum and candy machines. Animated displays of any kind before 1900. Please send pictures of displays. Must be in working condition. Price, etc. — F.R.P., Box 188, Westboro, Mass. o3637

FROM A FORMER EDISON dealer's stock that had been in storage, I was able to find some original Edison styluses (needle) in both sapphire and diamond. Have a small surplus and will sell some while they last. Also, Diamond Disc reproducers at $5 each. Send for free brochure on cylinder reproducers. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3219

FOR SALE. Tubing chart for Seeburg Eagle "G" tracker scale, showing connections. $2 postpaid. — Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. o1251

ORGANS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Reed organ, piano cabinet, Cornish made about 1900. Good condition. — Lucille Russell, 1007 Arapaho Trail, Alamogordo, N. M. n3003

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Edison Concert Phonograph any condition, describe and price. — Everett A. Schlenker, Box 147, Gaston, Indiana. n3652

WANTED OLD PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder and disc type with the horns, records, catalogs and parts or anything pertaining to phonographs. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3004

A young and pert FANNY ANITUA

tion of our great respect and veneration." The parchment was accepted by Mme. Anitua with tears of gratitude.

Congratulations were received from Sr. López Mateos, President of the Republic, as testimony to his cordial admiration and esteem for her generous and tireless labors as a professor. In a closing tribute to this remarkable personality, Don Jaime Torres Bodet presented Fanny with a commemorative medal of honor.

During the ceremonies, a musical program was provided, with selections from Gluck's "Orfeo"—the opera of Fanny Anitua's début—and "Barbiere di Siviglia." It was presented by the Bellas Artes Orchestra, and the soloists, Mmes. Aurora Woodrow, mezzo-soprano, and Maria Teresa Orgaz, soprano.

As the curtain fell to deafening applause, Fanny Anitua's students all but smothered her with flowers and embraces. Over to one side, her son, Arrigo Coén Anitua, who also was drying his eyes, exclaimed: "What a great day this has been!"

ADDITIONS TO ANITUA DISCOGRAPHY

By THOMAS G. KAUFMAN

The following is additional data to Fanny Anitua discography:

IL TROVATORE: Stride la vampa (11119)	D4309
WERTHER: Va! no, non e mal (11123)	D4309
(This coupling came out also on D609)
LA FAVORITA: Fernando, dove mai (11122)	D4310
UN BALLO IN MASCHERA: Re dell'abisso (11125)	D4310
LA GIOCONDA: Voce di donna (11124)	D4674
ORFEO: Che faro senza Euridice (11126)	D4674
AIDA: Gia i sacerdoti (w. Cunego) (11126)	D4378
AIDA: Misero appien (w. Cunego) (11127)	D4378
(This coupling came out also on D572)

The above are the original numbers under which the records were released in Italy. D9264 (previously given in the Discography for the ORFEO/GIOCONDA coupling) is the Ci-

When a series of articles relating the life story of the eminent violinist, Charles D'Almaine, appeared in the November and December, 1957, and January, 1958, HOBBIES, it was mentioned that the late Mr. D'Almaine was a talented artist and that one of his oil paintings, "The Old Salt," hung in the home of his sister-in-law, Miss Lillian Berry, of Chicago. It was also mentioned that Miss Berry cherished excellent photographs of Mr. and Mrs. D'Almaine. Miss Berry has kindly allowed copies to be made, and it is a pleasure to reproduce the photographs and the painting (see page 32).

The D'Almaine series came to the attention of Mr. Harry D'Almaine, of Chicago, who has long been interested in obtaining additional facts about his illustrious namesake and probable kinsman. His letter seems to me so valuable in the first-hand light it casts upon Charles D'Almaine that I feel I must share the greater part with HOBBIES readers:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Your extremely interesting article in HOBBIES Magazine on Charles D'Almaine was brought to my attention by Mrs. Eric Charles D'Almaine, wife of my second cousin. She is a professor at Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green, Ohio. Thelma is well aware of my keen interest in the history of the D'Almaines, as a result of which I apparently have the most complete and accurate record gale number. D4309, D4310, D4378, and D4674 are all Columbia (sold slightly cheaper). D609 and D572 are Columbia Popolare.

This is indeed a fabulous Series, of which I am currently compiling a numerical catalog. Other artists who recorded for acoustic Italian Columbia include: De Hidalgo, Minghini-Cattaneo, O'Sullivan, Burzio, Boninsegna, Franci, Borgioli, Pertile, Galeffi, Formichi, Garbin, Della Rizza, Corradetti, Gherlinzoni, and many others.

A great many thanks to Tom Kaufman for his contribution. It will please the collectors to know that Tom promised to let his Italian Columbia numerical catalog appear on these pages, in installments, as he completes it.
A. F.-A.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

MORE ABOUT CHARLES D'ALMAINE

By JIM WALSH

that exists. It is not in fact complete and there are gaps that need filling in; nevertheless, I have not been able to find here or in England anything better. There is no question that anyone with our name is a member of the same family.

I dare say I was about ten years old when I first heard about Charles. That was in 1911. My eldest sister, who was 22 at the time, was visiting some friends and they had some records made by Charles. They asked her if he was any relative. . . . When she asked my father who Charles was, my father also was unable to locate him on the family tree. I remember the incident very well. We were all so excited to have found another D'Almaine in America.

In 1922 I went to New York. One of the things that was uppermost in my mind was to visit Charles. It was shortly after lunch that I went to the Metropolitan Opera House. Somewhere we had acquired the knowledge that he was first violinist of the Met.

Being unfamiliar with the building, I first approached the doorman. He took me inside to a similarly uniformed individual, who—as it seems to me now—must have been, the elevator starter. We stood in a not too wide corridor just inside the outer doorway. This party remembered Charles and said that Charles had left the Met "a couple of years ago." He said that Charles had married a chiropractor and had taken it up himself and they were in business in Newark.

I was shocked at this news for several reasons. First, my family had been manufacturers, stockbrokers and bankers, and artists with a couple of ministers thrown in. They had been leaders in their chosen professions. Only in the case of my grandfather, who gave up banking in England for portrait painting in America and achieved wealth and considerable acclaim had there been any abandonment of an original profession. And to be honest, if, as you said in your article, the name D'Almaine seemed the perfect one for a violinist, it seemed less than perfect for a chiropractor.

I caught the next train for Newark. . . . Leaving the train, I went directly to a telephone booth and looked up "D'Almaine." Sure enough, there it was: "D'Almaine & D'Almaine, chiropractors." And most astonishing of all, they were right upstairs. Right over my head. I walked out onto the sidewalk and, standing at the curb, looked up. In a golden arc the letters about three inches high repeated the information in the telephone book.

Proceeding upstairs, I found myself in the first room of what appeared to be a two or three-room suite. I recall that the room I was in had a couch on the left-hand side. Charles appeared. Naturally, he must have been tremendously surprised. That probably accounts for his not asking me to sit down. During the half hour I was there we stood about the couch.

Charles appeared to me about 55 years old. Actually, I know now that he was 51. He was a little shorter than I, possibly five feet eight or nine, portly, with iron-gray hair brushed straight back. He was clean shaven.

Left to right: Charles D'Almaine, eminent violinist, as depicted in painting, "The Old Salt;" Mr. D'Almaine, and Mrs. D'Almaine.

He did not know much about his ancestry. He attached no importance to the name. He did not know of any relatives of that name. I was burning with curiosity to know why he gave up the glamour of the Met for the obscurity of a chiropractor's office in Newark.

He told me that both his father and his mother were in theatricals. When he was about six years old he had a violin put in his hands—"and I was made to fiddle." His parents traveled a good deal, much of it in France. He had harbored all these years a smoldering resentment at the trap that Fate held him in. And when his opportunity for freedom came he took it. I can understand this in theory, but it will always remain difficult to comprehend how one could rise so high while having such an attitude.

He said he was born in London. We discussed the subject of chiropractic. He offered to give me a treatment, which I declined. I did not meet Mrs. D'Almaine. And that was about the end of the interview. . . . I never saw him again. . . .

In 1945 I was on business in New York City and having occasion to visit Philadelphia. . . . I stopped at RCA Victor and spoke to Ed Forman. They had no history of Charles as a matter of record. They had none of his recordings and the master records had been destroyed. I did obtain from them a list of the recordings he made. . . . I never represented myself as Charles' son. Mr. Forman was mistaken on that point. I did say, of course, that we were related in some way. . . .

On July 14, 1947, I wrote to Frank C. Berry in Chicago and received in reply a letter from Miss Berry. She said Charles' violin was sold, as he had requested, and the proceeds went to the Red Cross. Some pupil at a musical school in Chicago got it. . . .

From my family records it is quite certain that Charles was not a son of Thomas D'Almaine, baptized May 22, 1776, and who died about 1860 to 1866. Thomas founded the firm of Thomas D'Almaine & McKinley, later called Thomas D'Almaine & Company, 76 City Road, E. C. 1, London. Thomas died without issue. They manufactured pianos and the firm was listed in the London directory for 130 years, until 1935.

Thomas had an older brother, George, and a younger brother, William, who both had numerous children with many descendants to the present day. The record of the period when Charles was born is incomplete and it is possible that he was of the fourth generation from George or William — which would make him my fourth cousin. . . .

A further comment on Miss Berry's thinking that Charles' mother was French. Just when the D'Almaines left France for England I cannot say. The earliest date I have is 1737, when my great-great-grandfather was born in England. In any event it perhaps is not surprising that a number of French wives pop up in the record. Most cordially yours, HARRY D'ALMAINE.

TAURINO PARVIS

More information also has come to light concerning the Italian baritone, Taurino Parvis, who was the subject of articles in the July and August, 1956, HOBBIES. I am sorry to say I have learned of this fine artist's death. My colleague, Aida Favia-Artsay, some time ago sent me a clipping from the "Gazzetta del Popolo," a newspaper published in Parvis' native city of Torino, giving the sad news that Parvis had died in Barcelona, Spain, May 9, 1957. It also gives the surprising information that he was the stepfather of Roberto Rossellini, the Italian movie director who until recently was married to Ingrid Bergman. Following is Aida's translation of the article:

Taurino Parvis, a noted baritone, died yesterday in Barcelona, where he resided for some time. Taurino Parvis was born in Torino on September 15, 1879. In our city he graduated in law, but later he followed his deep vocation, dedicating himself to music, for which he had always shown temperament and gentility.

When very young, he began at the Theatre Chiarella, with Burzio in "La Favorita," and at the Vittorio, with Carmen Melis, in other operas. This was the onset of his success.

In 1927 he was called to the Regio (this opera house is in Torino; I believe both the previous ones are there, too—Aida) where, favored by the public and the critics, he sang in "Falstaff." Successively, he was at La (Continued on page 51)

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED: Edison talking doll, Columbia Grand. Edison Concert, hurdy gurdy, street piano. Describe, price. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. n3023

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mhl22361

BUY, SELL OR TRADE 12" & 16" Radio Transcriptions of all types, radio transcription catalogs, anything & everything regarding radio transcriptions. — Paul Scriven, 238 W. State St., Niles, Ohio. n3464

FROM A FORMER EDISON dealer's stock that had been in storage, I was able to find some original Edison styluses (needle) in both sapphire and diamond. Have a small surplus and will sell some while they last. Also, Diamond Disc reproducers at $5 each. Send for free brochure on cylinder reproducers. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3219

ORGANS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Reed organ, piano cabinet, Cornish made about 1900. Good condition. — Lucille Russell, 1007 Arapaho Trail, Alamogordo, N. M. n3003

WILCOX WHITE, Angelus organ. It plays a piano at same time. 100 rolls. Largest banjo in the world. Nat'l Coin Piano, small, Tourphone hand organ. Mills Violina. — Williams, 8400 Connecticut Ave., Chevy Chase, Md. n1082

ORGAN INFORMATION

INFORMATION WANTED: re: Vocalion reed organ. 61 notes, 12 stops, pedal operated, pressure system. Made in New York or Worcester (Mass?). — Charles Ferguson, 429 W. 8th Ave., Columbus 1, Ohio. d3084

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Edison Concert Phonograph any condition, describe and price. — Everett A. Schlenker, Box 147, Gaston, Indiana. n3662 who did not display a fierce manner.

The only feminine member of the group was the Glorious Goddess, Sri-devi, who was represented as most savage. She was regarded as the special protectress of the Dalai Lamas. As "the queen of the warring weapons," she was perhaps the most dreaded of all the demons.

Begtse is one of the most difficult figures of the group to study. He seem to have been a typical war god. He showed remarkably restricted traits, and assumed different special forms among various nations. There is also evidence of his having been a protective divinity of a certain region. He frequently appeared in an eight-fold aspect.

Of portly form like his prototype, the Hindu Ganesa, Kuvera is usually depicted as a dwarfish figure with a large paunch. Shown here is a representation of Kuvera sitting on cushions—with a Tibetan inscription on one of the cushions. In his left hand he holds the symbolic mongoose, disgorging pearls.

The mongoose in this position is a Tibetan emblem of wealth. Indian tradition indicates that the mongoose overpowers the serpent demigods, or Nagas, who guard the treasures hidden in the sea.

Striking is the contrast between this very mundane deity and the idealized divinity. Here there are no spiritual ideals. Here, no religious ecstasy. This figure is a personification of materialism and of the worldly life. The movement of the fingers of Kuveras' right hand indicates a prayerful mood, but the prayers are for worldly—not spiritual—benefits.

The Yi-dam form of Kuvera was known as Jambhala. The Yi-dam were guardian gods of the distinction of Buddha. Every Lama chose a special Yi-dam as his protector—for some special occasion, or perhaps for a lifetime.

Jambhala is represented here in a figure on a goat. The coarse, strong features, and the facial expressions of both forms of Kuvera indicate a great capacity for the enjoyment of the pleasures of living. The well-fed bodies make it clear that hard work or abstinence was not a part of the gospel which this god preached.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Basham, A. L.: "The Wonder That Was India." Grove Press Inc., New York, 1954.
 Gordon, Antoinette K.: "The Iconography of Tibetan Lamaism." Charles E. Tuttle Co., Rutland, Vt., and Tokyo, Japan, 1959.
 Havell, E. B.: "Indian Sculpture and Painting." John Murray, London, 1908.
 Pott, P. H.: "Introduction to the Tibetan Collection of the National Museum of Ethnology, Leiden." E. J. Brill, Leiden, 1951.
 Rowland, Benjamin: "The Art and Architecture of India." Penguin Books, Baltimore, Md., 1953.
 Waddell, L. A.: "The Buddhism of Tibet or Lamaism." W. Heffer and Sons, Cambridge, England. Reprinted 1958.
 Zimmer, Heinrich: "The Art of Indian Asia." 2 Vols. Bollingen Series XXXIX, Pantheon Books, Inc., New York, 1955.

MISC. SILVER FOR SALE

FLATWARE: For Active, Inactive and Obsolete Sterling patterns. Write us your needs. Prompt replies.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. my128041

UNUSUAL SILVER, modern and antique. — Frederick T. Widmer, Jeweler, (est. 1844) 31 West Street, Boston, Mass. jly124001

SILVER WANTED

James W. Tufts of Boston silver plated pieces, pattern No. 1948. Also, interesting Victorian silver syrup pitchers. Advise capacity and condition. — Box E.B.W. c/o HOBBIES, 1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill. n1224

DISCONTINUED AND OLD STER. SILV. FLATWARE PATTERNS

We may have your missing pieces of flatware by

- Gorham
- Towle
- Wallace
- Whiting
- Frank Smith
- S. Kirk & Sons
- International Silver Co.
- Bluff

Write your Pattern wants
Contact us and save money

GOLDEN'S SILVER & ANTIQUE SHOP

Dept. H. Baltimore 1, Md.
863 N. Howard St. Phone: Saratoga 7-7868

BRICKER CUSTOM METALCRAFTERS

Skilled Craftsmen can transform your Treasured Antiques, Object D'Art and Jewelry to their original splendor.

WOODCRAFT - ANTIQUES
BRASS BURNISHING & PLATING
SILVER & GOLD PLATING DIAMONDS - JEWELRY
SMELTING - OLD GOLD

We purchase diamonds, jewelry and old gold.

HARLEY BRICKER
ELECTROPLATING

Box 123, Bryan, Ohio

Since 1935
mh06p

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 32)

Scala, Covent Garden of London, Metropolitan of New York, St. Petersburg, Budapest, Buenos Aires, Santiago of Chile. He left the theatre for reasons of health at the zenith of his artistic career.

The news of his death came last light by telegraph from Barcelona to his brother, who for many years was an esteemed journalist, Taurino Parvis had married the widow Rossellini, mother of the director Roberto, and, therefore, was father-in-law of Ingrid Bergman. (Mrs. Favia-Artsay asks, "Would that be stepfather-in-law in English?")

The news of Taurino Parvis' death produced a strong impression in the artistic circles of Torino, with which the celebrated singer had always remained in affectionate contact.

Mrs. Favia - Artsay commented: "Jim: Note that the 1927 'Falstaff' at the Regio is put ahead of the La Scala, Covent Garden, etc., appearances, which took place much earlier. This was done, I believe, because the writer wanted to keep Parvis' Torino appearances in one group. I thought of a misprint, but then it couldn't have possibly been 1897 as he was only 18 then, and no lawyer gets out of school that quick. It could have been '07 or '17, but that would have happened after his other activities, anyway, so 1927 would be the most logical—Mother city asked the famed son to sing in its best opera house (one of the foremost in Italy) 'at the apex of his artistic career' (as the article says). Too bad it isn't specified whether the performance of 'Falstaff' took place before or after his retirement."

The real price of everything is the toil and trouble of acquiring it. —Adam Smith

NEW - A STERLING SILVER ENAMEL CHRISTMAS SPOON - NEW

Last year we issued a new Christmas Spoon with an appropriate picture of the season in the bowl. This trial spoon was a great success and we intend to issue this same spoon every year BUT EVERY YEAR with a different picture in the bowl. The half ounce spoon is of the demi-tasse size - 5 1/4" long. Comes in attractive GIFT BOX as shown.

PRICE including handling, postage, insurance, Federal Excise Tax $6.00
Positively no C.O.D. — RUSH YOUR ORDER NOW.

ALBERT H. OECHSLE — 709 East High St., Jefferson City, Mo.

17c

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

NOTABLES OF THE NINETIES:

John Yorke AtLee
And Dan Kelly

By JIM WALSH

On the morning of Wednesday, September 11, 1946, my friend, Bryant Burke, of Hempstead, L. I., and I were killing time near the Pennsylvania station in New York while I waited for a train to Boston. We took a short stroll, came to a building in which used records were offered for sale and went in.

As the proprietor, a small, excitable looking man, walked forward, I yielded to an impish temptation. Doing my best to keep my face straight, I asked: "Do you have any brown wax 1891 Columbia cylinders by John Yorke AtLee, the artistic whistler, with piano accompaniment by Professor Fred Gaisberg?"

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1906 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor.—Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED, on cylinders only, four-minute Amberol preferred, give number and artist: Pretty Baby, Oh You Beautiful Doll, Redwing, After the Ball, Three O'clock in the Morning, Moonlight Bay, My Gal Sal, Sweet Rosie O'Grady, When You Were a Tulip, Sidewalks of New York, "Ma" (She's Making Dyes At Me), Old Bill Moses Ford, Alexander's Rag Time Band, Let the Rest of the World Go By, In the Good Old Summer Time, Silver Bell, Oh Johnny. Also 200 others. Dealers and individuals - send lists and prices to: H. W. Oltmann, 1505 Elmen, Houston, Texas. ja38841

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinorah: Sei vendicata—any number, size or coupling: outside or center start.—Alda Favla-Artsay, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

WANTED: FOLK, HILLBILLY, AND WESTERN RECORDS - including Carter Family, Uncle Dave Macon, Cliff Carlisle, Gene Autry, Jimmie Davis, etc.—Don Wahle, 1128 Keller Ave., Louisville 13, Ky. d3234

The little man's face was a study in bewilderment. When he spoke it was with emphasis. "What in the all-fired heck—/ or words to that purport, he exclaimed.

I broke down and told him Bryant and I were collectors of antique records, with no love for jazz or crooners, and that I had asked for AtLee's whistling solos because they were scarce and hard to find.

The storekeeper's face cleared. "Oh, I see!" he said. "You guys like music! Well, you won't find it in this dump. All I've got is second-hand late popular stuff—nothing but junk, the kind the teen-agers buy! Lots of times I'm ashamed to take their money for the trash I pass across the counter, but if I didn't somebody else would, and I gotta make a livin'!"

Without bothering to explain that I didn't place the long gone Mr. AtLee's whistling specialties in the realm of high-class music, I spent several minutes in a conversation with the volatile storekeeper and enjoyed it very much. As Bryant and I went out the door, he cordially said: "Come back any time you're looking for rubbish. But don't hope to find any music in here. I ain't got it!"

II. Setting the Scene

Memories of the impassioned self-styled rubbish peddler returned to me when I began to set down the comparatively little I know about one of the first, but today, most obscure of pioneer recording artists, John Yorke AtLee. Probably not more than a score or so of collectors hoard even one of the fragile two-minute cylinders which the Washington, D. C., civil service employee was turning out energetically from 65 to 70 years ago. I don't have one myself, but Allen G. Debus sent me a disc re-recording of an AtLee solo, which reproduced very distinctly. I still have it somewhere, but in the present disordered state of my collection can't find it or recall the title.

It's not even certain how the man's last name should be written, but the prevailing opinion is that it should be AtLee, with both the A and L capitalized and no separation of the syllables. However, his early associate, Fred Gaisberg, spelled it "Atlee" in his book published in England as "Music on Record" and in this country as "The Music Goes Round." An 1893 issue of the first talking machine publication, The Phonogram, prints it Atlee. And a death certificate issued by the District of Columbia health department at first gives it as AtLee, then follows with At Lee in parentheses. My dear dead friend, the late Frank Dorian, who began working for Columbia in 1890, always wrote it, however, as AtLee, so I shall follow that style.

Before discussing Mr. AtLee and his recording career, I shall set the stage by quoting a couple of old magazine articles which show how the phonograph, invented by Edison in 1877, was already taking hold of the public imagination in the early 1890's. It is well known that Mr. Edison suggested, shortly after his first tinfoil

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide lists 7500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 18, N. Y. je120061

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold. — James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. d3084

OVER 100,000 hard-to-get records. 1903 to LP. — Jack's Record Cellar, 400 Haight Street, San Francisco 17, Calif. d126121

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists. — Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. d3618

FREE "Personalities" catalogs - rare records and broadcasts by radio, stage, screen, television personalities. — Amalgamated Records, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. ap6276

25,000 OLD RECORDS, transcriptions, air shots, and sound tracks. Professional quality disc to tape copying, too. Lists free. — Geo. Collings, P.O. Box 946, Fresno, Calif. f3004

BREAKING UP my collection of Red Seal and HMV opera and symphonic rarities. All in new condition. Free list. Geo. Collings, P.O. Box 946, Fresno, Calif. f3004

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold. — Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. f3065

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (Stamp please). f4353

BRAND NEW 78 rpm disc records, 25c up. Also special dealers discounts. Highest prices paid for special old type disc and cylinder records. Send stamp for both above lists. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f3675

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale: all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. je120422

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale: all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. jly120422

LEFT

This photo, taken from a book, "Proceedings of the National Phonograph Association for 1893," shows a public school class studying reading by means of the new-fangled phonograph in the days when John Yorke AtLee's whistling specialties and Dan Kelly's "Pat Brady" series were popular recorded entertainment.

RIGHT

A typical recording scene in the Edison studio of the 1890's. The pianist is Frank P. Banta, who died in 1904. The singer may be Steve Porter or a German yodler, L. W. Lipp. The man with back to camera is unidentified. What appears to be woman's face may be seen above the top rack of horns. A man's face is at the left of the piano.

sound reproducing instrument appeared, it might prove useful in preserving the last words of dying persons. It is even better known that when the first world-famous recording artist, Len Spencer, died in December, 1914, his recorded voice was heard at his own funeral reciting the 23rd Psalm and the Lord's Prayer. Some eight years earlier, the reproduced voice of a Chicago music teacher, Miss Minnie Nelson, had sung hymns at her final rites.

But the idea of having one's voice dominate one's own funeral proceedings had already stirred some people's imaginations as early as the beginning of Spencer and AtLee's record making activities. I am indebted to Mrs. C. H. Anderson, of West Lafayette, Ind., for the following extract from the Philadelphia Musical Journal for March, 1890:

WILL SING AT HIS OWN FUNERAL. "Capt. Frank Cunningham, collector of taxes in Richmond, Va., says that within the past two years he has sung at 385 funerals. 'I often sing,' said the collector, 'at two funerals a day.' 'And who will sing at your funeral?' Capt. Cunningham was asked.

"Why, I intend to sing on that occasion myself. I hope to be able to get a phonograph or graphophone pretty soon for the purpose of singing the songs into it that will be heard at my funeral. When the time comes the machine can be taken to the church and my songs delivered just as if I were alive." Capt. Cunningham did not say what songs he would select, but the favorites, "Home of the Soul" and "Good Night," will probably be chosen.

Some Richmond Times-Dispatch or News-Leader staff writer might get a good Sunday feature story by turning through the files until he found an account of Capt. Cunningham's death and observing whether recordings of his voice were used at the funeral.

III. Mr. Edison's 1891 Talkies

It was mentioned in a recent HOBBIES series that the comedian, Billy Jones, sang in talking motion pictures which Thomas A. Edison produced early in 1912. But almost no one knows that, as long ago as 1891, when John Yorke AtLee was just beginning to hit his stride, turning out whistling specialties and recitations, Mr. Edison was working on the problem of synchronizing the sound of the phonograph with the motion of the movie projector, and apparently believed he had solved it. The following interesting article was copied for me by Mr. Harold Farnsworth, of New Haven, Vt., from the June 20, 1891, Scientific American. I was startled when I read that the great inventor at that early date had perfected, or thought he had, a cylinder playing half an hour with volume enough to fill a good-sized hall:

The "kinetograph" is a machine consisting of a clever combination of a photographic camera and the phonograph, by which the words and other sounds of a speech or play are recorded simultaneously with the photographic impressions of all the movements of the speaker or actor. The photograph impressions are taken at the rate of 46 a second, and the phonograph has its capacity increased so that it will make a continuous record for 30 minutes without shifting of the cylinders. The celluloid film upon which the photographic impressions are taken is perforated along one edge with a series of holes arranged at regular intervals with as much precision as can be secured by means of the finest perforating mechanism.

This feature is of vital importance, for the holes must move the film with such regularity as to make each separate impression when produced coincide exactly with the words or sounds recorded in the phonographic cylinder simultaneously with the position and expression of the speaker, actor or singer at the time the sounds were uttered. Exact synchronism between the sound-recording mechanism and the shutter-operating and film-moving devices of the camera necessitates exceedingly accurate mechanism both in the recorder and in the reproducer. The phonograph and camera mechanism in both cases is driven by the same motor and controlled by the same regulating mechanism.

The greatest difficulty experienced in taking the photographic impressions and reproducing them was in the stopping and starting of the film. It was found that the stopping and starting of even so light a thing as the film 46 times in a second required about two-thirds of the time, the remainder being utilized for the exposure of the plate. To secure enough light for the production of a good image in so short a space of time, a special camera lens of large aperture had to be constructed at a cost of $600. The apparatus has already been carried to such perfection that the motion of the speaker's lips coincides so exactly with the words reproduced by the phonographic cylinder that the words actually seem to proceed from the picture, and all the movements of the speaker or actor are reproduced by the succession of the different images with such rapidity as to make the picture appear absolutely continuous, instead of intermittent, as it really is.

The reproducing apparatus is practically a reversal of the camera and phonograph; that is to say, instead of the photographic camera, a superior form of projecting lantern is employed, which is provided with a strong light and mechanism for moving forward the strip with an intermittent motion corresponding exactly to the motion of the negative strip in the camera and, like it, acting in perfect synchronization with the phonograph. The lantern is also furnished with a light interrupter, which eclipses the light during the brief period required for shifting the film forward to a new position to show the succeeding picture.

The phonograph with its resonating horn is able to reproduce the sounds so that they may be easily heard in any part of an ordinary hall without the necessity of applying the ear to the instrument, as in the case of the commercial machines, and the successive pictures necessary to produce the effect of motion upon the screen follow each other with such rapidity, and with so little change in the successive positions, as to give the picture all the appearance of life.

I wonder what "bugs" developed in this early model "talkie" so that Mr. Edison apparently never gave public demonstrations and was not even able to produce a cylinder playing four minutes instead of 30 for another 17 years. I have no idea that John Y. AtLee, singing in his spare time for the Columbia Co., of Washington, D. C., ever did any experimental talking film work for Mr. Edison, of Menlo Park and West Orange, N. J., but I have thought this article worth preserving for the light it throws upon the state of sight and sound reproduction at the time AtLee was making one wax cylinder after another. To realize what an early period of phonograph history 1891 was we have only to recall it was not until 1886 that Charles Sumner Tainter and Chichester Bell, of the Volta Laboratory, produced their wax-coated card-board cylinder which made the phonograph practicable for home entertainment.

IV. Fred Gaisberg Recalls

Most of the depressingly scanty information we have about John Yorke AtLee comes from Fred Gaisberg, who sang in his teens in a Washington church as a choir boy and also became a fair pianist. He was engaged by the newly formed Columbia Co. to serve (at the age of 16) as accompanist on records by such early stars as Dan Quinn, John W. Myers, George Gaskin, Len Spencer and Billy Golden. Two years later he became associated with Emile Berliner, who was then experimenting with the disc gramophone. In 1898 Gaisberg went to London, where he helped establish the Gramophone Co. and became its chief recording expert. He recorded Patti, Caruso, Melba, Paderewski, and many other Red Seal celebrities.

Frederick William Gaisberg died September 2, 1951, at his home in Hampstead, London. As one of his associates said in a letter to me: "He was 78, still an American citizen and still a bachelor." He retired from active duty, but was still retained by H. M. V. as a consultant.

Judging from his photographs, Gaisberg was a small man, not much more than a dwarf, but this did not keep him from being rather acidulous in his comments on AtLee, who also was far from being a Hercules. According to Gaisberg, AtLee prefaced each of his records with a pompous announcement, "in tones that made the listener visualize a giant." Instead, Fred goes on, AtLee was "a mere shrimp of a man, about five feet in his socks"—one who was proud of his deep, powerful voice and "flowing mustache." He worked from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. as a government clerk, then would go home and sing into three Columbia phonographs. With Gaisberg playing the piano and receiving 10 cents per rendition, AtLee spent hours turning out records of such things as "The Whistling Coon," "The Mocking Bird," and "The Laughing Song." (Two of these specialties are usually associated exclusively with the Negro entertainer, George W. Johnson). Said Gaisberg: "I can still hear that reverberating announcement—'The Mocking Bird,' by John Yorke AtLee, artistic whistler, accompanied by Prof. Gaisberg."

AtLee's cylinders must have traveled overseas to virtually every English-speaking country for Gaisberg said that Australians and New Zealanders who had heard him (Gaisberg) mentioned on the whistling records were astonished by his boyish appearance when they met him years later. AtLee's stock of recitations included Mark Antony's speech in "Julius Caesar," "The Lord's Prayer" and "The Mad Ravings of John McCullough," which virtually every phonograph elocutionist recited in the '90's or early 1900's, with Harry Spencer's Edison cylinder being the best known. Gaisberg makes this unkind comment: "What a nuisance we must have been on those long summer nights to our suffering neighbors! From our open window, evening after evening, that beastly little man, with myself as sole accessory, would keep up this infernal racket till all hours."

Roland Gelatt, in his admirable book, "The Fabulous Phonograph," says AtLee was one of the Columbia artists who made advertising records to order for storekeepers. He would whistle a bit of something like "The Chirp, Chirp Polka," and then either AtLee or an announcer would vociferate to this effect: "Wasn't that good whistling? But you'll whistle when you see the bargains being offered by——!" It must have sounded like present-day radio.

The Columbia record catalog dated November 24, 1890, contains 21 records by AtLee, listed under the heading of "Artistic Whistling." It explains, "The following records with piano accompaniment (were) made by Mr. John Y. AtLee of Washington, D. C., the famous Artistic Whistler:"

1. The Mocking Bird; 2. Would I were With Thee; 3. Anvil Chorus; 4. Sweet Bye and Bye; 5. Annie Laurie; 6. Sleeping, I Dreamed Love; 7. Swanee River; 8. The Dude's March; 9. Ever of Thee; 10. Fair Dove, Fond Dove; 11. Golden Robin Polka; 12. Cornflower Waltz; 13. Bischoff's Bobolink; 14. Annie Rooney; 15. When You and I Were Young, Maggie; 16. Home Sweet Home; 17. When Will the Birds Come Back; 18. Blue Danube Waltz; 19. Now was I Wrong; 20. Marching Through Georgia; 21. Down Went McGinty.

The list for Nov. 10, 1891, contains mostly the same titles with some changes and additions. No. 9 has become "A Curl From Baby's Head"; 10, "Love's Dreamland Waltz"; 14, "Love's Golden Dream"; and 21, "Comrades." Then there are new titles, from 22 through 28: "Maggie Murphy's Home," "Once Upon a Time," "Dreaming as She Sleeps," "Selections from 'Erminie,'" "Erminie—the Sighing Swain and What the Dickey Birds Say," "Erminie Gavotte and Erminie March," and "Lullaby From 'Erminie.'"

The 1890 and '91 lists also contain about a score of recitations, including several from Shakespeare, part or all of which probably were intoned by the diminutive John Yorke.

How long AtLee continued to harass the neighborhood with his home recording is a matter of conjecture. The 1893 issue of The Phonogram said: "Mr. John Y. AtLee continues to afford great pleasure by his rendering of music produced by artistic whistling." However, I find no mention of him in any Columbia lists later than 1891.

V. A Doubtful Death Notice

In an effort to clear up some of the obscurity surrounding AtLee, I asked a friend who works for the Washington Star to search the Star's files for a death notice or anything else mentioning the Whistler. He found nothing.

Then I wrote to the District of Co-
(Continued on page 64)

Fred Gaisberg (left), who played piano accompaniments for John Yorke AtLee at the age of 16, examining the first clockwork driven gramophone. With him is Alfred Clark, for many years manager of the English Gramophone Co.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

lumbia Health Department, gave the little information I had about AtLee and asked that an effort be made to find his death certificate. I was delighted when a photostat came a few days later, but on examining it I became perplexed. I still am. The certificate unmistakably lists a last name of AtLee and a middle one of Yorke, but the first name is not John. As best I can make it out, it is Goodwin.

That poses a problem. Could there possibly have been two men in Washington with the uncommon last name of AtLee and the equally unusual one of Yorke? The odds seem against it. But why Goodwin instead of John for the first given name? One possibility is that the man's full name was John Goodwin Yorke AtLee, and that the person who prepared the certificate omitted the John. Or perhaps the whistler considered that Goodwin Yorke AtLee would be a hard name to understand on a record and he merely substituted the simpler one of John.

Chances are we shall never know definitely. I wrote to the U.S. Civil Service Commission and asked for any information its files contained about John Yorke AtLee, but received a reply that all civil service records were confidential.

Goodwin Yorke AtLee—whom we shall assume to be John Yorke—died of a chronic heart condition on April 1, 1910, aged 68 years, two months and four days. If my figuring is correct, this would make his birthday January 28, 1842. He therefore would have been close to 50 when he began to make records. He was born in Detroit. His father, whose name is not given, was born in Philadelphia, and his mother in Westford, N. Y. He had lived in Washington for 60 years and his occupation is given as "bookkeeper"—which sounds like a government job. He was married and lived at 1322 S. Street, N.W., but we are not told his wife's name. His burial took place April 4, 1910, at Arlington, Va. This probably means he had served as a Union soldier in the Civil War.

And that is all I am able to tell about John (or Goodwin) Yorke AtLee. I have never seen a photograph of him and must content myself with reproducing one of "Professor" Gaisberg, taken when he had lived many years in England and was far past the age of 16.

VI. Dan Kelly

I must admit that, after having spent most of my life amassing information about pioneer recording artists, I had never heard of Dan Kelly until I saw him mentioned in Roland Gelatt's book. When I came across a reference to him as one of the most popular recording artists of the '90's I was incredulous and wrote to Mr. Gelatt for more information,

(Continued on page 86)

WANTED

MECHANICAL BANKS, gold coins, Indian relics, music boxes, old guns. — Romey, Box 291, Bluffton, Indiana. my120441

IVES, IVES-BLAKESLEE, Carpenter, Kenton, Hubley, N. N. Hill Brass Co., Gong Bell Manufacturing Co., Shepard Hardware Co., J. & E. Stevens Co., Kyser, Rex and Wilkins. Want any catalogs issued by these companies. See my large ad in the Old Mechanical Banks Department of this issue—F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

WANTED: Old iron hitching posts and old tin tobacco tugs. — R. F. French. 507½ Highland Drive, Marshalltown, Iowa. f122511

BOOKS, documents, etc. on Civil War, Slavery and the South. I will pay fair prices for anything in paper in these categories (books, pamphlets, documents, broadsides, soldiers' letters, signed portraits of generals, Confederate currency, Confederate imprints, slave documents, etc.) Not interested in weapons, uniforms, medals, etc.—D. R. Spaight, Bookseller, Waterford, Virginia. ap6238

BOTTLES, FLASKS and bitters. Buy or sell. List 25c. Wanted: New England Pineapple oval dish, handled mugs and cruet. —The Empty Bottle, Box 27, New London, Conn. ap128271

WANTED: Antique clothing, 1895-1920, men and women. Describe and price in first letter. — Doyer, 1626 No. 46th St., Phoenix, Ariz. ap126102

CROSS SWORDS Meissen, silver gilt, marquetry furniture, also gold items. Price (for resale) and condition first letter. — The Red Velvet Shop, Rear 187, Rock St., Fall River, Mass. au122971

MEDICAL INSTRUMENTS: Bleeders, etc. — J. Koelliker, 4610 Wood St., Willoughby, Ohio. d12407

WHISKEY AMERICANA: Bottles ads, posters, licenses, books, magazines or anything relating to pre-prohibition whiskey business. — Barton Distilling Company, 134 North LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. au120061

EARLY Victorian mahogany card table. Good condition. Send photo.—Mrs. Henry B. Henson, 19 Schenck Ave., Great Neck, N. Y. ja3413

PLEASE NOTE my display ad in Mechanical Bank Department of this issue, listing various wants. — F. H. Griffith, Harris Pump & Supply Co., Pittsburgh 3, Pa. tfx

SHAVING MUGS, vases in pairs, Mary Gregory items and toys. — Walter J. Henry, Adamsburg, Pa. f12069

COLLECTOR WANTS old time iron toys: Royal Circus wagons, horse-drawn pleasure vehicles such as: hansom cabs, phaetons, spiders, traps, tallyhos, etc. — L. C. Hegarty, Coalport, Penna. f6008

WHOLESALE DEALERS! Opening new shop. Need stock. Please write. — Anna B. Ress, 2928 Market St., Youngstown, Ohio. d1631

SILVER NAPKIN RINGS with figures of animals or children applied, also with wheels attached. Cruets or small cabinet pieces in rare art glass. Send description and price in first letter please. — J. C. Thier, 343 Starin Ave., Buffalo 16, N. Y. ap60821

FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Fine Rib goblets, decanter. Bellflower barrel shape goblets. Chinese lacquered tea caddy, pewter insert. Pitcher and tumblers opal top. Custard glass souvenir pitcher, goblet. Tea Leaf lustre oval teapot and sugar. Sawtooth glass. Old tin box to paint. Pleat and Panel large compote. White Ironstone covered sugar, oval dishes. Cream colored Bristol compote. China chocolate pot, small cups and saucers. Carnival glass. Copper pans with handles. Chafing dish. Light green Sawtooth compote. Diamond Point jar. Tobacco jars in Royal Doulton and Rockingham brown ware. Clear glass paneled punch cups. Paneled Thistle pitcher, compotes, celery, dishes. Staffordshire cup plate. Waffle and Thumbprint decanters WT stoppers. Cut glass cruet. China partial dinner set, floral blue decorated, GWW lamp base. Crystal lamp wines. Old pewter plates, teapot. I'm a collector, disposing of surplus. — F. H. Reed, 59 Torrey St., South Weymouth, Mass. d14011

PICKLE CASTOR, no fork, $10. 5 bottle castor set, $17. 3 qt. copper coffee pot, $10. 8x10" deep walnut frame, gold liner, $7. Plano rolls, 50c each. 3-leg bean pot, $6. Pewter salt and pepper shakers with design, $5 pr. — Ott's Shop, R.R. 1, Yellow Springs, Ohio. d1063

AMBERINA 5" bowl, 3" deep, has six deep scallops, $22.50. 9½" bowl, blue, rose poppies, red R. S. Prussia, $12.50. Bee and Hive footed covered 5½" honey dish, $6.50; crystal champagne glasses, have cut hollow stems, lovely, $20 for four. Crystal Wedding 3½" sauces, 2 for $5. 10" Sandwich glass Garfield memorial plate, $7.50. Marked "Germany" stein, pewter top, tan and green. German verse, 9½" tall, $8.50. Sterling spoons, California, Niagara Falls, Wisconsin, South Dakota, $2.50 each. All items perfect, transportation extra. — Leona Norton, Route 1, Moberly, Mo. d1696

CAMERA COLLECTION. One of the best collections in the country, for museum or outstanding collection. 120 cameras, many of unusual quality and appearance, including the rare Obscura, which alone is worth $1,000. Collection also includes valuable equipment and rare books on photography. $4,000 takes the entire collection. Reason for selling: retiring and moving west.—Wm. Musick, 41 West 124th St., Chicago 28, Ill. d1614

PAIR - Mother of pearl Opera glasses, Paris 1878, $25. Salad spoon & fork, Gorham, 1880, gold and silver handle, $35. Ringmans - 3 carat white zircon in 14K solid gold yellow Gypsy mounting, women could use it. Brilliant cut, pre-war $55. Blue Brilliant cut zircon, basket mounting 14K, yellow gold 1.77 c. Special cut $36.62. P.P. extra. Stamp for reply.—Marjorie E. Oliver, 275 Genesee St., Lockport, New York. d1825

FOR SALE: Closing out all antique furniture due to ill health in family: Medium size cherry corner cupboard; refinished pine cupboard (small) $45; cherry bureau; chests; large 2-drawer pine table; lovely large white marble top bureau with rounded corners; oval and round lamp tables; refinished night tables (one drawer) $16 up; lamp bases; lovely gilded picture frames; large walnut secretary with cathedral glass doors $45; refinished walnut gateleg table $70; wooden and china clocks $4 up; Smith American organ $175. Closed Sundays.—Mrs. Tylee Davis, 1932 Oak St., New Albany, Ind. f32741

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

WORLD'S MOST UNIQUE SCALES

Make an offer.

LONGFELLOW
Antique Shop
86 Portland St.
Portland, Maine
do

BERT PETERSEN TRADING POST HOME OF THE OLD, ODD AND UNUSUAL

1019 Mission St.

South Pasadena, Calif.

SYcamore 9-5525

PACKING OR CRATING FREE.		TRANSPORTATION EXTRA. PHOTOS 35c
1. Very large cow bells, ea.	2.50	14. Gold scales in cabinet, 17x15x7", with weights	48.50
2. Iron corn sheller, needs handle.	5.00	15. Mission style shelf clock, good.	15.00
3. Cherry pitter, works.	4.50	16. Seth Thomas Westminster chimes shelf clock, perfect cond.	32.50
4. Two hat racks made of horns, ea.	6.00	17. Edison disk phonograph, 30 records.	35.00
5. Two good log branding hammers, ea.	6.00	18. Ships binical compass, oil light, copper	40.00
6. Two amber glass net balls, ea.	2.50	19. Gay Ninety shelf clock, original.	20.00
7. Two clear glass, ea.	2.00	20. Unusual collection of 50 electric razors, all kinds and makes	65.00
8. Old fish snare.	5.00	21. More branding irons from Kans., ea. $5; doz. assort.	50.00
9. Crystal radio ear phones.	6.50	22. Old miner's gold pans, large	$2.50;
10. Old gasoline wall light, rare.	10.00	smaller one	2.00
11. Iron drugstore scales, marblo pans.	22.50	23. 100 piano rolls (fair to very good).	35.00
12. Cast iron dog sitting on cushion bank.	11.50		do
13. Three Chinese gongs on cord.	10.50
13. Brass Student lamp, electrified.	42.50

MRS. SARAH C. WINSLOW

1654 Massachusetts Ave. Cambridge 38, Mass.

1. Cov. Butler dish, gold band Button Arches	6.50
2. Spooners: Shell, Jewel, Dickerson, Loop, Dart, Grape Medallion, Button Arches.	5.00
3. Cané & Rosette Open 7" Compote	5.00
4. Pink Portland Band 6" Sauce	5.00
5. 3 Open Rose Goblets, each	4.50
6. Plain Dakota Cov. Butter	4.50
7. 4 Rice Chinese 3 3/4" sauce dishes, ea.	2.00
8. Carnival Orange: Luster Rose Cov. Sug. Creamer $4. Butterfly, Berry Spooner	3.00
9. Milk Glass: Three Kitten Plate, Three Bear Plate, each	5.00
10. Cider Set: 1 large pitcher, 6 Handle Mugs Burley, Winter Co. Pottery 1850. Set	12.00
11. 6 Coin Silver teaspoons not matching	5.00
12. 1 pair 12" Bulbous decanters cut glass stoppers, pair	8.00
Transportation extra.	do

ANTIQUES

ON PEACEABLE STREET

Several boxes of fine toy soldiers including

THE DRESDEN KNIGHTS
KAISERPARADE bei MUNCHEN
REVUE

A Schoenhut Circus

A few choice dolls

JACK & GRETCHEN SHARP

R.F.D. 1, South Salem, N. Y.
Lewishoro 3-2735
dp

KENNETH JOHNSON and OTTO LAXY

179 Newbury St. Boston 16, Mass.

Amber Thousand Eye Christmas light	8.50
Emerald Green Bryce (Ribbon Candy) doughnut stand, 6" diam.	9.00
Blue Spirea Band footed sauce, 4 1/2" diam.	6.50
Heart & Thumbprint: covered butter plate, 6 1/2" diam.	8.50
2 Buckle with Star wines, ea.	5.00
Pillar & Bulls Eye goblet, Lee plate 24, brilliant flint	12.50
2 Pinotiss Feather plates, 6" diam., ea.	12.00
Blue Willow Oak handled mug	12.50

No Reproductions. Free Pattern Glass List.

Transportation extra.

"A MERRY CHRISTMAS"

do

MRS. DONALD FOSTER

13 York Ave. West Pittston, Pa.

Grace Putnam By Lo doll, 11" neck size	Write
Caster set, 5 bottles, resilvered.	25.00
Blown sapphire blue milk pitcher, Coin Spot, applied handle, plated top, bulbous.	25.00
Matching finger bowl	8.00
German pink luster Mustache cup, picture Park Hotel, Mt. Clemens, Mich.	3.50
Pr. Flint glass loco decanters.	35.00
Matching celery	9.00
Seale Model, Main Coast Guard Turret Gun WWI	30.00
Magic Lantern, interesting hand-painted slides	13.00
Sewing Bird	5.00
Hawks cut glass bowl, 8"	12.00
A. Keppler's post Civil War political cartoons	write
Ribbon candy goblet	2.50
Postage extra.	dp

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

which he promptly gave. I am still of the opinion that Kelly's "Pat Brady" cylinders could have had only minor popularity when compared to the productions of Len Spencer, Russell Hunting, Cal Stewart, and many other performers of that day. I am also sure. Kelly's vogue must have been restricted to the very early 1890's when companies licensed to operate in only one state, made their own records. Kelly's output appears to have been restricted to the short-lived Ohio Phonograph Co. But, for the sake of historical interest, here is what the Phonogram excerpt sent to me by Mr. Gelatt says about him:

A NOTED RECORD MAKER—DAN KELLY, of CINCINNATI, OHIO. We have obtained, in response to numerous calls from our readers, a very natural and characteristic portrait of Mr. Dan Kelly, of Cincinnati, who is so well known to all users of the phonograph through his "Pat Brady" series of Irish humorous records, and present it herewith, together with a short biographical note of Mr. Kelly.

Mr. Kelly was born in New York City Jan. 22, 1842. His parents were both vocalists, from whom he inherited a peculiar and surprising vocal talent owing to its wonderful register, which, coupled with his mimicry, enables him to sing acceptably the heaviest bass or tenor vocal solos, Negro plantation melodies, the Irish "As Is," "Come all Ye's," and "lamentations," in the true and peculiar style of each race.

His first appearance on the public stage was in Wyatt's Theatre, Hartford, Conn., in 1855, on which occasion he played the part of Paddy Miles in the Irish farce of "The Limerick Boy." Being then only 13 years old, his impersonation of that character was doubly admired by press and public, from whom he received encomiums of praise. Preferring minstrelsy to the drama, he entered that line and remained several years, singing with the best minstrel companies then in this country.

In 1871 he entered into partnership with the scenic artists, Simmons and Morgan (the late Matt Morgan of artistic fame) to exhibit a panorama of Ireland, which was universally pronounced to be the best artistic production on that subject ever exhibited. The financial crash of 1873 came, the show business was generally paralyzed, and Mr. Kelly then withdrew from professional life, and afterwards returned to the boards in 1877, his last engagement being at the Buckingham Theatre, Louisville, Ky., in 1887.

At present Mr. Kelly spends his spare time in making records for the Ohio Phonograph Co., and writing songs, sketches and dramas for the profession. He commenced in the phonographic field about three years ago with Shakespearean recitations and songs without accompaniment.

The idea occurred to him that an imitation of a scene in court which he witnessed when a boy would be the thing for the phonograph. He immediately reproduced and recorded it on a cylinder, under the title "Pat Brady's Plea in His Own Defense; a scene in the Police Court in Hartford, Conn., between Pat Brady, Mrs. Callahan and Judge Collier." The record took well with the public, which encouraged Mr. Kelly to try other subjects, and he soon succeeded in placing before the patrons of the phonograph the celebrated "Pat Brady" series which has been welcomed and enjoyed by the English speaking people of North America during the past three years.

Where is there a phonograph in the United States or Canada without a Brady? The answer is, Nowhere! Where-ever mankind appreciates the peculiar wit and humor of Irish character, that comical Irishman, Pat Brady, is always in demand, and it is not at all uncommon to see ladies and gentlemen standing in line before an automatic phonograph in many of the larger cities, awaiting their turn to hear him sing and talk. Mr. Kelly not only was the originator of these humorous phonographic records, but, notwithstanding his many imitators, stands today the acknowledged head of all humorous talkers for the phonograph. There are probably no records on sale that exceed these in demand.

More information about Dan Kelly, the "Pat Brady" series, and other pioneer recording artists is given, under the heading of "Famous Record-Makers and Their Work," in the same issue, most of which I quote:

The celebrated "Pat Brady" records . . . have been used in all sections of the country from Boston to California and from Canada to New Orleans and Texas. The Ohio Co. reports that orders for these records continue to come along in large numbers, and there seems to be no end to their popularity. They are made in Cincinnati . . . by Dan Kelly, who spends a large portion of his time making these records. Mr. Kelly was formerly connected with some of the leading minstrel companies, such as Bryant's, Christy's and others when these companies were the great attraction in New York. He was also for some time the lecturer for McEvoy's Hibernicon, a panorama which traveled extensively through the country. . .

The great charm to these Pat Brady records is their naturalness of tone. The Irishmen that talk are real Irishmen, with the rich brogue and their Celtic way of saying things, and not an imitation of the genuine article. There have been many imitators of Mr. Kelly in his Pat Brady records, but none of them have been successful. The number of records disposed of by the Ohio Phonograph Co. up to date amounts to about five thousand.

Mr. W. F. Denny, who has been employed by the New England Phonograph Co. for over a year, early developed a talent for popular music, and appeared first as a public singer at the Academy of Music, where he sang with great success the then popular song, "The Pretty Red Rose." Shortly thereafter he became a member of the "Quartette Club" of Philadelphia. After the termination of Mr. Denny's contract with that company he began to "star," visiting all the best theatres and music halls in the country. Mr. Denny's voice is a tenor of pure tone and much pathos, and his articulation is extremely wonderful. As a vocal record maker it is claimed he has no equal in this country, and although his services have been sought by others, he had devoted his spare time entirely to the New England Phonograph Co. . .

Mr. Russell Hunting offers highly dramatic representations, in which all phases of actual life are manifested, with the addition of railway whistles, bells, galloping of horses, and other sounds, brought to a wonderful pitch of perfection. . . Among others we may mention Mr. John C. Leach, who imitates the Chinese, the Yankee, the English dude; Mr. Leon (Sic!) Spencer, whose repertoire embraces songs of all sorts, notably "Near It," from the comic opera entitled "The Pearl of Pekin." Mr. George J. Gaskin, whose forte is pathetic songs, and Mr. Diamond, who introduces a variety; Mr. Hogan, Mr. Clarence, Mr. Asbury, and last though not least, Mr. George W. Johnson, whose "Whistling Coon" has been heard in all climes, even in the wilds of Africa, must be heard in order to be appreciated.

How many present-day record collectors, I wonder, have ever heard of

(Continued on page 88)

OAKGLADE ANTIQUE SHOP

CHLOE CROUSE, Owner
White Oak, W. Va.

1. Cranberry threaded glass match or toothpick barrel, hallmarked silver top, 2 1/2" high, 3/4" diam. $5.50
2. Semi-footed old copper lustre pitcher, baluster shade, applied white grapes and leaves at neck; tiny fleck off under spout. $17.50
3. Copper lustre pitcher, snake handle, 6 1/2" high; white, blue and yellow floral decor each side. $25.00
4. Large 7" high, 6" wide old copper lustre pitcher, no harn. nick under spout, enamel floral; pink, green, yellow in wide band around neck, base of pitcher bulbous and fluted. $27.50
5. Impressed WEDGWOOD, only blue and white jasper cracker jar, EPNS ball and lid, good condition, a lovely one. $45.00
6. Dark blue jasper tea set: pot, open sugar, creamer, silver hallmarked rims, Classical figures, ADAMS, Tunstall, England. $85.00
7. Blue and white Impressed WEDGWOOD only 8" tall clock Jasper with Classical figures front and sides. Across arched top are the Latin word in white "Tempus Fugit." Runs perfectly, but the key that moves the hands is missing. $100.00
8. Carlton ware, dark blue and white floral, plated cover and rim shows wear, cracker jar, a nice one. $15.00
9. Strawberry soft paste, lustred shallow bowl, 8" diam., 1 1/2" deep. $15.00
10. Silver lustre goblet, copper lustre lined, 4 1/2" high. $15.00
11. Beautiful silver lustre teapot, overall width 11 1/2", height 7"; almost indiscernible ago crack running across one side. Fluted lower half (Warman shows the tall pot similar to this one). $27.50
12. Pair of old English cut decanters, original stoppers. $32.50
13. 9" tall, Buzz cut wino cruet, diamond cut stopper. $22.00
14. Onion Meissen, crossed sword, double gourd shaped vase, a lovely old one. $18.50
15. Set of 8 Minton 9" plates, COCKATRICE pattern. $40.00
16. Mocha pitcher, 7" tall, 5 1/2" base, 7" across widest part, no mark. Green and brown seaweed decor on 3" wide neck band; 2 white brown line bordered bands around lower part of pitcher. $37.50
17. For the Toby collector here is a Merry Xmas:
  - a. OLD seated Toby with spotty face, holding a foaming beer mug which bears the words, "Success to our wooden walls" (the English Fleet). Black hat rim has had a repair on one side hardly noticeable, lavender pink coat, yellowish pants, black shoes, orange chair and handle, 9 1/2" tall, 5" base diam. $45.00
  - b. Glazed pottery Toby. Woman in tri-corn hat, yellow apron. Her hands are hidden in its deep pockets. Green shawl, 9" high. $25.00
  - c. Dog Toby in all over brown glaze. He is sitting up with his paws in a cowering position; the top of his head comes off to form a lid. Lid has an under edge chip or two, doesn't show. 11" tall and a very nice Toby. Indecor. $32.50
18. Half pint size Mason's Ironstone china pitcher, blue and floral decor inside and out, green snake handle. $10.00
19. Old buff Stoneware bottle in shape of big scaly fish, stopper in mouth, pint size, 11 1/4" long, 4" across widest part. A fine catch for the bottle collector. $17.50

WOODHAVEN ANTIQUES

W. Farmington, Ohio

NOTE: Price each pc. Stamp for reply, 18 pcs. Ruby barred oval, Actress Pinafore celery tray, $12.50. Beautiful Millefiori small cov. sugar, $45; creamer 3 c/s, $37.50 ea. Blue Mary Gregory patch box, $22.50; others, write. Camphor, Coraleña rose bowl, $30.50. Goblets: 2 Moon & Star, $9.50; 2 Rochelle, $8.50. 2 Celtic Cross, $5.50. 2 Kings Crown, $8.50. Log Cabin sauce, $4.75. Torpedo cruet, $8.75. Wines: 3 Feather, $4.50; 1 Hour glass, $4.75; 1 Bellflower, $20.00; 2 Cut Log, $3.50. Sawtooth syrup, $12.00. R. T. Print tumbler, $8.50. Amaretto bread tray, $22.50. 8 footed saucers, $7.00. 8 flat saucers, $4.75. Cov. butter, $35.00. Cov. sugar, $35.00; celery, $22.50; creamer, small base chip, $21.00. do

LIQUIDATION SALE of PRIVATE COLLECTION

PRIVATE SALE OF ANTIQUES COLLECTED DURING PAST 40 YEARS.

No Reproductions. Hundreds of rare items in: FINE & TIME soda glass; CUT GLASS COLORED GLASS; MILK GLASS; some ART glass. China, BLUE WILLOW, TEA LEAF LUSTRE, China SLIPPERS, BENNINGTON type pottery, MAJOLICA, COPPER LUSTRE pitchers. Collection of Clear Glass CRUETS, TOOTHPICK HOLDERS. Over 75 patterns in Pressed Glass, including such rare patterns as Westward Ho, Fr. Lion, FR. CABBAGE, L. KRING — 3215 N. Washington Road, Fort Wayne, Ind.

19. Sarreguemines preserve pot in the shape of an orange. Green stem and leaf form the knob. Orange peel color, glazed, cream inside, 4 1/2" over all height, 4" diam. $12.50
20. 5" square Majolica box in yellow brown glaze; inside is white, lid is lifted by a huge bee with outspread wings that are delicately colored. $17.50
21. The prettiest inkwell in MOP finish, hinged brass lid and jacy brass color, clear well insert, base 5" height, 3 1/4". Iridescent pearly glass, and a lovely piece. $15.00
22. Orange water Carnival set: grapes, bulbous pitcher and 6 tumblers. $17.50
23. Iridescent Cobalt blue water pitcher and six tumblers, enameled in white and green floral. $27.50
24. Pair of Royal Bayreuth lobster ash trays, only one mark'd, but both alike. $12.50
25. Six beautifully cut and altogether lovely, 6 1/2" tall sherry goblets. You do not see these often. $60.00
26. Lennox Belleek honey pot: white with gold applied bees, shape of beehive, gold bee knob on cover. $12.50
27. Three French candle lithophanes, 4 1/2" by 4", lovely wood scenes with figures of girl and nuan, each. $7.00
28. Old - similar one illustrated in Cox's book of china and pottery, crossed sword Meissen chocolate pot, floral decor, slightly fluted bulbous sides. $35.00
29. 14" paneled effect inside clear to deep Cranberry vase. An old piece of Cranberry. $15.00
30. D&B 5" amber pitcher, reeded starfish, base applied handle. $10.00
31. MINTON impressed old dark blue and white Willow pattern soup tureen, platter, gold lined decor, open handles, acorn fluted, no fls. $55.00
32. Pair of pink overlay (white inside) crimped top vases, white floral spray decor, 7" high. $25.00
33. Majolica butter (one stick size) base green leaves top ear of yel. corn fluted, a pat of yellow butter. $15.00
34. Old Waffle and Thumbprint goblet, has turned slightly amethyst with ago rough crackly base. $6.50
35. Pair of Milk glass hand vases, 10", creamy yellow hands (these are turned the same way) hold white flower decorated crimped top milk white cornucopia vases, rings on ring finger and chain at wrist. $28.00
36. Four Tea Leaf cups and saucers, very creamy, almost buff color, round cups, deep saucers, mk'd. B. M. and Company, with black bound dog sitting upright perfect but crazed ea. $8.50
37. Winter pitchers: Blue Cano, $14.00; dark blue Beldrop, $17.50; Inverted Thumbprint Cranberry, $32.50; Cranberry with opal overlay Dalsey and Fern, $32.50; amber SPRIG. $17.50
38. Pair of Dalsey & Button fan plates. $5.00
39. Pair of 10" DAVENPORT saucers. $15.00
40. Crossed sword MEISSEN plate, 11" wide, deep scalloped edge, floral center, wide flange patterned in cheeks, diamonds, swirls. Beautiful white china. $25.00
41. Pair of natural color Staffordshire lions, reclining, 10" long, glass eyes, reduced for quick sale to. $25.00
42. A lovely old ABC plate in English pottery, 7 1/2" diam., all in brown sepi with a big lion in center. Registry mark circa 1870-1882. One slight flake, and a spider underneath, not through. Looks perfect, and is, considering it is old and used. $8.50

MERRY CHRISTMAS from Oakglade to you and yours.

Please do NOT send postage. Price includes everything. dc

THE LIGHTED WINDOW ANTIQUES

804 Governor Costa Mesa, Calif.

Extremely rare Dolphin stem Ribbon compote, rectangular bowl, scalloped top, a beauty, $85. Metz page 171. Mary Gregory amber water pitcher, little girl wearing large hat $55. 2 matching ale goblets amber, boy & girl, ea. $22.50. Amber mug with boy, tinted face, hair & hands $18. Beautiful cranberry threaded glass footed creamer 4 1/2" h., 1 1/4" around, very ornate $27.50. Amethyst Croesus cruet, mint condition, original stopper also rare relish dish mint - green Croesus butter, covered sugar, cruet, S/P saucers and condiment tray. Cranberry Delaware water pitcher, beautiful dark rich color and fine gold. 16" all original Bylo doll brown eyes, original clothes and cap, this is the finest I have ever seen $75. Write on other dolls. Telephone MIDWAY 6-1243 dc

OUR DECORATIVE BICYCLE PLATE COLLECTION

(Continued from page 53)

the Jersey coast near Asbury Park the writer bought a large 10-inch plate commemorating the 9th Olympiad at Amsterdam in 1928. It contains many sport pictures including a racing cyclist on the Olympic race course.

Through an article in the HOBBIES Magazine we bought a real old French plate part of a set entitled "Les Sports" showing four ladies riding bicycles wearing the daring bloomers of the period. From Altman's New York City antique shop we bought a plate with a hobby horse rider dated 1818. It is marked on the reverse side "Hand painted in California." The rider is wearing a top hat and tails, a dandy of the period.

While in California last summer on a cycling tour of our national parks we picked up two plates. One is a small green plate showing a couple riding a tandem. The other is a Japanese import showing a tandem couple with their baby on the rear luggage carrier. They portray a modern couple enjoying family cycling.

From Italy is a medium sized plate with rider on old high wheel bicycle holding umbrella in front of him. This is the first picture of a rider holding an umbrella to be shown on a plate. The last item in our collection is a very small 3-inch metal plate marked "Made in Italy." It portrays a high wheel rider of the eighties wearing top hat and full dress suit.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 87)

"Mr. John C. Leach," Mr. Hogan, Mr. Clarence and Mr. Asbury?" And how many readers smiled with me at the statement that Dan Kelly's "huge" output of records had reached a total of five thousand?

I wish it were possible to illustrate the photograph of Kelly which accompanied the Phonogram article, but it is too dark. It shows a middle-aged-man of considerable weight, wearing a large black hat, and sporting a thick mustache, with his clasped hands holding some sort of a stick.

I have never seen one of Kelly's "Brady" records and imagine almost none are in existence. And I have not tried to trace his life story after he stopped making records. Finding the right death certificate for a man named Dan Kelly would be almost an impossibility in a large city, but undoubtedly he died many years ago and is not still living at the age of 117.

The chief interest to present-day record collectors in John Yorke AtLee and Dan Kelly lies in their ever-deepening obscurity. The time must come before many years when not a playable record by either will be left on earth. Anyone who possesses an AtLee or Kelly cylinder may congratulate himself on having a real rarity, even though not necessarily "a pearl of great price."

OBITUARY

MRS. LOUISE DISSELHORST

Mrs. Louise Disselhorst, 87, dealer of the World's Antique Mart, Chicago, passed away on October 12. Mrs. Disselhorst was active as a collector, dealer, and exhibitor at shows throughout the Middle West and South until she was suddenly stricken about October 1.

She was also a dog fancier and held many ribbons for prizes in exhibitions of pure bred dogs throughout the country. She had also written extensively on topics relating to the dog world.

During the World's Fair of 1893 when the renowned Sousa and his band played at the exposition, she was one of the featured soloists. She was offered a traveling position with the group, but her father, being of the conservative school, decreed that the "theater" was not for his daughter.

She was an accomplished needlewoman also and in her younger days held classes in needlework.

Surviving are two sons, Louis and Herbert, and grand-children and great-grand-children.

—O—

MRS. T. B. TEASDALE

Mrs. T. B. Teasdale, noted collector of St. Louis, Mo., passed away on October 5. Mrs. Teasdale was a regular visitor to the semi-annual Chicago Antique Expositions where she mingled with many of her fellow collectors and friends. Through the years she amassed a great collection of pattern glass, paperweights, jewelry, china, silver and decorative items for her home.

—O—

WILLIAM B. PITTS

William B. Pitts, 92, a noted collector of gems and minerals and honorary curator of gem-minerals at the California Academy of Sciences at San Francisco, died recently in Atlanta, Ga.

—O—

WILLIAM E. SUIDA

William E. Suida, 82, art historian and curator of art research at the Samuel H. Kress Foundation, died in New York recently.

—O—

LEAH TISHA TOMLINSON

Leah Tisha Tomlinson of near Elkton, Md., died on October 21. She had been an antique dealer in Delaware and Maryland since 1930, and owned the Kitty Knight House at Georgetown, Md., from 1924 to 1947.

Surviving is a son, Dr. Ray. J. Tomlinson, Columbus, Ga., and two grandchildren.

—O—

PROF. CHANDLER R. POST

Professor Chandler R. Post, 77, Harvard University authority on Spanish painting and sculpture, who taught at Harvard 45 years prior to his retirement in 1950, died in Cambridge, Mass., November 8.

—O—

R. M. SEEKINS

Mr. R. M. Seekins, well known collector of Ellington, N. Y., who liquidated his long time collection last year, recently passed away very suddenly. Mr. Seekins was postmaster in Ellington for several years.

VISITORS AT 1006 S. MICH., CHICAGO

Mr. and Mrs. George D. Rust, art glass collectors of Berkeley Heights, N. J., were among the many collectors gathered in Chicago for the Antique Show sponsored by HOBBIES Magazine. This cheerful couple also stopped off at the HOBBIES offices to renew their subscription.

* * *

Mrs. T. N. Brandon of Clarksville, Tenn., and her son T. N. Brandon Jr., found their recent visit to the Mart most rewarding. Mr. Brandon, Jr. is a pilot for Delta Airlines.

* * *

About 20 members of the Antiques Study Group of the Hinsdale, Ill., Women's Club visited the Mart on October 23. This group plans a tour each month and the Mart shops were their October destination.

* * *

Brian Forster of Chicago, whose interest lies in collecting metal military miniatures—55 mm or semi-flat, was in the Mart recently looking for specimens.

* * *

Some HOBBIES advertisers who recently stopped in at the Mart were: Mrs. Harry D. Wilson of Pike County Antiques in Petersburg, Ind.; Mrs. M. L. Hermanson of Muskegon, Mich.; Gladys Rainey, dealer from the Antique Market, Findlay, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Ora D. Orr of Orr's Antiques in Ankeny, Ia.; Francis H. Kraus of Larchmont, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Dankers of Oregon, Mo.; Mrs. W. H. Zwilling, Vincennes, Ind.; Charles H. Stinson, Kankakee, Ill.; and Henry H. Huber, Germantown, Ohio.

* * *

Mrs. Lillian Shull and daughter, Thelma, of Pasadena, Calif., stopped at the home of HOBBIES Magazine on their recent trip to their native Mid-West.

* * *

Judge and Mrs. Chester Pendleton of Findlay, Ohio, greeted fellow collectors in Chicago during show week. The Pendletons have re-designed their dining room with special cases and lighting to show off their outstanding collection of art glass. As might be expected, they are interested in Findlay glass among other collectibles.

* * *

Another enthusiastic visitor during October, Gwen Y. Wilcox of Salt Lake City, Utah, spoke of Beehive House there, formerly occupied by Brigham Young, which is being restored.

* * *

Two sisters from Ohio, Mrs. William L. Davis from St. Mary's, Ohio, and Mrs. R. E. Hansen of Cleveland, spent an entire day browsing through the Mart shops and thoroughly enjoyed their visit they re-

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

POLK MILLER

And His "Old South" Quartet

By JIM WALSH

On first thought it seems surprising that few pioneer recording artists served in the Civil War. After all, Thomas A. Edison invented the phonograph in 1877, only 12 years after peace was proclaimed and when most Union and Confederate veterans were still young men.

But on second thought it isn't surprising that hardly any of the popular early record-makers had fought either for the preservation of the Union or for State's Rights. During its first 10 years the phonograph was a crude toy which recorded by indenting tinfoil, and had no commercial use.

Not until 1886, when Charles Sumner Tainter and Chichester Bell began recording on cardboard wax-coated cylinders, did the phonograph slowly start finding its way into penny arcades, saloons, and, a little later, a few homes.

The greater number of popular pioneer artists didn't begin making records until the late 1890's or early 1900's. By the time the phonograph became established as a popular means of home entertainment the veterans were middle-aged.

A few popular artists — Edward

M. Favor and Cal Stewart among them — were born before the war began but were children when it ended. Another small group, including Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan, Steve Porter, and William F. Hooley, were born during the war.

But by far the larger number didn't come into the world until years after the fighting was over. Even Len Spencer, the first famous recording artist, arrived at his parent's Washington home a few years after Lee surrendered to Grant.

This being true, it is intriguing to learn that one well-known recording artist was a Confederate veteran, who made perhaps the only complete version ever waxed of the Southern war song, "The Bonnie Blue Flag." To make it more surprising, he was 65 years of age when his recording career both began and ended.

I am thinking of a Richmond, Va., man, the late Polk Miller, a druggist by profession who is known to record collectors today because of the Edison cylinders he sang, with the assistance of his "Old South" Quartet composed of four of his devoted Negro friends.

II A Son's Tribute

A year or so ago I received a letter from Stanley L. Johnston, of Lansing, Mich. It said he had seen in drug stores a number of medical preparations, mostly remedies for illnesses of dogs, which bore the name of Polk Miller.

Mr. Johnston asked what relation the medicine maker was to the Polk Miller who sang for Edison half a century ago. He was nonplussed when I told him the two Polk Millers were the same.

The druggist was a lifelong lover of animals, and had developed a series of preparations which are still sold for treating their ailments. Recently, it struck me that, since so little is known today of Polk Miller, a HOBBIES article about him might be welcome.

I wrote to the Richmond Times-Dispatch, asking if the newspaper's Reference library contained any material about the banjo-playing folksong singing druggist. I was told the only item was a faded type-written, biographical sketch by his son, Withers Miller.

The librarian, Miss Mary M. Watt, kindly had the article copied for me. It is so interesting as evidence of the son's admiration of and devotion to his father that I shall copy it:

Polk Miller was born at Grape Lawn, Prince Edward county, near Burkeville, Va., on the second day of August, 1844, and was the fifth child of Giles A. and Jane Webster Miller. From early childhood to mature manhood that sweet, gentle disposition so manifest in his later life was ever present and corralled friends around him whose devotion bordered on idolatry. His genial smile and hearty handshake increased this number as years went by. No change evidenced itself during his lifetime, for, in manhood, he was the same as a prattling boy around his mother's knee, quiet, obedient and truthful, and was never known to attempt to add force to his remarks by indulging in profanity.

Being brought up on the farm with four brothers and many colored boys, he was a leader in all athletic sports then known to the average country boy, but not an instance can be recalled of his ever being overbearing or unfair to his opponent. His ears were ever open to the cries of distress and suffering of his fellow man, regardless of the source from which it came, and (these) were met with Christian charity, not letting one hand know what the other was doing. He was a friend and protector of all dumb animals and was foremost in their defense in resenting any act of cruelty inflicted upon them. It was this outstanding trait in his character that led him to originate the many remedies for creatures of the animal world. He was an acknowledged champion in field sports from his boyhood, which he retained to the later years of his life, being indefatigable and untiring in its pursuit. His fairness in the field was always apparent and he was never known to countenance anything like a dispute in regard to the game killed. Recognized as one of the finest shots in Virginia, no one, whether a good or poor shot, was ever made to feel humiliated at missing birds while in his company.

In the early spring of 1860 he left home to buffet the waves of the business world and landed in Richmond, as he always loved to recall, "a green country boy" who had not attained his 16th year. He secured a position with the well-known firm of Meade and Baker and loved to relate his experience in mastering this intricate and difficult position. He always alluded to the kindness, patience, and friendly advice bestowed upon him by Mr. Meade, whose friendship and confidence he retained to his death.

He was still with the firm when the War Between the States commenced. On arriving at the age of 18, he arranged to enlist in the Second company, Richmond Howitzers. On one occasion, when waiting on Mrs. Jefferson Davis, who was a patron of the store, he remarked to her that probably that would be the last time he would have the pleasure of serving her as he had arranged to enlist for the war. She expressed her regrets and left the store, but in a few days an order was issued by President Davis that he should be detailed to retain his position with Meade & Baker. But it did not take long before his patriotism overcame the force of the detail and he joined the Second company of Howitzers in one of their Valley campaigns, with which organization he furled the banner of the Lost Cause at Appomattox. He also served as hospital steward of Cutchew's Battalion of Artillery, of which the Second company of Howitzers was a part, in addition to his other duties.

He returned home then to Amelia county and while the commercial world was still at a standstill he took up farming. As soon as the business machinery adjusted itself he secured a position with the Broad street firm of Powhatan Dupuy, with whom he lived until 1871, when he opened a drug store on his own account at 500 East Marshall street. At this time he was engaged to assist Mr. Mann S. Valentine, who was then perfecting his discovery of the well known "Valentine's Meat Juice," now sold all over the world.

On Nov. 29, 1871, he was married to Miss Maude Lee Withers, the oldest daughter of Dr. William M. Withers, Polk Miller, prominent Richmond, Va., druggist and Confederate veteran, as he looked when he made Edison cylinders 50 years ago.

of Richmond, and to her he always gave the credit for his methodical conduct of his business affairs. She made his home a haven of rest from the worrying business cares which he always left at the store. He would then, to drive away dull care from his fire-side, pick up his banjo, with which he delighted not only his own family and friends but up to the time of his death almost the entire country, the greater portion of which he covered in the latter years of his life.

He was so successful in his business at 500 East Marshall street, due to his universal popularity, that he purchased the drug business then being conducted at 9th & Main streets, where for many years he gave the glad hand to his many friends from every section of the country, and they were made to feel at home in his native city. He was thoroughly fond of music, having a good voice, his singing being one of his many accomplishments. In story telling he had few equals, if any, and no superiors. In interpreting the Negro dialect he excelled, and it was through this channel that he achieved his greatest fame. In 1890 his son, W. Withers Miller, was taken into the business and since that time has had active charge of it. He passed over the river on Oct. 20, 1913, and no more fitting tribute could possibly be paid him than that inscribed on his tomb (Continued on next page)

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor. — Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED, on cylinders only, four-minute Amberol preferred, give number and artist: Pretty Baby, Oh You Beautiful Doll, Redwing, After the Ball, Three O'clock in the Morning, Moonlight Bay, My Gal Sal, Sweet Rosie O'Grady, When You Were a Tulip, Sidewalks of New York, "Ma," (She's Making Eyes At Me), Old Bill Moses Ford, Alexander's Rag Time Band, Let the Rest of the World Go By, In the Good Old Summer Time, Silver Bell, Oh Johnny. Also 200 others. Dealers and individuals — send lists and prices to: H. W. Oltmann, 1505 Elmen, Houston, Texas. ja38841

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinorah: Sei vendicata—any number, size or coupling; outside or center start.—Aida Favia-Artsay, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

WANTED: HILLBILLY AND MOUNTAIN RECORDS. Send lists to Don Wahle, 1128 Keller Ave., Louisville 13, Ky. mh3652

WANTED, John McCormack records: Victor Nos. 923, 1272, 1660, 1695, 1594, 64250, 64304, 64498, 74296, 87078, 87563. — John J. Collins, 24 Stearns Rd., Belmont, Mass. mh3004

MUSIC ROLLS

PLAYER PIANO music rolls bought, sold and traded, all makes and types.—D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Md. je124431

PIANO ROLLS WANTED: all types. Send list, receive cash offer by return mail (list returned). — M. Montgomery, 722 Spring, Ann Arbor, Mich. s128041

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale; all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. jly120422

SWISS MUSIC BOX, 8 tuned cylinder type; inlaid walnut case, 12x27x8"; over 75 years old, in good mechanical condition. Appraised at $500. Will accept best reasonable offer. — W. S. Sayles, Box 346, Prairie View, Ill. f3639

MISCELLANEOUS

EDISON, COLUMBIA, VICTOR phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, springs, reproducers, hand organs hurdy gurdys, music boxes, Holcomb Hoke coin phonograph. I buy, sell, exchange, repair. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f3084

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mh122361

BUY, SELL OR TRADE 12" & 16" Radio Transcriptions of all types, radio transcription catalogs, anything & everything regarding radio transcriptions. — Paul Scriven, 233 W. State St., Niles, Ohio. mh3464

WANTED: Theatre-Cinema unit pipe organs, Wurlitzer Band Wagons, Hope-Jones literature, theatre music, specs, console photos. — Alden Miller, 3212 34th Ave. So., Minneapolis 6, Minn. mh3614

FROM A FORMER EDISON dealer's stock that had been in storage, I was able to find some original Edison styluses (needle) in both sapphire and diamond. Have a small surplus and will sell some while they last. Also, Diamond Disc reproducers at $5 each. Send for free brochure on cylinder reproducers. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3219

FOR SALE: 150 Wurlitzer band organ, hand carved front, double tracker bar, metal chimes. Seeburg Jr. piano. Mills Violano - Virtuoso. Regina floor model with piano sounding board. Rolls for sale. — Dodge House Antiques, Box 567, Dodge City, Kans. mh3295

ORGANS FOR SALE

KIMBALL REED ORGAN. Purchased in 1900, has original polished oak finish. In A-1 shape. Original warranty is still with it. Make offer. — Mrs. Wayne Nash, 1419 Leisher Rd., Cheyenne, Wyo. f3215

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED. Edison and Columbia cylinder phonographs and records. Disc phonos with horns, roller organs, music boxes, and melodeons.—Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. mh3084

WANTED: Very small band organ cheap for quick cash sale, in good playing condition. Write giving full details. — J. J. Howard-Exploracion, Aptdo. 172, Maracaibo, Venezuela. f3004

WANTED: Wurlitzer or Seeburg Orcheston in restorable condition. Buy or trade. — Arch Rankin, 589 Neff, Grosse Pointe, Mich. ja3882

WE WILL PAY $50.00 to anyone who will give us a lead that materializes in the purchase of the following: Nickelodeons, H Seeburg, Model 72 Wurlitzer, Welte Orchestron, Hupfeld Violin Orchestron, Encore mechanical banjo. We buy junkers for parts. Anything that plays mechanical. Una-phon. — Kugler, 7 So. 6th St., Minneapolis 2, Minn. mh3848

FOR SALE: One Packard piano. Organ in excellent shape. Made in Fort Wayne, Ind. — C. I. Dilocker, 118 Dak. Ave., Cherokee, Iowa. ja1481

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1366 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. my9219

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

Rare phonographs for sale. Edison Concert, Berliner, Pathe', Edison Marion Gem, Eldridge Johnson, early phonograph with ear tubes and others. Cylinder records, parts of all kinds. Reproducer repairing, styli (needle) installed. Reproducers for sale. Send 25c for lists. — Pollard's, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja36501

OLD EDISON phonograph and round records, lots of unusual antiques, send for list. — Stinson, Route 1, Riesel, Tex. ja3882

RECORD LIST. Our next disc and cylinder record lists will be ready in January, 1960. Send stamp for full particulars. Anything in the old disc or cylinder phonograph line bought, sold and exchanged. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f3046

ATTENTION! A large selection of both cylinder and disc phonographs, all complete and in working order. Please send wants. Small Edison cylinder floor model, mahogany cabinet complete, $85, extra clean. — Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State St., Brewer, Maine. ja1003

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1860. Catalog 20c.—Fore's 3151 High, Denver 6, Colo. au126921

EARLY American, French sheet music. Classics for 4 hands. Several bound volumes. List for stamp. — Holsclaw's Antique Shop, 307 S. Jeffries Blvd., Walterboro, S. C. mh3004

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos. — Durrall Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kans. ap124661

Wanted: Ampico piano rolls. $1.00 each picked from list. — Daggs, 725 N. Columbia Place, Tulsa, Okla. mh3488

Wanted: DuoArt and Ampico piano rolls. — Thomas Grattelo, 1519 California St., San Francisco, Calif. ja3063

PIANO FOR SALE

1862 STEINWAY Concert Grand piano. Beautiful plain case, excellent condition. — L. Freeman, Viking Hotel, Marshall, Mo. ja3652

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MILLS Violano-Virtuoso machine, single violin type. Needs only minor repairs. — Robert G. Halley, 2430 Gallows Road, Falls Church, Va. ja3023

MUSIC BOX DISCS

Mira music box discs, 18 1/2" $3; 15 1/2" $2.50; 9 5/16" $1; 6 13/16" 75c. Plus postage. — Squires, 2328 Channing Way, Berkeley, Calif. mh3084 in Hollywood (a Richmond cemetery), reading as follows:

"Honest Citizen, Faithful Friend,
Confederate Patriot, Christian Gentleman,
Virginia's Son, Loving and Beloved.
'Peace to His Ashes.'"

III Polk Miller's Records

I can add only a couple of things to this filial tribute. Miller's death certificate shows he died from a heart condition. And I suspect he was named for James Knox Polk, who was elected President of the United States on the Democratic ticket in 1844, the year Polk Miller was born.

All the gifted Richmond druggist's records were issued by Edison in March, 1910. The set consisted of four Amberols, playing four minutes each, and three Standard two-minute cylinders. Miller sings in four, and the other three are by the Negro quartet alone. Only one of its members, the bass, is mentioned by name. Here are the comments from that month's issue of The New Phonogram:

Amberole Records

389, The Bonnie Blue Flag—Polk Miller and Quartet. One of the most popular war songs of the South, surpassing in popularity even the world famous "Dixie" in the days from '61 to '65. It was sung by Miller around army camp fires and he now sings it at Confederate Veterans' reunions. Banjo accompaniment.

390, Laughing Song—Quartet. It takes a genuine Southern Negro to sing this song, which is typical of the happy darkey nature. The laughter is natural and contagious. Guitar accompaniment.

391, What a Time—Quartet. A favorite church hymn of the Virginia country Negroes, with a quaint plantation air. Guitar accompaniment.

392, The Watermelon Party—Quartet. An original "makeup" by James L. Stamper, the basso of the quartet. Mark Twain referred to this number as a "Musical Earthquake."

Standard Records

10332, Rise & Shine - Polk Miller and Quartet. Polk Miller sings this melody just as the darkeys sang it on his father's plantation before the war. Guitar accompaniment.

10333, The "Old Time" Religion—

Polk Miller and Quartet. A hymn of Negro origin, so melodious that Southern whites have introduced it into their church service. Unaccompanied.

10334, Jerusalem Mornin'—Polk Miller and Quartet. A camp-meeting song and probably the catchiest of the seven numbers. Lines are sung alternately by first tenor and quartet. Unaccompanied.

Miller played his own banjo accompaniment in "The Bonnie Blue Flag" and was the "first tenor" just mentioned. Perhaps he also played the guitar in the other records. He had a pleasant voice. I wonder how he happened to make his Edison cylinders.

Perhaps C. B. ("Pop") Haynes, the Edison distributor in Richmond, who was a close friend of Mr. Edison's, convinced the great inventor that some of the old Negro spirituals and Confederate battle songs should be recorded. They must have sold well in other parts of the country as well as the South for they remained in the catalog for years.

Even so, parts of the cylinders puzzled some listeners. B. A. F., of Harrisburg, Pa., wrote in the New Phonogram for June, 1911:

"Will you kindly publish . . . the words of Polk Miller's 'Laughing Song,' Amberol record No. 390? The record is melodious and entertaining, but I am unable to reconcile some of the words and sentences; they seem to be without much sense or connection."

The editor replied:

It is not at all surprising that you should have difficulty in making sense out of certain parts of the song. . . . This song, written by genuine Southern plantation darkeys with little or no education, contains phrases and expressions which are coined and introduced haphazard. . . . The fact that the words and phrases are meaningless and loosely strung together does not detract from the attractiveness of the song. . . . the melody and harmony are there and the fact that the words are truly characteristic of the darkey as he is rather enhances the attractiveness of the record. Following is the song in its entirety:

(first verse)

A journey to Long Branch is pleasant and always delightful to me,
While strolling the beach at moonlight
while the wild waves are rolling the sea;
Then give me a lady for waltzing, such pleasures to me they are grand,
And quickly passed by it is finished,
we have oysters and wine at two.

(chorus)

Oysters and wine at 2 A.M., 2 A.M.,
2 A.M.,
We have oysters and wine at 2 A.M.,
we have oysters and wine at two.

The leader then sings:

Music is pleasant, music has charms,
music is something that keeps us along,
Music is pleasant, most fortune (sic) and grand; now watch my motion and see how I laugh!

Then the whole quartet comes in on the laugh, using no words, but with mouths stretched from ear to ear they go through a "Ha, ha, ha, ha!"

(second verse)

I'm a fellow that never refuses all the pleasures that come in my way,
But now it is time to get married,
I'll banish all bashful display;
We fought while the stars were shining, we fought for the friends that were true;

And quickly passed by it is finished,
we'll have oysters and wine at two.
(chorus as above)

The December, 1913, Edison Phonogram Monthly published a brief mention of Polk Miller's death and said that four of the previously listed records would be reissued in February in unbreakable Blue Amberol form. Since Edison had quit making two-minute records, the three Standard numbers were not reissued.

The death notice said: "Polk Miller, a well known business man of Richmond, Va., and author of several songs familiar to Edison enthusiasts, died at his home at the age of 69, last October. His plantation stories of war time and his performances on the banjo and guitar at many Confederate reunions were always much admired and enjoyed."

Four of his best selections appear

Gray, Nipper and Roger are happy in their new home and they wish you

The new home at 225 N. Maple St.,
Vinton, Va.

GRAY, preparing a snack for Santa to eat when St. Nick dropped in Christmas Eve night.

NIPPER is either a literary genius, looking upward for inspiration, or he's trying to figure out how Santa Claus gets down that stovepipe.

ROGER, lying at ease on the basement stairs, and dreaming of a happy New Year.

A HAPPY
NEW YEAR

Once more Gray, Nipper, Roger and I want to thank HOBBIES readers for all the nice letters we have received during the past year. Since we don't have time to send Christmas cards, we feel it is both a duty and a pleasure to wish you a most HAPPY NEW YEAR.

JIM WALSH

in the February list: (2175), The Bonnie Blue Flag; (2176), the Laughing Song; (2177), What a Time, and (2178), The Watermelon Party; all but the first accompanied by the guitar. The first one is accompanied by the banjo. They are fine!"

IV A Daughter's Recollections

Several years ago I wrote an article for the Richmond Times-Dispatch in which Polk Miller was mentioned. This brought me some pleasant correspondence from his daughter, Mrs. Garland C. Chewning, of Bon Air, Va. On October 29, 1951, she wrote:

My dear Mr. Walsh: Your article about Virginia entertainers of bygone days interested me a great deal. Please tell me for whom you succeeded in making a re-recording of my father's 'Bonnie Blue Flag,' how you went about it and how successful you were. I am Mr. Miller's youngest daughter and would like to have a record made for my sons. Several of my father's songs have never been published. I believe I am the only person who can sing 'Huckleberry Picnic.' Would appreciate any information you can give me. Very sincerely yours, Virginia Miller Chewning.

On November 20, Mrs. Chewning wrote:

Dear Mr. Walsh: You were most kind to go to so much trouble to record the 'Bonnie Blue Flag' for me and I do appreciate it. . . . Would that you could have known my father and heard him sing. He was quite a character. It always irritates me to have people call him a vaudeville performer or entertainer. His associates were mostly humorists such as Joel Chandler Harris, Mark Twain, Thomas Nelson Page and others. I have his scrapbooks of programs and they are always accounts of entertainments in Carnegie Hall, before the Southern Society at the Waldorf, or before some of the most exclusive groups in the country. . . . I wonder if I could trace any of those other records by writing to the Edison company. . . . Again let me thank you for making the recording. Sometime I hope I will have an opportunity to thank you in person.

Three days later Mrs. Chewning wrote:

We had a grand time playing the record Thanksgiving Day and it was just like a trip to bygone days. My boys just enjoyed it so much. By the way, I have a lead on an old batch of records and I'm going to do my best to get hold of "Rise and Shine" and "Old Time Religion."

I believe that was the last letter I received from Mrs. Chewning, but I hope she has been able to find all seven records by her father and his Old South Quartet. It should gratify her that Polk Miller's voice has been preserved on both wax and Blue Amberol cylinders and, 46 years after his death, his admirers can go on hearing "the sound of a voice that is still."

I REMEMBER carriage makers

With the autos did compete;

How they advertised new numbers

Were equipped with "Auto Seat."

—Spencer C. Ackerman

OLD VEHICLES

TOURING IN 1915

By H. L. LARSON

"Roads fair, weather hot," wrote a 1915 motorist in his new Auto Tour Record.

"Left home 6 A.M., arrived 11 A.M., home again 10 P.M. Total miles of tour 223, bought 5 gallons of gasoline at 12¢ a gallon, averaged 15 miles per gallon," and, under Remarks (very possibly incomplete) "two tires blew out!"

He was one of the early drivers on the Lincoln Highway, giving three friends and his wife a June outing in his four cylinder, 25 horse-power Studebaker.

One wonders if the friends stayed home on purpose the next time, for in July he was accompanied only by his wife. They started out at 5 A.M. There is an exultant flourish to his writing—"Roads good, weather good, gasoline 11¢ a gallon, no tire trouble or trouble of any kind, home at 4 P.M." Certainly it must have seemed well worth the $4.00 license fee. We doubt, however, that the return from this 370 mile trip was at 4 P.M. the same day, in view of the speed limits and other laws summarized in the back of his Record. The speed limits were usually "in business districts ten miles per hour, residential districts fifteen miles per hour, outside of city, town or village limits twenty-five miles per hour (fifteen in South Carolina)." but "when going around a corner or curve six miles per hour."

And if you overtook a horse and buggy and the driver raised one hand, this indicated that the horse was frightened and the automobile driver must come to a complete stop.

Only twenty-three states supplied license numbers for a fee of from 50¢ to $40.00, sometimes varying as to horsepower. In most other states the owner supplied his own number plates or painted the numbers on front and/or back of the car, in one or two states also on the glass of the front lamps! Thirteen states had no motor laws, although legislation was pending in some of them.

What a traffic tie-up would result in some of our big cities if the following rule were still in effect! "In business districts—a turn in the street must be performed in the block and not at street intersections, as—it would block traffic. Outside the business districts, and on boulevards, however, a driver wishing to turn and retrace his course on the same street should proceed to the next corner and pass clear around the center of the street intersection."

Proper care of the automobile was important if one desired to obey the rules that said, "No noxious smoke, gas, steam or offensive odor to escape from the automobile. No unnecessary noise permitted. No oil, gasoline or like fluid to be spilled on asphalt pavement," and even "Don't open the cut-out in cities. It may subject you to arrest."

Some rules included are still good in modern dress, "Don't see how close you can run to a pedestrian—you may make a mistake. Don't take chances when children are—hitching on wagons—slow down and sound your horn (or bell or other signal device producing an abrupt sound loud enough to warn of danger). Don't assume you have rights—you'll avoid accidents even if your temper does become ruffled. If you do cause an accident, stop and give aid—don't run away."

And this final word of wisdom!

"Don't argue with an officer—it will do no good and besides, in all probability he will be in the right!"

FORD MUSEUM'S ANNUAL SPORTS CAR EXHIBITION SET FOR JANUARY 8-31

Dearborn, Mich.—The Henry Ford Museum's ninth annual sports car show will be held January 8 through 31.

A panorama of the world's leading competition cars, "Sports Cars in Review" is the nation's only auto show devoted entirely to sports cars.

The annual exhibit will bring together nearly 50 cars from Italy, England, Germany, France and the United States, with some shown for the first time in this country, according to Alan R. Symonds, show chairman.

To show the development of sports cars over the years, several earlier models, both foreign and domestic, also will be displayed.

The 1959 show, held in February, was viewed by nearly 50,000 persons.

WANTED

WANTED - AUTOMOBILE ITEMS. Most anything pertaining to early automobile era. Literature such as catalogs, manuals. Trade publications, hand books, posters, pictures, etc. Also horse-drawn vehicle era literature. Old cars, trucks, chassis, other components suitable for parts. Brass lights, horns, name plates. Most any kind of accessory or usable part, etc. I have discontinued collection of clothes, license plates, and most technical books. — B. J. Pollard, 14300 Prairie, Detroit 38, Mich. je62722

AUTOMOBILE sales catalogs wanted. Best prices offered. — M. Hollis, 4930 Queen Mary Road, Apt. 19, Montreal, Que., Canada. s122511

OLD AUTO LAMPS, horns, books, old cars, etc., wanted.—D. D. Way, 11 Eastwood Ct., Oakland, Calif. my128801

WANTED TO BUY OR TRADE automobile radiator name plates. — Wallace Huffman, 610 South Webster, Kokomo, Indiana. ja6215

AUTOMOBILE catalogs, trade papers and leaflets, brass lamps, early gadgets. —Whitlock's, New Haven Conn. ja1211

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Geoffrey O'Hara

By JIM WALSH

Tenors who wanted to become popular in the early days of the phonograph got off to a good start if they were born in Canada.

The two most successful ballad singers among pioneer recording artists, Henry Burr and Harry Macdonough, were Canadians. So was Edward Johnson who shone as an opera star in Italy before eventually becoming manager of the Metropolitan. Craig Campbell, who made Pathé and Columbia records, and George Carré, who did some singing for Victor, were of Canadian birth. And so is Geoffrey O'Hara, although he has long been a citizen of the United States and now lives on South Quaker Hill in Pawling, N. Y.

Accomplished as a singer and famous as a composer, Mr. O'Hara is one of the most versatile and distinguished artists about whom I have written. He is one of the few popular pioneer recording artists to have his biography published in "Who's Who in America."

From the 1922-23 "Who's Who" it appears that the tenor-composer, whose 78th birthday will occur about the time this article sees print, was born in Chatham, Ontario, Feb. 2, 1882. He was the son of Robert and Maria Sophia (Dobbs) O'Hara, was educated at Chatham Collegiate Institute and studied music with various teachers. He came to the United States in 1904 and became a naturalized citizen in 1919. On June 7 that year he married Constance Margaret Dougherty, of Cambridge, Mass.

O'Hara was widely known as a singer when his first success as a song writer occurred. In 1913 Enrico Caruso recorded his song, "Your Eyes Have Told Me," for Victor, and it was so successful that many other artists soon were singing his compositions. After Woodrow Wilson became President, Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane appointed O'Hara an instructor in native Indian music. He visited the reservations of the Navajos and other tribes and used an Edison cylinder phonograph to record the Indians singing their primitive songs. When the United States entered the First World War, the War Department sent the tenor to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., in June, 1917, as a military song leader. "Who's Who" listed O'Hara as a Mason, an Episcopal in religion and a Republican in politics. He belonged to the Musician's Club, the Young Republican Club and the Canadian Club of New York. At that time he lived at 25 Post Street, Yonkers, N. Y.

A more detailed sketch appears in the 1938-39 "Who's Who." This reveals that Mr. and Mrs. O'Hara had two children—a son, Hamilton Murray O'Hara, and a daughter, Nancy Jackson. He was listed as a member of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers (ASCAP) of which he had been president. He was also president in 1922 of the Song Writers Protective Association and of the International Lyceum and Chautauqua Association in 1925. He was a Shriner and his clubs were then the Town Hall, Canadian and Lambs.

More than 20 years ago O'Hara had composed a large number of operettas, including "Peggy and the Pirate," produced in 1927; "Riding Down the Sky," 1928; "The Count and the Co-Ed," 1929; "The Smiling Sixpence," 1930; "Rogues and Vagabonds," and "Lantern Land," 1931; "Harmony Hall," 1933; "The Princess Runs Away," 1935; and "Puddin'-head the First," 1936. Among his songs are "There is No Death," "K-K-K-Katy," "I Love a Little Cottage" (of which Walter Scanlan made an exquisite Edison Diamond Disc, incongruously paired with a comic Irish waltz song, "I Certainly Must Be In Love," sung by Marquerite Farrell), "The Wreck of the Julie Plante," "The Living God," "I Have a Rendezvous With Life," "Do You Fear the Wind?" "If Christ Came Back," and about 150 others. He had also written a book on Canadian folk songs and frequently lectured on musical subjects.

The 1952 edition of "The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary of Authors, Composers and Publishers" contains some information supplementing that already in "Who's Who." It says that after four years in the banking business, O'Hara gave up banking for music. At twelve he was the organist for the Chatham Episcopal church. His early stage career included four years in minstrel work and major vaudeville circuits as a pianist, singer and entertainer. He was instructor in community singing at Teachers College, Columbia University, in 1936-37, and received a degree as Honorary Doctor of Music at Huron College in 1947. "To Be In Love" is added to his list of operettas, and additional song titles include "Leetle Bateese," "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked," "Give a Man a Horse He Can Ride," "Where Heaven Is," "Tomasso Rotundo," "A Little Close Harmony" (this was the theme song of my Walsh's Wax Works, the first radio program featuring old-time popular recordings), "The Old Songs," "Sing Awhile Longer," "Forward to Christ" and "One World." The ASCAP dictionary also mentions that O'Hara published a book of poems.

This adds up to an impressive and comprehensive career, which is by no means over, but we are less concerned with Geoffrey O'Hara's status as a composer, lecturer and author than with his career as a pioneer recording artist.

II. First Recordings

In a recent letter to that excellent Brooklyn publication, Record Research, Mr. O'Hara recalled making Zon-o-phone records in 1906-07 as a male quartet member. He said he couldn't recall any titles or the name of the quartet, but the baritone was "the afterward nationally great Reinald Werrenrath." O'Hara was the second tenor and Walter MacPherson the bass, but he doesn't recall who was first tenor. Then, he says, he began making Victor popular song records in 1917, after having previously recorded some Navajo Indian songs in 1913 for the Victor Educational Department. Mr. O'Hara is a bit mixed up in statement. His first Victor popular records came out in 1916 instead of 1917, and the Indian songs were not listed until late in 1914. Of course they may have been recorded the year before.

The quartet whose name escaped Mr. O'Hara must have been the Criterion, which the late John Young, its first tenor for many years, told me was organized by Werrenrath. The Canadian tenor seems, however, not to have been a member when it made its only two-minute Edison wax cylinder, issued in January, 1905. The record, No. 8866, was a comic specialty, "Little Tommy Went a Fishing," which a completely reorganized Criterion Quartet also recorded nearly a score of years later on an Edison Diamond Disc. Those who sang in the cylinder were Robert R. Rainey, first tenor; William A. Washburn, second tenor; Werrenrath (then a stripling of 21), baritone, and Walter A. Downie, bass. O'Hara obviously replaced either Rainey or Washburn shortly afterward if he sang with Werrenrath's group. The Criterion Quartet which was a popular recording group from about 1916 to 1930 included John Young, first tenor; Frank Mellor, second tenor; George W. Reardon, baritone, and Donald Chalmers, bass. Afterwards it sang as a regular feature at the Roxy Theater in New GEOFFREY O'HARA inscribed this photo to Jim Walsh in appreciation of his editorial support of ASCAP when the song writers' organization was entering its historic controversy with radio stations.

York and called itself the Roxy Quartet.

Eight 9-inch Criterion Quartet records appeared in the Zon-o-phone catalog for June, 1905. I shall list them, although it is doubtful that Mr. O'Hara sang in them: 5990, Abide With Me; 6087, The Bridge; 6088, Carry Me Back to Old Virginia; 6055, Jesus, Lover of My Soul; 6043, Kentucky Babe; 6069, Lead, Kindly Light; 6046, Little Tommy; 6012, Rock of Ages. There were also twenty-one 9-inch records by the Invincible Quartet, but this was a group managed by Frank C. Stanley—the forerunner of the more famous Peerless Quartet. (Years later, the Peerless sometimes called itself the Invincible Quartet on Pathé records).

Among the 10-inch records in the same catalog there was only one male quartet number, No. 72, The Soldier's Farewell, by the Criterion.

By March, 1907, when we may assume Mr. O'Hara had joined the quartet, the Zon-o-phone list of concerted records had grown considerably, but there was still only one by the Criterion. The Peerless Quartet was represented by four 10-inch discs and the Universal Male Quartet by seven. No names are given for the Universal singers, but their repertoire was the same type the Haydn Quartet recorded for Victor. Since Victor controlled Zon-o-phone it is likely the Universal was the Haydn in disguise. There was also a Zon-o-phone Male Quartet, which specialized in comedy numbers and descriptive sketches, as a little later, did the Colonial Quartet, which I suspect to be the same organization. And I believe both the Zon-o-phone and Colonial Quartets were the Rambler Minstrel Company, consisting of Billy Murray, Steve Porter, Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan. But in the lack of positive evidence, it is conceivable that O'Hara sang with the Universal or Zon-o-phone Quartets.

Meanwhile, the Criterion made a few records for Columbia, as well as Leeds, Talk-o-phone and perhaps other companies.

The first mention I find of Geoffrey O'Hara name in any record list occurs in the New Phonogram for August, 1905, when the Knickerbocker Quintet recorded "The Rosary"—an ambitious undertaking for those days. The descriptive notes said:

9052. The Rosary. The Knickerbocker Quintet is a new organization and this is its first Edison record. It is probably the only time that a Quintet Record has been made of Nevin's beautiful song, "The Rosary." The Knickerbocker Quintet is known throughout the realm of vaudeville as "The Original Spook Minstrels." It is composed of: Parvin Witte, first tenor; Charles H. Bates, second tenor; G. de V. O'Hara, baritone; Walter C. White, second baritone; Leon Parmet, basso. The singing of this Quintet is quite different from the work of the ordinary groups of singers. It is of a character that will be found very pleasing. . .

When Mr. O'Hara visited Oklahoma City a few years ago he told an enthusiastic record collector, Quentin Riggs, who then lived there but is now working for the U.S. State Department in Saudi Arabia, that he had been hoping for years to find that Knickerbocker Quintet record, but with no success. I am sure if any HOBBIES reader has a spare copy, he would be glad to receive it. There are two puzzles concerning this cylinder. Why was O'Hara singing baritone? And what does that middle de V. stand for?

III. Indian Songs

Geoffrey O'Hara's next appearance in a record list was in November, 1914, when Edison issued a four-minute Blue Amberol cylinder, No. 2451, of his rendition of several Indian songs with tom-tom accompaniment and explanatory comment, and Victor did the same thing on double-faced 10-inch disc 17635. The reverse of the Victor contains "The Gambler's Song," recorded by the Blackfeet tribe of Glacier Park Indians.

There is some interesting comment in the October, 1914, Edison Phonograph Monthly:

When Mr. O'Hara was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior at Washington, Instructor of Native American Music, that act constituted a change in the attitude of the United States government towards the red man. . . Anyone can see at a glance that this is a revolutionary move, for while it was thought necessary to dispatch brigades and regiments to put the poor Indian to rout, now a single man is dispatched, armed, not with cannon or bayonet, but merely with an Edison phonograph. Song is appointed to supersede steel.

The Navajo Indians are located in Arizona and are rich in thousands of songs that have been composed with skill and handed down for centuries from father to son, from teacher to pupil. They have a number of ceremonies, each one lasting nine days and nights, each containing more than 600 songs. Several of the best of these Indian songs were selected from a large number taken on the Edison recording phonograph. . . All these songs have been made a matter of special study by Mr. O'Hara. He himself has learned several, and having harmonized them is enabled to reproduce them with novel and interesting effect.

The Monthly also contained a tribute to O'Hara's Indian work from former President Theodore Roosevelt. The November, 1914, Victor record supplement described the O'Hara disc as forming "another notable addition to our American Music Series."

"Mr. O'Hara," the write-up continues, "was appointed by the United States government as Instructor of Native Indian Music, and lived and worked with the Navajos for some years, studying their songs and teaching them. Although the Navajos are most famed for their wonderful blankets, they possess a remarkable store of more than 15,000 legendary songs. Mr. O'Hara, in his interesting record, explains some of the peculiar features of their songs."

GEOFFREY O'HARA was the center of attraction at a record collectors' meeting held Saturday, October 10, 1958, in the Sprout Brook Grange Hall at Ames, N. Y. Shown in this photo, taken at the meeting, are Mrs. James H. Van Demark of Cohoes, N.Y., and her husband, a noted record collector; Mr. O'Hara; Mrs. Harlan B. Kishpaugh; the Rev. H. B. Kishpaugh, who sponsored the get-together; and Mrs. Robert Hodge, who served as registrar.

GEOFFREY O'HARA was one of the artists included in a full page of photographs in the Victor record supplement for June, 1916. Rhoda Bernard was a singer of dialect songs, who made only a few records. The remaining six—Henry Burr, Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan, Billy Murray, Harry Macdonough and Will Oakland—all now dead—were among the most popular pioneer recording artists.

O'Hara, Burr and Macdonough were Canadians.

I have not heard the Victor record, but the Edison is brilliantly recorded and fascinating from the first groove to the last one of the best Blue Amberols.

In the April, 1951, issue of The Record Collector, an informative magazine published at irregular intervals in Ipswich, England, Capt. H. H. Annand tells of a meeting of the City of London Phonograph and Gramophone Society, at which many records were played, and says:

One record in particular calls for special mention. This was the Navajo Indian Songs, collected and sung by Geoffrey O'Hara. Mr. O'Hara, like our own Cecil Sharpe, has made an interest of collecting and editing original folk tunes and this delightful record is the result.

IV. Popular Songs For Victor

Geoffrey O'Hara makes his next record appearance in the Victor supplement for June, 1916, singing a ballad written by Charles K. Harris, "All I Want is a Cottage, Some Roses and You." The other side of disc 18022 is "Croon-Time," sung by Edna Brown and James Reed, who were really Elsie Baker and Reed Miller. No descriptive comment is given, but O'Hara's photograph is shown together with his fellow Canadians, Burr and Macdonough, and five other singers of what were then the latest song hits.

A month later, O'Hara was present with the hit of the month, one of the catchiest tunes ever written, and what undoubtedly was his biggest selling record—No. 18051, "They Made It Twice As Nice As Paradise And They Called It Dixieland." His recording of this sensational hit by Raymond B. Egan and Richard A. Whiting swept the country, especially since it was doubled with an Irving Berlin song whose vogue has been even more enduring, "Simple Melody." This was sung by what at first sight appears an unlikely combination—"Edna Brown's" and Billy Murray—but Miss Baker's serious-sounding espousal of the old-time "heart songs" is admirably matched by Murray's lilting defense of rag-time.

It is strange that after this "red-hot" beginning, O'Hara was not heard of again in the Victor lists until Dec., 1916, when, on No. 18166, he and a contralto, Lillian Davis gave duet versions of his own composition, "Ma Li'l Starlight," and an English serio-comic song, "I'll Make You Want Me." I consider this the poorest of the O'Hara records. The singers sound insufficiently rehearsed, and as if they don't know the tune of "I'll Make You Want Me," which was given a superb Edison disc interpretation by "Rachel Grant" (Gladys Rice) and Billy Murray.

Who Lillian Davis may have been is a mystery. She first appeared in the Victor supplement for Feb., 1914, singing "Just You and I and the Moon," and wasn't heard of again until Sept., 1915, when she and a male chorus recorded "Hold Me In Your Loving Arms." Her next and last appearance was in the duets with O'Hara. Her photograph was never published, so the suspicion is irresistible that she was some other well known Victor contralto in disguise. But which? Since Elsie Baker was doubling as Edna Brown, it's hardly likely she was also Lillian Davis. The only other prominent contralto then making Black Label records was the late Marguerite Dunlap. I have a strong hunch she was also Lillian Davis. (At least both last names ended in D.!) Mr. O'Hara told Quentin Riggs he met Miss Davis, whoever she was, for the first time on the day they made the records and never saw her again.

Exactly a year passed before Victor issued another Geoffrey O'Hara record. Probably the U.S.'s entry into World War I and O'Hara's being sent to Fort Oglethorpe as a singing instructor kept him from being available for regular recording dates. But in Dec., 1917, on 18391, he sang "The South Will Do Her Part," combined with "Come Back Home," by the newly organized Shannon Four. "The South Will Do Her Part" was a patriotic parody on O'Hara's smash-hit, "They Made It Twice As Nice As Paradise," and the supplement said its words "were handed to Geoffrey O'Hara by a total stranger, and contain a stirring promise that the South will do her part in the war.

The music, of course, is that of Richard A. Whiting. Geoffrey O'Hara is supervisor of music at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and is doing his part, too. A particularly good feature of this record is O'Hara's enunciation; the song is in quick time, but not a syllable is lost."

The May, 1918, Victor supplement was almost a special O'Hara issue. Page 10 shows a large photo of him, apparently leading a group of unseen soldiers in singing, and terms him "The 'Rookies' Choirmaster." Beneath is a description of record 18441, combining his version of "Send Me a Curl," which he wrote himself, and "All Aboard For Home, Sweet Home," by Lewis James and the Shannon Four. The supplement said:

Not often are singer and composer combined as in the case of "Send Me a Curl," but Geoffrey O'Hara happens to be both. He is musical director in one of Uncle Sam's training camps, and knows better than most what soldiers want. This he has put into the music of an unusually attractive march song that goes with an irresistible swing and spirit that ought to make the song popular.

On the opposite page is a listing of O'Hara's great war-time hit, "K-K-K-Katy," sung by Billy Murray, and one of the best selling records of that period. The description (Continued on page 47)

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale; all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. jly120422

SWISS MUSIC BOX, 8 tuned cylinder type; inlaid walnut case, 12x27x8"; over 75 years old, in good mechanical condition. Appraised at $500. Will accept best reasonable offer. — W. S. Sayles, Box 346, Prairie View, Ill. f3639

MISCELLANEOUS

EDISON, COLUMBIA, VICTOR phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, springs, reproducers, hand organs, hurdy gurdys, music boxes, Holcomb Hoke coin phonograph. I buy, sell, exchange, repair. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f3084

CYLINDER machines, records, parts, outside horn disc machines bought, sold, traded. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minneapolis, Pa. mhl22361

BUY, SELL OR TRADE 12" & 16" Radio Transcriptions of all types, radio transcription catalogs, anything & everything regarding radio transcriptions. — Paul Scriven, 238 W. State St., Niles, Ohio. mh3464

WANTED: Theatre-Cinema unit pipe organs, Wurlitzer Band Wagons, Hope-Jones literature, theatre music, specs, console photos. — Alden Miller, 3212 34th Ave. So., Minneapolis 6, Minn. mh3614

FOR SALE: 150 Wurlitzer band organ, hand carved front, double tracker bar, metal chimes. Seeburg Jr. piano. Mills Violano - Virtuoso. Regina floor model with piano sounding board. Rolls for sale. — Dodge House Antiques, Box 567, Dodge City, Kans. mh3295

ORGANS FOR SALE

KIMBALL REED ORGAN. Purchased in 1900, has original polished oak finish. In A-1 shape. Original warranty is still with it. Make offer. — Mrs. Wayne Nash, 1419 Leisher Rd., Cheyenne, Wyo. f3215

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought. — The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid. — American Record Collectors' Exchange, 326 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold. — James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. mh3084

OVER 100,000 hard - to - get records, 1903 to LP. — Jack's Record Cellar, 400 Haight Street, San Francisco 17, Calif. d126121

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists. — Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. mh3618

FREE "Personalities" catalogs - rare records and broadcasts by radio, stage, screen, television personalities. — Amalgamated Records, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. ap6276

25,000 OLD RECORDS, transcriptions, air shots, and sound tracks. Professional quality disc to tape copying, too. Lists free. — Geo. Collings, P.O. Box 946, Fresno, Calif. f3004

BREAKING UP my collection of Red Seal and HMV opera and symphonic rarities. All in new condition. Free list. Geo. Collings, P.O. Box 946, Fresno, Calif. f3004

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold. — Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. f3065

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs. — Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (Stamp please). f4353

BRAND NEW 78 rpm disc records, 25c up. Also special dealers discounts. Highest prices paid for special old type disc and cylinder records. Send stamp for both above lists. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f3675

GOLDEN-AGE operatics, personality records, collectors' items and exclusively imported European LPs are found on our free monthly list. Distributors of Rocco Records, reissues on LP of Famous Voices of the Past. — Ross, Court & Co., 2098 Yonge, Toronto, Ont. Canada. mh3656

FOR SALE: Hundreds of Disc and Cylinder Records, many types of phonographs, 25c for lists. From Tinfoil to Stereo - Evolution of the Phonograph, by Oliver Read and Walter L. Welch. The first complete history of the phonograph and sound recording industry including moving pictures. 550 pages, $9.95. Send check for early delivery. — Coppernolls Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. f3219

119 DUPLICATES from private collection. Mostly single side Red Seals. Also, Edison, Perfect, Columbia artists in all fields. $50 takes lot. You pay shipping. Free list. — Hazel Davidson, Box 11244, St. Petersburg 33, Fla. f1272

MUSIC ROLLS WANTED

AMPICO rolls wanted. Pay box price for my pick from your list. — Richard J. Howe, 5703 S. Louisville Ave., Tulsa, Okla. ap3633

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — L. L. Lamber, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1865 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. my9219

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED, OLD PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder and disc type with the horns, records, catalogues and parts or anything pertaining to phonographs. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ap3004

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPH reproducers, parts and records. — G. O. Stuber, 232 S. Charles, Waukesha, Wis. f1401

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

RECORD LIST. Our next disc and cylinder record lists will be ready in January, 1960. Send stamp for full particulars. Anything in the old disc or cylinder phonograph line bought, sold and exchanged. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. f3046

ATTENTION! A large selection of both cylinder and disc phonographs, all complete and in working order. Please send wants. Small Edison cylinder floor model, mahogany cabinet complete, $65, extra clean. — Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State St., Brewer, Maine. ja1003

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c. — Fore's 3151 High, Denver 6, Colo. au126921

EARLY American, French sheet music, Classics for 4 hands. Several bound volumes. List for stamp. — Holclaw's Antique Shop, 307 S. Jeffries Blvd., Waltham, S. C. mh3004

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos. — Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kans. ap124681

Wanted: Ampico piano rolls. $1.00 each picked from list. — Daggs, 725 N. Columbia Place, Tulsa, Okla. mh3483

Wanted: DuoArt and Ampico piano rolls. — Thomas Grattelo, 1519 California St., San Francisco, Calif. ap3063

PIANO FOR SALE

KNABE BABY GRAND player piano. Ampico reproducing with many rolls. Fully restored. Case refinished and new ivories. — W. E. Vale, 112 Hamilton Ave., Akron 4, Ohio. ap3614

MUSIC BOX DISCS

Mira music box discs, 18 1/2" $3; 15 1/2" $2.50; 9 5/16" $1; 6 13/16" Channing Way, Berkeley, Calif. mh3084

PRINTS WANTED

Good Prices Paid for Currier and Ives prints. — Earl Romey, Bluffton, Indiana. au12867

WANTED: Currier & Ives prints. Especially want American homesteads, railroads, Mississippi river, western, fire scenes. Other interesting subjects. — A. R. Davison, East Aurora, N. Y. f6008

WANTED: Currier & Ives, all subjects.—Jacques Schurre, 313 Maple Ave., Falls Church, Va. jly6844

WANTED: I offer $1000 for a fine impression of The Road—Winter, large N. Currier, and $700 for Snowed Up, Ruffled Grouse in Winter, large C&I. — T. M. Beece, Boonville, N. C. ap68801

RED CURTAIN PRINT of James Madison, 4th President. Describe and price. — Harris, 6223 Mardel, St. Louis 9, Mo. f1441

WANTED: Godey's, Petersen's, and similar prints. Advise date, condition, number and price.—W. Z. Funnell, Snow Hill, Maryland. f6675

WANTED: Florida maps before 1850 from old atlases, geographies, and books, all sizes wanted. — Newell Caudell, 113 Lakeview Ave., West Palm Beach, Fla. f3863

WANTED: Currier & Ives print, "Route to California, Truckee River, Sierra Nevada." — M. H. Duxbury, P.O. Box 2978, Reno, Nevada. ap3633

PRINTS FOR SALE

EVERY KIND OF PRINT except Americana. Lace valentines; silhouettes; old playing cards; gold paper edgings and ornaments. Will buy valentines before 1875; silhouettes if labelled. — K. Gregory, 222 East 71st, New York 21, N. Y. f122112

ORIGINAL historical prints. Specialize in Lincoln and Civil War. — Julia Newman, Gulf Park, Bradenton Beach, Fla. ol24201

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS. State wants, or send quarter for price list. — Jacques Schurre, 313 Maple Ave., Falls Church, Va. my6046

JOHN RUMBOLD, WOODBRIDGE, CONN., has hundreds of old colored prints for sale. Send 10c for list of 200 prints and paintings, 135 finest Currier & Ives. Tel. New Haven FULTON 7-4643. n124891

CURRIER & IVES lovers! Get a copy of "Bricktop's Comic History of America" containing 36 comic sketches by famous artist Thomas Worth. Educational, comical and Americana originally by Currier & Ives. Send $1 to Henry Szydio, Burlington Ave., Collinsville, Conn. f3046

25 YEARS SINCE THEY WERE LOOKED AT. 29 large black cloth covered boxes containing pictures of all kinds. Supposed to be very valuable. Some of the boxes contain pictures over 300 years old. Some of the boxes have newer pictures with autographed names like Zorn, Briscoe, Haden, Cameron, etc. The older boxes have names like Hogarth, Callot, Houbracken (portraits) Van Huysum (colored flowers) Daumier van Layden, etc. From 25 to 80 pictures in each box. Send post card for list of boxes and prices. I want from $20 to $35 a box. — John Bender, Pine Beach Farm, Nevis, Minn. ap30451

PAINTINGS FOR SALE

INDIANA GYBERSON painting. Write. —Aline Mann, 920 North Michigan, Chicago 11, Ill. mh3671

REPAIRS - RESTORATIONS

CURRIER & IVES PRINTS. Expert cleaning, repair, restoration. — John Rumbold, Woodbridge, Conn. tfx

RECORDING ARTISTS
FAVORITE PIONEER

(Continued from page 37)

said the song "pictures the efforts of a stuttering recruit to pour out his heart to his 'best girl.' Nobly he promises that "when the m-m-moon shines over the c-c-cowshed he'll be waiting at the g-g-gate."

O'Hara next appeared in the July, 1918, supplement, on double-faced record 18451 whose content embodied some of his military camp experiences. The titles were "A Soldier's Day" and "Parodies of the Camp." Here is the description:

To hear these two numbers is almost as good as meeting Geoffrey O'Hara himself—a big, smiling, fair-haired, grey-eyed man in the khaki uniform of a camp song leader. He is all enthusiasm, and inexhaustible in vitality, and just the man you would pick out to cheer up the soldiers with a little music. "A Soldier's Day" consists of bugle calls, which are afterwards sung by O'Hara to traditional words used by our soldiers and typical of the special kind of "joshing" in use at the camps. . . . The reverse of the record contains some familiar tunes with parody words. . . . When Geoffrey O'Hara came to Camden to make these records he told us something of his work. "What the boys want," he said emphatically, "is a good tune on a familiar subject, and full of humor. One may say, paradoxically, that the war is too serious to take seriously."

At the top of the page was another photo of O'Hara, "who," said the cut line "is helping to make ours a Singing Army."

And that was the last of the Geoffrey O'Hara records for Victor. As far as I know, they were the last records he made for any company. Yet Victor appears to have thought of him for several years afterward as still a Victor artist, for The Voice of the Victor published lists of his concert engagements, and suggested that dealers "tie in" with his personal appearances in their cities.

V. In Conclusion

As much as I should like to meet Geoffrey O'Hara, I have not yet done so. My only direct communication with him came some 20 years ago, when, as editorial writer of a Tennessee newspaper, the Johnson City Press, I warmly supported the efforts of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers in its efforts to compel radio stations to pay a more generous fee for air use of copyrighted songs. One editorial was photostated by ASCAP and sent to all its members. It

(Continued on page 84)

GENNARO
RUSSO

BRANCH OF NAPLES, ITALY
CORAL, CAMEO
ANTIQUÉ JEWELRY
Cameos Our Specialty

Dearborn 2-2094
32 N. State St. Chicago 2, Ill. tfo

OLD JEWELRY

JEWELRY WANTED

DIAMONDS, OLD GOLD, COINS, watches, stickpins, rings, earrings, etc., regardless of condition. Highest prices paid. Prompt replies. Send by registered mail to—Edward G. Willson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penna. myd24891

ANTIQUE & MODERN JEWELRY from all over the world, bought and sold. Inquiries solicited. — Kenneth R. Park, 31 West St., Boston, Mass. (Est. 1844) jly126351

JEWELRY FOR SALE

Earring Screwbacks (sm., med., lge.), golden or silvered 30c dozen, $2.25 gross. Dangle screwbacks 35c doz., $2.50 gross. Sterling screwbacks 95c doz., $8. gross. Clip earbacks 40c doz., $3 gross. Sterling pierced earbacks (screw type 80c doz. Wire type 45c doz.) Free complete illustrated list of chain, pinbacks, clasps, cards, cuff linkbacks, cameos, boxes, etc. — Folsom's, P.O. Box 52, Medford, Mass. f38841

FOR SALE: Antiques and semi-antiques, gold-filled, silver, etc., 10 articles for $6. Assortment includes lockets, charms, pins, rings, etc. Good value. — St. Louis Refining Co., 1115 Holland Bldg., St. Louis 1, Mo. ap68801

LARGE STOCK antique jewelry from our vast gold-buying. Charms, brooches, rings, etc. 10 for $6, or better grade ones 10 for $10. — B. Lowe, Holland Bldg., St. Louis, Mo. mh3844

CHAIN SLIDES, samples and price on request. Earrings made from old cuff links and pins. All types of antique rings and jewelry repaired and refinished. Estimates sent on all jobs before work is started. All pieces returned by registered or certified mail. — Jemeral Jewelers, 534 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio. ap3487

THE RICHARDS

65 Price Ave. Columbus 1, Ohio
P. O. Box 6921, Station E

2 1/4" long ornately filigreed white gold bar pin with sm. diamond $10.00. 14K white gold stick pin with sm. diamond and deep blue stone $12.50. 3/4" long platinum dinner ring set with nice center diamond and two smaller ones $46.50. Lg. 10K yellow gold man's black intaglio ring $15.00. Gold stick pin with lg. oval red stone and seed pearls around $8.25. 2x1 1/4" oval cameo mounted in silver and black $4. 1 1/2" garnet pin in shape of a star $12.50. 14K white gold embossed double cuff links $10.00. Sterling poison ring with moon stone $10.00. Sm. cameo pendant in Sterling $8. Pr. silver 2" long pierced earring with floral and leaves $7.50. Following is gold filled: 2x1 1/2" oval black onyx pin $5.00. 1 1/4" x 1 1/2" oval black onyx pin with white enamel woman's head — most unusual $15.00. Good watch pins $3 - $5. 1" sq. intaglio tiger eye charm with head $7.50. 1" sq. charm which swivels with lg. green stone $6.00. Pr. large filigreed charms $7.50 (2). 2 lg. slides set with stones $11. (2). Sm. garnet pierced earrings $17.50. 2" long pierced earring in gold and black embossing $15.00. 1" dia. pierced earrings with embossing $7.50. Lovely earring set with black onyx and cute drops $20.00. 1 1/2" long crescent shaped pin with sm. ruby and enamel flower $8.75. "February's Dealer Specials" 50 rings (silver & gold filled) all assorted with colored sets $50.00. Ten watch fobs all different kinds. $12.50. All items proof! Prices include Fed. Tax and transportation. Dealers: Write for semi-monthly wholesale list of cut glass, fancy china, etc. Stamp appreciated. fc

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 47)

brought a flood of appreciative comment from famous song writers, including Mr. O'Hara.

Replying to his letter, I told him I had long admired his records and asked him to send me an autographed photo, which he did. I was both surprised and flattered when he said he liked my way of writing and wondered if I would like to collaborate with him in a book "which would have to be from a strictly New Deal standpoint." (Since I have learned he is a Republican I have wondered about that "New Deal" angle). I was extremely busy in those days, as I am now, and regretfully informed Mr. O'Hara I couldn't undertake the project.

But I haven't given up hope of meeting Geoffrey O'Hara, who today still seems to have the "inexhaustible vitality" of which the Victor writer spoke. Perhaps his lecture engagements and other travels will yet bring him to Roanoke, Va., and I shall have the pleasure of returning what I am sure would be a warm handclasp.

Shortly after the biographical sketch of John Yorke AtLee was published in December HOBBIES, Ralph Miele, a prominent Yonkers, N. Y., antique dealer, pleasantly surprised me by sending me a 7-page letter written July 9, 1889, by Samuel York AtLee, of Washington, D. C. In this letter Mr. AtLee refers to his sons, Goodwin and William. Assuming that Goodwin Yorke AtLee and John Yorke AtLee were the same man, as I speculated in my article, this letter was written by the recording artist's father. Unfortunately, there is no mention of any phonograph activity by the son.

Mr. AtLee, who wrote to "My dear Loessing," devoted most of his letter to expounding his belief that public schools should include courses of instruction on the American constitution. He probably was 80 or more, for the letter mentions his having taught school in Cincinnati, Ohio, prior to 1832, where he tested "the practicability of interesting a class of boys . . . on the Constitution of the United States."

—Jim Walsh

LINCOLNIANA in 1959

(Continued from page 64)

On January 27, 1838, he spoke before the young men's Lyceum of Springfield, Ill. Taking account of the current historical incidents of an exceedingly questionable and forbidding nature, Lincoln concentrated on three main ideas in his speech in which he attempted to controvert the objectionable issues. The main divisions of the Lyceum address touched on mobocracy, political liberty and equal rights, obedience and reverence for the Constitution and Laws.

The speech was that of a young man with limited education and little experience. Emotional appeal to audiences of that time was traditional, and Lincoln followed the pattern. In later years, his speeches became terser and more logical.

Wishing to make a good impression on this select group of young men, Lincoln used some very high sounding language and some figures of speech that were a bit extravagant. Some of the metaphors employed in this speech were: "Eternal Snows," "Fortresses of Strength," "Pillows of the Temple of Liberty," "Let the Proud Fabric of Freedom Rest."

The speech was well prepared, full of logic, gives us an insight into Lincoln's patriotic motives, and, in fact, is an excellent piece of literary composition.

The author is professor in the speech department of St. Cloud State College in Minnesota. His analysis and appraisal of the speech is convincing and clearly refutes the fallacious comment of others that the speech was "crude" in style and the language "gaudy."

Other Lincoln Events in 1959

The annual Lincoln events that have become traditional were not neglected during the year. The Boy Scout Pilgrimage, the American Legion Pilgrimage and the production of the Lincoln play at Lincoln's New Salem were scheduled and well attended. All of the Lincoln shrines were visited in unusually large numbers.

The listings of other events concerning Lincoln and the mention of books, articles, newspaper and magazine productions have been so complete that it appears superfluous and repetitious to enumerate them again here. The Sesquicentennial Intelligencer issued by the Commission has been issued frequently during 1959 and gives us a synopsis and current view of all of the Lincoln events and activities of the year. Write the Commission for copies of the Intelligencer. It is free.

It does appear a necessity to properly recognize the excellent work done by the Lincoln Sesquicentennial Commission. Professor William E. Barringer headed the

Continued on page 89)

BARBARA BERTSCH

159 Oakdale Ave. Akron 2, Ohio

Rare colored pap. mache clock doll.
12" Br. eyed rose lustre china .....$75.00
20" Blond China Boy ..... 35.00
20" Lustre Dolly Madison ..... 75.00
9" Br. Eyed Byselo, signed ..... 27.50
25" Cl. M. Fashion ..... 100.00
17" Jumeau, Cl. M., signed ..... 100.00
18" Bisque Boy ..... 35.00
18" Turned Hd. Bisque ..... 35.00
Pair Tommy Tucker dolls, each ..... 20.00
After Christmas mark-down on fine German
Bisques; prices range from $15 to $30.
Lists 25c. Trans. Extra. Stamp please. to

(Continued from back cover)

EDWARD G. WILSON

1802 Chestnut St.
Philadelphia 3, Pa.

2. Gold, hinged, bangle bracelet, plain with ornate monogram. 1/4" wide, large wrist size. $38.50.
3. Gold bangle bracelet, threaded, 1/4" wide, large wrist size, $33.
- 3-A. Collection of 65 gold stickpins, many with stones. $5 each, or 6 for $27.50.
4. Gold bangle bracelet with allover chased design, 3/16" wide, large wrist size. $33.
5. STICKPIN. Platinum & gold pointer dog studded with diamonds. 1/4" long. This is a registered J. E. Caldwell Co. piece (ruby eye). $165.
6. STICKPIN. Platinum & gold "sitting up" rabbit studded with diamonds (ruby eye) 1/2". This is a registered J. E. Caldwell Co. piece, $165.
7. STICKPIN, platinum & gold bird studded with rose diamonds (ruby eye). 3/4", $110.
8. Gold, prong mounted, circle pin with alternating deep color, round, faceted amethysts and whole, round pearls. Very choice, 3/4" diameter. $35.
9. Old deep blue & white Wedgwood oval pin with a gold filled simple, plain frame, Cupid motif, 1", $38.50.
10. Gold heart locket with raised gold "nub nails," 3/4", $38.50.
11. Gold, prong mounted, opal heart pendant with fleur de lis shaped diamonds, set in platinum, above it. (Complete with chain), 3/4", $220.
12. A most unusual and fine gold, prong mounted, deep color, faceted amethyst heart pendant with 4 diamonds and 2 pearls mounted above it. 1 1/4", complete with chain, $495.

CANADIAN COINS

13. Large cent, 1853, VG, $5.
14. Large cent, 1884, F, $1.
15. Large cent, 1887, F, $1.25.
16. Large cent, 1898, F, $2.
17. Large cent, 1898H, VF, $3.
18. Large cent, 1900, (no H) VG, $1.50.
19. Five cent piece, 1874, Crosslet 4, F, $6.
20. Five cent piece, 1880, F, $2.75.
21. Five cent piece, 1886, VG, $1.50.
22. Five cent piece, 1899, UNC., $3.
23. Five cent piece, 1902, small H, F, $5.

OTHER CANADIAN COINS IN stock.
Send us your want list.

GRIGNON TRADING POST

Butte des Morts, Wisconsin

Loop & Dart round ornament spooner ..... $4.00
Pressed leaf open sugar ..... 4.25
Panelled dia. cut and fan spooner ..... 3.25
Checkerboard celery ..... 3.00
Dark blue commemorative plate,
Buffalo ..... 6.00
Missouri spooner ..... 3.00
Egyptian goblet ..... 4.75
Alabama toothpick ..... 3.50
Shrine spooner ..... 4.00
Cord and Tassel spooner ..... 3.25
Dahlia water pitcher ..... 5.00
Diamond Quilted vaseline ftd. sauce ..... 3.50
Cut glass finger bowl ..... 7.50
Lightning spooner ..... 3.75
Buckle spooner ..... 6.25
Beaded mirror goblet ..... 6.00
Long Buttriss goblet ..... 5.00
Cameo spooner ..... 4.50
Virginia berry bowl, green flashing ..... 4.25
Toy iron fry pan ..... 2.50
Loop open compote, flint ..... 10.00
Melrose pattern cup and saucer .. 3.00
Jersey Swirl celery ..... 7.00
Basketweave open compote ..... 4.50
Bull's eye and fan creamer ..... 3.50
Thompson No. 77 clear wine ..... 1.50 to

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements

MARGUERITE FARRELL, as she appeared when singing for Edison in 1921.

Marguerite Farrell

By JIM WALSH

During the closing years of the 1940's and for a little while afterward, clients of the Erie County Department of Social Welfare in Buffalo, N. Y., were served by a case worker in her late fifties or early sixties, who had a charming smile and a cultured, soft, sweet voice. The men and women on relief knew the case worker as Mrs. Wheeler, and there was sorrow when she died on January 26, 1951, of a coronary thrombosis that followed prolonged suffering from phlebitis.

Probably few of the welfare recipients, and perhaps not all of Mrs. Wheeler's fellow workers, knew that 30 years before she had been a star of the American stage, and had sung, danced and made records under the name of Marguerite E. Farrell. Yet it was true. Marguerite Wheeler had lived in Buffalo for 25 years, after giving up her theatrical career to marry Leroy M. Wheeler. She became the mother of a daughter who grew up and at the time of her mother's death was Mrs. Barbara Hutter of 151 Allen St., Buffalo, which was also Mrs. Wheeler's address. Following the death of her husband, she had obtained a position with the welfare department and had worked there four years when she succumbed to her fatal illness. The only survivor mentioned besides her daughter in an obituary notice was a sister, Mrs. Marie Farrell Schmidt.

Thus the curtain came down for Marguerite Farrell, erstwhile singing star, on a life of modest usefulness in her later years—an anticlimax perhaps, to great days as an entertainer but one of public service, nevertheless.

II. From Various Sources

I first learned of the death of Marguerite Farrell, whose records I had for many years admired, from a brief notice in Variety:

Marguerite Farrell Wheeler, 62, retired actress, died of a heart ailment in Buffalo, N. Y., January 26. Known professionally as Marguerite Farrell, she appeared in vaude partnered with Clara Inge in a comedy singing act and later as a single. She retired after her marriage. . . .

Prior to vaude engagements, Miss Farrell had appeared in Shakespearean repertory and in several musicals on Broadway, including the late Lew Fields' production of "Step This Way." Her last appearance was in the 1920's in the musical, "Up She Goes." . . .

Soon afterward, I wrote to the Erie County Department of Social Welfare, expressing my regret at Mrs. Wheeler's passing and asking for any available information concerning her. On February 14, 1951, Miss Frances M. Culliton, the general case work consultant, replied:

Dear Mr. Walsh: Thank you for your letter of February 12, 1951, in relation to our esteemed employee, Mrs. Marguerite Farrell Wheeler, who was taken from us by death recently.

We are referring your letter with its request for further information about Mrs. Wheeler to her daughter, Mrs. Barbara Hutter. . . . We know that she will be pleased to read your tribute to her mother.

I did not hear from Mrs. Hutter, but I did obtain a copy of Mrs. Wheeler's death certificate, which revealed, in addition to information already set down, that she was born in Providence, R. I., on September 16, 1888, had lived in Buffalo 25 years and was 62 years, four months and 10 days of age when she died.

The certificate also reveals her father was Joseph Farrell and her mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Wagner. Thus the comedienne obviously was a mixture of Irish and German, but I think that anyone who observes the blarney in her charming photographs will agree the Celtic element predominated.

III. Columbia Records

As far as I can learn, Miss Farrell, during her too brief recording career, sang for only three leading phonograph companies of that day. The career may be divided into two parts—1916-17, when she sang for Columbia and Victor and 1921-22, when her name appeared in the Edison lists. She may have had a joint contract with Columbia and Victor, but that would have been unusual. Victor and Edison quite often signed artists to a joint agreement, but Columbia usually "went it alone."

Her first Columbia record A1920, appeared in March, 1916, several months ahead of her initial Victor offering. The supplement editor said: "Don't omit hearing Marguerite Farrell sing the Irish coupling, 'Along the Rocky Road To Dublin,' and 'He's the Son of an Irishman.' There is real music here." It is amusing to note the statement on the same page that "One of the most beautiful songs of the day, in any field of music, is Van Alstyne's 'Memories,' sung by Henry Burr. This is coupled with 'My Mother's Rosary,' a combination of unusual beauty." The amusing thing is that the record was actually issued under Burr's real name of Harry McClaskey. Thus the catalog editor unintentionally gave away the fairly well kept secret that Burr and McClaskey were the same man. Although he praised several of the month's records, the editor was short-sighted enough to omit comment on one of 1916's biggest hits, "Are You From Dixie?" sung by the Peerless Quartet.

"Along the Rocky Road to Dublin" was prettily sung, with a captivating touch of brogue, but it was only a modest seller, which suffered by comparison with the Victor and Edison records by the American Quartet. The number was better suited to a rousing male voice interpretation.

Miss Farrell's next appearance was in May with A1962, "When Priscilla Tries to Reach High C" and "At the Fountain of Youth"—the latter a song in which the veteran comedian, Dan W. Quinn, who hadn't made a record for years, had just essayed a Victor comeback. The editor said: "Marguerite Farrell, as brightly humorous as ever, will raise many a laugh in Von Tilzer's coloratura-parody, 'When Priscilla Tries to Reach High C.'" In June she had another coupling, A1981, "Now's the Time (the Great Leap Year Song)" and "Arrah Go On, I'm Gonna Go Back To Oregon."

July brought No. A2006, on which the soprano sang a Harry Von Tilzer song, "Pretty Please," coupled with "Are You Prepared for the Summer?" by Arthur Fields.

In August, Miss Farrell again shared one side of a double-faced Columbia disc, No. A2020. She sang "She Always Did the Minuet," while on the opposite side the Sterling

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Trio was heard in "Do What Your Mother Did." (Did "Mother" also do the Minuet?) The supplement remarked: "Marguerite Farrell is very delightful in the quaint little song."

The comedienne's September offering was perhaps her biggest record hit, a song she also sang for Victor, "If I Knock the 'L' Out of Kelly." It was combined with Irving Kaufman's first Columbia record, "The Greatest Battle Song of All (Here Comes the Bride)" on A2040. Said the supplement: "Coupled with Kaufman's first record is the hit from Lew Fields' 'Step This Way,' 'If I Knock the 'L' Out of Kelly,' sung by the popular maker of this hit in the show, Marguerite Farrell. It's as good as the show itself to listen to Miss Farrell in this joyous song." The lyric asserted: "When you knock the 'L' out of Kelly, you knock the 'L' out of me."

Miss Farrell's first duet record came out in October, with no fanfare. It was No. A2063, "This Great Big World Owes Me a Living," in which she was joined by the popular tenor, M. J. O'Connell. The other side was "I'm Gonna Make Hay While the Sun Shines in Virginia," sung by Gladys Wilbur, whom I suspect of being Anna Chandler. O'Connell was the only duet partner of her recording career.

In November, Miss Farrell was represented by another song with which she was peculiarly identified, "Come On and Baby Me." The record was A2082. On the reverse side, Grace Nash (Grace Kerns) and O'Connell sang "Love is Just a Lottery." On A2088, Marguerite was again teamed with O'Connell singing this time "You Were Just Made to Order for Me." The opposite side had the noted song writer, Henry I. Marshall, interpreting his own composition, "Somewhere There's a Little Cottage Standing."

And then, abruptly, after only a six-month span, from March to November, the output of Columbia records by Marguerite Farrell ended. Just why is puzzling, since she obviously was becoming popular. Perhaps, instead of having a joint Victor-Columbia agreement, as I have speculated, she quit Columbia to sign an exclusive Victor pact.

IV. Victor Recordings

The Columbia supplements told nothing about Marguerite Farrell herself, but the Victors were more informative. The comedienne's first Victor coupling appeared in September, 1916, and the catalog description was accompanied by a fetching photograph of her in her "Come On And Baby Me," pose which revealed that, unlike most women recording artists of that now remote time, she not only had a pretty face but a lovely figure.

The record was 18105, combining "If I Knock the 'L' Out of Kelly," and "By the Sad Luana Shore," both of which she sang with the assistance of a male chorus—probably the Orpheus Quartet. Here is what Catalog Editor, Sam Rous said.

Miss Farrell, the Victor's latest acquisition from the field of musical comedy, has scored a great success with the Lew Fields production of "Step This Way," a revised edition of "The Girl Behind the Counter," which had a very successful run some years ago. This popular comedienne has had a varied career in vaudeville, light opera and grand opera—and now has found a new field for her talents in Victor Records. . . . These two widely different numbers are well calculated to display Miss Farrell's versatility.

Having made an auspicious start with her biggest hit, "Kelly," Miss Farrell was back in October, with 18131, "Since Maggie Dooley Learned the Hooley-Hooley," and "Come On and Baby Me":

Miss Farrell's September records made a big hit with our customers and this popular comedienne has acquired many thousands of new friends among those who had never had an opportunity of hearing her in person.

The singer's October selections are quite entertaining, as are all the songs she chooses. "Maggie Dooley" is an instructive tale about an Irish maiden who went to the Hawaiian Islands and acquired some highly dangerous knowledge, with disastrous results to her native village. The second is about a fair maiden who wanted to be 'babyed,' and when Miss Farrell sings this in public and plaintively says, in the direction of the audience, 'Come and baby me,' she may find it wise to provide a screen to prevent the rush!

The most interesting reference to Marguerite Farrell appeared in the Victor supplement for November, 1916, when record No. 18135 was issued. It contains two Harry Von Tilzer songs (probably a majority of the numbers Miss Farrell used were written by Von Tilzer), "You've Eyes, and "Sweet Babette (She Al-Got Me Going With Your Irish ways Did the Minuet)," which she had already made for Columbia:

The career of Miss Farrell is an interesting one, showing what pluck and determination will do for a young girl who is ambitious. When she decided on a theatrical career she determined to learn the business thoroughly, and began at the bottom—by having her feet educated! After a course in dancing she secured some stage experience with "Rogers Brothers in Ireland," followed by a season in vaudeville with the "Four College Girls." This showed her the need of voice culture and she spent six months with a vocal teacher, after which she offered her services to Oscar Hammerstein and was engaged. However, 28 grand operas in one season seemed pretty hard work, and the young lady then tried comic opera.

Record Collectors - Attention!

Selling my private collection of over 30,000 records. Labels such as: Edison, Vocalion, Perfect, Harmony, Brunswick, Zon-O-Phone, Cameo, Bluebird, London, etc. Classical and Popular, Jazz and Bands. Mail 25c for our first 1960 catalog.

CANTON OF HIGHLANDTOWN
29 S. Robinson St., Baltimore 24, Md.
app

MARGUERITE FARRELL, as she appeared in the 1916 production, "Step This Way."

MARGUERITE FARRELL, appropriately costumed, singing "She Always Did the Minuet."

Engagements with "Miss Princess," "American Maid" and with Lillian Russell gave her a reputation which resulted in a vaudeville engagement on the "Big Time." When Lew Fields saw Miss Farrell's performance in Chicago he told her she must be in his next production. In "Step This Way" she has made a great success and her singing and dancing are one of the features of the production. For the November list Miss Farrell has given another of the Irish songs she does so well, and a new Von Tilzer number which looks like a big hit.

This seems a suitable place to discourse briefly on Marguerite Farrell's singing voice and style. The voice was a dainty, clear, high, flute-like soprano with a sweetness which reflects a roguish quality that peeps out of her charming photographs.

The most surprising thing about her singing is a culture and cultivation which the listener does not ordinarily expect to find in the voice production of an interpreter of comic songs. I suspect that most of her girlhood was spent in New England, for she is addicted to the use of the broad "A"—invariably saying "ahnswer" for "answer," to give one example—even occasionally when it is out of character. The overall effect is what an older generation would call lady-like and the listener feels she was completely feminine. No doubt her experience in light and grand opera intensified the refined quality, but it must have been there to begin with. On her Victor and Columbia records the words are not always clear, but there is never any doubt as to even a syllable on the crystal-clear Edisons, which have yet to be discussed.

Miss Farrell's next Victor record came out in February, 1917. It was No. 18213, and she sang "Naughty! Naughty! Naughty!" a catchy ditty from the Winter Garden "Show of Wonders." It had the good fortune to be coupled with "When You Hear Jackson Moan on His Saxophone," by Billy Murray, the king of popular record makers 40 years or more ago. As the catalog editor said: "Although ostensibly singing to her child, there are a good many men who would like to be chided the way Marguerite Farrell chides in 'Naughty! Naughty! Naughty!'"

There was a long interval before Miss Farrell's next Victor record appeared. It was also her last. In October she occupied both sides of 18346. Here is what the editor said:

A most engaging Irish brogue is a prized possession of Marguerite Farrell. She uses it to good advantage in "Says I To Myself, Says I," a lilting account of a little love episode, words by Eddie Moran and music by Harry Von Tilzer. . . "Wonderful Girl, Good Night" is by Garfield Kilgour and Harry Von Tilzer, which tells tales out of school, for it is a love letter read aloud.

One can only speculate on why Marguerite Farrell's Victor recording career ended at this point, after a little more than a year, just as her Columbia activities had occupied an even shorter period. Probably the most likely reason is that the United States had entered World War I, and there was little demand for anything but so-called "patriotic songs," which were best sung by men. Victor also devoted much of its factory to war production with an inevitable decrease in the number of records turned out. A number of seemingly well established artists were dropped from the Victor rolls during this period.

V. Singing For Edison

The name of Marguerite Farrell did not appear on records again for another four years, when she was signed to make Edison Diamond Discs, some of which were also dubbed as Blue Amberols. The Edison Amberola Monthly for October, 1921, contained her photograph. There was also a biographical sketch called "The Girl on the Cover," which reads as if it were rewritten from the one in the November, 1916, Victor supplement, and contains the same information. However, the first and last paragraphs may be quoted:

As a singing comedienne, Miss Marguerite E. Farrell, whose picture adorns the cover of the present number of the Amberola Monthly, has had an unusually rapid rise in the theatrical world.

At present, Miss Farrell is under contract with the Shuberts. Her two numbers on the Amberola, "Arrah Go 'Long with You (Do You See Any Green in Me Eye?)" No. 4338, and "To the Strains of that Wedding March," No. 4280, are first rate examples of humorous character songs given with faultless delivery.

One other of Miss Farrell's Diamond Discs was transferred to a cylinder—"Yo-Lay-Ee-Oo," which became Blue Amberol No. 4408.

The comedienne's first Edison disc was announced in the spring of 1921. It was "To the Strains of that Wedding March (It's a Long, Long Walk)," coupled with "I Want to be the Leader of the Band," joyfully sung by the Harmonizers, masquerading as the Premier Quartet. I wonder why either Miss Farrell or the Edison recording staff chose a song that was more than ten years old for her initial offering. As sung by Billy Murray, it was a big hit in 1910 on Victor record 16833, especially since it was coupled with one of the all-time great popular waltz songs, "Meet Me Tonight in Dreamland," rendered with operatic fervor by John Young. Perhaps Marguerite had sung it at the beginning of her stage career and believed it had sentimental or "good luck" associations. At any rate, her melodic warning against the perils of a walk to the altar is charming. It is characterized by daintiness and feminine fastidiousness.

A couple of months afterwards the soprano was back with a couple of excellent comic songs on No. 50808—"I've Got the Traveling Choo-Choo Blues" and "Arrah, Go 'Long With You," the latter already mentioned as a Blue Amberol. Despite the merit of this record it was not a good seller and was cut out of the 1924 catalog.

In October, 1921, came No. 50819, "Yo-Lay-Ee-Oo (Means I Love You)." This pseudo-yodeling tune was bright and catchy and well sung. The brief supplement description said: "Marguerite Farrell, who sings this song, is a favorite in vaudeville. All of her whimsical art will be found in her rendition of 'Yo-Lay-Ee-Oo.'" On the other side Vernon Dalhart sang "Molly on a Trolley," to a soprano obligato by Betsy Lane Shepherd.

Miss Farrell's next addition to her Edison repertoire didn't appear until late in 1922. (Probably she had been away from New York on tour). It was also the best record, in my opinion, she ever made for any company—an irresistible East Side waltz song, called "I Certainly Must be in Love." It had one of the most incongruous couplings in phonograph history—Walter Scanlan singing a semi-religious ballad "I Love a Little Cottage," composed by Geoffrey O'Hara, who will be the subject of a Favorite Pioneer Recording Artist's biography one of these not too distant days.

Not only is the music of "I Certainly Must be in Love" attractive to anyone who likes a "good old-fashioned waltz," but the words are clever and amusing to a degree seldom attained by comedy numbers. And Miss Farrell's interpretation is superlative—perhaps as good as Billy Murray's Victor rendition of the same song—than which there could be no higher comic song praise. Despite her always unmistakable culture, the comedienne enters admirably into the spirit of the ditty about "Mamie McShane, a dumb, dizzy dame" who lived on "Thoid Avenue" and fell in love with a young Bowery socialite at the gas fitter's ball!

As "Mamie," Miss Farrell describes the ludicrous sufferings the onslaughts of love have brought to her. Most of the time she sings in a convincing East Side dialect, but once or twice she slips into her customary broad A's and says "ahnswer" and "pahss" for "pass"—the latter even when Mamie is supposed to be speaking. To render unmistakable the depths of her passion for her Bowery boy friend, Mamie proclaims: "I step in the bathtub and scrub meself white, an' now I'm convinced that me mind isn't right, for when I take a bath befo' Saddidy night—I sointly must be in love!"

Near the end of the record, the orchestra softly plays the chorus. Then, before it reaches the close, there is a charming and unexpected effect when Marguerite, as Mamie, exclaims: "Oh boy, ain't it a grand an' glorious feelin'!" By some near-magic she makes you see the glow in the girl's eyes as she dreams of her "steady beau." Another amusing bit of lyric writing ends the song: "Folks talk, but I don't hear a woid what they say: I'm so noivous an' worried me hair's toinin' gray—I drink thoity saucers of cawfy a day—I sointly must be in love!"

That record is a comedy masterpiece. Several months later, in the Spring of 1923, Miss Farrell's last Edison appeared: "If You Go, You'll Italy) shows in the bowl a San Francisco cable car, the bay bridge, and the buildings of Chinatown. The handle is surmounted by a bear rampant, in full relief.

(Continued on page 53)

The spoons described are only a few of the many, old and new, that can be found. The variety is endless, but all are invested with historical association and some are real works of art.

THE LILIOUKALANI CLOCK

(Continued from page 42)

phase of the moon, with the dots marking the days of the period.

Another eight-inch dial is placed below the center of the clock's face. This consists of an elaborate Perpetual Calendar which makes one complete revolution every sixteen years. The inside figures indicate the day of the month at the end of every seven-day period, beginning with January 2. The outer figures mark the weeks of the year.

This intricate mechanism bears the name "Gale's Patent," indicating that the clock was probably manufactured by the Welch Spring Company of Forestville, Conn. The inventor of this type of perpetual calendar movement was Daniel Jackson Gale (1830-1901),* who lived most of his life in Bristol, Conn. He had been born in Waitsfield, Vt., and moved to Sheboygan Falls, Wis., when he was about 25 years old. He became apprenticed to a shoemaker and eventually owned and operated his own shoe shop.

It was in this Sheboygan Falls shoe shop that Gale invented and constructed his Calendar clock which he completed on August 17, 1865.

The clock was patented on November 16, 1869 and production was begun by Welch, Spring & Company in 1870. The firm paid a handsome royalty of $100 to Gale for his invention.

Gale moved to Bristol in the following year and went to work for the firm that produced his clock. He worked a 10-hour day for a total daily wage of $2.25!

The firm of Welch, Spring & Company had been formed as a partnership by Elisha N. Welch and Solomon C. Spring in Bristol in 1868 and they continued to operate under the same trade name until 1884. They produced a fine grade of calendar and regulator clocks, incorporating features of calendar movements invented by Gale as well as by B. B. Lewis, which they had also purchased. In 1884 the firm merged with E. N. Welch Manufacturing Company, another of Welch's many clock-making enterprises. The new firm went into receivership in 1897 and was reorganized in 1903 as the Sessions Clock Company, which continues to the present time as one of the major clock manufacturers of the United States.

REMEMBER THE OLD GROCERY?

By WILLIAM H. RICHARDSON

When wide oak boards were used as counters?

When the first glass show-case came into being?

When apples and oranges were sold by the dozen?

When pickled pig's feet were bought from the barrel?

Sauerkraut was sold by the pound?

When you could buy cranberries by the pound and cooked them?

When you could purchase 5¢ worth of loose grits, meal, etc.?

When men sat around the pot belly stove in the winter?

When men sat on the porch of the old grocery and played checkers by the hour?

When bacon was sold from a slab?

When they used hanging scales?

When lagniappe was given by the merchants in the south to their customers?

When kerosene was sold for the little black stove?

When the Piggly Wiggly installed the first self-service store?

When the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., changed from selling just tea and coffee, to all sorts of groceries?

When the oil lamp hung from the ceiling to light the store at night?

When deliveries were made by horse and wagon?

When milk could be bought in pint bottles?

When milk was sold for 5¢ pint, 10¢ quart?

When bread retailed for 5¢ a loaf?

When lard was sold loose from a large can?

When butter was sold from a barrel or tub, scooped up with a paddle and put in a wooden or paper container?

When fly paper was sold to catch the fly?

When large and small bins surrounded the walls to house grits, corn meal, rice, beans, etc.?

When almost every corner grocery kept a little credit book on the shelf?

OLD VEHICLES

WANTED

WANTED - AUTOMOBILE ITEMS. Most anything pertaining to early automobile era. Literature such as catalogs, manuals. Trade publications, hand books, posters, pictures, etc. Also horse-drawn vehicle era literature. Old cars, trucks, chassis, other components suitable for parts. Brass lights, horns, name plates. Most any kind of accessory or usable part, etc. I have discontinued collection of clothes, license plates, and most technical books. — B. J. Pollard, 14300 Prairie, Detroit 38, Mich. je62722

AUTOMOBILE sales catalogs wanted. Best prices offered. — M. Hollis, 4930 Queen Mary Road, Apt. 19, Montreal, Que., Canada. sl22611

OLD AUTO LAMPS, horns, books, old cars, etc., wanted.—D. D. Way, 11 Eastwood Ct., Oakland, Calif. my128801

AUTOMOBILE catalogs, trade papers and leaflets, brass lamps, early gadgets. —C.E.H. Whitlock, New Haven, Conn. mh1211

OLD BICYCLES FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Large collection of old bicycles, high wheelers, wooden, tandems, high wheel gear driven, ratchet drive, and many other odd types and rare old bicycles. Would make a wonderful museum. — Everett Dix, Couderesport, Pa. my3085

PLYMOUTH ANTIQUE CENTRE

Melvin P. Klasky
26 Union St. Plymouth, Mass.

Boston & Albany #404 Scale Model Train, with tracks, run by steam. Size, length 8 1/4". Please write for further information. Photo 23a. mh3

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

Come Back By and By." Billy Jones singing "Counterfeit Bill (from Louisville)" was her "platter-mate."

Just why Marguerite Farrell recorded only briefly for each of the three companies with whom she was associated is not clear. Probably her country-wide stage engagements prevented her having regular recording dates. Whatever the cause, the comparatively small amount of phonograph work she did clearly established her rank as one of the cleverest of comedienues. It is a pity, of course, that her last years, after she abandoned the footlights for domesticity, should have been marred by sorrow and suffering. But, even while she labored as a welfare department case worker, it must have given Marguerite Farrell Wheeler pleasure to know that her pretty voice and excellent singing had been preserved on records which were treasured by many collectors.

GEORGE WILTON BALLARD, the popular pioneer recording tenor.

One afternoon I was walking toward my former home in Marion, Va., when I heard the sound of a man's voice uplifted in song. I was about a quarter of a mile from home at the time. There was nothing about the voice from which I could determine whether I was hearing a living singer or a mechanical reproduction, and the distance was so great I couldn't distinguish a word. But after I had walked a few steps farther I smiled. There was something about the voice that made it unmistakable even though the sound was faint and far away. Only one singer I could think of had that peculiarly distinctive quality.

When I reached home I said to my brother, Chad: "Weren't you playing a record by George Wilton Ballard a few minutes ago?"

He pointed to the phonograph turntable on which lay an Edison Diamond Disc of "Where the Sunset Turns the Ocean's Blue to Gold." But he found it hard to believe I had recognized Ballard's voice from a point so distant I couldn't catch a word.

Yet, it was true. George Wilton Ballard had a voice with a tone quality so individual that a good record by him could never be mistaken as the work of anyone else—a quality so elusive of reproduction, moreover, that insofar as my experience goes, only Edison ever succeeded in perfectly recording it. I have never heard any of his U.S. Everlasting cylinders, so exempt them from this discussion, but I have listened to most of the tenor's lateral-cut records and they are uniformly bad. The flat and nasal voice that emerges is only a travesty of his true tones, and it seems odd that he allowed such unflattering representations to be issued. But most of his Edison records are excellent.

It is probably because his voice responded favorably to only one recording method that George Wilton Ballard, although a popular singer whose Edison discs and cylinders sold well, never achieved topmost rank as a recording artist. Instead, he was what I think of as a "middle-of-the-road" performer. He was not so popular as Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Ada Jones, Gene Austin, Collins and Harlan, Walter Scanlan and Cal Stewart, and his recorded output does not compare in volume with that of the favorite free-lancers, Charles Hart, Charles Harrison, Arthur Fields, Irving Kaufman and Helen Clark. Nevertheless, the span of his recording career, some 15 years, was about that of the average popular singer, and if his records didn't sell in such huge quantities as those by the artists I have mentioned, there were many other highly regarded comedians and singers who ranked below him from a sales standpoint. In fact, Ballard might be compared to a member of the supporting cast of an old-time stock company. If not one of the stars (during his Edison career he was obliged to play second fiddle to Scanlan, who was unmistakably Edison's most popular singer of popular sentimental songs), he was still a useful and highly regarded member of the company.

II. Some Reflections on the Phonograph

When I observed that George Wilton Ballard was born November 24, 1877 — about three and one-half months after Edison produced his first tinfoil phonograph — I was moved to reflect on some facts of phonograph history that I believe are not generally recognized.

We collectors have a feeling that the era of the cylinder record extended over many generations. Actually, its active life, from Edison's first tinfoil production until the Blue Amberol was discontinued in 1929, was just 52 years. Edison, who officiated at the cylinder's birth lived to see its death. If the tinfoil period, when recording was wholly experimental, is discounted, the wax cylinder's life was only from 1886, when Tainter and Bell produced the first cardboard specimens coated with wax, to 1912, when Edison supplanted the wax variety with the Blue Amberol. Unbelievable as it seems, that was only 26 years. (However, the Clarion Co. in England continued to make wax two and four-minute cylinders until the early 1920's). To look at it another way, if the wax cylinders had first been produced in 1933 and lasted a comparable period, they would now be breathing their last. All their history would have been crowded into the 26 years that have elapsed since Franklin D. Roosevelt first took office.

When we come to consider the historical disc picture, the facts are equally startling. From force of habit, I always imagine that for an immeasurably long time records were made by the acoustic process of singing into a horn. By a similar process of "reasoning," I picture the old Victor Talking Machine Co., as dominating the phonograph and record industry for several average lifetimes. Actually, Emile Berliner produced his first crude specimens of single-faced discs in 1894, and only 31 years later, in 1925, the acoustic recording method gave way to the electric. The strangest reflection of all is that electric recordings have now been made for 34 years—three years longer than the mechanical system lasted—and eight years longer than the wax cylinder survived. Cylinders of all kinds (excepting tinfoil) endured for only 43 years. Ten years from now electric recording will have had a longer history than that of all types of cylinders.

As for the Victor Talking Machine Co., its founder Eldridge R. Johnson, did his first repair work on phonographs in 1898. Three years later he founded the Victor Co. And, like the wax cylinder, Victor lasted only 26 years, before falling into other hands and, unlike the cylinder, becoming a subsidiary of the Radio Corporation of America.

When we come to examine the careers of recording artists the facts are equally startling. Upon considering the individual's life history, it is astonishing to find how small a proportion of his or her earthly stay was devoted to making records. True, Len Spencer, who died at the early age of 47, was a recording artist for the last 25 years of his life, but Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, whose popularity at one time seemed likely to go on forever, made records for only about the same length of time as Spencer, although Collins lived to be 69 and Harlan 75. Ada Jones' career as a professional recording performer was only 18 years and she was well past her peak when she died. Mary Macdonough made records for a little over 20 years, and Olive Kline and Elsie Baker for less than 20.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

As a small boy, I was unable to visualize any time in the past when my hero, Billy Murray, hadn't been singing on records or any future period when he wouldn't be. He had made them before I was born and he seemed likely to be making them when Gabriel responded to demands for encores of his trumpet solo. Yet, disregarding some early experimental work in his teens, Billy's true recording career extended only from 1903 to 1932, with a brief comeback in 1940-41. During more than half of his 77 year life span he had no association with the phonograph.

And Henry Burr, who made more records than any other singer before or since, was active from 1922 through 1929—about 27 years. Bing Crosby made his first record more than 30 years ago and still makes an occasional one, but ten years ago he was losing his luster as a recording star.

Consequently it will be seen, that given a normal lifetime, the most popular phonograph singers managed to go on working between 20 and 30 years, with 25 years about the average. Those of the second flight of popularity held on for 10 or 15 years, or about the length of a good baseball player's big league career. Thus, as I have already said, George Wilton Ballard's tenure before the recording horn (he never made an electric record) was about the "middle-of-the-road" average.

III. Biographical Facts

George Wilton Ballard was born in Syracuse, N. Y. (which Irving Kaufman also regards as his home town, although Kaufman was born in Russia and came to Syracuse as a child), and spent nearly all his life either there or in New York City. He died in Syracuse on April 6, 1950, aged 72 years, four months, and 12 days. His father was Alfred Ballard, and he was given his middle name of Wilton from his mother's maiden name. His death certificate says his home was at 708 James St., and he had been living in Syracuse (presumably on his return from New York) for 15 years. He had mostly given up his singing career (probably about the time he ceased to be an Edison recording artist) and was a salesman in a jewelry store. The certificate gave "salesman" as the occupation he had followed most of his life.

The Syracuse Herald-Journal for Friday, April 7, 1950, published the following obituary:

G. W. BALLARD, SINGER, WILL BE BURIED MONDAY . . . Funeral services for George Wilton Ballard . . . widely known concert tenor, who died yesterday, will be held at 2 p. m. Monday in the Schumaker and Mason Funeral Home.

Mr. Ballard was employed as a diamond specialist and salesman for Howe's jewelry store since 1939. He died while at work.

A resident of Syracuse most of his life, he lived for several years in New York City where he gave concerts in many churches and made recordings. He was a soloist at First Baptist Church in Syracuse.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Della Ready Ballard; a son, Robert Hudson Ballard; a sister, Miss Bertha Ballard, of Detroit, Mich.; two grandchildren, Miss Martha Louise Ballard and Wilton Sprague Ballard, and several nieces and nephews. . . Burial will be in Amber Cemetery.

The death certificate attributed the singer's passing to a sudden attack of arteriosclerotic heart disease.

Relatively little information concerning George Wilton Ballard may be found in old phonograph publications. However, the following appeared in the Edison cylinder record catalog for April, 1914, when Ballard had made only two Blue Amberol records:

A native of Syracuse, N. Y., Mr. Ballard has for many years been among the leading concert and church tenors of the Eastern United States. He started his musical career as soloist in leading church choirs of Syracuse, where he remained upwards of ten years. He is now located in New York City, where he occupies a prominent position as choir soloist at the Calvary Methodist-Episcopal church. Notwithstanding his success, he is still studying under the famous vocal instructor, Oscar Saenger. Mr. Ballard is a favorite with Edison owners. His enunciation and phrasing are especially commendable. His voice is clear and sweet, and he puts a fervor and feeling in his interpretations that is most impressive and enjoyable.

This may be supplemented by the following from the 1923 catalog of Gennett records:

There is no more popular Gennett singer than George Wilton Ballard. He possesses a rich, pure tenor of wondrous quality and his tones, especially the higher ones, are produced without effort. His shadings of tone and his voice control in general have endeared him to the hearts of thousands.

(Continued on page 45)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 32)

the rage for a long while. But may it gently be reminded that knowing how to say da does not make one an authority on the subject. Among the ridiculous statements along this line stands out the preposterous claim that Vialtzeva was a gypsy! She sang the so-called "gypsy romances," but because of that she was no more a gypsy than the interpreters of Iris and Butterfly are Japanese.

Incidentally, I never had occasion to mention this before: please note that the unsigned footnote to my article "Singers of the Tzar," which appeared in the February, 1953, number of the English "The Gramophone," was written not by me but by the editor of that department. In it, a paragraph read: ". . . there were fourteen G & Ts of Vialtzeva, including what must be a unique performance of the Gypsy Song from Carmen; to hear this sung by a genuine gypsy (sic) must certainly have been a revelation!" I repeat, and most emphatically: I DID NOT make this statement!

---

I REMEMBER how the grocer

Put potatoes on the spout,

Just to keep the liquid contents,

When you walked, from sloshing out.

—Spencer C. Ackerman

---

JIM WALSH, photographed on the front porch of his new home in Vinton, Va., while trying to gaze serenely into the distance, with his squirming cats, Nipper and Roger in one hand, and an armful of phonograph reference material in the other. Nipper disappeared the day after the picture was taken for The Commonwealth, a magazine published in Richmond, Va., and wasn't found for three weeks.

essentially the same service is very great indeed.

This is by no means the ultimate in contrast. The American dollar watch is the low in this field while there have been watches made in Europe, with heavily jeweled case, running to many thousands of dollars. The same is true of clocks.

These two illustrations, one HIGH and one LOW give some idea only of the wide range in which timepieces have been made. Every gradation between has been filled by countless designs and qualities. No one will ever know of them all, even after a lifetime of study and research.

There is a reason for presenting this kind of an article and the purpose is to give some idea of the immensity of this field. I still get letters, almost every day, from people who say, in effect: "I have an old clock. Will you please tell me all about it, and especially, what is it worth." I would like to be helpful, whenever I can, but this sort of thing is quite frustrating.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 35)

IV. Ballard's First Recordings

Judged by current standards, George Wilton Ballard made a rather late start as a talking machine artist. He was in his early 30's when he began recording for the company which made U.S. Everlasting cylinders from 1910 through most of 1913. The U.S. recording manager, Albert Benzler, had previously been associated with Edison, and had a keen ear for good phonograph voices. As I have already said, I have not heard any of Ballard's U.S. cylinders and can't comment on their tone quality, but a survey of the catalog dated October, 1912, shows he was sometimes assigned a higher type of music than the popular sentimental songs he usually sang for Edison.

The Syracuse tenor's four-minute U.S. records included 1043, "A Dream"; 1313, "I Hear You Calling Me"; 1448, "Let Me Call You Sweetheart"; 1049, "Love Abiding"; 1194, "Love's Sorrow"; 1402, "My Sweetheart When a Boy"; 1150, "Red Wing", and 1392, "The Snowy-Breasted Pearl," which for some mysterious reason was sung without accompaniment. Others may have been issued in the year that remained before the company went out of business, unable to meet the competition of Mr. Edison's new Blue Amberol.

Ballard's two-minute repertoire included 213, "Carissima"; 303, "Daisies Won't Tell"; 266, "Dream River"; 484, "I'd Love to Live in Loveland With a Girl Like You," and 389, "Summer Days." Among the four-minute vocal duets, he and William H. Thompson sang No. 1547, "When the Old Oaken Bucket was New." On the two-minute they did 466, "Driving Home the Cows from Pasture," and 504, "A Girlie was Just Made to Love."

It is possible that Ballard also made some Indestructible cylinders during this period, but lacking catalogs, I can't be sure. I do have one Indestructible which he sang under the name of George Wilton — an atrociously recorded version of "Break the News to Mother," but this probably was done in 1917 or 1918.

V. Becoming an Edison Artist

The tenor may have had an exclusive U.S. contract, for he made no Edison cylinders until the Cleveland firm ceased to function. His first Blue Amberol, No. 2150, "When the Twilight Comes to Kiss the Rose Good-Night," was issued in February, 1914, and remained popular for years. It was followed in March by No. 2196, a now forgotten Irving Berlin song, "There's a Girl in Arizona," which stayed in the catalog only a short time. After that, despite the statement in the April, 1914, catalog that Ballard had become a favorite with Edison owners, more than a year elapsed before he was again heard from.

Meanwhile, the melodious George was extending the scope of his activities. His first Victor record came out in December, 1914. On one side of 17654 he sang "You're More Than the World to Me," while on the opposite side Albert Campbell and Henry Burr were heard in "Diane of the Green Van."

About that same time, Ballard produced a disc that has been lost to the world. On December 1, 1914, the Victor Co. notified dealers two records which had been scheduled for the January supplement had been withdrawn and would not be issued. One was 17653, which combined Ballard's version of "You're Always Welcome at our House," with "Underneath the Japanese Moon," by his erstwhile Syracuse neighbor, Irving Kaufman. Also withdrawn was No. 17645, which combined a group of children's songs sung by Olive Kline. The latter was issued shortly afterward as 17719, and Kaufman's song, recoupled with "Where the Oceans Meet in Panama," became 17699. However, the Ballard half of 17653 was consigned to permanent oblivion. I wonder why.

After this somewhat discouraging start, Ballard was not heard from again on Victor until November, 1915, when he and "John Wilbur" sang a duet version on 17889 of "When You Sit Beside the Fireside in Winter." ("Wilbur" was the Peerless Quartet basso, John Meyer). An Irving Berlin hit, "Araby," sung by Harry Macdonough, was its mate. The tenor's final appearance as a Victor artist was in January, 1916, when he sang on 17903, "Could the Dreams of a Dreamer Come True." The other side was "If it Takes a Thousand Years," by James Reed (Reed Miller) and James F. Harrison (Frederick Wheeler).

His Columbia experience was equally short and unimpressive. He first appeared in a Columbia list in August, 1914, on record A1553, singing "When You Play in the Game of Love." His "platter mate" was Manuel Romain, rendering "My Love Would Fill a Thousand Hearts." The supplement referred to Ballard as a "singer so far a stranger to our list . . . a tenor of much reputation in concert and high-class vaudeville. Mr. Ballard makes a remarkably attractive record of Leo Feist's latest hit."

Ballard was heard from again in January, 1915, when he and Ada Jones recorded a song that didn't sell, "In the Garden" (not the gospel hymn made familiar by Homer Rodeheaver and Virginia Asher), on No. A1627. Their companion duetists were Collins and Harlan, singing "It's a Very Easy Thing to Put a Ring Upon a Finger"—another tune that didn't catch on.

The tenor's third and last Columbia appearance was in March, 1915, when he sang "In My Dream of You" on A1684. The Lyric Trio (Will Oakland, Albert Campbell and Henry Burr), occupied the other side with "Everything Reminds Me of that Old Sweetheart of Mine."

I have no doubt Ballard's Victor and Columbia activities were cut short because his records didn't sell, and they were poor sellers because the lateral-cut recording process fell short of doing justice to his voice, which was peculiarly rich in overtones. Victor and Columbia obtained excellent results with many singers, but Ballard's tones were so distinctive that only Edison could register them in all their individuality.

The same statement concerning a lack of realism may be made concerning the Gennett and Federal records by Ballard, which came out for several years in the early 1920's. The Federal discs also appeared under the Silvertone label.

VI. Back to Edison

It has been mentioned that Ballard made two Edison Blue Amberol cylinders, issued in February and March, 1914. Then there was a period of more than a year, while he was making discs, before he again appeared in an Edison cylinder list. In June, 1915, he was on hand with 2613, "The Violin My Great Grand-Daddy Made," which appeared soon afterward as his first Diamond Disc, 50242, coupled with "The A. O. H's of the U.S.A." by that rollicking comedian, Edward Meeker. These two songs are virtually unknown today, but the record was popular enough to stay in the catalog for ten years.

In August, 1915, Ballard's Blue Amberol, "Take Me Back to Your Heart," appeared. This was an English song and the record was made chiefly for sale in British territory. It did not appear on the Diamond Disc.

From this time, Ballard throughout the next ten years was one of the most consistent performers for me. Ye are to charge him on pain of forfeiture of his employment that he do not sing such verses about the streets. Ye are to charge him to take care of thieves and robbers, but to waive that part of his duty to the princess, for since her guards are taken off, she is neither to be regarded by day, or guarded by night."

(Continued on page 53)

By the time the colonists were settling in America, the bellman was evolving into the town crier. Old borough records give some interesting items relating to the criers' bells. For example, the price of a five and three-fourths pound one, polished inside and out and engraved, was upwards of one pound. These bells were greatly treasured and records tell of many a stiff fight a town crier had to wage, on occasion, to keep his bell in hand.

Today, criers are still a colorful feature in the British Isles, where they may be found mainly in resort towns, proclaiming local events, distributing handbills and attending municipal functions. And the office is still a proud one, having remained in the same family sometimes for several generations.

Each summer town criers from England, Scotland and Wales gather at Hastings, Sussex, for a national championship contest. Prizes are given for the loudest, clearest voice and for the best, most colorful uniform. The trophies and awards are much sought after, and the entire contest a very gala affair.

In colonial America the town crier was much like his English counterpart, less a watchman and more a purveyor of news. His familiar Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! (Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye!) accompanied by his bell always preceded the crying of objects lost or found, weddings, funerals, auctions, etc.

A few of the colonial town crier bells have been preserved in collections. At Mission Inn, Calif., is the one used at Bedford, Mass. It is inscribed as follows: "This bell was rung on the morning of the 19th day of April, 1775, to arouse the people and farmers and tell them that Paul Revere had brought the news that the British Army was coming to destroy stores of ammunition at Concord, Mass., and to attack them at Lexington, and there they met the foe. Here commenced the Revolutionary War in the early morning hours."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 45)

the Edison disc and cylinder catalogs. During part of the time he may have been an exclusive Edison artist, which most record buyers thought of him as being, anyway. He was assigned many song hits as well as some old-time ballads which probably were personally selected by Mr. Edison. "The Old Man" had a fondness for recording the songs of his boyhood, without much regard as to whether they would sell. Most of the Ballard Diamond Discs were in the 50,000 series, which sold at various times from $1 to $1.35, but some were in the 80,000 class, whose prices varied from $1.50 to $1.85. A hearing of the records reveals the tenor had clear enunciation, but a trace of an Italianate style, which sometimes caused him to pronounce "i" as "e". Thus, "hickory stick" becomes "heekory steeck." His voice was always warm and charged with emotion even in trivial ballads. He was not versatile, as many other popular recording artists were, but stuck to sentimental songs and never essayed comedy.

A list of Ballard's most popular Edison records would include 50686, "Daddy, You've Been a Mother to Me"; 50307, "I'm a Lonesome Melody"; 50534, "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles"; 50690, "The Love Nest"; 50325, "M-O-T-H-E-R (A Word that Means the World to Me)"; 50755, "Mother of Pearl"; 50343, "There's a Long, Long Trail" (probably the most popular of all); 50269, "When I Was a Dreamer"; 50678, "When You're Gone I Won't Forget"; 50811, "Where the Sunset Turns the Ocean's Blue to Gold"; and 51014, "Sunset Trail of Gold." He did relatively little duet work, but "Bubbles," and several other numbers were sung with Helen Clark; "The Love Nest," and "When You're Sure I Won't Forget," with Louise Terrell, who was really Elizabeth Lennox; and "Sunset Trail of Gold," with Betsy Lane Shepherd. His first Edison duet partner was the comparatively obscure baritone, Owen J. McCormack, with whom he sang, on 50313, "In the Land of Love with the Song Birds."

Ballard was one of the artists engaged to give "tone tests," singing in comparison with the Official Laboratory Model New Edison. I find the following paragraph in Along Broadway for March-April, 1919:

Under the auspices of the Jewish Welfare Board, Miss Amy Ellerman, Mr. George Wilton Ballard and Mr.

OLD VEHICLES

WANTED

WANTED - AUTOMOBILE ITEMS. Most anything pertaining to early automobile era. Literature such as catalogs, manuals. Trade publications, hand books, posters, pictures, etc. Also horse-drawn vehicle era literature. Old cars, trucks, chassis, other components suitable for parts. Brass lights, horns, name plates. Most any kind of accessory or usable part, etc. I have discontinued collection of clothes, license plates, and most technical books. — B. J. Pollard, 14300 Prairie, Detroit 38, Mich. je62722

AUTOMOBILE sales catalogs wanted. Best prices offered. — M. Hollis, 4930 Queen Mary Road, Apt. 19, Montreal, Que., Canada. s122511

OLD AUTO LAMPS, horns, books, old cars, etc., wanted. — D. D. Way, 11 Eastwood Ct., Oakland, Calif. my128801

Jacques Glockner gave several Tone-Test recitals for men in uniform a few weeks ago. The Tone-Test feature of the programs was more or less of an experiment, as we wondered a little how the soldiers would enjoy it. As the men had no particular interest in the Edison, it was an excellent opportunity of judging the Tone-Test from the point of view of entertainment only. . . . Each one was a complete success. The men were delighted with the music, and seemed particularly interested in the recitals as a demonstration of the degree of perfection which has been attained by the Edison phonograph.

One of my friends who attended a Tone-test in which Ballard took part described him as a small man with rather prominent eyes, who sang well but sometimes became so interested in following the progress of the record that he turned away from the audience to watch the "platter" spin, and momentarily forgot to sing along with the disc.

In 1917 Edison organized one of the best mixed voice quartets that ever made records — the Harmony Four, consisting of John Young, first tenor; Ballard, second tenor; Gladys Rice, soprano, and Donald Chalmers, bass. The quartet sang several records in which the four voices blended exquisitely. One of these was the big 1918 song hit, "Smiles." Miss Rice, who made her first Edison records at the age of 19 and is still active in New York musical circles, is the only survivor of the group.

Ballard also sang in the Edison series of "Songs of the Past," and occasionally took the lead in Premier Quartet records, when Billy Murray was not available. One of these was 50528, "Mammy's Lullaby." He sings "Good Night, Dear" on 50750, "The Land of Minstrelsy," by the Premier Quartet and Minstrel Co., but takes no part in the comedy, which is entrusted to Steve Porter, Murray and Meeker. At times he sang in the Metropolitan Quartet of mixed voices.

One of the unusual Edison records in which Ballard participates is 80354, "That Creepy, Weepy Feeling," from the musical comedy, "His (Continued on page 84)

OLD BICYCLES FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Large collection of old bicycles, high wheelers, wooden, tandems, high wheel gear driven, ratchet drive, and many other odd types and rare old bicycles. Would make a wonderful museum. — Everett Dix, Couderport, Pa. my3066

OLD VEHICLES FOR SALE

For Sale: Only Bryan steamer auto in the world. Last of seven built. Runs like new. — Al. Wissinger, 315 W. 13th St., Peru, Ind. ap1882

Old Fire Truck - 1927 Reo, 5200 actual miles. Pump, motor, tires, body all in perfect condition. Solid brass ladder hangers, also 40 gal. brass priming tank. Valves and bell heavy nickel. Total length only 19 feet. Price $395. — Merl Wakefield, Broadwell, Ill. ap1405

(Continued from back cover)

EDWARD G. WILSON*1802 Chestnut St.*Philadelphia 3, Pa.

- 15 Gold Butterfly Charm studded w/ Rubies, Diamonds & Sapphires. 1/2". $55.
- 16 COLLECTION OF GOLD JEWELLED STICKPINS - your choice, at $22 each.
- A. Lover's Knot w/ Diamond.
- B. Circle of whole round Pearls.
- C. Gold & Pearl studded Fleur de Lys.
- D. Pearl Horseshoe of whole round Pearls.
- E. Gold Owl's head w/ garnet Eyes.
- F. Baroque Pearl Clover.

SILVER

17. English Sterling hoof footed Gravy Boat - beautifully proportioned. 6 1/4" long. $38.50.
18. A beautifully proportioned American Coin Silver Pape Boat by Wm. Gale & Sons, New York, circa: 1852. 4 1/2", $65.
19. Tiffany English Sterling Child's Cup, straight sides. $27.50.
20. J. E. Caldwell Sterling Mug (Cann) in the 18th Century style. Slant sides, Eagle Crest. 4 1/2". $44.
21. Paul Revere style Sterling Bowl by Lunt. 4 1/2" high, 7 1/2" diameter. $49.50.
22. Dozen plain Sterling Bread & Butter Plates, monogrammed. Thread border. 6 3/8" diameter. $65 doz.
23. Graceful 3 pc. footed Sterling After Dinner Coffee Set by Tiffany & Co. $125 set.
24. A fine 7 1/2" English Silver "Rat Tailed" Spoon w/ Mid Rib, London, Circa: 1728-9. $20.
25. Set of 11 R&W Wilson Coin Silver, Fiddle back, Tea Spoons, circa: 1825. $44 set.
26. Rare Coin Silver Fiddle back Tea Spoon w/ Basket of flowers motif. By Moore, N.Y., circa: 1830. $9.90.
27. Rare Dessert Spoon, Coin Silver Fiddle back w/ Sheaf of Wheat motif. Moore & Brewer, N.Y., circa: 1855. $10.

MAY L. WOOD*19 W. Bow St. Franklin, N. H.

Small colored Staff. Hen on Nest 1850.
Rare Staff. lg. 2 handle mug, frog inside, retrievers outside in relief. $60.00

Purple Crocus lg. sugar. write
4 china 2 1/2" mugs, black transfer scene $4.50 each, lot. 18.50

Crust electric blue TYP enamel dec. (others) 25.00

Rose Satin 8", crimped, decorated bowl, exquisite 50.00

Lilao Satin ornate vase. 48.50

Blue "Delft" bird house inset. 7.50

Delft 8 1/2"x8 1/2" tray 0.00

Pr. multi cased Spangle glass shoes, app. leaf rigareo, ea. 20.00

app

HOUSE OF MEMORIES
Woodville, Wisconsin

Montgomery Ward catalog, 1/w 1883, v.g. cond., with wholesale grocery catalog & order blank. $28.00

Butler Bros. dry goods, notions, etc., Jan. 1898, 10x13", 44 pp., v.g., with order blank. $3.50

G. Sommers & Co., St. Paul, 1897 w/Holiday, 154 pp., 10x13", 25 pp toys & dolls, thousands of items. $8.00

Letters, by Henry Thoreau, first ed. excel. $5.00

Old school desks, shipped knocked down. Shipping extra. Singles, $5; doubles $8.00

Town Hall Tonight, by Harlowe Hoyt. DC. $6.50

Ex. app

LOWRY'S ANTIQUES

50 Bissell Ave. Youngstown 4, Ohio

3 Jewel with Dewdrop mugs, each $4.25

Pogo Stick water pitcher, late, base chip 2.00

Paneled Dewdrop open compute 8.00

Touring plate, 8 3/4" dia., sml. under flake 3.50

Carlsbad dresser tray 5.00

Batzenberg round table cover, 51" diam., beautiful 5.00

Very old white porc. door knobs, pr. 6.00

Stamp please. Transportation extra. app

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

Little Widows." This was recorded in 1917 by Miss Rice, Marion Evelyn Cox, Ballard and Harvey Hindemyer. On the other side Vernon Dalhart sings beautifully "There's Egypt in Your Dreamy Eyes."

In May, 1924, Edison proudly announced an innovation — a series of dance records on which an orchestra played the complete number, followed by a vocal rendition of the same selection in waltz or fox-trot tempo. The first of these was 51318, with Ballard singing "Don't Mind the Rain," after it had already been played by the Top Notchers — whoever they were. The reverse side had the same group performing "Just Like a Baby," followed with a vocal rendition by James Doherty.

Although this combination of dance and vocal never became especially popular, a good many records of that type were made, and Ballard probably sang more of the vocal portions than anyone else. In fact, after the "two-in-one" discs, as they were called, were introduced, his Edison work was restricted almost entirely to them.

The tenor made his final appearance for Edison in the February, 1926, supplement on 51673, when he sang the chorus of "Fond of You," played as a fox-trot by Ernie Golden and his Hotel McAlpin Orchestra. The reverse side is a better known song, "A Cup of Coffee, a Sandwich and You," played by Mike Speciale and his Hotel Carlton Terrace Orchestra, with refrain by Arthur Hall. This record was issued a year and a half before Edison adopted the new-fangled electric process, and as far as I know, it constitutes Ballard's last work for any record company. The Edison business was declining and many of its standby artists were being dropped. That probably was the reason Ballard ceased to sing for Diamond Discs.

Whatever the reason, he still had almost a quarter of a century of life remaining. Apparently, he continued to live in New York for several years before returning to Syracuse and working as a gem expert in a jewelry store. (I wonder when and where he received his specialized training). During his 15 years or so as an active recording artist, he did excellent work. It is a pity that a considerable part of his recorded repertoire doesn't bring out the true beauty of his voice and singing style.

FOUR WINDS

- 5000 Gulf of Mexico Dr. Sarasota, Fla.
1. Blue glass, 2 panel oval bowl, 8x6x2 1/2", has a V shaped chip out of edge, only $6.
2. Blue milk glass round scroll dish, 4x1 1/2", $8.50.
3. China mug type cup with handle, gold dec. with scene P.O. Milwaukee, Wis., $4.
4. Custard glass, large round bowl, wreath pattern, similar to Shell & Scroll, no dec., $8.50.
5. Custard glass - salt, pepper & sugar shakers, panel & teardrops. 1 top missing, tops need plating. Unusual, $15.
6. Cloisonne medallions. 1 pr. round, 1 pr. club. 1 oval, very colorful both sides, $5 pr., $3 single.

Transportation extra.

app

NEW YORK TIMES SUNDAY MAGAZINE FEATURES COLLECTING

THANKS to the many readers of HOBBIES Magazine who sent clippings from the Sunday, February 20, edition of the New York Times Sunday Magazine with the interesting story by Barney Lefferts of the Times staff. Mr. Lefferts headed his article "Who Collects What and Why." Many friends of HOBBIES Magazine through the years are mentioned in the article, with their comments and thoughts on collecting. In these days when so many are wanting international peace, "there's food for thought" in Mr. Leffert's lead paragraphs. He says:

"Sergei Khrushchev, son of Khrushchev, made news recently by sending a Brooklyn man named Aminadov Glanz fifty-four butterflies. The deed was done in the name of retroactive gratitude, Glanz having pressed a consignment of Lepidoptera on young Khrushchev when the latter visited his insect shop last fall.

"A simple case of East-West cooperation? Possibly. But an incident additionally illustrative, if one pokes beneath the surface, of the universality of that special species of humanity that answers to the name Collector.

The collector in America is known familiarly as Legion and his numbers increase with each passing year. He feeds on stamps, coins and autographs; rocks and muskets; beer coasters, cast-iron piggy banks, glass elephants and cloisonne. Because he threatens to overwhelm the non-collector—a pitifully small minority group, as it is—it may be useful to assess the nature of his accumulations and discuss the motivations that drive him to stuff his living quarters with objets.

"The variety of the collector's experience is initially shocking to the uninformed."

Mr. Lefferts observed also: "About half of each issue of HOBBIES—

JEANETTE TUCKER

254-06 Northern Blvd. Little Neck 62, N. Y.

Child's ice cream freezer, like new, cuts. $4.00

Crust set, so. pewter base, 5 compl. pcs. 15.00

President Commem. plate, all Pres. to F.D.I., 12" 7.50

Souv. steril. tsp., Patrick Henry, rare. 4.50

Cigar-band lined bottle, Amer. Eagle, Pres. 3.50

Bennington-type flask 6", emb. man/plce. 12.50

Cow bell, v. early, h. made, orig. clapper, 7" 5.00

Stamp please for Spring List, inquiries. Ship. extra. app

JERRY SLOANE*221 East 31st St.*New York 16, N. Y.

Rare offering ram's head bowl with matching candlesticks in lavender having the original gilt. Belknap frontispiece & 32-A. Sold as a set at $225.

Slag Dolphin candlesticks in a vibrant peacock coloring. 5 1/4" high. $125 the pair.

The above pieces are in mint condition.

Transportation will be extra. app

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Vernon Dalhart

By JIM WALSH
PART I

I. The Hotel Clerk

At 5 o'clock of the afternoon of Wednesday, September 15, 1948, a 65-year-old night clerk for the Bar-num Hotel died in the Bridgeport, Conn., Hospital.

Probably few of the doctors and nurses who had attended the dead man knew that less than a quarter of a century before he had been a famous tenor who had experienced one of the most remarkable careers in American musical history. He had sung successfully in opera, both light and grand, and had been even more successful on the concert stage. He had won a deserved reputation as one of the most versatile and accomplished recorders of popular music and had made hundreds of records of sentimental ballads and comic songs.

Then, after the so-called "hill-billy" tunes came into vogue, he had been recognized as the leading exponent of that type of song. From 1925 to 1930 he probably made more records—thousands of them—than any other singer—and was almost unquestionably the biggest selling recording artist of that five-year period. His first Victor "hillbilly" was the most popular vocal record ever made up to that time and, because of its curiously complex and confusing history, caused more ill feeling and resulted in more expensive, long continued legal action than any other disc in the annals of sound recording. And the singer himself had a personality and character seemingly as complex and baffling as his most famous recorded production.

The dead man, whose legal name was Marion Try Slaughter, had made records under a bewildering variety of disguises—nobody knows precisely how many, but two score probably would be a conservative estimate. He was, however, best known to record buyers under his stage name, Vernon Dalhart.

II. Descent Into Obscurity

The Vernon Dalhart, who lay dead in the Bridgeport Hospital, had come a long way, accomplished much and suffered much since his birth at Jefferson, Tex., on April 6, 1883. He had been a leader of his profession for years, and had made—and lost—a fortune. After several years at the crest of popularity, his vogue had vanished as the record industry collapsed in the depression of the early 1930's, and he had descended into obscurity. Just six days before his death, I met two of his former associates at a party for pioneer recording artists in Garden City, N. Y., and asked them where Dalhart was and what he was doing. Both

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor. — Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinorah: Sei vendicata—any number, size or coupling; outside or center start.—Alda Favia-Artsay, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

WANTED: Trombone records by Arthur Pryor. — Steve Gilman, Jamestown, Rhode Island. my148

WANTED: HILLBILLY RECORDS by Carter family, Uncle Dave Macon, Cliff Carlisle, Luke Baldwin, Frank Hutchison, Charlie Poole, Monroe Brothers, Charley Blake, etc. — Don Wahle, 1128 Keller, Louisville 13, Ky. je3084

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. je120061

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold. — James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. je3084

OVER 100,000 hard - to - get records, 1903 to L.P. — Jack's Record Cellar, 400 Haight Street, San Francisco 17, Calif. d126121

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists. — Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. jly3618

FREE "Personalities" catalogs - rare records and broadcasts by radio, stage, screen, television personalities. — Amalgamated Records, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. o6276

Cylinder Records - 4 Minute list 25c; 2 Minute list 25c. List cost refunded with first purchase. — Dexters, 421 W. Arbor Vitae, Inglewood, Calif. my3255

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold. — Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. my3065

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (Stamp please.) my3253

CLASSICAL RECORDS: Regular auctions by mail. Domestic and imported items. Books, catalogs, autographed photographs. Condition always given prime importance and absolutely as represented. — Georg Pluck, Waterloo Village, Grass Lake, Mich. my3084

FOR SALE: Hundreds of disc and cylinder records, many types of early phonographs, 25c for lists. Also "Evolution of the Phonograph," by Walter Welch and Oliver Reed, a complete history of the phonograph, 576 pages, regular price $9.95. — Coppernoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. my3257

MASSIVE disc and cylinder records lists for 1960 now ready. 50c each list. Also many records wanted. Send stamp for record wanted list. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. my3084

RECORDS FOR SALE. Private collection of 50 years. Columbia, Victor, Fort-eign labels, Edison Disc, Victrola, McCormack, Caruso, Kreisler, etc. — Mrs. George R. Saunders, 1329 21st Way So., Birmingham 5, Alabama. jly3234

MUSIC ROLLS WANTED

PLAYER PIANO music rolls bought, sold and traded, all makes and types.—D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Md. je124431

PIANO ROLLS WANTED: all types. Send list, receive cash offer by return mail (list returned). — M. Montgomery, 722 Spring St., Ann Arbor, Mich. s128041

PLAYER ROLLS WANTED: 58, 65, 88 note, reproducers and organ rolls. Also advertising material and catalogs on players, rolls, coin players and musical novelties. Tell me what you have and price, I'll tell you what I want. — Carl Barker, Moylan, Pa. jly3656

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED: Edison and Columbia cylinder phonographs and records. Disc phonos with horns, roller organs, music boxes, and melodeons.—Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. je3084

WANT: Mills Violano, Wurlitzer band organ, Seeburg Orchestrion, other coin operated music machines, roller organs and musical curios. Calliope music boxes and Hokey-Pokey wagon steam engines.—Halley, 2430 Gallows Road, Falls Church, Virginia. my3085

WANTED: Early and unusual phonographs, music boxes, Hurdy Gurdys, monkey organs, roller organs, antique and unusual bicycles, handcuffs, records. Send stamp for large wanted list. — Nugent, R.F.D. 6, Box 33, Richmond, Va. my3215 his former singing partner, the late Carson Robison, and Bob Miller, who wrote many of the songs Dalhart recorded, said they had no idea what had become of him.

Yet when the metropolitan press learned Vernon Dalhart had died, his passing was treated as a colorful "story" and given generous space. One newspaper published an estimate, which I think exaggerated, that he had made a million dollars from his "Prisoner's Song" recordings alone. And all the papers recalled details of the bizarre law suit touched off by the amazing success of his record of "The Wreck of the Old 97."

A fine newspaper summary of Dalhart's life and achievements - though it contains a few inaccuracies - was published by the New York Herald Tribune. I quote it, somewhat condensed:

III. Herald-Tribune Obituary

VERNON DALHART DIES; SINGER OF 'PRISONER SONG' . . . Believed First Professional Hillbilly Minstrel; Also Known for 'Floyd Collins'

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 16.—Vernon Dalhart, 65, considered the first of the professional hill-billy singers, died at Bridgeport Hospital last night after a long illness. He introduced "The Prisoner's Song," one of the nation's all-time hits, and his records, made mostly in the late 1920's, were reputed to have sold 2,000,000 copies.

He retired in 1931, in modest circumstances, despite earnings from his songs of several hundred thousand dollars. In his last years he was a teacher of voice culture with a studio at Bridgeport.

Took Charles Edison's Tip

In 1925, Vernon Dalhart was a more or less obscure tenor who had appeared in musicals including "The Girl of the Golden West" with John Charles Thomas and in vaudeville at the old Hippodrome. He was trying without much success to invade the young record industry when Charles Edison, son of the inventor of the phonograph, suggested he put aside operatic and light operatic numbers and try a Southern song instead.

As Mr. Dalhart recalled later, he first recorded "The Wreck of the Old 97." He added "The Prisoner's Song" merely to fill the other side.

The resulting record made history. Almost immediately, "The Prisoner's Song" was being sung and wailed in speakeasies, fraternity houses and theaters all over the country. It sold 225,000 copies in four months and is still being sold. R.C.A.-Victor, first of a dozen companies for whom Mr. Dalhart recorded it, estimated total sales at two or three million records, and Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., which holds the copyright, said sheet music sales totaled more than 3,000,000. Its royalties probably have totaled $100,000.

Its origin is lost in a confusion of stories, several versions contributed by Mr. Dalhart himself. Sometimes he claimed authorship. More often he credited the song to his cousin, Guy Massey, a wandering singer with a tragic life who died at 27, just as his song was becoming famous.

'Death of Floyd Collins'

Mr. Massey's name is listed as author on the published version. Both the tune and the theme, however, appear in the folk music of Tennessee and Kentucky and in old cowboy and prison songs. A consensus of authorities is that Mr. Massey picked these up in his travels and combined them in a song which Mr. Dalhart edited into its final version.

After "The Prisoner's Song" Mr. Dalhart was kept busy by record companies. Until 1928 he worked with Carson Robison of Pleasant Valley, N. Y., who wrote some of the many songs they recorded. Among their best sellers were "My Blue Ridge Mountain Home," "The Bird on Nellie's Hat," "Little Green Valley" and "The Death of Floyd Collins," the latter a topical lament of the youth who died trapped in a Kentucky cave.

Mr. Dalhart was born Marion Try Slaughter on a ranch near Texarkana, Tex. He studied voice at the Dallas Conservatory of Music and moved to New York on recommendation of his teacher. It was then he assumed his professional name, taken from two Texas towns of Vernon and Dalhart. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Sally Lee Slaughter, and a daughter, Mrs. Lewis A. Shea of Westport, Conn.

IV. Some Changes and Corrections

Although the Herald-Tribune obituary notice was excellent, a re-reading has brought a few errors to my attention.

The speculation that Dalhart's records sold 2,000,000 copies is a ludicrous under-estimate, if it is intended to refer to all the records he made for all companies. Even if it applied only to his best selling disc, the Victor which combined "The Wreck of the Old 98" and "The Prisoner's Song," it would still be too low.

There is no way of knowing how many millions of Dalhart records were sold, but even before he scored his sensational success with Victor's No. 19427 he was singing as a free-lance for most American companies. After he turned out the biggest selling vocal "platter" that had ever been made, he worked, without exception, for all record companies in the Eastern United States. In the late 1920's his voice could be heard (even though the label may not have called him Vernon Dalhart) on records with the widest possible range of prices. He was on the cheapest discs, such as Grey Gull, Radiex and Madison (the latter were sometimes sold by ten cent stores for a dime apiece), and the three-for-a-dollar type which included Perfect, Cameo, Banner and Domino. His Edison Blue Amberol cylinders cost 35 cents. He was on Columbia's 50 cent Harmony and Velvet Tone labels; and on the standard 75 cent brands, among them Victor, Columbia, Brunswick and Okeh. His Edison Diamond Discs cost $1 and $1.50. (All his Edison hillbillies were a dollar.) The amount of work he must have done during his most productive five-year span staggers the imagination. Sometimes a tired sound crept into his voice, as on his Columbia record of "The Bum Song."

The Herald Tribune says Dalhart was a voice instructor during his last years. My statement that he was a hotel night clerk is taken from the death certificate issued by the Connecticut State Department of Health, containing information given by his son-in-law. It is of course likely that Dalhart taught singing before changing to the hotel job or that he combined the two.

The certificate also says he lived in apartment 1 at 2825 Fairfield Avenue, Bridgeport. His father was Robert Slaughter and his mother's maiden name was Mary Jane Castlebury. Both were born in Jefferson, Tex. (There is some uncertainty as to whether Dalhart was born in the town or on a ranch nearby.) Dr. Benjamin Horn certified he had attended Dalhart from January 14 to September 15, 1948. The funeral directors were Mullins & Redgate and the burial was in Mt. Grove cemetery, Bridgeport. Cause of death was given as coronary occlusion. His wife died October 26, 1950, aged 65, in Westport, Conn.

Dalhart began his "second career" as a singer of hillbilly ditties in 1924, not 1925. He was not "a more or less obscure tenor," but one of the best known singers in the phonograph field. He was not trying to "invade the young record industry" (the phonograph in 1924 was 47 years old), but had already begun a successful recording career in 1916. Although he was not quite so popular as Victor's exclusive stars Billy Murray, Henry Burr and Aileen Stanley, and did not make quite as many records as such outstandingly successful free-lancers as Billy Jones and Ernest Hare, Irving and Jack Kaufman, Charles Harrison, Arthur Fields and Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw, he was still a prolific and highly regarded performer. It may be true that Charles Edison suggested that he try making Southern-style records, but the late Arthur Walsh, who afterwards became a Senator from New Jersey, headed Edison's artist and repertoire department in 1924. Dalhart's first record of "The Wreck of the Old 97," did not, as will be shown later, have "The Prisoner's Song" on the reverse side. The royalties from records and sheet music of "The Wreck" have been far more than $100,000.

If Dalhart and Carson Robison made a record of the 1904 comic song, "The Bird on Nellie's Hat," I have never seen it or come across it in a record catalog. It certainly was not one of their most popular numbers. Dalhart recorded "The Death of Floyd Collins" as a solo rather than a duet with Robison, although the latter probably played the guitar accompaniment in the various versions. "Little Green Valley" was one of Robison's compositions which he recorded chiefly in association with Frank Luther after he had ended his partnership with Dalhart.

Dalhart did not appear in vaudeville at the Hippodrome, but in a Gilbert and Sullivan production during 1913-14, and, according to this entry in a 1929 issue of the Columbia booklet, "Familiar Tunes, Old and New," he was by no means "obscure" after his engagement there:

This famous Southern tenor is known both South and North, and his long list of records proves his great popularity. Vernon Dalhart, who comes from Texas, was nothing short of a sensation when he made his New York debut at its famous Hippodrome. Dalhart was one of the first to carry Southern tunes North, and now devotes his whole time to them. If you don't know him yet, either via the air or

LEFT TO RIGHT

Vernon Dalhart's photo appeared on the cover of the Edison Amberola Monthly for July, 1921, three years before he became the leading singer of "hillbilly" numbers. As these pictures show, Vernon Dalhart strongly believed in athletic exercise for singers.

TOP

Dalhart with a scrapbook of clippings about his starring in "Pinafore."

Columbia New Process records, ask your dealer to play for you one of his records.

A 1926 edition of the same booklet contains a slightly different writeup:

Here's a Southern tenor who is claimed by the South and the North alike. Vernon Dalhart was born in Texas. Early in his career he came to New York to perfect his singing art. The measure of Dalhart's success is recorded in Columbia records, which sell by the thousands. . . Dalhart has organized a musical group called "Dalhart's Texas Panhandlers." The popularity of this organization promises to be second only to that of its leader.

The April, 1958, HOBBIES contained a brief description of Dalhart's home town which I cannot resist quoting:

Jefferson is Texas' first river steamboat metropolis and for years (was) its second commercial city.

The city was laid out in 1842. Sawmills in the surrounding wilderness of tall cypress and pine trees turned out durable lumber for the stately homes that rose quickly. The Big Cypress Bayou was deep enough to accommodate steamboats from New Orleans and intervening points. They brought settlers from the East and glamorous goods for Jefferson and points further West. Long wagon trains bore them, after depositing their loads of buffalo hides and tongues.

The town boasted artificial gas street lights as early as 1857. When the railroads that had been refused rights-of-way by this thriving steamboat center won out with their low rates, Jefferson lost population, but it kept its old Southern glamour and charm.

Dalhart's photo appeared on the cover of the July, 1921, Edison Amberola Monthly, three years before the idea of becoming a hillbilly specialist occurred to him. He had been for several years one of the leading Edison artists and the magazine contained an interview which may conclude this installment. Next month his recording career will be traced from its beginning:

Vernon Dalhart was born in Jefferson, Texas, one of the oldest towns in the "Lone Star State." At the age of 16 he moved to Dallas, Texas, where he went to work in a hardware store. His happy disposition kept him constantly singing at his work. One day a French-Canadian vocal teacher heard him singing and advised him to study. He took the advice lightly, but when other voice culture experts said the same thing, he gave it serious consideration and finally saved enough money to go to New York. There he worked as an assistant shipping clerk in a big piano house from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., and studied after working hours. His first engagement was a small part in "The Girl of the Golden West." He was next engaged as leading tenor for the Hippodrome production of "Pinafore," and then re-engaged for the big road production of the same show. It was following his appearance in "Pinafore" that he became an Edison artist.

(Continued on page 45)

RARE MUSIC BOXES

TO BE SOLD AT

AUCTION

June 15 and 16, 1960

COLLECTION to be sold from "Depression Ranch" (home of the late E. E. Kauffman) at Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, which is located 8 miles northeast of Akron, Ohio. Take route 5 from Akron to route 532 at Cuyahoga Falls, route 532 to Loomis Ave., south 1 block, or 3 miles west of Talmadge on route 532 to Loomis Ave., south 1 block.

This fine collection of music boxes are in playing condition unless otherwise stated. No. 1 - 27" Regina Carona, 12 selection, automatic, floor model with mahogany case, double spring wind. No. 2 - 27" Regina, 12 selection, floor model light wood case, automatic, double spring wind. No. 3 - 27" floor model mahogany case, nickel coin operated. No. 4 - 8 tune Swiss music box with 3 bells. No. 5 - 6 tune Swiss music box. No. 6 - 15½" Stella table model music box in mahogany case. No. 7 - Chantagna roller organ with rolls. No. 8 - very large Swiss type music box with 2 sets of bells with honey bee tappers and drums in inlaid case 36" by 18". No. 9 - large Sublime Haemonie made in U.S.A. inlaid box. No. 10 - 15½" single comb Regina in light wood case. No. 11 - clock with Symphonian type music box. No. 12 - 17" Stella table model in mahogany case. No. 13 - 9½" Symphonian double comb in maple case. No. 14 - musical albums and jugs, four upright organs, one rosewood melodeon, large square piano, 4 different types of Edison phonographs, Angelus paper roll organ, floor model, to be sold as is. Also many fine antiques and a lifetime collection of bells. (Please refer to our ad under the Bell section.)

Wednesday, June 15

1 o'clock afternoon and evening sessions.

Thursday, June 16

10:00 A.M. until sold out.

VERNA F. STARTS — Administratrix of the estate of E. E. Kauffman.

RUSS KIKO — Auctioneer
Canton, Ohio. — GL 5-9357

C. B. DORNHECKER — Associate
North Canton, Ohio — HY 9-7001 mvp

OLD SALZBURG MUSIC BOXES

Bought

Sold

Repaired

Cases expertly refinished, inlays restored and retinted to original condition.

Free Estimates — All Work Fully Guaranteed.

The only shop south of New York specializing in new &

Antique Music Boxes

Located in Historic Old Georgetown in the Nation's Capitol

1645 Wisconsin Ave. N.W.
Washington 7, D. C.

D. Konvalinka, Prop.
Hudson 3-4553

mh16c

OLD JEWELRY

BEADED BAGS

Fashion, as it has often been remarked, is fickle. Time was when status was associated not with a stole nor a little jacket of a certain fur but with a beaded bag. Now largely forgotten, this feminine accessory enjoyed several periods of great popularity. The first occurred in France, England and America in the mid-18th century and the last in the first quarter of the 20th century.

Examples of these delightful bagatelles of other days—125 of them—are now on display in the Randolph Street corridor of the Chicago Public Library. They are part of a collection owned by Constantine Speros of Chicago.

Mr. Speros, of Greek descent, came to the United States from Turkey as a young man. From 1918 to 1933 he owned and operated an establishment that specialized in the making of fine clothes and furs for women. He started the beaded dress craze in Chicago and years later began to collect beaded bags as a nostalgic reminder of earlier modes.

Beaded bags or reticules date back to about 1770 and were used by fashionable women in place of the older handkerchief pockets of embroidered silk and linen. The new bags were large enough to hold these necessities as well as a fan and an essence-bottle. Fashioned of the minutest of beads, the patterns were crocheted on the finest silks. Patterns were difficult to obtain, very elaborate and hard to copy. It has been noted that to lend a pattern for a beaded bag, during this period, was considered the strongest mark of friendship between women.

Very few bags had metal mountings and the rare one that did was usually of French origin. Most of the bags were finished with a binding of black velvet, black or colored silk drawn up with ribbons or drawstrings of the same. Most of the designs were floral or a combination of floral and landscape designs.

Later periods introduced the beaded and netted "misers" purses that could be carried in the hand or tucked into a belt. Many of these were made of cut steel beads. New steel-making techniques in the late 18th century made steel jewelry possible and in some cases provided a discreet replacement for the tinkle of diamonds, which had been dangerous in Revolutionary times.

The cycle of fashion carried the beaded bag into popularity on two or three occasions during the 19th century but it reached the peak in the latter part of that century and the early part of the 20th. Beaded bags were made in France, Austria and Germany and sent to all parts of the world where they were snatched up by style-conscious women. Many of the bags were elaborately framed—some by famous goldsmiths and jewelers. Many of them were examples of the finest handwork while others were cheaper, machine copies. But all were fashion's darling for a brief period of years. Examples of all of these periods can be seen in Mr. Speros' collection at the Chicago Public Library on Randolph St., during the month of April. And who knows, the beaded bag may become fashionable again!

VERNON DALHART

(Continued from page 35)

In a recent interview, when asked what class of music he most enjoyed singing, Mr. Dalhart said:

"My ambition in life is to sing always the songs that please the great masses of the people, to bring into the many dark corners of life just a little more sunshine and happiness. I was educated for grand opera, but really feel that I can bring more happiness to the many with the singing of what we popularly call the heart-songs, the ballad type, with their little strains of love—love of family, home, country and dear ones.

"There should be music in all our lives. It would take away much of the grimness and sorrow, and to those of us who have been gifted with that greatest of all gifts, the singing voice, comes the great duty of giving what joy our voices may bring to those less fortunate."

Although a hard worker and industrious student, Mr. Dalhart has always found time for physical training; in fact, he believes it is a necessary part of the singer's life. When questioned on this subject, Mr. Dalhart replied:

"Many a young and promising musician, in his climb toward success, forgets to cultivate one of the factors most essential to the winning of the greatest possible success. That factor is health.

"I believe in a regular system of physical training for the concert singer. I have a daily schedule which includes a certain number of hours devoted to boxing, handball, swimming and gymnasium exercise, and it all has helped me as a singer. There is much demand on the body in the life of a professional singer. His body must be ready to meet those demands or he will not accomplish what he might otherwise do. Many a promising singer has developed only failure, because of his lack of proper exercise. I have always been a strong advocate of physical exercises for the young singer."

As this article shows, Dalhart was not recording operatic arias at the time he abruptly changed the course of his professional career. He was singing mostly ballads with a sprinkling of comic songs.

(To be continued)

JEWELRY FOR SALE

Earrings Screwbacks (sm., med., lge.), golden or silvered 30c dozen, $2.25 gross. Dangle screwbacks 35c doz., $2.50 gross. Sterling screwbacks 95c doz., $8 gross. Clip earbacks 40c doz., $3 gross. Sterling pierced earbacks (screw type 80c doz. Wire type 45c doz.) Free complete illustrated list of chain, pinbacks, clasps, cards, cuff linkbacks, cameos, boxes, etc. — Folsom's, P.O. Box 52, Medford, Mass. my38841

LARGE STOCK antique jewelry from our vast gold-buying. Charms, brooches, rings, etc. 10 for $6, or better grade ones 10 for $10. — B. Lowe, Holland Bldg., St. Louis, Mo. je3844

CHAIN SLIDES, samples and price on request. Earrings made from old cuff links and pins. All types of antique rings and jewelry repaired and refinished. Estimates sent on all jobs before work is started. All pieces returned by registered or certified mail. — Jemeral Jewelers, 534 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio. jly3487

Large genuine rock crystal stone pendant, beautifully carved pagoda; Mounted on 18" 12 Kt. gold filled neck chain. Only $2.75 plus 28 cents tax. For other jewelry items sold direct, send 25 cents for descriptive price list. — Kenny-Gemcraft, 1500 Pacific Ave., Atlantic City, N. J. my1045

FOR SALE: Antiques and semi-antiques, gold-filled, silver, etc., 10 articles for $6. Assortment includes lockets, charms, pins, rings, etc. Good value. — St. Louis Refining Co., 1115 Holland Bldg., St. Louis 1, Mo. o68801

JEWELRY WANTED

DIAMONDS, Old GOLD, COINS, watches, stickpins, rings, earrings, etc., regardless of condition. Highest prices paid. Prompt replies. Send by registered mail to — Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penna. my124891

ANTIQUE & MODERN JEWELRY from all over the world, bought & sold. Inquiries solicited. — Kenneth R. Park, 31 West St., Boston, Mass. (Est. 1844) jly126351

RINGS, bracelets, earrings, charms: Top prices for quality antique gold and gold-filled jewelry, plain or jeweled, in good condition. For prompt reply ship insured with separate list to — D. H. Marion-Davis, 1925 Westheimer, Houston 6, Texas. f122342

GENNARO
RUSSO
BRANCH OF NAPLES, ITALY
CORAL, CAMEO
ANTIQUE JEWELRY
Cameos Our Specialty

Dearborn 2-2094
32 N. State St. Chicago 2, Ill.
tfc

JEWELRY

From estates and pawnbrokers sales
BRACELETS, 14K flexible 4 strand heavy chain with 1 1/2" Estruscan lock and 3 1/2 ct. rubies $110; Pair flexible bracelets, 18K Georgian chain and 1" Estruscan lock and fringo $175; 18K bangle with diamond $38; 14K buckle bracelet, engraved $55; 14K heavily embossed all around and 3 sapphires $45; 14K spring bracelet of gold beads $25; child's 14K engraved $12; 3 matching 10K thin bangles $30 set; set 3 14K very thin bangles $33;
RINGS, Diamond cluster, 5 diamonds set high in prongs $75; 25 pt. diamond and amethyst set diagonally in old twin setting $85; 30 pt. perfect blue white diamond with 30 pt. deep sapphire each side, each in square setting in a row in platinum $85; 45 ct. Siberian emerald cut amethyst in 4 prong setting $65; 3 30 pt. amethyst in a row $25; large emerald cut topaz $35; 5 1/2 milo. pearl with 1/2 ct. fiery opal each side $48; 3/4" jade $22; diamond guard ring $15; 18K safety pin $12;
Heavy chain necklace or watch chain 39" long with large slide $125; Pin & Earring set - amandino garnets, pearls and fringo $135; pair earrings. Colonial lady handpainted on ivory $45; 14K white gold wrist watch, double bracelet, 4 diamonds each side watch $38; 10K gold key wind watch, gold face $35.
Photos 25c - jewelry sent on approval for 5 days on receipt of check. Prompt refund if not what you want.

CARRIAGE HOUSE ANTIQUES

166-15 89 Ave. — Jamaica 32, N. Y.

myy

Vernon Dalhart

By JIM WALSH

PART II

I. Columbia Recordings

When the young Texas tenor, Marion Try Slaughter, selected his stage name he combined it from two towns near which he had grown up—Vernon and Dalhart. But he seems not to have made it clear how Dalhart should be pronounced. Nearly all record collectors say it to rhyme with "pal heart," but a 1927 Brunswick catalog gave it a broad A sound and indicated it should be called "doll heart."

Pronunciation aside, the first mention I have found of Vernon Dalhart as a recording artist is in the June, 1915, catalog of Edison Diamond Discs. Near the end of a list of "Artists Who Have Made or Will Make Edison Records" occurs the entry: "VERNON DALHART, Tenor. American tenor of experience in Grand Opera and Operetta."

That entry notwithstanding, no Dalhart records are listed in the catalog and another two years went by before his name appeared in an Edison publication. It is possible that the tenor had done some recording for Edison, but Mr. Edison had rejected the trials.

Dalhart's first record for any important company may have been Columbia 2108, "Just a Word of Sympathy," which appeared in the December, 1916, supplement. It was mated with "I Know That I Got More Than My Share," sung by another promising tenor, "Robert Lewis" (Lewis James). The description was brief: "Vernon Dalhart, a former member of the Century Opera Company makes his initial bow with Robert Lewis, a singer from the West of decided merit." Dalhart's song is attractively sung, but the record was not a good seller and was cut out when the 1919 catalog appeared.

The tenor had it hard to establish himself with Columbia. He was not heard from again on the "Note the Notes" label until August, 1918, when he sang a World War I song, "Paul Revere (Won't You Ride For Us Again?") coupled with a Peerless Quartet offering of perhaps one of the least attractive sounding titles on record, "France, We'll Rebuild Your Towns For You." The war ended a few months later and this record went into oblivion.

Vernon Dalhart's name disappeared from the Columbia catalog in 1920, but reappeared in January, 1922, when he sang one of the "mammy" songs which were then ravaging the country. It was "Weep No More, My Mammy," and was doubled with Al Jolson singing his great hit, "April Showers."

In February, Dalhart was back in a duet with Al Bernard, the brilliant blackface comedian, with whom he had struck up a brief partnership. They sang "I Want My Mammy," and the supplement writer said: "Dalhart and Bernard bring out, with a depth of feeling and a wealth of harmony, the words of this melodious piece." On the reverse, Edwin Dale, who was really Charles Hackett, stepped down from his Metropolitan Opera environment to sing "That's How I Believe In You."

Dalhart returned in May with "Pick Me Up And Lay Me Down In Dear Old Dixieland," with Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw occupying the other side in one of the interminable crop of "mammy" songs, "Weep No More, My Mammy." A little later he sang "Hawaiian Rainbow," coupled with Frank Crumit's version of "Waikiki, I Hear You Calling Me." And there, for the time being, Dalhart's Columbia career again came to a halt. He was not heard from again as a Columbia singer until 1924.

II. Emerson Discs

Emerson seems to have been the first record company to use Dalhart's services consistently. Victor Emerson had quit his job as Columbia's recording expert in 1916 to start his own company, and Dalhart's records began to appear before Emerson had been in business a year, producing the poor quality 7-inch double-faced records that sold for a quarter and supposedly could be played equally well in either lateral or vertical position.

An Emerson catalog issued early in 1917 listed seven discs on which Dalhart occupied one or both sides and more may have been published later. Most had special accompaniments arranged by the Emerson mu-

In this 1923 photograph Dalhart is pretending to be annoyed with his accompanist, who hasn't been identified. Could she be Dalhart's wife or daughter?

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

VERNON DALHART
in the late 1920's

sical director, Arthur Bergh. These usually consisted of violin, 'cello, and piano, but sometimes two violins were brought into play. In numerical order, the Emerson Dalhart records were:

No. 798, "The World is Hungry for a Little Bit of Love," coupled with "My Hawaiian Sunshine," sung by Gus Van and Joe Schenk; 7104, "Can't Yo' Heah Me Callin', Caroline?" doubled with "Mother Machree," by Henry Pinckney; 7127, "I Know I Got More Than My Share" (coupling, "It's Not Your Nationality," by William Scherfer); 7132, "When Shadows Fall" and "Sometime," both by Dalhart; 7174, "Li'l Gal" and "Deep River," the latter adapted and arranged by Bergh; 7183, "Off From Rio," combined with "Off to Philadelphia," a baritone solo by the veteran John W. Myers; and 7192, "Till the Clouds Roll By" and "You Said Something," two musical comedy hits written by P. G. Wodehouse and Jerome Kern.

These little Emerson records aren't easy to find nowadays, but if you have some don't spring to the conclusion that they are worth a lot of money. And please don't send me lists of records you want to sell by Dalhart or other artists. I don't have time to read, reply to, and return unsolicited record lists. As I have said many times, the average old "popular" record is of interest because of its musical value or historical associations rather than monetary worth. Records of this type were sold in too large quantities to bring big prices today. Those by Dalhart, as well as other performers of his period, are mostly worth about 50 cents each in good condition.

III. Debut With Edison

Vernon Dalhart began achieving status as an important recording artist when his first Edison records appeared, some two years after his name had been published in the 1915 Diamond Disc catalog. His progress was as rapid with Edison as it had been slow with Columbia.

The following appeared in Edison Diamond Points for June, 1917:

Vernon Dalhart is an American tenor who will soon make his Edison debut. His first stage experience was acquired in "The Girl of the Golden West." He also sang a leading role in the revival of "Pinafore" at the New York Hippodrome in 1913 and 1914.

(Referring to Dalhart's appearance in Puccini's "Girl of the Golden West" opera, the late Fred Rabenstein, who was associated with the Edison company for many years, told me he understood the tenor lost his job because of a ludicrous happening on stage. In one scene a character was supposed to pick up a bowl and drink feverishly from it. Fred said he was told that one night a practical joker coated the inside of the bowl with limburger cheese. He wasn't sure whether Dalhart was accused of applying the coating or whether it was he who picked up the bowl and objected to the fragrance. At any rate there was a fight in view of the audience between the joker and the drinker, and both men were fired. At least, so the legend goes. The whole thing very likely never happened, but I mention it because of the story's amusing nature).

Dalhart's first Edison record, and probably the best record he ever made, appeared as a Blue Amberol cylinder in the list for June, 1917. It was No. 3185, "Can't Yo' Heah Me Callin', Caroline?" and it was a masterpiece of interpretative dialect singing from the first note to the last. "Caroline" has been recorded by many other singers, including those of such diverse talents as George Mac Farlane, Frank Coombs, Al Bernard, and Reinald Werrenrath, but none of them came close to Dalhart. Although Dalhart sings it in Negro dialect there is no trace of the minstrel show type of burlesque intonation. The whole thing rings as true as if a thoroughbred Negro tenor were being heard. A striking feature of Dalhart's singing was the depth of expression, intense feeling and apparent sincerity that he could put into type of song from a hill-billy ballad to an operatic aria. In this respect, I think, he was unequalled by any other popular artist.

The Diamond Disc version of this wonderful piece of character singing came out in August, 1917, and was so successful it became one of the 300 most popular Edison records. The description said:

You must realize, even when you have only heard "Can't Yo' Heah Me Callin', Caroline?" once that this is quite different from the usual "coon song." It is a really artistic, old-fashioned darky love song. Vernon Dalhart sings it with tremendous effect. He gets the real darky whine. This is probably the best rendition of its kind ever recorded.

"Caroline" was paired with a beautiful rendition of "Indiana" by the three ladies who then comprised the Homestead Trio—Gladys Rice, Betsy Lane Shepherd, and Amy Ellerman.

Dalhart's peculiar ability to sing naturally in Negro dialect was mentioned in the Edison Amberola Monthly for December, 1918:

Amberola owners all know Vernon

VERNON DALHART,
as he appeared as a concert singer

Dalhart's proficiency in singing Negro melodies. He was recently asked how he ever learned such perfection in Negro dialect.

"Learn it?" he said. "I never had to learn it. When you are born and brought up in the South your only trouble is to talk any other way. All through my childhood that was almost the only talk I ever heard because you know the sure 'nough Southerner talks almost like a Negro, even when he's white. I've broken myself of the habit, more or less, in ordinary conversation, but it still comes pretty easy."

Dalhart's mastery of dialect also was referred to in the biographical sketch of him published in the yearly Victor catalogs from 1920 through 1923:

One of the best light opera tenors in America is Vernon Dalhart, an American, who has made a career for himself in the characteristic American way. He was born in Jefferson, Texas, one of the oldest towns in the "Lone Star State," and one of his earliest experiences was that of a "cow puncher." Since 1912 he has been on the stage, part of the time with the Century Theatre Company of New York. There is no burlesquing in Mr. Dalhart's singing of Negro songs. To quote his own words, he simply imagines he's "back home" again and sings as the spirit and his home experiences dictate.

IV. An Edison Favorite

Dalhart's second Edison appearance was in October, 1917, on a Blue Amberol cylinder. He and Gladys Rice sang "Ain't You Comin' Back To Dixieland?" thus giving Miss Rice, then a girl hardly out of her teens, the distinction of being the first singer with whom Dalhart recorded duets. For some reason the record did not appear as a Diamond Disc.

The tenor's Edison popularity grew steadily and his appearances on both discs and cylinders were regular. The October Diamond Points said.

Vernon Dalhart is rapidly becoming an Edison favorite. His "The Sunshine of Your Smile" will gladden your musical longings. Not in a long time have we heard a more appealing voice than Dalhart's. You may expect frequent Re-Creation of his voice.

The November issue revealed that Dalhart could be engaged to sing in Edison "tone tests" and advised dealers to write for information to a gentleman with the delightfully improbable name of Verdi E. B. Fuller, who had charge of assigning artists to sing in direct comparison with the Edison disc instrument.

Dalhart soon went on a tone testing tour, in which he was assisted by a gifted young lady violinist from Alabama, Miss Adelyne Hood, of whom more will be heard later. On one occasion he gave a tone test in a little town in South Carolina when the temperature was breaking all local heat records, but in spite of this practically the whole town turned out to hear him. Just a few months before, Diamond Points reported the Criterion Male Quartet had given a similar test in a Minnesota town with the temperature 15 degrees below zero.

Apparently Dalhart had difficulty in singing on exactly the same volume level as the phonograph. A dealer in a Western town invited high school boys and girls to come to a tone test and set down their impressions. One keen-eared girl wrote: "The New Edison sang as well as Mr. Dalhart, but not as loud." Miss Hood displayed the fidelity of Edison violin tone by playing in comparison with records made by other performers.

V. Ada Jones' Little Girl

An interesting Edison disc in which Dalhart took part was made January 25, 1918. It was an elaborate version of "The Golden Wedding," a vaudeville sketch which had been a great favorite as recorded by Ada Jones and Len Spencer on Edison cylinders and for various companies before Spencer's death in December, 1914. When the Edison disc was issued the company said it had received more than enough letters to fill a bushel basket asking that "The Golden Wedding" be added to the Diamond Disc catalog.

The leading parts of the old couple who had been married 50 years were played by Miss Jones (in private life Mrs. Hughie Flaherty) and Steve Porter, who took Spencer's old role. Other members of the cast included Marion Evelyn Cox and Dalhart. But the most interesting performer to me was Ada Jones' daughter, Sheilah, then just a few days past 12 years of age. Sheilah, who was not destined to a long life, was paid $5 for saying a few words to "Grandma"—actually her mother. As far as I know this is the only record on which her voice can be heard. It was hard to make and when it was over Sheilah decided—in the words of that dedicated Ada Jones specialist, Milford Fargo—that "singing and record-making were not for her."

Old display advertising for the Edison Phonograph. Walsh collection.

I find the following item from Along Broadway of December 1918, to be of interest:

The Slacker Record Drive in New York owes a great deal of its success to the enthusiastic support of the Edison artists who sang repeatedly on the Public Library steps during the entire week of the drive. They sang within a huge oak replica of a Chipendale Model Edison, and bystanders were heard to remark "What a wonderful imitation!"—and then to retire in confusion when the singer emerged in person instead of on a black disc! Marie de Kyzer, who sang several times herself, brought her husband, Mr. Donald Ross Cummings, with her one afternoon. Mr. Cummings is so tall he said he'd feel uncomfortable inside the phonograph—which was about seven feet high—but he consented to sing on the outside, with Miss de Kyzer as his accompanist.

Vernon Dalhart, too, not only sang, but provided another singer. This time it was a cousin—a coxswain in the Navy—whose uniform and delightful singing of "Caroline" quite captured the audience. . .

I have an idea the cousin in uniform was the ill-fated Guy Massey, whose name is destined to appear often in succeeding installments of this series, when the controversy over who composed Dalhart's greatest hit, "The Prisoner Song," is related.

Mention of the late Marie de Kyzer (she changed her name from Kaiser in 1917) reminds me that one of Dalhart's early Edison assignments was to help re-record the duet, "On Yonder Rock Reclining," from Auber's "Fra Diavolo," which the soprano had originally made with a sweet-voiced New York tenor, Royal Fish. Both Miss Kaiser and Dalhart did a superb job with this captivating melody. It was paired with an ensemble rendition of the Soldier's Chorus from "Faust."

Running down the list of records Dalhart made during his first five years or so with Edison I find many attractive titles. One, a popular song, "My Baby's Arms," which he sang in 1919, impresses me because it recalls the time, many years later, when my brother, Chad, now head of the English department at Beloit College but then a high school student, decided to find out which popular recording artists were most nearly free from tell-tale regional accents. He was unable to detect even one quirk in Dalhart's singing of "My Baby's Arms" that would indicate any sectional origin. It was completely without accent—a feat the more amazing in view of the natural way in which Dalhart sang in Negro dialect and was later to seem the embodiment of the Southern mountaineer. I have no doubt that Vernon Dalhart was one of the most versatile singers who ever lived. His enunciation and pronunciation were usually irreproachable, but in his Edison record of "Joan of Arc" he makes the curious mistake of pronouncing "legions" as "legends."

VI. More Fine Edison Records

In 1919 Dalhart made a fair Edison record of the big comic song hit, "The Alcoholic Blues," but this was the sort of thing Billy Murray sang much better for Victor and Columbia. Going back to 1917, his rendition of "There's Egypt In Your Dreamy Eyes" is charming. The beautiful melody by Herbert Spencer had surprisingly literate words, with genuine poetic feeling, written by Spencer's wife, Fleta Jan Brown. Recollections of the tenor's light opera days came when he recorded the Nightingale's Song from "Pinafore" and made a duet with Miss Rice of "We Strongly Now Will Try Together" from "La Fille de Madame Angot." "The World Is Hungry for a Little Bit of Love," which he had also made for Emerson, likewise is of light opera type.

Another Dalhart Diamond Disc of exceptional interest is 80482, on which he combines two songs, "Night, My Love And I," and the old spiritual, "Nobody Knows The Trouble I See." In semi-sacred vein, he recorded Stephen Adams' "Star of Bethlehem."

Turning to the "straight" popular songs, his 1917 version of "I'm All Bound Round With the Mason-Dixon Line" did well, and his 1919 singing of "Carolina Sunshine," with the help of a mixed chorus, is exquisite. He recorded "Rock-a-bye Your Baby With a Dixie Melody" for both Edison and Victor and won the Edison supplement writer's praise for singing it in his own way and not imitating the mannerisms of Al Jolson, whose stage renditions had made the song a hit. He was praised, too, for the fervor with which he sang "Sweet Emalina, My Gal." His record of a pretty English ballad, "That Dreamy, Dreamy Lullaby" had a striking accompaniment by the Alessios-De Filipis Mandolin Orchestra. He sang a duet of "The Missouri Waltz" with Miss Cox, "Till We Meet Again" with Miss Rice, and his interpretation of "Molly on a Trolley" has a soprano obbligato by Miss Shepherd. He and Miss Rice were also called on to make a Diamond Disc of the Indian song, "Silver Bell," which had been so popular when Ada Jones and Billy Murray sang it on an Amberol cylinder in 1910.

(Continued on page 60)

VERNON DALHART

(Continued from page 36)

Dalhart and Al Bernard, whose Columbia duet record has already been mentioned, gave a splendid rendition, in 1921, of a comic "coon song," "I've Got My Habits On." And he and Miss Rice helped to make phonograph history of a sort when Edison first decided to issue a special series of records to be known as "Flashes From Broadway." These were records manufactured as rapidly as possible and placed on the market in advance of a regular release date to meet the complaints of dealers that the Diamond Discs, because of the painstaking methods used in turning them out, were too slow in appearing with the current popular hits.

The first of the "Flashes from Broadway" was No. 50818, which had on one side "Sunnyside Sal," sung by Rice and Dalhart, and on the other "Melon Time In Dixieland," by the Premier Quartet—otherwise the Harmonizers. Today in the Edison laboratory a copy of this record, with the Rice-Dalhart side facing the viewer is still on display. It is framed and hangs on one of the bookshelves in Thomas A. Edison's library, about ten feet from the inventor's roll-top desk. The inscription printed beneath the record is as follows:

"First 'Flashes from Broadway.' Recorded 2:30 p.m., June 2, 1921. First prints 1:30 p.m., June 5, 1921. On sale in Chicago, June 7, 1921. Airplane—New York to Cleveland—plane, Cleveland to Chicago. On sale San Francisco, June 9, 1921. Plane New York to Cleveland. Train—Cleveland to Omaha. Plane—Omaha to Frisco."

Unfortunately, in spite of all this rapid motion, neither side of the record was anything even approaching a hit, and the "Re-Creation" over which so much aviation energy was expended was never more than a poor seller.

Dalhart acquired one of the first of his many assumed recording names on July 23, 1923, when he made an Edison record of a comic song, "Stingo Stungo" (an obvious imitation of that great comedy classic, "Oh By Jingol!"), under the alias of Robert White. An inter-office note from W. A. H. Cronkhite to another Edison official said:

"Mr. Folsom—This song was sung by Vernon Dalhart under the name of Robert White. He prefers to sing songs of this kind under another name. If he can be worked into this line satisfactorily it will relieve the too frequent use of Billy Jones."

The tenor made three more comedy records under the disguise of Robert White—"Oh Sister, Ain't That Hot?" "Hard Hearted Hannah" and "Circus Days," the latter a revival of the 1912 hit better known as "Oh, You Circus Day." Looming just ahead of him was his emergence as a singer of hill-billy tunes when he would use an almost innumerable number of assumed names and so completely change his singing style as to make some listeners wonder whether one man could be so versatile or there were really two Vernon Dalharts.

(To be continued)

HINDU BELLS

(Continued from page 57)

the two full-length figures back to back, forming the handle. The figures are always quite similar except for the faces; one resembles a human's face while the other resembles a monkey's.

There are various interpretations of the figures on this so-called evolution bell. Some claim that the two faces are those of Yayu and the monkey nymph Anjana, parents of Hanuman. And indeed, on some bells one face does appear to be more masculine than the other. Still another interpretation says that the two figures are those of Anjana before she was turned into a monkey nymph, and after. In view of the fact that bells on which these pairs of figures appear are called evolution bells, the latter interpretation would seem to be the more correct.

There are countless variations in the detailed designing of India's old religious bells. These are accounted for by the fact that the bells were individually made. Metal sculpture having been the dominant art in India for centuries, it is not surprising to find a highly pleasing artistry in both workmanship and materials. Furthermore, because the Hindu mind is always preoccupied with religion it is only natural that India's best artistic efforts were lavished on her prayer bells. Nowhere is all this more evident than in the various evolution bells. There are seldom two with the same identical handle. The proportions and decorations of the bell proper also vary.

A most interesting feature of the finer evolution bells has been pointed out by the late B. A. Lascelles, a follower of this column for many years. Mr. Lascelles had the opportunity of studying Hindu bells and their uses at first hand, and he observed that many of the finer larger evolution bells were being used as impromptu rice bowls by mendicant priests. Observing more closely, Mr. Lascelles found that the handles unscrewed and the clappers unhooked so that the bell might easily be inverted to serve as a rice bowl. He also noted that the finish on the inside of these particular bells was unusually fine and highly polished.

It should scarcely be necessary to point out that evolution bells usable as rice cups are far more rare than the ordinary ones.

CLINTON ANTIQUE SHOP

46 Center St. Clinton, N. J.

MRS. LOUISE MASTRANGEL

Small CLOISSONNE JAR 2 3/4" hl. to flint on cover. Excel. condition $3.25.
MINIATURE (salesman's sample) flint glass CUSPIDOR, proof, $3.
Pat. glass CAMPAIGN MUG "Wm. McKinley - Protection & Prosperity" $3.75.
Pair diamond-point FLINT GLASS FOOTED SALTS, tops 2x2", $4.
6 BUTTER CHIPS; mark "L.S. & S. Carlsbad, Austria", pink roses, each $1.
3 HAVILAND, LIMOGES footed 2-handled cups & saucers, blue cornflower pat. w. gold-leaf, mint cond. 6 pcs. $10.
Pair SEVRES CERUBS 5" hl., white & gold, playing musical instruments. Very lovely, $13.50.
SUGAR SHAVER, fine china; exquisite rose dec., $5.
IRONSTONE plate, COPPER LUSTER band & flower center, 10" dia., panel edge, fine cond. $3.
Set of 6 OLD FRENCH DESSERT PLATES, scalloped panel border w. sprigs of various flowers in panels, gold-leaf trim, turquoise centers, $10.50.
BRI-DALE TABLECLOTH 76x72", heavy white linen, hand-hemstitched, w. wide border of cherubs embroidered in blue and pink, playing musical instruments & 6 matching napkins. Exceptional $22.
6 sterling "LANCASTER ROSE" pat. bouillon spoons $13.
Old iron DOOR STOP, woman riding horseback, gray colors, 7" hl. $4.50; another old iron doorstop, little girl w. big dog, old paint worn off, $2.75.
Gold badge FIN "DAUGHTERS OF AMERICA," enamel w. eagle & Am. flag $3.
Water-color PAINTING, SIGNED "FRED S. COZZENS, '97," Yacht, fine detail w. American flag; title "Vamoure off Point Judith" $12.50.

Every item guaranteed. Add postage for mailable items or by express collect.

Joe

DOROTHY ROSE ANTIQUES

49 East 12th St. New York 3, N.Y.

- Ivory Buddah, 4 hands, 2 of them holding lotus flowers, seated on Lotus flower, (old piece), 6" high, 2 1/2" at base. Has intricate carvings of headrest and neck-lace. Finely carved face ----- 65.00
- Ivory Bearded Warrior on Elephant, beautifully carved (Old), approx. 5 1/2" high ----- 55.00
- Ivory old man & stick, with child, (old), good carving, approx. 5" high ----- 40.00
- Ivory Netsuke, what appears to be family of 3 in hut, nicely done ----- 15.00
- Ivory Netsuke, Frog on box, interesting piece ----- 12.00
- Semi-precious stone, FROG, Tiger eye, 3 1/2" long x 1 1/4" high ----- 20.00
- Semi-precious stone, Rock crystal, 1 3/4" L, 1" H. A nicely done Tortoise and a small one on its back ----- 20.00
- Semi-precious stone of Buddah in Rose Quartz, would make nice cabinet piece, 3 1/2" h. x 3 3/4" long ----- 65.00
- Viennese Bronze Pomeranian Dog, brown & white approx. 3 3/4" from nose to tail, approx. 2 1/4" h. (old) ----- 25.00
- Viennese Bronze Dog, appears to be a collie, in various shades of brown, approx. 4" from ear to end of tail, approx. 3" high ----- 30.00
- Wedgwood Portland Vase, blue with white classical figures, 10 1/2" high, also with classical figure on base in white, old and in good condition ----- 175.00
- Wedgwood old, pair of 8" candlesticks, good condition, blue with white classical figures. ----- 100.00

Collectors Wants on Ivories, Semi-Precious Stones, Viennese Bronzes and Wedgwood Solicited. No Lists. Transportation Extra. Joe

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Vernon Dalhart

By JIM WALSH

PART III

I. Some Additions and Corrections

When I received Vernon Dalhart's Columbia records, I forgot that he sang one under the name of Bob White—a forerunner of the disguise of Robert White, which he adopted five years later in singing comic songs for Edison.

The overlooked Columbia, No. A2541, was issued in July, 1918. It coupled "White's" rendition of "When Alexander Takes His Ragtime Band to France" with Arthur Fields singing "When It Comes to a Lovingless Day." This record was listed only in the 1919 catalog.

In February, when I mentioned Geoffrey O'Hara's Victors, I missed No. 18053, issued in July, 1916. It combined O'Hara singing "Where the Shamrock Grows" with a soprano version of "My Grandfather's Girl" by Jane Kenyon, whoever she was.

I'd also like to correct some recent typographical errors. In April the name of the tenor, Harry Macdonough, came out as Mary Macdonough! Henry Burr's recording career was said to have extended from 1922 to 1929 when it should have been 1902 to 1929. And the title of one of George Wilton Ballard's Edison recordings was given as "When You're Sure I Won't Forget" instead of "When You're Gone—" in May, one of Dalhart's most famous discs, "The Wreck of the Old 97," appears as "The Wreck of the Old 98."

Last December I mentioned that Capt. Frank Cunningham, of Richmond, Va., expressed his intention, some 70 years ago, of making cylinder records to be played at his funeral, and said I wondered whether he did. I have since had a letter (from Mrs. O. J. Mallory, of Farmville, Va., who attended the Captain's funeral) in which my question is answered. Here is part of Mrs. Mallory's communication:

"Both my mother-in-law and I were at Mr. Cunningham's funeral, and he did not sing, as his wife would not allow it to be done. She said she 'couldn't stand it.' It was a very large crowd there. The church could not hold them. They wanted to hear him sing. He was a particular friend of my husband's and a member of the same Masonic Lodge, Meridian Lodge No. 284. He was the past master. . . My husband was a pallbearer. I pass Mr. Cunningham's grave every time I go to my husband's grave in Hollywood (cemetery). On his monument is 'Richmond's Sweet Singer.' The hymn he wanted to sing was 'The Ninety and Nine.' I have heard him sing it many times. He had a very, very sweet voice and was loved by all.

"I am nearly 77 years old, but can remember the day he was buried well. He was very much missed when he passed away, as he was a friend to everyone."

II. Dalhart Records for Victor

Late in 1918, when he was 35, Vernon Dalhart achieved the ambition of nearly every recording artist of those days by being engaged by Victor, whose disc sales exceeded all other companies! His first Victor, No. 18512, appeared in February, 1919, doubled with the Sterling Trio singing "The Pickaninny's Paradise."

The supplement description said: "Vernon Dalhart is a new Victor artist and has a fine medium in which to introduce himself in 'Rock-a-bye Your Baby With a Dixie Melody.' . . . It is a darky song of a 'rolling stone' who has gone back to his mammy to be put to bed in the old style."

This song has made a big hit at the Winter Garden show, 'Sinbad.'" The supplement contained an excellent photo of Dalhart posed behind a stand bearing the sheet music of the song.

Dalhart was back in March with No. 18525, on which he sang "I'm Waiting for You, 'Liza Jane." Again he had the Sterling Trio for "plattermates." They sang "Mummy Mine."

The supplement writer said: "'I'm Waiting for You, 'Liza Jane' is a darky serenade that is the real thing. It has a rhythmic swing, and the words will carry you back to the 'Land of Cotton;' nor will you miss the whistle of the Mississippi steamboat."

This was a promising start, but almost a year went by before Victor marketed another Dalhart record. In February, 1920, on No. 18635, he sang "Bye-Lo," with John Steel occupying the B side with "While Others are Building Castles in the Air."

"Bye-Lo" was composed by Ray Perkins, who for many years has been one of the country's most successful disc jockeys from a station in Denver, Colo. It was Dalhart's only Victor record in 1920.

The tenor's next Victor appearance was in September, 1921, when, on

No. 18782, he sang "Emaline." On the other side Henry Burr obliged with one of his typically melodious ballads, "You Made Me Forget How To Cry."

Dalhart's biggest selling Victor, up to that time, came out in November, 1921, when, on No. 18807, and with the assistance of the Criterion Trio (probably three members of the Criterion Quartet), he sang one of the year's biggest hits, "Tuck Me to Sleep in My Old 'Tucky Home.'" Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw harmonized "Plantation Lullaby" on the reverse.

The next year brought an epidemic of "Mammy" songs touched off by Walter Donaldson's great hit, "My Mammy," and Dalhart did as much as any other singer to keep the torrent of "mammy" songs at full strength.

In May, 1922, on No. 18875, he sang "Don't Leave Me, Mammy." Turning the record over revealed a lovely Ernest R. Ball ballad, "Time After Time," characteristically sung by Henry Burr.

The catalog editor said of Dalhart's contribution: "Out of the hundreds of 'mammy' songs now pouring from the cities, 50 years after the virtual disappearance of the good, old black 'mammy' from inland American life, this is one of the most popular, and deservedly so, for it is one of the best." It was also Dalhart's only Victor record of 1922.

The "Texas tenor" obviously had not established himself with Victor audiences as he had with Edison, for there were no more Victor records by him until the weekly issue for November 16, 1923, when he occupied one side of No. 19168, singing "Mammy's Little Silver Lining."

The B side was taken up with the Peerless Quartet's richly harmonized version of "Memories of Virginia." The supplement included an amusing photo of Dalhart rolling his eyes upward and pretending to tear his hair because of some crime committed by his accompanist (perhaps his wife or daughter), a lady with long hair down her back.

In the December 14, 1923 supplement, The Virginians, directed by Ross Gorman, played a fox-trot, "Stavin' Change," composed by Dalhart's friend, Al Bernard, and Dalhart sang the refrain. A little earlier, in the October 26 list, he had sung the refrain of a fox-trot version of an Irving Berlin song, "Tell All the Folks in Kentucky," played by Charles Dornberger's Orchestra.

Possibly there were a few other Victor dance records in which he was heard. The supplements did not always list the names of "song pluggers."

No more Victor solo records by Dalhart appeared until the history-making No. 19427 appeared in November, 1924. But before the amazing career of that disc (perhaps the most controversial record ever published) can be considered, it will be necessary to provide some background.

III. Miscellaneous Records

During the years when he was singing regularly for Edison and intermittently for Victor and Columbia, Dalhart was also working for other companies. The 1923 Gennett catalog contains three of his characteristic titles, "Carolina Sunshine," "Dear Old Southland," and "Till We Meet Again."

By 1924 he was recording duets for Okeh, Edison, and other companies with Ed Smalle, who on Victor records sang only with Billy Murray, but needed a partner when he offered his clever duet arrangements to competing firms. Their Edison titles included "Mrs. Murphy's Chowder" and "Where Have Those Old-Timers Gone?"

In June, 1924, they appeared in the Okeh supplement with "Back in Hackensack, New Jersey," which had a ukelele accompaniment by Harry Reser. Dalhart and Smalle made a couple of numbers for Edison as the Arkansas Trio (the third member of the trio was banjoist John Cali) and the same ensemble was known on Gennett as the Windy City Duo.

Dalhart appeared on National Music Lovers records as Joseph Elliott, David Harris, and Harry Harris. He sang vocal refrains in the Columbia record coupling "Honeymoon Chimes" and "One Little Smile" by the Hawaiian guitar players, Frank Ferrara and Anthony Franchini.

He also sang in Edison Diamond Disc No. 51144 of "One Little Smile," by the Waikiki Hawaiian Orchestra. Presumably he also played the incidental mouth-harp solo. It probably was his first appearance on records as a mouth-harp virtuoso.

His skilfully performing these widely differing assignments points up what I have said about Dalhart's extreme versatility, which, to anticipate a bit, caused a writer in the December, 1925 issue of The Gramophone, published in London, to speculate on the possibility of there being two singers with the same name:

"Another queer American record is Brunswick 2911 wherein one Vernon Dalhart, a tenor, sings 'The Runaway Train' and 'Chain Gang Song' to an accompaniment of guitar and chromonica—a sort of accordion. People who specialize in out-of-the-way records should secure this, but it is not one that I dare recommend generally with confidence.

"Are there two Vernon Dalharts, as there are two Winston Churchills? The one who sings on Parlophone B5494 is very versatile if he is the same as the Brunswick singer, but I like him less."

The songs Dalhart offered on the Parlophone record were a sloppy bit of moralizing, "It's a Man Every Time, It's a Man" (an answer to "Just a Girl That Men Forget") and "Why Don't My Dreams Come True?" Okeh records were issued in England under the Parlophone label. As for the "chromonica—a sort of accordion" it was really a harmonica.

IV. Some Hill-Billy History

The radio craze swept the United States in 1922 and the record companies viewed its spread with justified concern. By 1923 the record business was still good, but not so good as it had been in 1920 and 1921.

It occurred to some of the officials of the Okeh company, seeking for a means of stimulating sales, that there might be possibilities of good business in sending recording expeditions into the South—especially the Southern mountains—and having native musicians sing and play for "platters" designed primarily for customers below the Mason-Dixon line. This seemed a plausible idea when they recalled how special records by Mamie Smith and other Negro "blues" performers had delighted not only colored listeners but many white ones.

A clear indication that there was a market for hill-billy records was given by the success of Victor No. 19171. On this Wendell Hall, "The Red-Headed Music Maker" from Chicago, sang "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'."

Hall took an old country dance tune, gave it new and funny words and within a few weeks after his Victor record was issued on November 16, 1923, "Rain No' Mo'" took the nation by storm. He also recorded the song for Edison and Gennett, but it was the Victor record that touched off the deluge.

"It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" was Victor's best seller of 1923 and one of the biggest the company had ever known. Early in 1924 newspaper advertisements said more than 2,000,000 copies had been sold within three months, but when I met genial Wendell Hall in Chicago in 1951 he questioned the accuracy of that statement.

Naturally, other artists got into the act. Al Bernard recorded Hall's song for Cameo; Billy Jones and Ernest Hare for Columbia; Hare for Okeh; and Dalhart did his part. He sang it under his own name for Emerson, with a ukulele accompaniment by May Singhi Breen, and the Emerson record was issued under the Regal label with the Bob White alias.

He was called Fred King on his Domino record and Harry Harris on the National Music Lovers. It may be that the vogue of "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" first gave Dalhart the idea there would be money in entering the country music field. A trip he and Ed Smalle made to the South in 1924 may also have helped.

Meanwhile, the Okeh scouting expedition had taken primitive transportable recording equipment to the South. Temporary studios were set up in a number of places, including Asheville, N. C., Atlanta, Ga., Bristol, and Johnson City, Tenn., St. Louis, Mo., and Dallas, Tex., and mountain men and women were invited to come in for tests.

The two most successful hill-billy performers were Fiddlin' John Carson, a middle-aged Georgian who played his own fiddle accompaniments, and a Virginian, Henry Whitter, who sang to his own accompaniment of mouth-harp and "git-tar." One of the numbers Whitter recorded, which became famous as Okeh No. 40015, was "The Wreck on the Southern Old 97," coupled with "The Lonesome Road Blues." The tune of the wreck ballad was taken from "The Ship That Never Returned," composed by Henry C. Work, a song writer of the Civil War era.

He also wrote "Marching Through Georgia," "Grandfather's Clock," "Kingdom Coming," and "Nicodemus." The words described a Southern Railway train wreck which occurred September 27, 1903, on the outskirts of Danville, Va., in which 11 persons were killed and seven injured. The last survivor of the wreck died only a few months ago.

Soon after the wreck occurred country musicians in the Danville area began to sing a doleful ditty describing it, and the song became a favorite throughout the Southern mountains. It was this which Whitter recorded. Most likely owing to the bad equipment his voice sounds terribly nasal and "back country," but the record was a sensation in the South.

It was such a success in fact that Okeh engaged another Virginia musician to make a 12-inch record of the entire number. Because of its higher price the record did not sell well in comparison with Whitter's, but it was much better sung.

The artist, Kelly Harrell, who was born in 1889 in Wythe county, Va., had an excellent voice for a singer of country ballads, and his words came out clearly. Some of Whitter's were indistinct.

I should say, however, I believe the nasal quality of Whitter's recordings was caused by some quirk in the sound processing. I knew him very well after his recording career had virtually ended and there was nothing nasal about his way of speaking, nor did his electric recordings sound through-the-nose.

Henry told me he considered the poor quality of his early Okehs was largely caused by makeshift equipment being set up for a day or two in the rear of somebody's store, where the acoustics were bad.

However that may be, the record by Harrell, who was then living at Fries, Va., but afterwards moved to Fieldale, Va., and who worked in a towel factory, remains to this day,

HENRY WHITTER, A VIRGINIA MOUNTAIN MUSICIAN MADE THE FIRST RECORD OF "THE WRECK OF THE 97." HE USED THIS BUSINESS CARD AFTER HE LEFT THE OKEH COMPANY AND BECAME A VICTOR ARTIST

Left to right: The Virginia Conservation Commission erected this marker at the spot near Danville, Va., where the Southern passenger train, "Old 97," wrecked September 27, 1903. The wreck inspired one of the most famous Southern hill-billy songs. It was the first song of its type which Vernon Dalhart recorded.

—Photo by Albert Via, Jr.

The late Kelly Harrell, a Virginia ballad singer, made the only complete record of "The Wreck of the Southern Old 97."

—Courtesy of his son, E. K. Harrell, Roanoke, Va.

I believe, the only one containing the full version of "The Wreck on (or of) the Southern Old 97" as traditionally sung by mountain musicians.

Whitter's record omitted the first two stanzas sung by Harrell, who died in July, 1942:

"One cloudless morning
I stood on the mountain,
Just watching the smoke from below;
It was coming from a tall,
slim smokestack,
'Way down on the Southern railroad.

"It was Ninety-Seven,
the fastest train
Ever run on the Southern line;
All the freight trains that passes stands aside for 97,
For she's bound to be at stations on time."

Whitter's version began with the third stanza:

"They give him his orders
at Monroe, Virginia, Saying "Pete,
you're way behind time!
This is not 38, but it's old 97—
You must put her in Spencer on time!"

Whitter pronounced "put" as "putt." Take notice of that name, "Spencer." It will be important later.

V. Dalhart Makes His First "Hill-Billy"

Whitter's records, like Fiddlin' John Carson's and Kelly Harrell's, sold so well in 1924, a year when the bottom seemed to be dropping out of the phonograph and record industry, that other companies began to issue hill-billy discs in the hope of sopping up some of the "gravy."

Their actions came to Vernon Dalhart's attention. Perhaps, as the New York Herald Tribune article said, it was Charles Edison who first suggested to him that he try his skill in the country music field.

It may be someone else had the idea or that it occurred to Dalhart himself. At any rate, he must have taken stock and decided he was well equipped for a change in his singing procedures.

He had grown up in the heart of the Texas ranch country and become familiar with cowboy songs, such as "O Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie." Somewhere along the way he had become an expert player of the mouth-harp and Jew's harp and he was an accomplished whistler. All he needed to invade the hill-billy territory was a guitar accompanist.

He found his first accompanist in a Hawaiian native of Portuguese descent—Frank Ferrara. He is seldom mentioned nowadays but in the 1920's he was making best-selling Hawaiian guitar records for every American company.

Ferrara, whose first name was really Palakiko, (some of his records were made under the name of the Palakiko Hawaiian Orchestra) came to this country in 1900 and laid claim to being the first musician to introduce the Hawaiian guitar to American audiences. Even those who abominated Hawaiian music conceded he was a skilful instrumentalist.

Vernon Dalhart's debut as a singer of hill-billy tunes was made in the Edison Diamond Disc supplement for August, 1924, on No. 51361. He had copied the words of "The Wreck on the Southern Old 97" from Whitter's Okeh record, and he sang to the accompaniment of Ferrara's steel guitar and his own mouth-harp playing.

The coupling was poorly chosen—an old-time minstrel song, "I Wasn't Scared, But I Just Thought That I Had Better Go," drolly sung by Ernest Hare. Had the reverse been another hill-billy song—for instance, "Hand Me Down My Walking Cane" which Whitter had successfully sung for Okeh, and Harrell was to sing even more successfully for Victor—sales probably would have been greater.

But, as it was, the record was a tremendous seller by Edison standards, and both Dalhart and the Dia-ings. But I hope the following examples will give at least a small idea of their charm:

(Continued on page 55)

No. 1. Deep metal cup, with clear glass beads sewed to a thread foundation. Two holes in the back facilitate the sewing process. A similar button is of black metal with black glass beads.

No. 2. Convex covered button with silver lustre beads sewed in close formation between bands of black braid. Thread back.

No. 3. A modern button (c. 1940) made of beads strung on wire. A pin-head shank passes through the central bead, securing it to a metal disc which forms the button back. The beads are different colors, and the button is much more attractive than the drawing indicates.

No. 4. Convex covered button of mauve broad-cloth, decorated with black glass beads and black silk cord. Thread back.

No. 5. Sometimes one bead can be as effective as many. This semi-spherical button of green silk is topped by a single bead of black glass. Loop shank of green cord.

No. 6. An unusual button of fine brown silk thread, drawn to a central point, front and back, and ornamented with black glass beads. Metal shank. Sometimes beads are attached to the button edge only, giving a "pin-cushion" effect.

No. 7. Convex covered button with black glass beads and black braid surrounding a black glass button. These cylindrical black glass buttons are known as "bugles." They were very popular during the second half of the 19th century.

No. 8. Flat modern button covered with yellow crêpe and decorated with clear glass beads and mirror studs. Cloth back and canvas shank.

No. 9. Another modern covered button, slightly convex. The blue, pink, red, and silver beads are most effective against the black fabric. Tin back with canvas shank.

No. 10. Similar in type to No. 1, this shallow cup of black metal holds iridescent beads sewn to a thread foundation. I have a curious imitation of this type of button: it is made from an acorn cup, painted black, with metal shank inserted, and black glass beads glued hit-or-miss inside.

WANTED

MRS. EDNA CUNNINGHAM, 407 Valley Drive, Syracuse, N. Y., is still buying and selling your favorite buttons. Write. o6063

NICHOLLS BUTTON BOOKS

BUTTON HAND BOOK..... $ 3.50
Supplement I to Hand Book..... 1.50
Supplement II and Index..... 2.25
Supplement III and Index..... 3.00
All four ordered at one time, $9.00

ORDER FROM

MRS. FLORENCE N. APOSTLE
4806 Fitzhugh Ave.
Richmond 26, Virginia d60p

I've often wondered what poor woman was obliged to concoct such a make-shift button. Whoever she was, I admire her grit and ingenuity!

No. 11. Convex covered button of dark green velvet. The forget-me-nots are rendered in blue beads with yellow bead centers and green bead stems.

No. 12. Typical black Bead-and-Fabric button, convex, with thread back. Black Covered and Needle-work buttons offer a variety of bead arrangements. They are sometimes called "Passementerie Buttons," but the name is not strictly accurate, since it is from the French passement, meaning gold or silver lace.

The word referred originally to dress trimmings of braid, lace, or silk embroidery. However, because such trimmings are often embellished with beads, the term has been applied to beaded trimmings and buttons, as well.

Fashions have changed since some inspired cave-dweller was first thrilled and enchanted by a necklace of shells. Men and women have changed, too, superficially, at least. But beads have changed very little in the thousands of years since they were invented. Their smooth, cool charm still appeals to women, both "savage" and "civilized." Their unique fascination still touches everything that they touch, including buttons.

* Beads and beadwork are a study in themselves. From the ancient Egyptians to the North American Indians; from the bone necklace of the African witch doctor to the finest products of the Venetian glass-makers, they wind their sinuous way through the history of mankind. They have been used in so many countries and in so many ways that much research would be needed to more than scratch the surface of their possibilities. An interesting article about beads and beadwork by Amelia E. MacSwiggan appeared in HOBBIES for April, 1965.

BUTTONS FOR SALE

TEN unused Calicoes, $1.50; 12 railroad, police, fireman uniform buttons, $1.50; 5/8" Calicoes 35c each; large jewels, $1; old glass; large pictures; inlays; Vermont Light Infantry Militia. Approvals with references.—Mrs. T. B. Wakefield, 76 Greene St., Burlington, Vt. jly3024

BUTTON UP with some bargains. 10, 20, 50 or 100 good old buttons with one large and one small picture button free, $1.10. Better selections, $1.50, $2. Money-back guarantee. — Mrs. A. S. Campbell, 788 Bonaventure Ave., N.E., Atlanta 6, Georgia. au3294

ANTIQUE BUTTONS, direct European imports, collectors' items, 18th century buttons, pictorials, crests, dress-earrings, sets, cuff links — Mrs. Margot Jacoby, 250 W. 94th St., New York 26, N.Y. jly124431

$1.00 EACH: 6 calicoes, 6 stencils, 6 picture, 10 glass, 10 overall pants, 20 mix, large jewel, 12 goofies. — Brown's Antiques, 44 Main, Addison, N. Y. s3092

CLASSIFIED AD RATES
8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.
(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

VERNON DALHART

(Continued from page 37)

mond Disc makers were sure they had hit upon something good. The vogue of "The Wreck" was not restricted to the South. It went big with Edison patrons throughout the country.

Equipped now with a good talking point, Dalhart decided to bolster his Victor fortunes by persuading that company to issue the "Wreck of the '97." How he overcame Victor's objections that it had no suitable song to occupy the B side of such a record, made the platter and touched off the most heated argument and hardest fought legal battle in the phonograph industry's history. That story must be reserved for next month.

(To be continued)

500 LINCOLN ORATIONS

For the first Lincoln Birthday in 35 years, there were no speeches on February 12 by the dean of Cleveland Ohio's Lincoln orators, Anthony L. Maresh. At 82, Mr. Maresh was forced to retire by severe arthritis.

Maresh estimates he has given about 500 talks in honor of Lincoln's birthday. He has headed the Lincoln Association of Ohio for many years, and maintains a fine collection of Lincolniana in his home.

PERSEVERE

The fisher who draws in his net too soon
Won't have any fish to sell;
The child who shuts up his book too soon,
Won't learn any lessons well.

If you would have your learning stay,
Be patient—don't learn too fast;
The man who travels a mile each day,
May get round the world at last.

—McGuffey's Reader

BUTTON CATALOG. 67 plates, over 1100 buttons photographed, actual size, $3.50. Price list included. Modern, 18th century, etc. — Helen Wegener, P.O. Box 9, Tacoma 1, Washington. au6846

INTERESTING antique buttons, reasonably priced. By mail only. — Mrs. Mildred B. Shannon, 8 Compton St., Boston, Mass. au4603

50 OLD BUTTONS, various types, materials, including pictures. Good value and condition, $2.25. Other buttons on approval, with bank references. State wants. — Rachel Price, 17 So. 8th, Stroudsburg, Pa. jly3843

EXTRA GOOD OLD BUTTONS: 100 assorted, 50 assorted and 1 large picture button, 6 small pictures, or 25 uniform for $1.10. Poke boxes and approvals. — Minerva M. Miner, Sherburne, N. Y. o6447

OLD BUTTONS. 100 assorted, 75 vegetable ivory or 50 black glass, $1.—Mrs. Karl S. Gerstenlauer, Broadway Road, Milton, Pa. s3042

BUTTON HOOK BOOK. Pictures, information, patents, $1. — Bertha Betensley, 5042 N. St. Louis Ave., Chicago 25, Ill. au12238

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

1. Victor Consents to Record "The Wreck"

When Vernon Dalhart, swapped horses, so to speak, in the middle of the stream and gave up singing popular songs and concert ballads to become the most prolific recorder of hill-billy tunes, he was just entering middle age.

At the time he began to importune Victor to make a record of "The Wreck of the Southern Old 97," which he had already successfully waxed for Edison, he was 41. Judging by photographs, he resembled our present day Vice President Richard M. Nixon, who in 1924 was only a small boy.

In the fall of 1952 I attended, in Richmond, Va., a performance of Cornelia Otis Skinner's "one-woman" production, "Paris '90." The orchestra leader for Miss Skinner, Nathaniel Shilkret, in the 1920's was the Victor Company's staff accompanist and the conductor of the Victor Salon Orchestra.

After the performance Nat and I ate dinner in a bus terminal with Quentin Riggs, a young Oklahoma City record collector, who was then stationed in military service at Camp Lee, Va. I remember the friendly, unassuming conductor surprised us by saying that in his early career he was a member of the Edison Orchestra and played for Blue Amberol records.

I had heard reports that Nat Shilkret had a big part in the success of Dalhart's historic Victor record combining "The Wreck of the 97" and "The Prisoner's Song." I asked him about that.

Was it true, I asked, that "The Prisoner's Song," which turned out to be an even greater hit than "The Wreck," was partly his own work? Nat assured me it was. He then gave this account of the genesis of what, in some respects, is the most remarkable of all records:

"In 1924," Shilkret said, "Dalhart's popularity as a maker of popular song records was declining, at least as far as Victor was concerned. He was anxious to hit on something that would give his sales a boost.

"He kept telling us about the success of the 'Wreck of the Old 97' record on Edison, and insisted that we let him record it. 'Come on and give me the date!' he would say. 'I need the money!'"

"The record business was bad along then and we weren't much inclined to experiment. Besides, we told Dalhart, he didn't have any suitable number to go on the other side of 'The Wreck.' I asked him if he could think of anything for the flip side.

"After a while Dalhart said he had at home a manuscript of a song written by a cousin of his which might do. I told him to bring it in. A day or two later he showed up with some pencilled notes but no music.

"The manuscript, as he submitted it, was a mess. It was only long enough to fill about half a record. I told him it couldn't be used as it stood, but that I thought it might be fixed up to do.

"He agreed for me to take it home with me. I wrote more verses and ground out a simple, mournful tune to fit the words.

"When I submitted the finished result to Dalhart he was well pleased. But," Nat said, with a touch of bitterness, "neither then nor when the record became the biggest seller ever made up to that time did he offer to give me as much as a cigar.

"We went ahead and recorded both sides," Shilkret continued. "I remember Dalhart's saying Victor was getting a bargain in that record, since one side was in the public domain and the other was mostly written by the company's musical director, so no royalties would have to be paid to publishers and composers. And that," Nat summed up, "is how 'The Prisoner's Song' came to be written and recorded.

"The original manuscript may have been written or copied from some source by Dalhart's cousin, Guy Massey, but it was unsalable and

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. jly120821

MUSIC ROLLS WANTED

PIANO ROLLS WANTED: all types. Send list, receive cash offer by return mail (list returned). — M. Montgomery, 722 Spring St., Ann Arbor, Mich. s128041

PIANO ROLLS wanted, all types, any quantity, especially Welte-Mignon, Deluxe and Duo-Art. Also rolls for sale. Information exchanged with collectors. — A. Giragosian, 603 So. Walter Reed Dr., Arlington 4, Va. jly120231

MUSIC ROLLS FOR SALE

For Sale: 450 Welte - Mignon reproducing music rolls in excellent condition and in original boxes. This lot of rolls includes classical, semi-classical, and popular tunes of that era. Will be sold only as an entirety. — D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Md. o30801

NEW AND USED piano rolls for sale. Dime for list, also information of interest to collectors. Ampico and Duo-Art rolls wanted. — Gay Nineties Music Shop, Steward, Illinois. o3293

REPAIRS—MUSIC BOXES

"HOW TO REPAIR Music Boxes" by Jacot - reprint of complete 3rd edition of this valuable illustrated 32 page catalog, $1.50 postpaid. — Bornand, 139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. au3844

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor. — Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

WANTED: Titta Ruffo's Pathe Dinarah: Sei vendicata—any number, size or coupling; outside or center start.—Alda Favia-Artsay, 50 Prospect Ave., Valhalla, N. Y. tfx

78 R.P.M. DISC preferred. Moody and Sankey, Pres. Wm. McKinley, Theo. Roosevelt, Wm. H. Taft, Sarah Bernhardt. — Elsie Smith, 1016 So. 52nd St. Omaha 6, Nebr. d6008

WANTED: 16" transcriptions, tape, home made recordings of Mark Warnow orchestra on Hit Parade and Swing Session.—Lyle Poole, 3041 Garlough, Seattle 16, Wash. o3004

See Records For Sale
Classified Ads on Page 35

Vernon Dalhart

PART IV
By JIM WALSH

not worth recording as it stood. Dalhart himself had nothing to do with writing it. There would have been no "Prisoner's Song" record if it had not been for my altering, editing, and adding to the manuscript."

That is Nat Shilkret's statement, and he is well known to the musical world as a man of scrupulous integrity. There are, however, other versions of the song's origin and I shall quote them with the intention of being fair.

II: "Old 19427" Sets New Records

Dalhart's Victor record of "The Wreck of the Old 97," which bore that never-to-be-forgotten number, 19427, was nothing like as good as his Edison, even though it sported a train whistle by way of an incidental effect. The recording was below the Edison standard, and the singing was not so good.

In the Diamond Disc, Dalhart sang in his natural voice, but in the Victor he imitated the nasal sound of Henry Whitter's Okeh record from which he had copied the words. Perhaps this was done on orders from some Victor official, who suspected, with considerable reason, that lovers of country music prefer a singing-through-the-nose effect.

The record sounded a lot like an indigenous hill-billy, but it didn't sound like the former operatic artist, Vernon Dalhart. "The Prisoner's Song" was better. The voice quality was natural, without nasal tricks, and Dalhart sang it with what seemed sincerity and a genuine sympathy for the maudlin lyrics.

It seems to me "The Prisoner's Song" is a good counter-argument to people who insist that the 1920's were a time of nothing but jazz, unrestrained gaiety, and wild hysteria, done to the accompaniment of a high crime rate and unlimited drinking in defiance of that terrible ogre, prohibition.

Actually the 1920's were a period in which ballads and comic songs divided the popular music market pretty equally between them, and jazz meant little to the average man. There was a public for jazz, but it was a specialized one confined to a small minority.

As for drinking, any fair survey of conditions 30-odd years ago compared to now would report the per capita consumption of liquor under prohibition was small compared to the amount of booze-h'isting today.

The crime rate also was much lower than nowadays, when every year sees a new all-time high being reached under the "beneficent" influence of repeal.

What a field-day the "wets" of 1925 would have had if they could have reached into the future and brought down today's high alcoholism rate among both men and women and the appalling prevalence of juvenile delinquency, and blamed it on prohibition!

Maudlin though the words and music of "The Prisoner's Song" undoubtedly were, the record struck a responsive chord in the public taste of the time. The Victor disc, which was recorded during hot summer weather, sold in astonishing volume from the time it was first announced in the supplement for November, 1924. Not that the supplement editor, James E. Richardson, gave it much of a send-off. He merely said:

Genuine songs of the Southern mountaineers, given with all their original lyric crudeness and their vigorous quaint melody. The fiddle, the guitar, and the mouth-organ figure in accompaniment. "The Wreck of the Old 97" is not a steamboat, but a railroad song, a classic like "Casey Jones," and apparently much older. "The Prisoner's Song" is from the hair-brooch and weeping-willow period. A Mark Twain might describe it.

Actually, since the wreck described in "Casey Jones" occurred three years before that of the "Old 97," the former song, in its original folk form, is the older of the two. A young man, newly arrived from the Middle West, who called himself "The Kansas Jayhawk," is said to have played the guitar for Dalhart in these records. (I have never heard who the fiddler was, but it may have been Murray Kellner, who played with Dalhart for several years).

The name of the young man from Kansas was Carson Robison. Finding him was the greatest piece of good fortune that ever happened to Dalhart, aside from his recording "The Prisoner's Song."

Even though the supplement description was brief, Victor must have had considerable hopes for Dalhart's record. It headed the list of popular vocal numbers for the month.

It was placed first despite such strong competition as a solo by Billy Murray; three duets by Murray and Aileen Stanley; "Tea for Two," and "I Want to Be Happy," sung by Helen Clark and Lewis James; "Where the Dreamy Wabash Flows," and "Follow the Swallow," by the Peerless Quartet; "Hard Hearted Hannah," and "Sweet Little You," by Belle Baker; two solos by Georgie Price; two by Henry Burr, and "How Come You Do Me Like You Do?" and "Knock at the Door," by Frank Crumit.

Imagine any monthly record supplement of today offering a group of such hits! But, even so, it's likely that, in the course of time, the Dalhart record outsold all the others combined.

For good measure, there was also one other Dalhart record. No. 19442, on which he sang "Go 'Long, Mule." This was a pseudo-hill-billy. Although generally in the country comedy style, it had an orchestra accompaniment.

On the other side, Billy Murray and Ed Smalle sang "Way Out West in Kansas," composed by Dalhart's new associate, Carson Robison. It was the first song written by Robison to be recorded. The supplement said:

Two comedy songs that come up to the name; even the instruments of the orchestra laugh and chuckle. . . . Vernon Dalhart, aided and abetted by an orchestra, does funny things with the tale of a mule in the first number. On the reverse side of the record the International Novelty Orchestra gets into all sorts of mischief while those classic entertainers, Billy Murray and Ed Smalle, are doing their best to tell you of the charms of being "Way Out West In Kansas."

The International Novelty Orchestra, like the Victor Salon group, was directed by Nat Shilkret. It is rather odd that Murray and Smalle were selected to sing "Way Out West in Kansas," for Dalhart, assisted by Robison on the guitar, recorded it for nearly every company except Victor. Too, it is interesting to recall that the song on the other side, "Go 'Long, Mule," was the last solo record made (for Edison) by the pioneer comedian, Arthur Collins.

The late Carson Robison who wrote many of Dalhart's most successful records, sent this snapshot to Jim Walsh in 1940 after his record of "Life Gits Tee-jus, Don't It?" had become a big success.

III. "The Prisoner's Song" Becomes a Craze

As soon as it became obvious that radio, which had drastically cut into the sale of records, wasn't keeping Victor's version of "The Prisoner's Song" from becoming the biggest selling vocal disc in phonograph history, every other company insisted on Dalhart's singing it.

He also sang "The Wreck of the Old 97" for most companies. (An exception was Columbia, whose version was by a blind North Carolina musician, Ernest Thompson, with a high falsetto voice). But Dalhart made "The Prisoner's Song," under several names, for nearly all of Victor's competitors. I recall one exception. Columbia issued the number by Dalhart under its regular 75-cent label, but Irving Kaufman sang it on the 50-cent Harmony record also made by Columbia.

A couple of years later the vogue of the song still continued, and Victor let Reinold Werrenrath, the one-time Metropolitan Opera baritone, sing the pathetic lament of the "prisoner" on a Red Seal record, backed by his version of "The Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane." To give an honest opinion, Werrenrath didn't sing "The Prisoner's Song" nearly so well as Dalhart, who is believed to have recorded it for 28 or 30 labels.

Nor was that all. The dancing public began to demand waltz versions of the prisoner dirge, and when these were made Dalhart sang the refrains. The Victor dance number, by the International Novelty Orchestra, had one of the greatest all-time waltz hits, "After the Ball," on its reverse side, with Henry Burr doing the vocal honors.

"The Prisoner's Song" mania was not confined to this country. It sold throughout the English-speaking world. British dance bands, such as the Savoy Orpheans, recorded it.

I know of no rational way to account for the amazing vogue of "The Prisoner's Song"—a vogue it has never entirely lost. It was essentially a throwback to the morbid sentimental songs at which Mark Twain had poked fun 50 years before, and its popularity may have reflected a longing for a simpler, if sadder, vanished way of life.

Or it may have been a relatively mild example of mass hallucination. Certainly, if the words and music are critically examined, there is nothing to praise in "The Prisoner's Song." But, regardless of lack of intrinsic merit, it made Vernon Dalhart, almost overnight, the most important recording artist of his day.

When Dalhart died, the New York Daily News said it was estimated 25,000,000 copies of his various records of "The Prisoner's Song" had been sold. That figure may not be greatly exaggerated when one recalls that the record sold not only in this country, but that matrices were imported into the British Isles, India, Australia, and New Zealand.

During much of the second half

Nathaniel Shilkret, former Victor recording director, who arranged "The Prisoner's Song" for Vernon Dalhart's recording.

—Photo by George Maillard Kessler, B.P.

of the 1920's, wherever one went in the English-speaking world, the chances were good, in city, wilderness, or jungle, of hearing the reproduced voice of Vernon Dalhart wailing: "Now if I had wings like an angel, over these prison walls I would fly—"

IV. "The Prisoner's Song" Controversy

Despite his statement that Victor was in luck because of having a record with two songs in the public domain, as soon as Dalhart saw what a hit "The Prisoner's Song" was turning out to be, he had it copyrighted in the name of his cousin, Guy Massey. Thus the record companies were obliged to pay royalties to the firm which published the sheet music.

It was not long before a controversy regarding the origin of the most popular song of the day was in full swing. As the New York Herald Tribune death notice said, Dalhart told conflicting stories at different times.

At first he said it was written by Guy Massey, who lived only long enough to collect a small part of the royalties. Later he said he wrote it himself.

Nat Shilkret's side of the controversy was not generally known in those days, but a 1926 issue of a formerly popular weekly news magazine, The Pathfinder, had an interesting discussion of the subject. After saying that "Guy S. Massey, 27-year-old sailor-minstrel and ballad writer . . . on his death-bed claimed the words as his own," the article continued:

Readers from all sections of the country continue to write us disputing Massey's claim even to the words. Apparently the song was written years ago and made popular by the sailor-minstrel Mrs. Kate M. Bryan, of Dallas, Tex., who knew the Massey family, has this to say on the subject:

" . . . I think it only fair to tell you what I know of Guy Massey and the Prison Song. To begin with, he had no more to do with either writing or discovering the song than you or I. (Continued on page 60)

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale; all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. jly120422

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N. Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. ja120061

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold. — James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. s3084

OVER 100,000 hard - to - get records, 1903 to LP. — Jack's Record Cellar, 400 Haight Street, San Francisco 17, Calif. d126121

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists. — Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. o3618

FREE "Personalities" catalogs - rare records and broadcasts by radio, stage, screen, television personalities. — Amalgamated Records, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. o6276

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collector's 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold. — Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. au3066

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (Stamp please.) au3263

FOR SALE: Hundreds of disc and cylinder records, many types of early phonographs, 25c for lists. Also "Evolution of the Phonograph," by Walter Welch and Oliver Reed, a complete history of the phonograph, 576 pages, regular price $9.95. — Coppenoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. au3257

OLD VOCAL RECORDS of famous opera singers. Also misc. books for sale. — Anthony De Tratto, 7331 S. Winchester, Chicago 36, Ill. Prospect 6-4676 au3863

JULY Record List of disc & cylinder records now ready, 25c prepaid. Records, Phonographs, Reproducers, Catalogues, Horns, etc. bought, sold and exchanged. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. au1252

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

VERNON DALHART

(Continued from page 35)

Having no desire to meddle, I kept quiet until I saw that others questioned his authorship of the song.

"An older brother, Robert, was a wanderer all over the U. S. in his younger days and while on his wanderings learned the Prison Song with many others, known to the 'Knights of the Road' as old road songs. His brother Guy, a vaudeville actor, came from New York to visit his family, and while here Robert taught him a number of these songs thinking they would be good material for his vaudeville work. Guy returned to New York and tried to make a record of the Prison Song, but from some cause failed. He then taught it to his cousin, Vernon Dalhart, who was accustomed to making records and who succeeded in getting the record released. The copyright was taken out in Guy's name.

"When Robert learned of this he was justly indignant, but said nothing because, to use his words, 'he did not want to get Guy in bad.' Robert was living in my house at the time and discussed it with me from time to time. Guy's attitude toward this greatest musical fraud of the ages was that he 'had beat Robert to it' in the perpetration of a huge joke on the public. I don't know the exact amount of royalties he received, but it was several hundred dollars, or sufficient to pay the greater part of his hospital expenses. This is written solely in the interest of truth and with no feeling of ill-will toward Guy Massey."

I wonder why Mrs. Bryan referred to the much debated composition as "The Prison Song." Her letter brought a quick reply from Guy Massey's brother, Seaborn C. Massey, Jr., also of Dallas:

I am an older brother and best friend of Guy Stapleton Massey, deceased author of the "Prisoner's Song," the authorship of which is so much disputed. This song, both words and music, were (sic) written by Guy and were his own original composition regardless of what others may say in reference to it. The song was copyrighted by Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., which proves beyond any doubt that there was no other composition like it, or it could not have been copyrighted. Robert Massey, brother of Guy Massey, did not have any claim on "The Prisoner's Song," but did write and have published a song known as "The Chain Gang Song," something similar to the "Prisoner's Song."

Guy lived a good, clean Christian life always, and served his country during the war, being honorably discharged from the U. S. navy at Armed Guard Barracks, New York, January 31, 1919, on account of injury to his hearing received while in the service. The character of my dead brother was above reproach. He received two citations for bravery while in the service which I have here with his discharge papers. He was not a convict and never was, as so many people seem to think he died in prison. He died in the U. S. army hospital at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., February 13, 1936, where I took him for treatment after leaving my home here in Dallas. His death was due to an operation on his brain which had caused him to become paralyzed some time before he died. He never received any compensation from the government, though given a medical discharge. He was totally disabled and in bed for more than a year before his death. His mother died when he was four years old—the old story of a broken-up, motherless home.

I nursed Guy during his last illness and held his hand while he passed away. May I add that his last request was, "Bury me next to Mama. I did not have her in life and I want to be next to her in death." And the last word he spoke before he died was "Mama," and then his lips were sealed forever. His last request was granted and he sleeps beside his mother in Greenwood cemetery, Dallas, Tex.

After Guy Massey's death, Dalhart received the royalties on the song.

I shall give Carson Robison's comments on the "Prisoner's Song" controversy when I discuss his association with Dalhart. In his "History of Popular Music in America," Sigmund Spaeth refers as follows to the heated debate:

Another controversial number was the notorious "Prisoner's Song," credited to Guy Massey, **** although it has been claimed that Nathaniel Shilkret, then a musical director for Victor records, was largely responsible for the finished product. This curiously effective piece of hill-billy "corn" had been recorded by Vernon Dalhart merely to fill the reverse side of the disc carrying that established favorite, "The Wreck of the Old 97," whose tune was taken bodily from Henry C. Work's "The Ship That Never Returned." To the surprise of everyone concerned, it was "The Prisoner's Song" that sold the record, carrying its distribution up to fantastic figures.

One more item about "The Prisoner's Song" and this installment must end, with discussion of the legal battling that centered around "The Wreck of the Old 97" reserved for next month. On September 28, 1955, Joseph M. Bryant, who had been a New York theatrical booking agent, wrote me an interesting letter in which he said:

I got a two weeks engagement at the New York Strand Theater for Dalhart at $1,750 a week. He was offered $3,500 a week if he would dress as a prisoner. He flatly refused. All he sang was "The Prisoner's Song." . . . Nat Shilkret insists that he wrote "The Prisoner's Song."

Mr. Bryant mentioned that Dalhart made records of a song, "Many, Many Years Ago," written by Bryant's former wife, who was known in vaudeville as Madelyn Sheppard, and said it ranked next to "The Prisoner's Song" in total sales among Dalhart's records. The amazing success of record 19427 also brought Dalhart many radio engagements. Naturally, he was always expected to sing "The Prisoner's Song."

(To be continued)

THE TAROT ANTIQUES

P.O. Box 1041

Canoga Park, Calif.

1. Pair of exquisite Venetian glass cup and saucer, white overlay laco design, trimmed with gold, one clear to Cranberry; one clear to Emerald green, each.-----$37.50
2. Set of 8 Tiffany bowls, shading from purple to peacock blue, iridescent, 5 1/4" diam., 2" high, one has original Tiffany paper label -----$75.00
3. Vaseline liquor set, decanter and 4 stemmed glasses and matching tray; hand painted enamel floral design.-----$35.00
4. Pair of Paris porcelain vases, bulbous base with thin stem neck, flared top, white background, morning glories and blossoms, neck's green, trimmed with gold.-----$47.50
5. Pr. French brass wall sconces, oval mirrors, two candle holders, each with six oval cut prisms on each branch.-----$75.00
6. Pr. solid br. English andirons, lion head in center of two leg base, graduated brass balls to top, 23" high -----$80.00
7. Royal Vienna "Beehive" candy dish, three footed, painted figures inside bowl, flowers and gold trim, 6x2" -----$27.50
8. Meissen cup & saucer, Swan neck handle, overall floral pattern interlaced with gold, a beauty -----$25.00

Photos 25c. Trans. extra. Write wants. aup

C. V. R. LYMAN

287 Benita Ave. Youngstown 4, Ohio

Rose-carved ladies small mahogany rocker, rare matching small serpentine front sofa. Large majolica pitcher, bird nest. Emerald green diamond daisy footed cake stand.

Stamp for reply. aup

H. JEAN SWETT

R.F.D. 1 Durham, N. H.

- |   |              |
|---|--------------|
| Amber D&B 7" slipper, dated 1881        | -----$13.50 |
| Red Block sugar shaker                  | -----12.50   |
| Bulb. Ruby T.P. water pitcher           | -----25.00   |
| 9 3/4" Dedham Pottery plate, turkey     | -----12.50   |
| Amber willow oak goblet                 | -----10.00   |
| FAWKES cut glass water carafe           | -----12.50   |
| I.V.T. AMBERINA water tumbler           | -----22.00   |
| Amber THOUSAND EYE goblet               | -----12.50   |
| TUTHILL 7x1 1/4" cut gl. dish, hobstars | -----11.00   |
|   | aup          |

BIRCHLANDS

12 North Main Street

Essex, Connecticut

Telephone South 7-1377

ETHEL HALL BJERKOE

COSTUMES &amp; ACCESSORIES

1. Black velvet evening coat, o. #925, long, lined throughout with white satin, size 18, Princess style, sleeves sl. puffed at top, narrowing to wrist, flat white fur collar. As now -----$25.00
2. Cream colored cambric petticoat. Long. Very full. 11 narrow tucks at bottom with 3 narrow rows of plaiting and edged with narrow plaited ruffle. Waist band could easily be made larger or smaller.-----$6.50
3. White flannel embroidered petticoat. Short. Very full. 4" band of hand embroidery at scalloped bottom edged with 1 1/2" lace. Some blue from design stamping seen around embroidery. Would doubtless wash out. 2 or 3 unimportant moth holes. Waist band could be made larger or smaller.-----$6.50
4. Similar to above but without lace edging. Blue does not show on this one.-----$6.00

ODDMENTS

5. Steel snuffers. Scissor type with three feet. Heavy -----$5.00
6. Similar to above but lighter in weight -----$3.75
7. Oval footed cake plate, 11 1/2 x 8 1/2". Vieux Paris (circa 1820). Robin's egg blue border, gold simulated handles, floral decoration. Exquisite -----$18.00
8. Crystal jam jar. Body has design of leaf and berry design in frosted cut with oval thumbprints at bottom. Sterling silver cover (incl. tax) -----$4.40
9. Colored Print or Etching of French Country Scene from a painting by Louis Humont, No. 366. Colors are warm yellows and browns. Exquisitely matted and framed in narrow gold frame.-----$12.50

Are you having difficulty with backgrounds for your lovely antiques? Then you should have HOW TO DECORATE FOR AND WITH ANTIQUES by Ethel Hall Bjerkoe, published by Doubleday. This is the only book available which deals completely with this subject. Autographed, postpaid copy -----$4.95

AND do you know who made your antique furniture? How about CABINETMAKERS OF AMERICA also by Ethel Hall Bjerkoe. Perry T. Rathbone, Director, Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, says of this book, "Mrs. Bjerkoe's excellent work will be a boon and a treasured addition to the libraries of all students, collectors, and the army of amateurs who take pride and pleasure in the beautiful cabinetwork of Early America . . . the most complete compendium of American Cabinetmakers that has appeared." Autographed, postpaid, copy -----$10.00

Is refinishing furniture your hobby? Then you should have "From Junk To Glow," or "The Gentle Art Of Refinishing Antiques And Other Furniture" by George Grotz. Paper bound.-----$1.00

Everything guaranteed as described. Carrying charges extra. aup

Vernon Dalhart

PART V
By JIM WALSH

Left to right:

WENDELL HALL, "The Red-Headed Music Maker," stimulated interest in country music when he recorded "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" for Victor, Edison and Gennett in 1923. It paved the way for Vernon Dalhart's records a year later

—Photo by Bloom, Chicago

The late ARTHUR WALSH, who was vice president and recording manager of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., wrote an answer to "The Prisoner's Song," which he called "The Prisoner's Sweetheart." He was not related to Jim Walsh, but referred to him as "Cousin Ulysses."

—Photo by Harris & Ewing, Washington, D. C.

I. "The Prisoner's Song" Again

I thought when I concluded last month's installment that I had disposed of the "Prisoner's Song" except for holding in reserve some comments by Carson Robison. But I still have some notes that should be included.

Not only was the pathetic lament of the "Prisoner" recorded by dance bands here and abroad, but Eddie Peabody made a banjo record of it with Dalhart singing a refrain. In mentioning the handful of other hill-billy artists who recorded the number, I overlooked George Reneau, "The Blind Musician of the Smoky Mountains," whose name appeared on the Vocalion version.

It's likely, however, that Gene Austin sang the dirge, to Reneau's mouth-harp and guitar accompaniment, for Austin obtained recording engagements for Reneau and usually did the singing, though as a rule his name did not appear on Reneau's Vocalion records. I have never heard this "Prisoner's Song" record so can't say positively that Gene was the vocalist.

Of course, other mountain musicians have recorded the number since Dalhart's day, and the same thing is true of "The Wreck of the Old 97," but as long as he was active he had a near-monopoly. Perhaps the only other singer who enjoyed more of a strangle-hold on a song was Arthur Collins with "The Preacher and the Bear." From the time Collins first intoned this "coon song" classic in 1905 until he retired 20 years later, no other American singer recorded it.

After Guy Massey's Pathetic death, Dalhart made several records of a song called "Guy Massey's Farewell," composed by Guy's brother, Robert Massey, who was mentioned last month in the Pathfinder letter by Mrs. Kate M. Bryan, of Dallas, Tex. The "Farewell" was written in the true maudlin hill-billy vein and was, in effect, a reply to "The Prisoner's Song." The last stanza went:

"And now, with the bright wings of an angel,
To the arms of his darling he has flown,
And his grand ship now is anchored up in Heaven,
Where there's someone to call him their own!"

Dalhart even made a number of records under the name of his dead cousin and on a few occasions called himself by Bob Massey's name. Perhaps this is the logical place to publish a list of assumed names under which he sang. I do not represent the list as complete, for a new Dalhart name turns up on "off-brand" discs every now and then. A few of the aliases that follow were used for ordinary popular song records, but most were not adopted until Dalhart became the king of hill-billy recording:

Mack Allen, Wolfe Ballard, Jeff Calhoun, Jess Calhoun, Jimmy Cannon, Al Craver, James Cummings, Vernon Dell, Joseph Elliott, Jep Fuller, David Harris, Harry Harris, Kanawha Singers (this was a Brunswick record of a duet by Dalhart and Carson Robison), Fred King, Hugh Latimer, Tobe Little, the Lone Star Ranger, Bob Massey, Guy Massey, Warren Mitchell, Dick Morse, Josephus Smith, Billy Stuart, Allen Turner, Sid Turner, Bill Vernon, Billy Vernon, Tom Watson, Bob White, Robert White, and Walter Whitlock.

He, Ed Smalle, and the banjoist, John Cali, made Edison records as the Arkansas Trio; and Gennetts, as the Windy City Duo. I have seen it claimed that Dalhart also made records as Frank Evans, but the only Frank Evans (and Frank Evers) records I have heard were by Frank Luther, whose style was similar to Dalhart's. Authenticated additions to this list would be appreciated.

A year or so after "The Prisoner's Song" with its vivid words and mournful music had overcome whatever critical judgment the average American listener possessed, the late Arthur Walsh, then the Edison company's recording director, wrote a reply, called "The Prisoner's Sweetheart," which met with moderate success. Oddly, Dalhart seems to have sung Walsh's song little, if at all. Recordings included one by Henry Burr for Victor, and Charles Harrison's Edison version.

II. Back to "The Old 97"

Although plentiful controversy centered around "The Prisoner's Song," and although it became a larger seller than "The Wreck of the Old 97," the railroad song steamed up even more fuss and fury and resulted in the most protracted and expensive legal action of any record in the phonograph's history. The story is too long to tell in exact detail, but I shall touch on some of the high spots.

You may remember Nat Shilkret's saying Dalhart remarked Victor was

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

in luck when it recorded "The Prisoner" and "The Wreck" because it was getting two songs on which composer's royalties wouldn't have to be paid. As time went on, however, persons who felt they could use the royalties began to contend they had written the words of "The Old 97," and Victor, whose sales of the number dwarfed those of all other companies, decided to find out who was responsible and pay off. I have an old scrapbook, in which a clipping from the Richmond Times-Dispatch, dated September 12, appears. The year probably was 1927.

"DANVILLE, VA.—A quiet inquiry is being made here by the representative of a recording company into the origin of the popular songs 'The Wreck of No. 97.' The inquiry becomes necessary because the recording company does not know to whom to pay accruing royalties from the sale of the record, and the sum is said to be a substantial one.

"The agent has interviewed old railroad men in Danville in the hope that they might reveal the name of the man who first wrote the song. None questioned has been able to give specific information. All of them remember in a general way that the wreck ballad has been a household number in the railroad men's repertoire, but nobody here can say where it began. The tune also is a mystery, although there are strong points of resemblance with that of 'Ships That Never Come Back.'"

(Note by Jim Walsh.—There is no mystery about the tune. It is note for note the same as Henry C. Work's 'The Ship That Never Returned'.)

"The investigating agent, who has been here for two days, has heard different versions of the song, with verses supplied by some men which are not in the song as sung today.

"Henry Whitter, of Galax, who recorded the song first of all, claims to be the author, but since that claim was made others have come forward, and it is now necessary to establish legal rights. The impression has been here for years that a Danville brakeman originated the song, but there are others who say that Negro employees whistled and sang it 15 years ago . . ."

Ten days later another dispatch from Danville said:

" . . . Fred Lewey, of Concord, N.C., a former Danville resident, who also lived in Lynchburg, asserts he is the man who wrote the words to the song and fitted them to 'The Ship That Never Returned.' He believes he will have no trouble in establishing the authenticity of his claim. He says he wrote the song after a month's effort and that with his guitar he visited different parts of Danville and played and sang it before different gatherings.

"He says it is not true that the song had its origin among the railway folk, but that it first gained a local reputation among the cotton mill people, for Lewey worked in the Riverside mills here. Lewey also gives what he claims to be the original version of the song, which is different in many respects to that now finding popularity."

By presenting a version of the song that did not follow minutely the words contained in Dalhart's records, Mr. Lewey proved himself wiser than another claimant.

III. David Graves George Enters Suit

The real fireworks concerning authorship of "The Wreck" had not yet been detonated. They were set off when a determined Virginian named David Graves George proclaimed himself the lyric writer and went to court to collect the royalties. He came within a hair's breadth of getting them.

THE WRECK OF THE OLD 97

by HENRY WHITTER, CHARLES W. NOELL and FRED J. LEWEY

Cover design of the sheet music of Dalhart's great hit, "The Wreck of the Old 97." An elderly Virginia man, David Graves George, convinced a Federal judge he was the author of the song, but lost his case in a higher court. It was finally decided it was written by Henry Whitter, who made the first record of "The Wreck."

George, who died Jan. 24, 1948, aged 82, in Williamsburg, Va., survived by his wife, six daughters, and eight sons, said he was living in Danville at the time "Old 97" plunged from the trestle, killing nine or more persons. He contended he wrote the poem after helping with relief work. The progress of this suit against the Victor Company, which went to trial in 1930 may be traced from a few more clippings Here is another from Danville, dated April 18:

"The suit filed by David George, of Gretna, against the Victor Talking Machine Company to recover royalties aggregating approximately $150,000 on the sale of records of 'The Wreck of No. 97' is set for hearing at the April term of Federal court in Newark, N. J. Reports recently current that the hearing would be held at Richmond were incorrect, since representatives of the Victor Company who have been collecting evidence here and at other Southern Railway Centers say that the case is docketed in New Jersey . . ."

An Associated Press story sent from Camden, N. J., under date of May 2, said:

"The litigation between the Victor

Talking Machine Company and David Graves George . . . over the money George alleges is due him from the phonograph record of his song, 'The Wreck of the Old 97,' was taken up again today. Before Edward I. Berry, special master of the Federal District Court, figures were presented on the company's contention that it owes George only a share of some $86,000 in profits, while the latter holds the sum to be considerably above that amount.

"Records were demanded from the company covering the sale of the record in China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand and several other foreign countries. George's attorneys seek to show the company made millions from the distribution of the disc."

The suit appears to have dragged on and on and was not finally decided for several years. Henry Whitter and Dalhart were among the persons who testified. Whitter's widow recalled in 1951 being told it was brought out in court that between six and seven million copies of "The Wreck" record had been sold, but she was not clear whether this referred to the Victor record alone or those made for all companies. Dalhart testified he copied the words of his records from the Okeh by Whitter.

Here are two AP clippings from Camden, dated October 15—presumably 1930. For convenience, I shall lump them into one:

"David G. George, mountaineer poet from Virginia, took the witness stand before Judge J. Boyd Avis in Federal Court here today and recited the poem, 'The Wreck of the 97,' which he charges the Victor Talking Machine Company recorded and then refused to pay him royalties. He is asking that the company be forced to account for its profits on the record . . . Attorneys for the Victor company suggested that Mr. George sing the words of the song which he declared he composed on the Sunday following a train wreck in 1903.

"He explained, however, that he had lost his voice two years ago. The company contends that an investigation by folk-lore experts has established other persons as authors of the song. A portable Victrola was used in court to reproduce music of an old popular song, 'The Ship That Never Returned,' which George says he appropriated for the melody of his song."

"Judge . . . Avis . . . has under advisement the suit of David Graves George . . . asking accounting of records of the song, 'The Wreck of the Old 97,' made by Victor, preparatory to instituting claim for royalties. George claims he wrote the original words. The company does not deny the words were written by George, but contends the records and his verses are not identical."

That last sentence was a misstatement. As will be seen, the flaw in George's claim was that the words he read to the court and those on Dalhart's record were identical!

Another Associated Press clipping from Camden, dated February 4, says George's claim to authorship had been upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, but I suspect this was a mistake for the Federal Court already mentioned:

"The question of dividing the profits of 'The Wreck of the Old 97' is still unfinished business. David Graves George whose claim to authorship of the barber shop ballad and to a share of the Victor Talking Machine Co.'s marketing profits was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, faces a suit asking for 20 per cent of his share.

"Executors of the estate of Morris Davidson, who died last May in Richmond, told Federal Court in a petition that Davidson loaned $300 to George to help defray the cost of the suit against the Victor company. George is awaiting an accounting. Davidson estate lawyers want the money held up until their claim is heard. The court fixed February 14 for a hearing."

Final disposition of George's claim is found in an undated clipping from an unidentified newspaper, which however, I think probably was the Baltimore Sun. The year appears to have been 1933. Under the heading, "Court Denies Virginian's Claim He Composed 'Wreck of Old 97,' it says:

"The United States Circuit Court of Appeals here yesterday set aside a decision that would have meant a fortune in royalties for a Virginia mountaineer who claimed authorship of the hill-billy song, 'The Wreck of the Old 97.'

"In the opinion of the Circuit Court, the claimant, David Graves George . . . himself copied the sad words of the saga of the train wreck from a Victor phonograph record sung by Vernon Dalhart.

"When the case was heard in Federal Court in Camden in 1930, the Virginian, who is 67, declined to sing the plaintive ballad, saying his voice was gone, but he undertook to recite the words, reading from his supposed original manuscript in an old almanac.

"In the lower court, Federal Judge John Boyd Avis expressed 'an abiding conviction amounting to a moral certainty that George did compose and write the song shortly after the wreck occurred,' but Circuit Judge J. Warren Davis, in a 19 page opinion, now virtually brands George's claim as false. George contended he wrote the words of the song in 1903 after helping to remove nine bodies, including that of Pete, the engineer, from the wreckage of the Southern Railroad's first mail train, No. 97, at North Danville, Va., on September 27 the same year.

"The Victor Company said it purchased recording rights of the song from three other Virginians. According to the Circuit Court, the composition is that of Henry Whitter, a Virginia musician, who based it on a poem written by Charles Noell, who was 17 when the train wreck occurred near his home. Whitter shortened Noell's poem, gave it the tune of 'The Ship That Never Returned,' and added to it the final stanza of the song, 'The Parted Lovers.'

"Circuit Judge Davis says the evidence plainly shows that George copied the words of the folksong from the phonograph record made by Vernon Dalhart . . . A short time before that, in 1927, an advertisement had appeared in a Richmond (Va.) newspaper, seeking information regarding the writer of 'The Wreck of Old 97,' and George went to a neighbor's house where the Dalhart phonograph rendition of that song was played, Judge Davis says.

"Dalhart had made several mistakes in copying the words, and George made the same mistakes in the copy of the song he produced in the lower court; therefore it seems clear, Judge Davis says, that George must have copied the words from the phonograph record. The court opinion points to other inconsistencies in George's claim . . . Attorneys for George estimated that 5,000,000 copies of the song have been circulated."

It may be of interest to know the mistakes Dalhart made in transcribing the words from Whitter's poorly recorded Okeh record. Where Whitter had mentioned a town in North Carolina, saying "You must put her in Spencer on time," Dalhart understood Spencer as Center and sang it accordingly.

When Whitter sang "it was on that grade that he lost his air brakes," he telescoped that last word and made it sound like "average," which Dalhart took it to be. The last stanza contains the line, "Now ladies, you must take warning from this time now and learn," but Dalhart changed "learn" into "on."

Graves probably had deluded himself into believing that he wrote the song, but since his words correspond exactly to Dalhart's defective ones they were a dead give-away to Judge Davis that they were taken from the Victor record—as they should have been to Judge Avis. But somehow Davis saw what Avis did not!

Sigmund Spaeth sums up the protracted and senseless litigation in his invaluable book, "A History of Popular Music in America," by saying:

"About 50 claims came in, all obviously spurious, but when Victor decided to drop the matter, one claimant acquired a lawyer and brought suit. He actually won his case in the lower court by proving that he had been present at the wreck itself . . . The clear evidence that the so-called 'manuscript' had been written many years later, and obviously copied from the Victor record itself seemed to make no difference. For a time it appeared that a quarter of a million dollars would change hands as a result of this absurd decision, but after several appeals, blind justice finally joined itself with common sense, and the lyricist of 'The Wreck of the Old 97' remains a mystery to this day."

IV. A Talk With Whitter's Widow

Despite Dr. Spaeth's statement that the authorship of "The Wreck" remains a mystery, at least three persons today are being paid royalties from the sale of the records and sheet music. They are Henry Whitter's widow from his second marriage, who when I met her in 1951, was Mrs. Charles Hader, of Crumpler, N. C. Also Charles W. Noell, mentioned in the clipping quoted a few paragraphs back, and Fred J. Lewey, who had the good sense to say his original version of "The Wreck" differed markedly from the one recorded by Dalhart. I believe a son of Whitter's by his first marriage also shares in the royalties.

I came to meet Mrs. Hattie Hader in an unusual way. One day in the late summer of 1951 I received a long distance telephone call from the late Elliott Shapiro, president of the New York music publishing firm of Shapiro, Bernstein & Company.

He asked if I would mind going on a mission for him and said I had been recommended to him by my old friend, the late Fred Hager, who died a year or so ago. After telling me he read everything I published in HOBBIES and Variety with warm interest, Mr. Shapiro remarked that the sheet music of "The Wreck of the Old 97" had been copyrighted in 1925, and since copyrights run for 28 years, would expire in 1952.

Every effort, he said, was being made to obtain the signatures of the copyright holders to a new contract, but Mrs. Whitter had refused to sign. Could I possibly go into the mountains of Western North Carolina where she lived, armed with a new contract, and use my persuasive powers on the lady?

He explained that Fred Hager also was a party to the deal because when he was head of Okeh's recording activities Henry Whitter had assigned him a share of his royalties from all recordings of "The Wreck" except the Columbia (I have always wondered why it was withheld!) and in the sheet music. Could I do both him and Fred a favor by trying to bring Mrs. Hader to terms, so the copyright might be renewed?

Mr. Shapiro offered me a generous fee, and I said that my vacation was coming up in a couple of weeks and I would make the trip if he would wait until I was free to travel. He agreed, and within a few days, I received a supply of blank contracts, and a full history of the song's tortuous career.

So it happened that one morning, after spending the night in a hotel at Abingdon, Va., I found myself on the Norfolk and Western Railway's "accommodation train," which made ions are steel, very accurately cut. The two springs are very large and a size 14 key is required for winding.

(Continued on page 45)

I have not had the clock running long enough to tell just how long it will go on one winding, but I am certain it will run three weeks at least, perhaps a full 30 days. Twenty-four half-turns are required to wind the springs up full. The movement does not have fusees.

At the left of the movement the rack for controlling the regular strike can be seen. The rack is controlled by a large wheel, immediately below the rack, which acts as a snail, but looks more like a count-wheel, or locking-plate.

The deep cuts in this wheel are for the hour strike. Between the deep cuts are three steps which make the quarter-hour strikes; the same rack performing both functions.

For the quarter-hour strike the arbor with two arms actuates the two striking hammers. At the time for the hour strike this arbor is moved over so that only one hammer is actuated.

This entire arrangement is different from anything I have examined or worked on before. Incidentally, the snail-wheel is moved by a pinion on the end of the hour-wheel arbor. This is visible near the center of the plate.

The repeat mechanism is on the right side and is entirely separated from the rest of the movement except for the two snails which control it. The repeat mechanism has its own spring, as is found in a repeater watch.

The repeat cord is wound around a pulley and this can be seen at the upper right of the movement. When the cord is pulled out it turns the pulley. This in turn, winds up the repeat-spring that is on the other end of the pulley arbor, on the front-plate of the movement.

The pulley will move only far enough to permit the correct hour and quarter strike. This is controlled by two snails, one located on the hour-wheel arbor, and another set on a star-wheel and actuated by the snail on the hour-wheel arbor.

When the cord is pulled out and released the two hammers on the right come into play; first the hour is struck on the larger bell by one hammer, and then the proper quarter-hour is struck by two hammers on both bells with a ting-tang. I have not seen this type of repeat action on a clock before, and as I have said, it more nearly resembles the action of a quarter-hour repeater watch.

This clock is 24 inches high, and 13 inches wide at the widest point near the base. A final, of course, would increase its height. A door to close up the back of the case is missing and I have not yet replaced it. This is a simple matter when I finally get around to it.

This clock is, undoubtedly, one of the finest in my collection today. It is the result of a gamble that has paid off well. I do have a sizable investment in the clock. That investment represents the original price paid, plus uncounted hours of painstaking labor to restore its beauty and usefulness. I consider it to be well worth its cost.

I have often said in previous articles, that in my opinion, one should learn to repair and restore these old time-pieces if he is to realize the full enjoyment and satisfaction of his hobby as a collector. I am very glad, indeed, that I took an interest in the matter of repair and restoration a long time ago and that I have learned how to do a great deal of this work with my own hands and from my own knowledge.

Without the confidence that comes from this experience, I never would have dared to take a chance in purchasing either of these fine old clocks: this one, and the one described last month. I shudder to think of what it would have cost me, in either case, had I turned the jobs over to a clock-repair man.

I am not suggesting that anyone should take a chance on clocks in the condition of the two I have described. I can assure you however, I am glad I did.

THE RECORDS OF FREDERICK V. BOWERS

(Continued from page 37)

the only one of them to be issued with both sides by him.

In the short descriptions of their artists at the end of the 1912 catalog, the editor, noted with obvious pride that "Ada Jones makes at least one record for Columbia every month." He then stated that "Frederick V. Bowers, of the song-writing team of Horwitz and Bowers, and vaudeville headliner, makes records exclusively for the Columbia." But when this was written, the last of the Bowers records had already been released.

I should mention that collectors will also find the Bowers records on the Columbia off-brand labels, as I have a copy of A928 on the Standard label with no mention or identification of the artist. I also have a copy of Heigh-Ho on the single-faced Lakeside label as number 70339.

Mr. Bowers made this handful of records nearly half a century ago. In an era in which more music is being offered in recorded form than ever before, perhaps we may all hope that he will record a long-playing record for his fans. As one of the leading composers and performers from the turn of the century such an offering would be more than welcome to hundreds of collectors I am sure, as well as to the thousands of people he entertains every year.

I REMEMBER when a neighbor
Had a cylinder gram-o-phone;
How I spent much time in wishing
That I had one of my own.

—Spencer C. Ackerman (c)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

a trip each day except Sunday from Abingdon to West Jefferson, N. C. In so doing it climbed the highest grade of any train operating in the Eastern United States and chugged past White Top the highest mountain in Virginia, where a folk music festival used to be held each summer.

The train was the slowest I had ever been on, and I hadn't occupied it long, before a young mountain man, his wife, and their baby got on as my only fellow passengers. The man was richly under the influence of alcohol and his wife surprised me by puffing cigarettes, one after the other.

The man soon revealed himself to be a baseball enthusiast. "Hey, bud!" he yelled at me, after the train had gone a few miles. "You like baseball?"

"Yes," I replied.

"Me too," he returned with great satisfaction. "Who you think's gonna win that there 'Merican League Pen-nant?"

"The Yankees," I replied.

"Me too!" he bellowed, waving a bottle in my direction. "I'm a real ol'-time Yankee fan! Come over here an' have a drink on me!"

"Thank you," I said, "but I don't drink."

A few minutes later the same routine again was gone through: "Hey, bud! You like baseball?" and the rest of it down through the invitation to drink and my insistence that I was a tee-totaler.

After I had suffered through this a dozen times, the man's wife (removed the latest cigarette from her mouth long enough to) exclaim: "Oh, fer gosh sake, why don't you leave the feller alone? He's done tole you a million times he likes baseball an' he thinks them Yankees will win!"

"Well," her husband returned indignantly, "he mought-a changed his mind, moughtn't he?"

And he continued to call baseball inquiries to me. It was a relief when he stumbled off the train, followed by the woman and baby, at some hamlet short of West Jefferson, and I was able to travel the remainder of the distance, untroubled by superfluous conversation and cigarette smoke, to both of which I am allergic.

I had considerable difficulty learning where Mrs. Hader lived, but eventually a taxi driver was found who knew the way to the little town of Crumpler, which I recollect as being about 14 miles from West Jefferson. When we reached her home she wasn't there, but someone told us she probably had gone to her father's, a couple of miles away. This proved to be a small house situated far below the high-

(Continued on page 49)

Chapeau Bleu" by Matisse and $4,500 for a bronze bust by Epstein, "Old Pinager (1923)." Prices for Continental contemporaries were especially interesting and included $27,000 and $13,500 for two Dubuffets; $8,000 for a Giacometti figure; $7,000 for a Venard and $5,800 for a Matia; with $11,000 for a Hartung and $9,000 for a Soulages, neither of whose works had sold here before at auction.

Only two sales devoted solely to the sale of Old Master paintings occurred. The highest prices were brought by a Salomon van Ruysdael, "River Scene," $10,500, followed by $9,000 for a Vigée-Lebrun portrait of "La Comtesse de Chatenay."

GREENTOWN GLASS ON DISPLAY

A display of Greentown glass occupies the entire wall space in 12 cases at the Grand Rapids, Mich. Public Museum. It will be there through July and August of this year.

The collection was amassed by Dr. Ruth Herrick of that city. She researched, excavated, and bought the various pieces of her collection.

Greentown glass was manufactured by the Indiana Tumbler and Goblet Company, Greentown, Ind., from 1894 to 1903, when the factory burned. In 1894 patterns of clear glass were being manufactured. Later chocolate glass was highly popular. Holly amber is another favorite pattern of the early 1900's.

Dr. Herrick is an authority on Greentown glass. She published a book on the subject last year. Her glass was on exhibit in January of this year at the Museum, and by request was loaned again for the two summer months so visitors to Grand Rapids, as well as the townspeople, could enjoy it.

* * *

Miss Gloria C. Gossling has been appointed head of the School Service Division of Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences, Rochester, N.Y., it was announced by Dr. John R. Williams, chairman of the Museum Board of Commissioners. Miss Gossling has had wide experience in teaching of science in secondary schools. From 1951 to 1957 she served as director of education of the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia, Pa. Her most recent position has been as teacher of high school and adult classes in science at the Kimball High School in Royal Oak, Mich. Miss Gossling has also written several articles on museum activities and has spoken before the American Association of Museums, the American Association for the Advancement of Science and other professional organizations. She is listed in "Who's Who in American Science." Miss Gossling succeeds Mrs. Irene D. Reitz who served as acting head following the resignation of Miss Marion R. Peake on December 31.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 45)

way and invisible from the road. It seemed to me I walked a quarter of a mile down one stepping stone after another, before I reached it.

Mrs. Hader was on the back porch, shelling peas, and she proved to be friendly, but in no mood to sign a contract. She told me she and her present husband wanted to make a new record of "The Wreck of the Old 97" and were going to New York the next month to see about it. She said she would call then on Mr. Shapiro and talk about renewing the contract.

I had introduced myself as an old friend of her late husband and told her that when I knew Henry Whitter he had a singing partnership with G. B. Grayson, a blind man who lived at Laurel Blooming, N. C. She said Grayson had been killed years before in an automobile accident, and Henry had spent the last years of his life in a North Carolina institution, suffering from an ailment which had worn him down to "a bag of skin and bones"—a shadow of the robust young man I had known. I believe she said he died in 1941.

When I left, after delivering my most persuasive arguments and presenting as good a case as I could in behalf of Mr. Shapiro, I still didn't have a signed contract, but I did seem to have the friendship of Mrs. Hader, whom I liked in return. The letter I sent Mr. Shapiro, relating my adventures, however, pleased him so much that he considerably increased the fee he had agreed to pay me, so I didn't feel the trip was entirely a failure.

Several months later he wrote me that Mrs. Hader had finally "fallen into line" along with the other persons sharing in the copyright, and publication rights of "The Old 97" were now protected until 1980, when it will go into public domain. The last survivor of the wreck died a few months ago.

Before leaving the subject of "The Wreck" and proceeding to discuss less litigious aspects of Vernon Dalhart's later career, I should like to mention a few odd recordings. There was, for one, the dance band version played for Brunswick by Carl Fenton's Orchestra with a vocal refrain by Billy Jones and Ernest Hare.

A genuine oddity was a version of the song on a Grey Gull record sung by Arthur Fields, with words credited to someone named Watters, and bearing little resemblance to those in Dalhart's recordings. Grey Gull was said to have a custom of issuing a hit tune on one side of a record, then giving aspiring song writers $50 to write something to go on the other side, with the understanding that royalties would not be demanded. Probably "Watters" received $50 to do a non-royalty version of "The Wreck." This was possible, since a song title cannot be copyrighted and the tune was public property.

And several fanciers of hill-billy music have asked me not to overlook the excellent Columbia record of "The Wreck of the Old 97," made in 1927 by Gid Tanner's Skillet Lickers, assisted by Clayton McMichen and Riley Puckett. This record was good value, for it contained another back country classic, "John Henry (The Steel Drivin' Man)" on its reverse side—a rendition which the Columbia catalog editor facetiously termed "the musical millenium."

POSTSCRIPT

After the manuscript of this installment had gone to the printers, I was awakened from a nap on the afternoon of Sunday, June 5th, by a telephone call from a HOBBIES folder operator in Oak Park, Ill. My caller said he was a student of folk-music and I was mistaken in quoting the words of "The Wreck of the Old 97" as referring to the engineer as "Pete." The engineer, the young man said, was a man named Brodie, who was called "Steve" from the Steve Brodie who insisted he jumped from the Brooklyn bridge. My informant said he had a book of folk-music in which the name was printed as Steve, and he wanted to change "Pete" to "Steve" in my copy.

I am sure that, historically speaking, he was right. The sheet music also gives the name as Steve. Nevertheless, Dalhart sings it "Pete" in all his records, including the electrically re-made Victor and Bluebird. On replaying Henry Whitter's original Okeh record, I am inclined to think he says "Steve" rather than "Pete," but like many of the other words in that record, it is indistinct. So "Steve" is probably another word that Dalhart sang wrong and David Graves George miscopied after him. Dalhart also continued in his later records to say "Center" for "Spencer" and "average" for "air brake."

Incidentally, after Dalhart ceased to make new records in this country, in the early 1930's, his old ones were issued regularly in England, Australia, and New Zealand, and sold well for several years.

Several folk-music enthusiasts have urged me to devote my articles hereafter to nothing but the so-called "hill-billy" artists, but that will not be done. Such performers were not pioneer recorders and are outside the scope of this department. Dalhart has been written about at length because he was established as a singer of popular and semi-classical music before he went into the "folk music" field as a synthetic "hill-billy."

(To be continued)

I REMEMBER circus clowning
And the circus day parade.
I remember cotton candy
And the pinkish lemonade.

—Spencer C. Ackerman (c)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

I. Carson Robison Joins Dalhart

It is a relief to turn from the confusion and controversy that surrounded Vernon Dalhart's most famous record and narrate some of the major events of his later phonograph career.

From 1925 through 1928, Dalhart was the busiest and most popular of all recording artists. Singing for every company of even the slightest importance, he made thousands of records—just how many, nobody knows, and probably no one ever will know.

Some Dalhart enthusiasts have insisted that I publish a complete list of his recordings, but space limitation alone would prevent that, even if it were possible, which it isn't, to compile an errorless discography of the tenor's work. And I lack the time to attempt such a colossal undertaking. I have been told that Marion Hoffman of Kansas, has more than 3,500 Dalhart records and a Chicago man owns almost as many.

If Dalhart's first great break was the "fortuitous concurrence of circumstances" that led him to combine his Victor record of "The Wreck of the Old 97" with "The Prisoner's Song" his next vast slice of luck was becoming associated with the greatest of all writers of hill-billy songs, Carson Robison.

"Robbie" who was born in Chetopa, Kansas, August 4, 1890, and died March 24, 1957, in St. Francis Hospital, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was self-taught in music. When he was 15 he became a professional entertainer in the Midwest and in his early 30's worked for a time in Chicago with Wendell Hall, "The Red-headed Music Maker."

Besides being an excellent singer and guitar player, he was also a phenomenal whistler. But above all he was a song writer who knew exactly what buyers of country-type records wanted and gave it to them unerringly.

Coming to New York in 1924 with almost no money, he soon obtained work with the recording companies and made Victor records as an assisting artist to Hall before beginning his folk-music association with Dalhart. The personal relationship between Dalhart and Robison was never cordial and it ended in bitterness, but during the three years in which they were closely associated they were an ideal combination from the standpoint of the type of music Robison wrote and Dalhart sang.

When Robison severed the connection Dalhart's popularity suffered an immediate decline. At the time their partnership began, incidentally, Carson had just published his first successful song in the pseudo-hill-billy genre, "Way Out West in Kansas."

II. Edison Cylinder Hill-Billies

Since Dalhart's first successful hill-billy record was made for Edison, it should be interesting to observe in some detail the steady flow of such waxings which he turned out for both the Diamond Discs and, through dubbings, for the Blue Amberol cylinders.

His popularity with the dwindling number of cylinder record buyers from 1925 through 1929 was so great it would hardly be an exaggeration to say his hill-billy records, appealing strongly to country customers, were about the only thing that kept the Blue Amberols going as long as they did.

During his Edison career, more solo Blue Amberols were issued by Dalhart than by any other artist, although Billy Murray appeared in a larger number of records, counting the Premier Quartet offerings in which he sang the lead.

I have counted 137 issued Blue Amberol solos by Dalhart, and one other, "The Sneeze Song," which was assigned a number 5061, but not placed on the market. His list also includes nine duets with Gladys Rice, one with Al Bernard, and one with Marion Evelyn Cox.

The August, 1925, list of "latest Edison Amberol Records" (Edison by that time had quit calling them Blue Amberols) included Dalhart singing, Madelyn Sheppard's song "Many, Many Years Ago," and Robison composition, "The Time Will Come," which had an irresistible shuffling rhythm.

In September there were three, "Doin' the Best I Can," whose composer was listed as M. T. Slaughter—that is, Dalhart himself. It had a rather elaborate accompaniment of harmonica, fiddle, piano, and guitar. Also included were that great back-country favorite, "The Rovin' Gambler," and "The Runaway Train," the latter jointly credited to Robert Massey and Robison.

Only 12 Blue Amberols were issued in November, but Dalhart starred in three of these and sang an incidental chorus in two fox-trots, "Cecilia," played by Billy Wynne's Greenwich Village Inn, and "Red Hot Henry Brown," by the Georgia Melodians. He had not yet completely abandoned popular songs for hill-billies.

Records of the latter type were "She's Comin' 'Round the Mountain," "The Little Rosewood Casket," and "The John T. Scopes Trial (The Old Religion's Better After All)." This last was an appeal to backwoods religious fundamentalism which Robison wrote (under the pen name of Carlos B. McAfee) and Dalhart sang both, I suspect, with tongue-in-cheek.

Robison, by the way, wrote songs under many names other than his own. He told me he couldn't remember how he hit on "McAfee," but when he turned out hill-billies under the disguise of Maggie Andrews he was using his mother's maiden name. "Zeb Turney's Gal" is a charming number of the country kind which he composed under the Maggie Andrews pseudonym.

In the February, 1926, supplement out of 15 Blue Amberols listed, four were Dalhart's rustic specialties—"Behind These Gray Walls," "Sydney Allen," "The Unknown Soldier's Grave," and "Zeb Turney's Gal." In addition, he sang the refrain of "The Prisoner's Song" played rather belatedly as a waltz dance record by Kaplan's Melodists.

Page two was devoted to a complete listing of "Mountaineer and Rural Ballads," comprising the 22 of that type Dalhart had made prior to the February supplement. The list was prefaced with this statement: "We have had such an enormous demand and so many inquiries about this type of record sung by Vernon Dalhart with violin, harmonica, and guitar accompaniment that we are listing them this month for your convenience in ordering."

At the bottom of the page was an inquiry which in those days appeared in every issue of the Blue Amberol monthly supplement: "Does your collection include the only recording of Mr. Edison's voice? 'Let Us Not Forget—A Message to the American People,' by Thomas A. Edison, No. 3756."

This constant reminder caused Mr. Edison's brief spoken remarks to become one of the best selling Edison records. Yet today everybody who finds a copy seems to think he has stumbled on the only one in existence.

Let me answer many inquiries by saying that Edison discs and Blue

Vernon Dalhart

PART VI

By JIM WALSH

Charlie Bowman's daughters, Jennie and Pauline, also were recording artists. Their Columbia record of "Railroad, Take Me Back" (written by their father), and "Old Lonesome Blues" was especially popular.

Amberol cylinders of "Let Us Not Forget" are not—the high prices sometimes asked to the contrary—either valuable or rare. Plenty of other folks beside yourself have records of Mr. Edison's voice.

And so the deluge of Dalhart cylinders continued, month after month. As a final example, in March, 1926, besides singing the refrain of the waltz record of "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," by Kaplan's Melodists, he also did "Frank Dupre," "The Boston Burglar," "The Freight Wreck at Altoona," and "The Wreck of the 1256." Both of the railroad songs were from the pen of the prolific Robison.

III. Hill-Billy Diamond Discs

Following the course of Dalhart's Edison Diamond Disc hill-billies amounts to much the same thing as tracking his cylinders, for as has been pointed out, the cylinders were copied from the discs. It is interesting, however, to note that in June, 1925, he combined his own song, "Do-in' the Best I Can," with Robison's "The Time Will Come."

Robison was now playing the guitar in all Dalhart records and contributing incidental whistling effects, while the violinist was "Fiddlin' Murray Kellner," a gifted musician who later had his own salon orchestra which recorded for Edison.

In July, Dalhart sang that ancient tear-jerker, "In the Baggage Coach Ahead" (written by a Negro Pullman porter, Gussie L. Davis), and combined it with "Many, Many Years Ago." By October Dalhart's Diamond Disc popularity was reaching full tide, for he had no less than four double-faced records of hill-billy tunes besides singing the refrain of the dance record of "Red Hot Henry Brown."

The hill-billies were "The Chain Gang Song," written by Bob Massey, and doubled with "The New River Train." (This song, named for a slow train that runs through the mountains of Southwest Virginia, was copied from one of Henry Whitter's Okeh records). Also, "The Little Rosewood Casket," and "The Picture That Is Turned Toward The Wall;" "She's Comin' 'Round the Mountain," and "The Boston Burglar;" and finally, "The John T. Scopes Trial," coupled with one of Dalhart's best sellers, "The Death of Floyd Collins."

The latter gruesome opus, commemorating the death in a mountain cave of a young Kentucky man, was written by an Atlanta, Ga., blind minister, the Rev. Andrew Jenkins, and his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Irene Spain. Jenkins himself was a popular Okeh recording artist both under his own name and the slight disguise of "Blind Andy." "Floyd Collins" swept the South almost as strongly as "The Wreck of the Old 97" had conquered it a year before.

It will be seen from the foregoing that Dalhart, besides relying heavily on such writers as Carson Robison and Andrew Jenkins, was reviving many old-time popular songs and singing them in the hill-billy vernacular. Some of his incidental touches were masterpieces, such as the droll way in which he dragged out "husband" in the final refrain of "The Baggage Coach Ahead."

These touches, however, may have made the more discerning country customers suspect he was having a bit of fun at the expense of the music they liked. I have often wondered if, in spite of the rich financial rewards of singing hill-billies, Dalhart didn't have many struggles with his artistic conscience.

Dissatisfaction with the type of music to which he had descended, combined with overwork, may have caused the irritability and impatience which annoyed many of his fellow recording artists during this, his most successful period.

Dalhart's contribution to the November, 1925, Edison list was even larger. He made both sides of four records and one side of a fifth. The combinations were "Dear, Oh Dear" and "The Sneeze Song," "I Wish I Was a Single Girl Again," and "After the Ball," "The Wreck of the Shenandoah," and "The Wreck of the 1256." (Both written by Robison, who not only wrote songs concerning any ancient railroad wreck he could hear about, but also seized on current calamities, such as the wreck of the Shenandoah dirigible, for his inspiration); "Jesse James" and "The Ship That Never Returned," and for the finale, "Casey Jones," coupled with "Got the Railroad Blues (But I Haven't Got The Railroad Fare)," sung by Gene Austin with a piano accompaniment by Charles Bates.

Charlie Bowman "Champion Fiddler of East Tennessee," who made Brunswick, Columbia, Okeh, and Vocalion records, was a friend and admirer of Dalhart. He now lives in retirement at Union City, Ga.

The late "Jack" Reedy, banjoist and recording artist of Marion, Va., was proud of knowing Vernon Dalhart. He is shown here outside a tent in which a folk-music festival was being held on White Top Mountain.

The October supplement included this statement: "So great is the demand for these unique records by Dalhart and Company that we have difficulty keeping up with it. Above are listed eight selections for which we have had countless requests."

By May, 1926, the number of Dalhart's monthly offerings was being curtailed, but there was no let-up in his popularity. This month was notable for a record coupling "The Floyd Collins Waltz," and "Better Get Out Of My Way," the latter an old-fashioned country dance tune.

Both numbers were played by an instrumental group, Dalhart's Texas Panhandlers, with vocal refrains by Dalhart and featuring Murray Kellner's fiddling. Dalhart planned to turn out a series of records by this combination, but these two selections, which they recorded for most of the important companies, seem to be all they did.

Although Robison had accompanied Dalhart in all the Diamond Discs under discussion, he did not begin harmonizing his baritone voice with Dalhart's tenor until No. 51807 was issued in October, 1926. This combined two of his songs, "Just a Melody," and "When You're Far Away."

The names Dalhart and Robison were thereafter printed in capital letters whenever they appeared together in an Edison supplement—a distinction given to no other artist. In January, 1927, they sang "The Dying Girl's Message," and "If I Could Hear My Mother Pray Again." The catalog editor dryly remarked: "If you have tears, prepare to shed them now."

By the time this supplement appeared Edison was beginning to make records by a few authentic Southern musicians. There had already been a few by a Tennessee mountaineer, Fiddlin' Powers, and his children. And just below the Dalhart-Robison duets were listed "John Henry" and "Wild Bill Jones" by Ernest V. Stoneman, a Galax, Va., resident, who called himself "The Blue Ridge Mountaineer." "Dad" Stoneman is still living in Maryland, but he returns each year to take part in a mountain music festival at Galax, which was also the home town of Henry Whitter for most of Whitter's life.

In February, 1927, Dalhart made an Edison record of two songs which had previously been popular with Southern patrons on a Columbia disc by a North Carolina hill-billy, Charlie Poole: "I'm the Man that Rode the Mule Around the World," and "Can I Sleep in your Barn Tonight, Mister?"

In March, Robison was represented by his astonishing whistling record of "Nola," and his own composition, "Whistle-Itis." April was marked by two of Dalhart's best Edison numbers, which unlike most of his recordings, approached the true folk vein, "Don't Let the Deal Go Down," and "Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie"—a song, he no doubt had heard many times during his boyhood ranch days in Texas. (The tenor always sounds a little homesick to me when I hear his records of "I'd Like to be in Texas When They Round Up in the Spring").

Edison's October supplement contained one of Carson Robison's most successful songs, "My Blue Ridge Mountain Home," sung by Dalhart and Robison — to follow the supplement style. It was coupled with another attractive Robison composition,

"When the Moon Shines Down Upon the Mountain," sung by Dalhart alone. On second record Dalhart sang "The Mississippi Flood," and "The Wreck of the Number Nine," both written by Robison. This is one of the few Edison records by Dalhart not in my collection.

Mentioning "The Wreck of the Number Nine" reminds me of what I believe is the only time I ever felt that I was profiteering from the sale of a second-hand record. In June, 1958, I received a letter from Morgan Seymour, a police officer of Carmel, N. Y. Mr. Seymour, who collects everything associated with American railway trains of the steam locomotive era, said he had made a long but unsuccessful search for a copy of Dalhart's record of "The Wreck of the Number Nine," on any brand.

He explained it had been one of his favorites when he was a boy and now he wanted it to play for his children. Despairing of ever finding the record in his home environment, he had turned to me because I lived in the South where such discs were more popular. He said he'd gladly pay $10 for a copy in good condition.

It happened that I had an excellent Brunswick record of the number, which probably hadn't cost me more than a dime. I replied to Mr. Seymour, telling him I'd let him have the record at his suggested price, and he promptly sent me $11—the extra dollar to cover the postage.

Feeling pangs of conscience at what I felt was over-charging him, I also included a Domino record of the same song, not in as good condition as the Brunswick, and there probably never was a box of records more carefully packed. Within a few days I received a happy letter from Mr. Seymour, saying the two had arrived safely and were being played over and over.

Since then he has visited Roanoke, taking movies of old-time Norfolk and Western trains. We talked by phone but unfortunately had no chance to get together in person. My policeman friend probably will be interested to know that just a few days ago I found in a Goodwill store a Romeo record of "The Wreck of the Number Nine," coupled with "If Your Love Like the Rose Should Die" sung by Dalhart and Robison.

But let me make it clear that Mr. Seymour doesn't want to pay $10, or anything like it, for other Dalhart records. He offered that price only because the record had sentimental associations for him and he hadn't been able to find it in New York. He is not interested in buying other Dalhart records, and neither am I. So please don't send us record lists and ask us to quote "best price!"

Late in 1957 Edison published a folder giving a list of all the hill-billy Diamond Discs that had been issued up to then. Some were not really hill-billies, but renditions of old-time popular songs or later songs in the old-fashioned manner.

Included were one by Gene Austin; eight by Austin and George Re-neau; 10 by John Baltzell, "champion old-time fiddler;" two by Al Bernard; six by another fiddler, Jasper Bisbee; two by the Dixie Mountaineers; four by Fiddlin' Powers and Family; 10 by Henry Ford's Old-Time Dance Orchestra! one by Ernest Hare; one by Charles Harrison; two by Harvey Hindermeyer, and Earle Tuckerman; two by Kaplan's Melodists; one by the Sam Patterson Trio; two by Manuel Romain; eight by Allen Sisson, "Champion Fiddler of Tennessee;" 14 by Ernest V. Stoneman; seven by Stoneman and the Dixie Mountaineers—and 58 by Dalhart, three by Dalhart and Robison, and two by Dalhart's Texas Panhandlers!

Unintentionally, I skipped past the July, 1927, Edison supplement in which Dalhart had two double-faced records: "The Crepe on the Old Cabin Door," coupled with "Kennie Wagner's Surrender" (the latter referring to a notorious East Tennessee desperado who, I believe, is still living); and "Lindbergh, the Eagle of the U.S.A.," doubled with "Lucky Lindy."

The latter two songs, of course, hymned Charles A. Lindbergh's successful flight to France in May, 1927. Dalhart's restrained versions of the hastily contrived tunes were less impressive than the two rousing, heavily amplified ones which Irving Kaufman made for Okeh under the name of Noel Taylor and which were on sale within 10 days after Lindbergh landed.

My old friend, the late E. W. (Jack) Reedy of Marion, Va., made Victor and Brunswick records as a member of the Blue Ridge Ramblers and Jack Reedy and His Walker's Mountain String Band (Walker's Mountain is a few miles from my former home in Marion). He used to tell me with pride of how he met Dalhart in Brunswick's New York studios, when, as Jack phrased it, "he was puttin' on 'Lucky Lindy' and 'Lindbergh, the Eagle of the U.S.A.'"

Jack recalled Carson Robison as the guitar player, and said the fiddler was "a little Jewish fellow from Brooklyn" — probably Murray Kellner. Jack always insisted that Dalhart, in a friendly conversation, asked him where he was from, and when Jack replied "Virginia," Dalhart retorted, "If you're just from Virginia you don't know anything about the South. You ought to see Georgia, where I came from!"

I told Jack that Dalhart wasn't from Georgia, he was from Texas, but my friend insisted with some heat that Georgia was what Dalhart had said, and he couldn't be convinced otherwise. Until he died it was one of Jack's proudest recollections that he had actually shaken hands with the man who stood far above anybody else at that time in the hill-billy record field.

Jack shared the common hill-billy musician's belief that Dalhart had made "over $6,000,000" from his records. That, of course, was a grotesque exaggeration.

(Continued on page 44)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

Jack Reedy's mention of Georgia reminds me of something that puzzles me. I once met J. Frank Smith, who headed a company of "Sacred Singers" that made some highly popular Columbia records. He told me that Dalhart was a member of the troupe at one time during his recording career.

Our talk was hurried, and I didn't ask for particulars. I wish now I had. But it's inconceivable to me that Dalhart could ever have taken part in the wanderings of a group of country musicians after he had become such a successful recording artist that he must have sung both day and night to fill all his engagements. Perhaps he made a few "courtesy appearances" with the Sacred Singers when he and Ed Smalle toured the South in 1924.

Another folk musician who remembers with pleasure more than one meeting with Dalhart is 71-year-old Charlie Bowman, who has lost a leg in recent years and now lives a shut-in life in Union City, Ga. Charlie began making Columbia, Okeh, Brunswick, and Vocalion records as fiddler for Al Hopkins' Buckle Buster and as the leader of Charlie Bowman and His Buddies in the 1920's when he lived in Johnson City, Tenn.

He says he won more fiddling awards than any other competing musician. Charlie also has two daughters, Pauline and Jennie, who made Columbia records in their teens, and, as their fond father says, "were for years the best-known kids in East Tennessee." Charlie wrote the following in a letter to me:

"I knew Dalhart very well—met him in New York on one of my recording dates and several occasions later. He was a very nice fellow to talk to, and was a very good mouth-harp player and singer—very serious about his recording work along with Carson Robison. Vernon was high tempered. He would fly off the handle if he made a mistake while making a recording, but he only got mad at himself. I have sat in the studio with him while he was recording."

Although, as will be seen in the concluding installment, Dalhart's popularity took a tail spin after 1927, his appeal probably held up with Edison record buyers better than with any other group, and his name continued to appear regularly in the Diamond Disc lists until the final supplement appeared late in 1929. Well before that time, however, he had lost the invaluable services of Carson Robison. But prior to relating their unfortunate estrangement it would be well to turn back a few years and briefly discuss some of his recordings for Victor and other companies.

For the moment, however, let's go overseas and chuckle at some of the reviews of Dalhart records that appeared in the Gramophone and Talk- ing Machine News of the late 1920's and early 1930's. I have already indicated Dalhart's recordings won considerable popularity throughout the British Empire and continued to be issued in Australia and New Zealand for several years after his vogue had passed here. But they didn't earn the approval of Ogilvie Mitchell, the bearded, cantankerous 80-year-old who, for many years, had done the reviewing for the T.M.N. Mitchell had an anti-American attitude which is glaringly obvious in what he said about the Dalhart discs.

I believe a Regal record, reviewed in May, 1926, must have been made by Dalhart and taken from Columbia matrices. If so, it gives us a new assumed name for him—Herbert VERNON. The songs, "A Boy's Best Friend Is His Mother," and "After the Ball," had been recorded by Dalhart for Columbia and other American companies. Mr. Mitchell crustily wrote:

"The first of these is a very old ditty of at least 40 years ago. . . Is Columbia sure that 'After the Ball' was by Charles K. Harris? We always understood it to have been written by George Le Brun. Herbert Vernon has a nice light tenor and sings with a curious accent."

The "curious accent" undoubtedly was American. And Mitchell must have been about the only person with some knowledge of popular music who didn't believe Charles K. Harris wrote "After the Ball."

When Zonophone issued "The Governor's Pardon," and "The Engineer's Child" in July, 1926, Mitchell said:

"This is so very American in accent and intonation that we could hardly understand a word of either of the songs. We are told that the record will make a wide appeal. Well, perhaps so, but we doubt it."

It is interesting that in August Zonophone issued a record of "The Prisoner's Song" as a "grand organ" solo by Spencer Shaw.

In February, 1927, Dalhart had a Zonophone record of "There's a New Star in Heaven Tonight" (a pathetic tribute to the late Rudolf Valentino) and Carson Robison's song, "An Old-Fashioned Picture." Said Mitchell:

"If, as we are told, this gentleman specializes in this type of song, we are sorry for the poor people who have to listen to him."

In July, 1927, when Dalhart and Robison were represented with Zonophone duets of "Far Away In Hawaii," and "Just a Melody," the reviewer wrote:

"These two American entertainers entertain after their own fashion, which is not ours. Those who prefer American style to our own will revel over this record."

(A few years later Robison and his Pioneers went to England and were sensationally successful on records, stage and radio. It is amusing to find Mitchell shortly after the foregoing remarks appeared referring to the Southern-born Gene Austin as being a "whispering baritone, with a rich Coney Island accent.")

In December, 1928 Zonophone brought out a record of "Climbin' Up De Golden Stairs" by Dalhart, Robison, and Hood, and "Little Green Valley" by Dalhart and Robinson. Mr. Mitchell snorted:

"Except for the inclusion of the word, 'golden,' in the first title, we cannot imagine the reason for the inclusion of the jews-harp in the above, especially as we are unable to distinguish the peculiar tone (if any) among the rest of the twangs. . . For the rest the disc is sprightly enough—well sung and admirably recorded."

Dalhart was virtually a has-been in the States by December, 1930, but in that month Regal issued a record of him and Miss Hood singing "The Deacon's Prayer," which was performed in jazz style, with a "hot" accompaniment, despite its religious title and "Hallelujah! There's a Rainbow in the Sky." It wasn't reviewed.

In June, 1930, Dalhart, singing on an Imperial record as The Lone Star Ranger, got a fairly favorable review of "Eleven More Months and Ten More Days." This humorous number, written by Arthur Fields and Fred Hall, was one of the best of Dalhart's later offerings. It was combined with "Song of the Condemned," by the Radio Imps, Gerald Macy and Ed Smalle. By this time Mitchell's health had failed and Hubert S. Ryan had taken his place as the reviewer. Ryan said:

"The Song of the Condemned" . . . is a little melodrama in itself, with a grim background, and is most effectively done. The number on the reverse side is more conventional, but almost equally well rendered. This disc, unless I am much mistaken, is going to prove a tremendous success."

(To be continued)

FOR LOCAL HISTORY STUDY YOUR MUSEUM LABELS:

Rochester's first silversmith was Erastus Cook, who came here in 1815 and rented a room from Jehiel Barnard, the first tailor in a small building near the Reynolds Arcade.

He was followed by others, notably Johnathan Packard the 3 Burr brothers, Albert who was an apprentice of Cook and who died in the cholera epidemic, Alexander J. and Cornelius; William and Henry Stanton, Jedediah Baldwin, James Steele, Ezra Booth and Thomas Henry Marshall.

Most of these were located in the Exchange Street area, then the business section of the city. According to a newspaper advertisement of September, 1834, James Steele was located at the corner of North Clinton and Main Streets.

From 1815 to 1850 there were at least 41 Rochester silversmiths.

Early Rochester, New York, as depicted on one of the labels in the Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences

HALF CENTURIES OF ITALIAN OPERA: RAFFAELE GRU-Buridice: Funeste spiagge (Peri); DE LUCA - Orfeo: Tu sei morta (Monteverdi); SPANI - La Donna Ancor e Fedele: Se Florindo e fedele (Alessandro Scarlatti); ROTHIER - Oedipe a Colone: Elle me prodigue (Sacchini); BACCALONI - Matrimonio Segreto: Udite (Cimarosa); BONCI - Barbiere di Siviglia: Se il mio nome: AMATO & LUPPI - Puritani: Suoni la tromba; BATTISTINI - Favorita: Vien Leonora; GALVANY - Crispino e la Comare: Io non sono; LAZARO - Trovatore: Di quella pira; PONSELLE - Gioconda: Suicidio; ZENATELLO & DIDUR - Mefistofele: Fin da stanotte; KRUSZELNICKA - Wally: Ebben; DE MURO - Fanciulla del West: Or son sei mesi; DESTINN - Pagliacci: Ballatella; GARBIN - Cavalleria Rusticana: Brindisi; MUZIO - Madame Sans-Gene: Che me ne faccio; FORMICHI-Resurrezione: Oh! non crediate; LAZARI - L'Amore dei Tre Re: Son quarant'anni; MERLI - Sly: Non sono buffone.

Contents of T-328 THE THREE MELODISTS OF ITALIAN OPERA: DONIZETTI, ROSSINI, BELLINI: GRANFORTE - Don Sebastiano: O Lisbona; STORCHIO & RAPPINI - Linda di Chamounix: Al bel destino; PAOLI & POPOVICI - Poluto: Al suon; DE MACCHI - Lucrezia Borgia: Com'e bello; PICCAVER - Belisario: O, si tremendo; BORONAT - Don Pasquale: Quel guardo; LAURI-VOLPI - Favorita: Una vergine; BATTISTINI - Maria di Rohan: Bella e di sol vestita; COSTANTINO - Duca d'Alba: Angelo casto; STRACCIARI - Lucia di Lammermoor: Cruda, funesta smania; ESCALAIS - Guillaume Tell: Asile hereditaire; DE ANGELIS - Mose: Invocazione; TETRAZZINI - Barbiere di Siviglia: Una voce; BACCALONI & GERACE - Italiana in Algeri: Al capricci; BONINSEGNA - Semiramide: Bel raggio; GALVANY - Sonnambula: Ah! non giunge; LAZARO - Puritani: A te, o cara; BURZIO - Norma: Qual cor tradisti; FABBRI - Capuleti ed i Montecchi: Se Romeo; MUZIO - Bianca e Fernando: sorgi, o padre.

VALE! KEATING COLLECTION

Wary of reports that reach me from time to time, I sought George T. Keating's confirmation of the startling news that he had disposed of his collection — the richest in the United States, possibly in the world.

In answer to my letter, Mr. Keating elaborated on the details of his unexpected decision. The collection, although sold privately, will eventually belong to the Yale Library. In fact, part of the records are already there.

The reason for this sudden turn of events was Mr. Keating's wish to reside in a place smaller than the "houses built around housing my many records," as he puts it.

However, Mr. Keating assures me of his continued interest in the hobby. "I found perhaps a thousand duplicates in albums," he writes, "and so have a fair start to a listening collection: Schorr-Wotan's Farewell, Stracciari, Hempel, Bindernagle, Galli-Curci, De Luca, Pinza, Rethberg, Farrar, Gerville-Reache, Husch, Huni-Mihasek and other favorites. So I will always be glad to hear from you and swap gossip about the gentle art of bel canto."

Honestly, I'm dismayed; and surely many others will feel the same way. It's because the glamour of "The Keating Collection," accumulated through the years with much expenditure of time, perseverance, and money — the glamour we all knew and respected — is now gone.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

I. Hill-Billies for Victor and Others

Despite the resentment which Victor's popular pianist, arranger, and conductor, Nat Shilkret, felt because he considered Dalhart had not sufficiently recognized his part in shaping "The Prisoner's Song" into a sensational success, the overwhelming success of record No. 19427 caused Dalhart to be called on for many other Victor hill-billy recordings.

There was a lapse of six months, however, between the appearance of "The Wreck of the Old 97" and "The Prisoner's Song," in November, 1924, and Dalhart's next record of that type. Perhaps the lag was caused by the factory's efforts to catch up with the demand for the biggest selling vocal record made up to that time.

In May, 1925, Dalhart came through with "In the Baggage Coach Ahead," in which he was assisted by a male trio, and "I'll Ne'er Forget My Mother and My Home."

The supplement said: "A call has gone up all over the country for Dalhart to sing more popular songs of the old-time sort, like the 'Wreck of the Old 97.' Well, here are two more of them."

In June his version of "The Time Will Come" was coupled with "Way Down Home," by Gene Austin and Carson Robison. In July his admirers were pleased with "He Sure Can Play a Harmonica" and "Ain't You Comin' Out Tonight?" The supplement said the last was written jointly by Dalhart and Robison, although the tune was the same as "Buffalo Gals," which had been published almost 100 years before.

August brought two more Victor records by Dalhart. One appropriately coupled "The Runaway Train" and "The Chain Gang Song," and the other "A Boy's Best Friend is His Mother" and "Many, Many Years Ago."

His records, mostly titles he was also singing for Edison, Columbia, Brunswick, and many other companies, continued to pop up regularly in Victor lists. They were both the Alpha and Omega, so to speak, of the May, 1926, supplement.

On page one, under the heading

"A New Dramatic Dalhart Record," the editor said:

"Vernon Dalhart's record of 'The Prisoner's Song' is proving the best-selling vocal record in Victory history. Here is a new two-ballad record exhibiting weird crude power of appeal. 'The Governor's Pardon' is the night-vigil of a condemned man before the day set for death. To the monotonous ticking of the clock, the night-hours wear away. With morning comes not the expected death-warrant, but the Governor's pardon. 'The Engineer's Child' tells of the wife who is to hang a red lamp in the window if her sick child dies; a green, if it lives. Her husband, thundering past in the night, sees the green light and all is well."

The last record in the supplement received this mention:

"As we begin this issue with Dalhart, we conclude with him. In this new trio, (its first record), he appears as both vocalist and instrumentalist. The trio includes guitar, violin, flute, jew's harp, harmonica, and some interesting tricks. It has a waltz based on the familiar Floyd Collins ballad which Dalhart sang for us not long after this tragic event; this is coupled with a whirling swift reel, an almost ideal number for trick Charlestoners. Dalhart sings in both numbers. (The second side, of course, was 'Better Get Out of My Way,' by the group known as Dalhart's Texas Panhandlers.")

For many months afterward, Dalhart's Victor records continued to appear with little sign of a drop in popularity. Some of his best selling numbers, in fact, were still to come. But it would serve no useful purpose to list them all. Instead, I prefer to mention several unusual discs he made during the next few years.

"The Texas Tenor" was one of the few popular singers who sometimes sang songs that were long enough to take up both sides of a 10-inch disc. One of these was his Columbia of "The Bully Song," an irresistible "coon shout" which Charles Trevathan had written for May Irwin in the 1890's. With its swinging refrain of "When I walk that levee round, round, round—" it is one of the best records Dalhart ever made. The hill-billy tune, "Bully of the Town," is a corruption of Trevathan's old-time hit.

Another two-part disc which, in my opinion, has less to recommend it is "Tired of Mother," which Victor issued in June, 1928. The words of this dirge were written by a Wesleyan Methodist minister in High Point, N. C., and the music by another

Vernon Dalhart

By JIM WALSH

PART VII

preacher of the same family name. The author of the words published it himself. It is hard to understand how Dalhart could believe a record of such a mawkish affair, occupying two full sides, could sell well enough to make it a paying proposition.

The crude lyrics tell of a paralyzed, aged woman who was lifted off a train in the belief that her daughter would come to take care of her. When the daughter didn't show up, and evinced no interest in what became of her mother, the "unwanted mother" was taken to a hospital, where she died.

The author says he "cried and prayed" over this "true story" before putting words to paper, but his internal struggles did not inspire him to write literate English. Nevertheless, the number came to Dalhart's attention (probably the author sent him a copy of the sheet music) and he recorded it, smoothing out some of the limping lines and amateurish versification.

Its sale was small and did not add to Dalhart's popularity. The record was made after his break with Carson Robison, when he was increasingly harried to find good material.

Shortly before this, the name of Adele Hood, who had appeared in Edison tone tests with Dalhart as far back as 1917, began to be seen in Victor and other supplements. She had taken the place of Murray Kellner as Dalhart's violinist.

Her name was published in a Victor supplement for the first time in January, 1928, when she, Dalhart, and Robison sang and played "Sing On, Brother, Sing." (A little earlier Dalhart and Robison had sung refrains in dance records of "Shine On, Harvest Moon" and "On Mobile Bay," by the International Novelty Orchestra conducted by Nat Shilkret).

In March, the Dalhart-Robison-Hood trio had a big seller in "Oh! Susanna" coupled with Robison's beautiful composition, "When the Sun Goes Down Again," sung as a Dalhart-Robison duet. Miss Hood's incidental violin playing is exquisite.

II. Charley Case's Songs

One of the most amusing double-faced records Vernon Dalhart ever made, and apparently one of the scarcest and hardest to find, is his coupling of two mock-ballads written by the brilliant Negro comedian, Charley Case. One side was called "A Warning to Boys" and the other "A Warning to Girls." This appeared under Columbia's 50 cent Velvet Tone label as by Dalhart and as a Harmony record by "Mack Allen." It is amusing that "Mack Allen" was claimed as "an exclusive Harmony artist." Charley Case was a comedian of a high strung disposition, who always played with a piece of string while on the stage to give his nervous hands something to do. He made three Victor records around 1909-10, "Father as a Scientist," "Experiences in the Show Business" and "How Mother Made the Soup."

My vaudeville comedian friend, the late Joe Laurie, Jr., told me Case

REGINA COIN OPERATED MUSIC BOX

Rudolph Wurlitzer

Automatically changes 12 records with selector. Original cabinet 61" tall. Has 14" removable base on casters. Total ht. 75". Including 61 records - 27". Write.

ROBERT WALDO

1312 Burkwood Rd. Mansfield, Ohio
Phone SK. 6-2558 np

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.
Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

OLD SALZBURG MUSIC BOXES

Bought

Sold

Repaired

Cases expertly refinished, inlays restored and retinted to original condition.

Free Estimates — All Work Fully Guaranteed.

The only shop south of New York specializing in new &
Antique Music Boxes

Located in Historic Old Georgetown in the Nation's Capitol

1645 Wisconsin Ave. N.W.

D. Konvalinka, Prop.

Washington 7, D. C.

Hudson 3-4553

(SEE OUR FULL PAGE, ILLUSTRATED AD ON PAGE 35)

tfc

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1825

EXPERT REPAIRING

FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE
FREE ESTIMATES, Appraisals and Lists.

Bornand Music Box Co.

139 4th Ave. (PE 8-1508) PELHAM, N.Y.
tfc

ELECTRIFY

PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Leo Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

Write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
Box 595, Tujunga, Calif.

n06p

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPLA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

tfx

VERNON DALHART
at the peak of his recording career.

was born in Lockport, N. Y., his mother being a Negro of the Albino type and his father a white man of Irish descent. He died in the Palace Hotel on 45th Street in New York, in or about the year 1916, aged 58, and his wife, a full-blooded Negro woman, died of shock when she learned of his death.

He was cleaning a revolver when he was fatally shot. Although the shooting may have been an accident, Joe Laurie said Case was known to have brooded, and the general opinion of his associates was that the wound was intentional—a further example of the truism that the greatest comedians have their tragic side.

At any rate, Dalhart unearthed the two burlesque ballads with which Case convulsed his theater audiences, and recorded them with a mock solemnity to the accompaniment of an old-fashioned parlor organ, that is irresistibly funny. The words are worth reprinting, although to be appreciated to the fullest, they should be heard with the music. Here is the "Warning to Girls."

"Homeward to her mother a working girl did come—
Weary with her honest toil and lighted up with rum.
Supper was not ready—she aimed a brutal blow,
When the bright baby stopped her,
saying: 'Sister, don't do so!
Don't swat dear mother, girl, just 'cause she's old—
Don't mop her face with the floor!
Think how her love is a treasure of gold—
Don't push her face through the door!
Don't put the rocking chair next to her eye;
Don't bounce the lamp off her bean!
Angels are watching you up in the sky—
Don't swat dear mother—it's mean!"

RECITATION:

"There was once a poor young girl who left her country home
And came to the city to seek employment.
She had to leave her home because the wolf was at the door
And her father had fallen down and hurt his knee.
Just before she went away her sweetheart, whose name was Jack,
Said to her, 'I fear you will not be true.'
And so she had to promise him before she got on the train
That every night at 8 o'clock she would burst into tears.
She came to the city and was riding on a street car
When a man got up and offered her his seat.
She refused the offer with scorn for she saw that he wore a ring
And she did not know but that he might be a married man.
Then up came the conductor and said 'I knew you would be true!
And tore off his false whiskers—and it was Jack!
And that day she got a telegram saying that her father's knee was better,
And an aunt had died and left her Fifty-eight Thousand Dollars!"

And here is the "Warning to Boys:"

"There was once a poor young man who left his country home
And came to the city to seek employment.
He promised his dear mother that he'd lead the simple life
And always shun the fatal curse of drink!
He came to the city and accepted employment in a quarry.
And while there he made the acquaintance of some college men;
He little knew that they were demons, for they wore the best of clothes—
But clothes do not always make the gentleman!
One night he went out with his newfound friends to dine,
And they tried to persuade him to take a drink.
They tempted him, and tempted him, but he refused and he refused,
Till finally he took a glass of beer!
When he seen what he had done he dashed the liquor to the floor
And staggered through the door with delirium tremens.
While in the grip of liquor he met a
Salvation Army lassie,
And cruelly he broke her tambourine.
All she said was 'Heaven bless you!' and placed a mark upon his brow
With a kick that she had learned before she was saved.
So now, kind friends, take my advice and shun the fatal curse of drink
And don't go around breaking people's tambourines!"

If you happen to run across a copy of this masterpiece of satire, be sure to acquire the record. It is worth having.

III. The Break With Carson Robison

A record dealer once told me of a visit he received just before Christmas of 1927 from a lanky, somewhat intoxicated, mountaineer. The rustic gentleman bought a dozen Dalhart records, all of them dealing with train wrecks, floods, earthquakes, murders, and similar tragic happenings, and all, of course, ending with a moral admonition, such as "Don't forget that the trip is a short one from this earth to that sweet promised land!"

As his records were being wrapped, the mountaineer explained they were a Christmas present "for the old woman and the kids." Said he:

ADELYNE HOOD

PHOTOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED—Old cylinder phonos, and records, also disc phonos, roller organs and music boxes. — Neumann Miller,
410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. ja3253

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

ATTENTION! Antique cylinder and disc phonographs, records, parts. Bought, sold, repaired. Almost everything in this line available. Repairs done on all makes.
Reproducers, parts wanted. What have you to trade or sell? Large list of what I have for stamp. Satisfaction guaranteed. Special choice Edison cylinder phonograph, like new, horn and cylinders, $40. — Antique Phonograph Service, c/o Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State, Brewer,
Maine. n38001

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 50c each.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa.
mh120821

FOR SALE: Cylinder and disc. phonographs. Article "Phonographs as a Hobby" free. Eight pages pictures, present day values on 65 phonographs, $2.25 postpaid. — Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy,
Ohio. ja3614

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, re-producers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City
Road, Richmond 31, Va. ja6468

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand,
Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonophone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann
Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif.
ja3867

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.
(Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

"The old woman and the kids will play these here sad pieces and cry their d--- fool heads off! With all this here mis'ry music they're sure gonna have one h--- of a Merry Christmas!"

Most of those "sad pieces" were written by Carson Robison, who soon afterward parted company with Dalhart. I have a letter which Robbie wrote to me in October, 1951, explaining why they dissolved partnership.

It boiled down to two things. Ro-
(Continued on page 44)

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. aul2698

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED: A Seeburg Eagle nickelodeon. Write—Harold Shaner, 1042 Myrtle Street, Cumberland, Md. n3802

WANTED: Large Regina cigar store Indian, Mills Violino, Dewey, Owl, Judge, large saloon items. — Frank Curtiss, St. Louis, Michigan. n3403

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Columbia Graphonola, floor model. Plays steel and regular records - 10 steel records - 96 regular records on portfolios famous singers and operas. Original mahogany finish turned slightly dark. Best cash offer. — D. R. Perdue, 3409 Poplar, Pine Bluff, Ark. d3806

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

ORIGINAL: Mills Violano-Virtuoso manuals. Actual reprints, clean and new, with drawings, instructions for repair and operation. No photostats. Write: —The Old Collector, 2323 Arthur Street, Eugene, Ore. n3844

WANTED: Song Slide Illustrations and Advertising Slides (sometimes referred to as Lantern Slides) of songs from the 1890 to 1915 era. — W. K. Dorsey, Wilmington College, Wilmington, N. C. ja3464

REPRODUCER REPAIRING of all kinds. Have a supply of the original Edison Styluses and can install them in your reproducers. Send stamp for brochure on reproducers. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3825

SEVEN FOOT GRAND, Arion Piano Forte (1866). Very good condition. — Mrs. Floyd E. Guentner, 415 S. Broad St., Lanark, Illinois. n1061

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

Rare Phonographs: Edison, Columbia, Victors and many others. Records, horns, horn cranes, reproducers, parts and repairs. Send 25c for list. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3845

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED, OLD PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder and disc type with the horns, records, catalogues and parts or anything pertaining to phonographs. — Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3004

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. jly120821

NICKELODEONS WANTED

WANTED: Wurlitzer Band Organ model 125 or similar model. Other nickelodeons wanted also. Interested in hearing what you have.—Douglas W. McGee, 532 Arrowhead Drive, Green Bay, Wis. n3844

PIANO FOR SALE

For Sale: Antique piano, 100 years old. African rosewood, Grand, Superior condition. Make: F. C. Light & Co. — George Blankley, 1121 Johnson, Boise, Idaho. n1882

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos. — Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kans. ap124661

Wanted: DuoArt and Ampico piano rolls. — Thomas Grattelo, 1519 California St., San Francisco, Calif. ja3563

For Sale: Steinway Duo-Art reproducing player, 7 foot Grand. Beautiful hand-rubbed mahogany case. In mint playing condition. An heirloom for some music lover to enjoy the finest instrument that money can buy. Write to: D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Maryland. d30801

PIANO ROLLS wanted, all types, any quantity, especially Welte-Mignon, Deluxe and Duo-Art. Also rolls for sale. Information exchanged with collectors. — A. Grigorian, 603 So. Walter Reed Dr., Arlington 4, Va. jly120291

FOR SALE: Four Mills Violano Virtuoso rolls in excellent condition. Offer will be appreciated. — Douglas W. McGee, 532 Arrowhead Drive, Green Bay, Wis. n1481

PIANOLA player piano attachment (65 notes) and 450 music rolls. Pushes up to and plays any piano, $125. Write: — Joseph Beondo, 108-01 101 Ave., Richmond Hill 19, N. Y. n1422

50 PIANO MUSIC ROLLS in nice condition 75c each (take all). Send stamped envelope for reply. — L. A. Hughes, P.O. Box 654, Altoona, Pa. n1002

RECORDS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY! Will pay $3 each for fine copies of any Pathe sapphire ball records by GENE GREENE, "The King of Ragtime." Not interested in Greene's Victor and Columbia records and do not want to buy records by other artists. Will also pay $3 for a good copy each of the February and May 1912, Columbia record supplements. I need most Columbia supplements prior to 1912. Do not need Victor and Columbia supplements after that year. Want phonograph trade publications, especially the Talking Machine World, from 1905 to 1926, and "house organs," such as The Edison Phonograph (and Amberola) (Monthly), Dia. Points, the Columbia Record & the Voice of the Victor. — Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Virginia. tfx

78 R.P.M. DISC preferred. Moody and Sankey, Pres. Wm. McKinley, Theo. Roosevelt, Wm. H. Taft, Sarah Bernhardt. — Elsie Smith, 1016 So. 52nd St., Omaha 6, Nebr. d6008

SEEKING TOSCANINI 78's on Victrola, HMV, Brunswick, Victor, V-Discs. — Weaver, 4406 Clay Ave., Houston 23, Texas. ap6445

WANTED: Al Jolson recordings. Please send list. Want information on Jolson Fan Club mentioned in HOBBIES, April, 1955. — John DuVal, 2715 Alabama, Ft. Smith, Arkansas. n3004

RECORDS FOR SALE

Comprehensive Monthly Lists of 78's, including hundreds of unusual out-of-print and rare vocals mailed on request. Collections bought.—The Record Album, 208 W. 80th St., New York 24, N.Y. ja128862

HAVE YOU ANY RECORDS worth $150? "Price Guide" lists 7500 numbers, values, $2.50 postpaid.—American Record Collectors' Exchange, 825 Seventh Ave., New York 19, N. Y. jcl20061

Edison, Columbia cylinder records. Collector's items. Cylinder machines and parts bought and sold. — James Riley, 156 School St., Norwich, Conn. d3084

OVER 100,000 hard - to - get records, 1903 to LP. — Jack's Record Cellar, 400 Haight St., San Francisco 17, Calif. d126121

50 Years of old songs and popular favorites. Also band, instrumental and classical vocal records. Tell us your wants. Send for free lists. — Gertrude M. Heyman, 528 East 3rd St., Brooklyn 18, N. Y. ja3618

FREE "Personalities" catalogs - rare records and broadcasts by radio, stage, screen, television personalities. — Amalgamated Records, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. ap6276

GREAT VOCAL RECORDS. South's store for top condition collectors' 78's. Operatic, historical, personality, jazz. Wants located. Free lists, your category. Collections bought as well as sold. — Record Collectors Service, 2322 Biscayne Blvd., Miami 37, Fla. n3065

I SEE HUNDREDS of records every day. Let's hear your needs.—Ted's Second Hand Store, 1128 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (Stamp please). n3253

GOLDEN - AGE operatics, personality records, collectors' items and exclusively imported European LPs are found on our free monthly lists. Distributors of Rococo records, reissues on LP of Famous Voices of the Past. — Ross, Court & Co., 2098 Yonge St., Toronto, Canada. mh62131

FREE CATALOGS, private collection, famous motion picture sound tracks. Available in entirety on 12" LP.—ARG, 341 Cooper Station, New York, N. Y. f6806

FOR SALE: Hundreds of disc and cylinder records, many types of early phonographs, 25c for lists. Also "Evolution of the Phonograph," by Walter Welch and Oliver Reed, a complete history of the phonograph, 576 pages, regular price $9.95. — Coppernoll's Antiques, Palatine Bridge, N.Y. d3886

RETIRING! Going out of business! My entire stock of old records going at real bargain prices. None over $1. (No Oliver's, Jelly Roll's, etc.). Your free lists now ready. — Geo. Collings, P.O. Box 946, Fresno, Calif. ja3295

FOR SALE: Miller, Goodman, Dorsey's, Sinatra, Vallee, Jolson, swing, personalities and others. Very reasonable. Write. — A. Carlo, 22 Brookwood St., East Orange, N. J. n1522

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale; all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired. — Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. jly120422

Mira Music Box Discs, 18 1/2", $3; 15 1/2", $2.50; 9 15/16", $1, plus postage. — Squires, 2328 Channing Way, Berkeley, Calif. n3234

THE REST OF THE FAMILY

(Continued from page 43)

Aaron Willard, Jr., son of Aaron, and nephew of Simon. Born in 1783 at Roxbury, he learned the clock-making trade with his father and devoted his life to the making and selling of time-pieces.

For a short time he became a partner with his brother-in-law, Spencer Nolan, in a sign-painting enterprise. He then opened his own clock-making shop and eventually became manager and finally owner of his father's flourishing factory.

After amassing a sizable fortune, he retired to an estate in Newton, Mass., where he lived until his death. In addition to the time-pieces or banjo clocks for which he is so well known, Aaron, Jr. produced tall case, gallery, and regulator clocks.

His own name appears only on time-pieces dating after 1823, the year in which he became the owner of his father's establishment. There is no certainty of the actual number of clocks which he produced, but there is a banjo clock with his name which has the serial number 3482.

A fine example of the tall case clocks produced by Aaron Willard, Jr. is illustrated here from the collection of Mrs. Helen Vaughan of Bethel, Conn. The over all height is 7 feet 11 inches with a fine mahogany case trimmed with brass.

The clock features a beautifully painted dial marked with the maker's name, and the time-piece reflects in every aspect the fine workmanship of the maker. The clock was formerly owned by descendants of Miles Standish.

The Willard clock-makers continued into a third generation. There was Zabdiel Willard son of Simon Willard, Jr. He was born in 1826, was apprenticed to his father, and eventually became his partner in 1850.

Zabdiel was responsible for the production and popularity of the Frodsham Watch. He also was an inventor of numerous processes, machines, and furnaces for the reduction of gold and silver ores. He worked as a chemist and assayer, and often acted in the capacity of a physician in mining camps in Colorado and California.

There were other Willards who made their mark in the world of Time. This includes Sylvester Willard of Bristol, who was a partner in the firm of Case, Willard & Co. in that city in 1835. Of a Thomas Willard little is known, and of his work only a single signed clock has survived. The name John Willard of Boston appeared in the city directories of 1803 and 1842.

Finally, last and probably least, there was a W. W. Willard, for in this writer's collection there is an old watch paper engraved:

"Repeating Lepine & Plain Watches repaired by W. W. WILLARD,, Cazenovia, N. Y."

VERNON DALHART—Part VII

(Continued from page 35)

bison resented Dalhart's bringing in the charming Adelyne Hood to replace Murray Kellner while he was on vacation. Robison objected even more strongly to Dalhart's insistence that he be "cut in" for half the sheet music and record royalties from Robison's songs. This was not an uncommon practice.

Many popular artists had their names published on sheet music as part writers of songs with which they had nothing to do, in order to share in the royalties, but one can easily sympathize with Robison's attitude. I shall quote part of his letter, but it should be remembered that we have only his side of the story and Dalhart is not here to speak in his own defense:

"Dear Jim: . . . Dalhart . . . was a very difficult person to get along with. From the time I knew him until we split up, he had a continual chip on his shoulder and was suspicious of everyone. I grant that he had some tough breaks when he first got to New York from Texas, but who doesn't? I landed in New York with $3.65 in the one good pocket of my only suit and for a long time I ate 35 cent spaghetti dinners on Eighth Avenue. But even after things really began to break for Dal he couldn't get over his bitterness at life. . . . When Dal and I split in 1928 I know he was worth between $150,000 and $200,000, and he told me one time that he was going to show them how to make some real money on the stock exchange—not knowing a thing about it, of course. . . .

"When we first got together in 1924 . . . he compelled me to give him one-third of the royalties I received on any song that he recorded, even if he only recorded it on one label. Then he finally tried to make me give him 50 per cent and that was the pay-off. When we split, practically every recording company . . . got in touch with me and offered to help me find a voice to replace him. In fact, Nat Shilkret offered to spend $5,000 if necessary. . . .

"About Miss Hood, I knew practically nothing about her until he suddenly brought her to New York from Alabama to record with us, and he chose the time to bring her when I was out West on a vacation. I had worked for a long time with an excellent violinist, teaching him hill-billy style of 'fiddlin' and he had gotten really outstanding in this type of work and did all our dates with us . . . Naturally he felt that he was a part of the combination. Dalhart said nothing to him about changing and nothing to me, and when I got back and found Miss Hood there the first thing I asked Dal was if he had told the old fiddler about it. His reply was, 'Why do I have to tell him anything?' . . . Miss Hood was a charming person, but that actually was the beginning of the end with him and me. Without patting myself on the back, he lasted just about a year after we split, due mainly to the lack of proper material to record. I had made a study of his ability and wrote accordingly and we had some terrific sellers together, but he didn't have one outstanding record after we split.

"The story of 'The Prisoner's Song' is a long one. . . . Guy Massey . . . sang the song continually while he was visiting Dalhart in New York and When Dal and I were called by Victor to record 'Wreck of the Old 97,' Mr. (Eddie) King of Victor asked us if we had anything to put on the back of it. Dal told him about 'The Prisoner's Song,' which at that time was not even named, and told Mr. King there would be no royalty, as the song was public domain, as far as he knew. We recorded it and shortly afterwards Dal copyrighted the song in his name and stuck Victor for royalties. As far as I can learn, he collected from Shapiro-Bernstein approximately $85,000, which represented 95 per cent of all royalties. Guy Massey got five per cent and died in San Antonio a few years later practically penniless. In later years when Dal was doing everything he could to get back on records, he was guest star on 'We, the People,' and I cringed when I heard him tell how he went home one night and composed 'The Prisoner's Song.' The man never composed a note of anything in his life. . . ."

And that is the late Carson Robison's version of his break-up with Dalhart. I dislike to give only one side of a controversy, but since Dalhart had died three years before this letter was written there was no way of quoting him in rebuttal.

Robison obtained Frank Luther as his singing partner (they made Victor records for a time under the names of Bud and Joe Billings) and went on to many other recording successes. In the 1930's he and his radio troupe known as Carson Robison and His Buckaroos went to England, were a big success on the stage, and made a large number of records.

In justice to Adelyne Hood, I should register my opinion that she was an excellent violinist, although certainly not a fiddler of the robust hill-billy style, and she also had a charming voice, which added much to many of Dalhart's records. Their Columbia duet of "The Frog Song," written by Thomas P. Westendorf, who composed "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," is captivating.

She was also a brilliant comedienne, who (thanks perhaps to her Alabama background) could impersonate a Negro woman to the life, as her 1930 Columbia records of "Madam Queen" and "He's On the Chain Gang Now" reveal. (Dalhart takes the part of a police court judge in the latter.)

The last I heard of Miss Hood was 10 years or more ago when she was broadcasting as "Aunt Jane" each day from a Pittsburgh radio station. I have always admired her and hope she is still alive and happy.

IV. Dalhart in Decline

Judging by Robison's remarks about Dalhart's desire to show other people how to play the stock market, he probably invested heavily, and, like thousands of other unwary citizens, was virtually wiped out in the October, 1929, crash. It is difficult otherwise to account for his descent into comparative poverty.

Another hard blow for him was the shrinking of the record buying public to negligible proportions after 1929. If Robison had still been working with Dalhart the depression would have curtailed his sales, especially since hill-billy records were mostly bought by people of low incomes. Too, he and Miss Hood now had to battle the competition of more authentic hill-billy recorders such as Jimmy Rodgers, the Carter Family, and Riley Puckett.

Edison's departure from the record business was another blow. Dalhart kept plugging away, however, and made ingenious efforts to freshen the appeal of his records by introducing new effects, a jug band among them. Some of his last Victor and Columbia records, such as "Eleven More Months and Ten More Days" and "Low Bridge, Everybody Down!" would have been big sellers a few years before, but after the depression set in few "country cousins" felt they could spare 75 cents for such a luxury as a phonograph record.

Dalhart's name ceased to appear in both the Victor and Columbia supplements at about the same time in 1930. Occasionally, it might be seen in a Banner or some other cheap record list, but after 1931 he realized he was through.

(To be continued)

OLD VEHICLES

WANTED

WANTED - AUTOMOBILE ITEMS. Most anything pertaining to early automobile era. Literature such as catalogs, manuals. Trade publications, hand books, posters, pictures, etc. Also horse-drawn vehicle era literature. Old cars, trucks, chassis, other components suitable for parts. Brass lights, horns, name plates. Most any kind of accessory or usable part, etc. I have discontinued collection of clothes, license plates, and most technical books. — B. J. Pollard, 14300 Prairie, Detroit 38, Mich. d36311

OLD AUTO LAMPS, horns, books, old cars, etc., wanted.—D. D. Way, 11 Eastwood Ct., Oakland, Calif. my122511

WANTED: Automobiles, any condition: Mercer, Simplex, Packard, Rolls Royce Locomobile, Thomas Flyer, Pope Hartford Losier, Alco. — David Tunick, Brook Dr., Greenwich, Conn. o124431

Wanted: Instruction and parts manuals for Sear's Motor Cars, 1910 Buick Model "19", and 1913-1914 Moyer. Also Penna. licensed drivers badges, and brass duster buttons picturing old cars. — Carl M. Rustine, R.D. 3, Stroudsburg, Pa. o122553

WANTED: Steam engines, old style gas tractors, antique cars & steam calliope. — Jerry Horinek, Atwood, Kans. ja3652

FOR SALE

1929 PONTIAC COUPE, very good cond. $400. 1932 Hupmobile 4 dr., very good cond., $400. — Ralph S. Johnson, 1415 18th Ave. N., Minneapolis 11, Minn. o3004

FOR SALE: Detroit Electric Broughm, Model 98, in mint running order, complete new set of batteries, and charger, photo available, $1,500. — Geo. N. DeLaplaine, P.O. Box 861, New Brunswick, New Jersey. n3084

FOR SALE: 1921 Model T Ford. Five-passenger sedan. Like brand new. — William H. Finegan, 16 Roosevelt Street, Glen Cove, L.I., N.Y. d3293

DIETZ REGAL and Cocoran brass driving lamps. Both 6 1/2" diameter nicely burnished. Black carriage lantern 6" diameter 14" high. Radio, 3-tube 1924 model, horn speaker and earphones, needs new tubes maybe? Best offer. — Elden Sawhill, 666 Highland, Salina, Kans. n1023

THE IRISH THRUSH

Back before World War I two baseball men began a famous double life. They spent their winters in vaudeville, their summers with the great American game.

Meet them! Marty McHale, a Yankee pitcher who became vaudeville's Irish Thrush or The Baseball Caruso. And Mike Donlin, Giant star with a clever tongue.

Their billing "Right Off The Bat" was in Keith's Palace Theatre on Broadway in November, 1914. In those days baseball salaries were still "modest."

Sometime before that Donlin had married Mabel Hite, a vaudeville star, and had left baseball to go on the circuit with his wife. He returned to baseball when she died in 1912.

But Marty McHale's story was different. He had sung his way through college at nickel movies, had been a star athlete at Tilton Academy and the University of Maine, and had joined the Red Sox after graduation.

Soon he, with three other players—Buck O'Brien, Hugh Bradley and Bill Lyon, delighted the townspeople by singing of evenings around their hotels when the Red Sox were on the road. Then, in B. F. Keith's Boston office John F. Royal fixed up vaudeville bookings for the "Red Sox Quartette."

When the "Quartette" broke up, Marty McHale went the circuit alone for a couple of years singing "When You're a Long, Long Way From Home," "Mother Machree," and "Forever is a Long Long Time." Then he joined up with Donlan. The war and Marty's stint in the Air Force put a stop to that.

All told, Marty McHale was in vaudeville 10 years. He did a turn as a sports writer on a New York paper, became an expert golfer, married Margaret Dunstan, daughter of a famous restaurateur, produced a successful film "Baseball Review," and built the M. J. McHale Company, Investment Securities.

He has two sons, one in Prep school at Woonsocket, the other at the University of Maine. He is president of his company, keeps track of his old friends, and is a favorite with all who know him.

But today he loves to dig out the big envelopes of old clippings and the scrap books, and mull over the time when "it wasn't all made." When, for that fleeting minute, on the old Keith-Orpheum Circuit, the Irish Thrush sang youth back into the hearts of his vaudeville audience, and dreams back into their eyes.

An old friend of HOBBIES Magazine, Clarence Edward Heller, "Bard of Brooklyn," and also HOBBIES Magazine, dug up this interesting bit of history about his friends. No doubt other readers will recall the joys they gave in days not so long past.

OLD JEWELRY

JEWELRY WANTED

DIAMONDS, Old GOLD, COINS, watches, stickpins, rings, earrings, etc., regardless of condition. Highest prices paid. Prompt replies. Send by registered mail to—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Penna. my124891

ANTIQUE & MODERN JEWELRY from all over the world, bought & sold. Inquiries solicited. — Kenneth R. Park, 31 West St., Boston, Mass. (Est. 1844) jlv126351

ANTIQUE JEWELRY: Top prices for good old jewelry and old silverware. Mail with separate list to — The Bayou House, 407 Hathaway, Houston 6, Texas. my126351

JEWELRY FOR SALE

Earrings Screwbacks (sm., med., lge.), golden or silvered 30c dozen, $2.25 gross. Dangle screwbacks 35c doz., $2.50 gross. Sterling screwbacks 95c doz., $8 gross. Clip earbacks 40c doz., $3 gross. Sterling pierced earbacks (screw type 80c doz. Wire type 45c doz.) Free complete illustrated list of chain, pinbacks, clasps, cards, cuff linkbacks, cameos, boxes, etc. — Folsom's, P.O. Box 52, Medford, Mass. n66792

LARGE STOCK antique jewelry from our vast gold-buying. Charms, brooches, rings, etc. 10 for $6, or better grade ones 10 for $10. — B. Lowe, Holland Bldg., St. Louis, Mo. d3084

FOR SALE: Antiques and semi-antiques, gold-filled, silver, etc., 13 articles for $6. Assortment includes lockets, charms, pins, rings, etc. Good value. — St. Louis Refining Co., 1115 Holland Bldg., St. Louis 1, Mo. ap68801

SPECIAL jewelry closeout! Necklaces and bracelets (odds & ends) $2.75 doz.; earrings $1.25 doz.; pins $1.75 doz. Adjustable stone rings $1.25 doz. Sample assortment $5, plus 35c postage. — Boxer, G.P.O. Box 976, Brooklyn 1, N.Y. n3066

BEAUTIFUL GEM STONE jewelry. Our choice of stone. Select earrings, necklace or key ring, $1.50 per item. — A. McAdoo, 1401 Highland Dr., Hollister, Calif. n3293

CHAIN SLIDES, samples and price on request. Earrings made from old cuff links and pins. All types of antique rings and jewelry repaired and refinished. Estimates sent on all jobs before work is started. All pieces returned by registered or certified mail. — Jemeral Jewellers, 534 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio. n3487

BEAUTIFUL sterling silver filigree dagger pin, 2 3/4", only $3.95. — Essof's, Sistersville, W. Va. n3802

CAMEO PENDANT. Hand-carved carnelian (pink) cameo in antique gold finished setting with gold-filled chain. $3. Matching earclips $3. Special, both items for $5. Postpaid and tax included. Gift boxed. Send for listing of my beautiful and unusual custom created jewelry. — MEB Custom Jewelry, Route 4, Box 320, Leicester Road, Asheville, North Carolina. ja3468

GENNARO RUSSO

BRANCH OF NAPLES, ITALY

CORAL, CAMEO

ANTIQUÉ JEWELRY

Cameos Our Specialty

Dearborn 2-2094

32 N. State St., Chicago 2, Ill. tfo

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Vernon Dalhart

By JIM WALSH

PART VII — Conclusion

V. A Letter from Vernon Dalhart

The only letter I ever received from Dalhart was written after his recording career had come to a halt, but he still had an office at 120 West 45th Street, New York. The letter's tone certainly doesn't bear out my old friend Carson Robison's statement that Dalhart carried a chip on his shoulder and had a grouch toward everyone. Perhaps adversity had mellowed him. I thought, and still think, the letter he wrote in reply to one in which I expressed admiration for his work and hoped he would make more records, expressed a charming spirit of good will:

"My dear Mr. Walsh: Your delightful letter of September 1st received, and in reply will say that it was quite flattering, and I might add that we all have a falling (or falling) for flattery. It seems that you have covered about everything there is to say in regard to my association with the hill-billy records, except to express my sincere appreciation of how the dear public received my efforts.

"I am sorry to learn that my efforts have in any way damaged any other artist, and this goes especially for Henry Whitter as I liked him very much personally, as well as his recordings. (Note by Jim Walsh—I told Dalhart that Whitter had mentioned to me that Dalhart's records of 'The Wreck of the Old 97' had killed the sale of Whitter's Okeh version).

"I have always claimed that the popularity of one singer or song helped others, as no one man could do them all. If some Whitter fan came in to buy one of his, a clever salesman might also show one of mine, and it goes both ways. The main thing is to get that customer.

"For your information, 'The Old 97' sales were nothing to compare (according to statistics) with 'The Prisoner's Song.' However, 'The Old 97' was the cause of 'The Prisoner's Song' in that it needed a tie-up, and I had 'The Prisoner's Song' up my sleeve, and of course it is history that 'The Prisoner's Song' gave me my first commercial break, and started a deluge of recording for me along that line. You are probably more familiar with the rest of it than I.

So again assuring you of my sincere appreciation . . . I beg to remain yours very truly, VERNON DALHART."

VI. A Brief Comeback

In May, 1934, Dalhart's name startled his former admirers by appearing once more in the Brunswick list. It isn't clear whether he had been called on to re-record two of his former numbers or whether they had been salvaged from the vaults and reissued, but judging from a comment in the Music Lovers Guide for that month it was most likely the latter:

"Brunswick and Victor each dig up a couple of popular old-timers for re-issue. On Victor 24573 Gene Austin (once a best-selling crooner, now almost forgotten) repeats his dulcet versions of 'My Blue Heaven' and 'Ramona,' which in the original pressings probably sold well into a million copies. Brunswick's revival is sturdier native stuff, Vernon Dalhart doing masterly hill-billy versions of those masterpieces of melancholy, 'The Prisoner's Song' and 'The Letter Edged in Black,' both done with neat fiddle and git-tar accompaniments (Brunswick 6799—a bit of Americana well worth investigation.")

I should have mentioned, when I was discussing Dalhart's Victor recordings, that in 1926 he re-made his original acoustical versions of "The Prisoner's Song" and "The Wreck." But, even though they were done over electrically, the same number, 19427, was retained—I suspect because either Dalhart or Victor was superstitious about its "magic" qualities.

In the early 1930's he was called on to make a still better electrical version of "The Wreck," which was coupled on a 35 cent Bluebird record with "Sourwood Mountain," sung by a group called The Vagabonds. And still later "The Wreck" and "The Prisoner" were combined on Bluebird No. B-10578. I haven't heard the record, but suspect it is taken from the 1926 Victor masters.

During the 1950's these undying mountain music classics were included as part of a long-play record featuring outstanding examples of "Americana." Gene Austin and Jimmy Rodgers were the other artists.

In 1939 I was surprised and delighted when Dalhart began making a new series of records for Bluebird. I wrote him a letter expressing my pleasure that he was again recording and hoping his new venture would be successful.

He wrote a postal card in reply, thanking me graciously, but I have been unable to find it. The records were listed as by Vernon Dalhart and His Big Cypress Boys—the Big Cypress coming from the bayou by that name near his home town of Jefferson, Tex.

There were three of the Bluebird records, which marked Dalhart's final appearance in the hill-billy recording field: B-8170, combining "Johnnie Darlin'" and "You'll Never Take Away My Dreams;" B-8191, "My Mary Jane" and "Don't Cry, Little Sweetheart, Don't Cry," and B-8229, "Lavender Cowboy" and "Dear Little Darling, Don't Forget Me."

They were unsuccessful, and when I heard them I could understand why. They were so over-amplified it was almost impossible to recognize the voice as Dalhart's. There was an edgy baritone quality that changed it out of all resemblance to the real thing. No wonder they didn't sell.

VII. Descent Into Obscurity

From that time, Dalhart's life and activities became more and more obscure. I have told about meeting Carson Robison and the late Bob Miller in 1948 and asking if they knew what had become of Dalhart, but neither did.

The year before, on November 26, 1947, I had received a letter from Bob, in which he said: . . . "I have made every effort to locate Vernon Dalhart, but have been unable to do so. The last that anyone seems to know of him he was living in Larchmont, N. Y. During the war he worked in a war plant, and I cannot find anyone who knows his present whereabouts. . . If I am able to locate him in the near future I most certainly will let you know."

Dalhart had recorded many of Miller's compositions, and I found it depressing that Dalhart had dropped so completely out of sight even Bob could not find him. When I learned he was living in Bridgeport at the time of his death, I imagined the war plant probably was in Bridge-

VERNON DALHART

VOICE PLACING

PROFESSIONAL COACHING

Bridgeport, Conn.

One of the last photos of Vernon Dalhart
—Photo courtesy of Marion Hoffman, Valley Center, Kans.

port, and that after his defense work ended he took the job of night clerk in the Barnum Hotel which his death certificates indicated he held when he died.

I might mention that a student of folk and hill-billy records, Joe Drochetz, of Minneapolis, who called on me not long ago, told me he happened to be in Bridgeport in 1948, learned Dalhart was in the Bridgeport General Hospital and went in to see him.

He was unable, however, to reconcile the varying stories the then elderly singer told about the origin of "The Prisoner's Song" and some of his other records. Joe said many collectors consider Dalhart's singing of hill-billy numbers for the smaller recording firms as generally poor, but I disagree.

The recording often was not what it should be, but it seems to me that Dalhart always was a true artist who tried just as hard to make a good record when he was singing, say, for Grey Gull, or Cameo as he did when recording for Edison, Victor, Columbia, Okeh or Brunswick. But on occasion it was unmistakable that he was overworked.

During the late 1920's a writer in the New York Times Sunday magazine expressed the opinion that records by Vernon Dalhart would be eagerly collected by future generations for the light they shed on American folk ways in the earlier years of this century. Time apparently is in the process of vindicating that writer's judgment.

It is easy to tell, from correspondence I have received since beginning this seven-part series about Dalhart, that there are a large number of collectors who are eagerly seeking his records, and I believe that number will steadily increase as the available supply begins to dwindle. Only today I received a letter saying Dalhart admirers are circulating a petition to have RCA Victor issue a long-playing record of some of his old numbers.

Like the rest of us, Marion Try Slaughter may have had his faults as a person, but he was a genuine artist in whatever type of musical activity he undertook. It is because I believe him to have been one of the most important pioneer recording artists, that I have devoted more space to his life story than I have given to any other one performer about whom I so far have written.

ADDENDA

Is "The Prisoner's Song"
An Old Scotch Folk Tune?

Apparently the controversy over the origin of "The Prisoner's Song" never will end. Late in September, several months after my complete manuscript of the Vernon Dalhart series had been submitted to HOBBIES, I received the following interesting letter from Mr. Robert Williamson, of 205 Brook St., Petersburg, Ontario, Canada:

"In 1924, at the age of 19, I came to Canada from Scotland with my father's family. In the fall of 1925, while teaching in northern Saskatchewan, I heard 'The Prisoner's Song' (probably Vernon Dalhart). Home for Christmas, I was singing this song around the house when I was rebuked by my mother. 'Sing the song right,' she said. I was surprised, but still more surprised when mother sang the song from beginning to end in the broad Doric Scots. This was a song she had known when she was young. She had learned it at least before her marriage in 1901.

"It seemed to me at the time that the ease and fluency of the words and phrasing showed that the words had originally been written in Scots, but I am no longer sure of this. Sometimes translations can be excellent. . . I did not copy the Scots words, and mother and dad and their contemporaries are all long gone. . . I have no connections in the Old Country to help to dig up these words.

"In a situation such as this the question must be raised: 'Who is fooling whom?' I assure you I am not fooling and unquestionably my mother was not playing a trick. We are not a family of practical jokers.

OLD MUSIC BONANZA

As a Christmas special,

the leading Americana book publisher, offers these delightful books at half price:

1. Burton's famous book, Hollywood Musicals, ($5.50).
  2. Player Piano Scrapbook, ($3) and Part 1, (1880-1900) of Tin Pan Alley in Gaslight ($2.50)
- (All books have reviewed by Jim Walsh & others in Variety. Here is chance to add all three to your library for only $5.50, postpaid, plus our full catalog of many other collectors' books by

CENTURY HOUSE, Watkins Glen, New York
dc

ANTIQUE
MUSIC BOXES
Specialists Since 1925
EXPERT REPAIRING
FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE
FREE ESTIMATES, Appraisals and Lists.

Bornand Music Box Co.
139 4th Ave. (PE 8-1506) PELHAM, N.Y.
tfc

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS
YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
Box 595, Tujunga, Calif.

d16p

WANTED
FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION
RECORDS
of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY
50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York
tfx

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.
Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island
tfo

OLD SALZBURG
MUSIC BOXES

Bought	Sold	Repaired
Cases expertly refinished, inlays restored and retinted to original condition.
Free Estimates — All Work Fully Guaranteed.
The only shop south of New York specializing in new & Antique Music Boxes
Located in Historic Old Georgetown in the Nation's Capitol
1645 Wisconsin Ave. N.W.	D. Konvalinka, Prop.
Washington 7, D. C.	Hudson 3-4553
(SEE OUR FULL PAGE, ILLUSTRATED AD ON PAGE 35)

tfc

However, I thought that even with no evidence beyond my statement you would be interested in knowing that the words and melody of 'The Prisoner's Song' go back at least to the turn of the century."

Mr. Williamson's letter gives students of folk music another problem on which to exercise their ingenuity. Meanwhile, I am reminded by a letter from the Kansas collector of Dalhart records, Marion Hoffman, of something I wrote in an early installment, praising the tenor's Edison record of "Can't Yo' Heah Me Callin,' Caroline?" Mr. Hoffman corresponded with Dalhart for years, and he quotes him as saying: "The first real recording of my voice was 'Caroline,' which I made for Mr. Edison." This shows that Dalhart had a low opinion of the Emerson and Columbia records he had previously made and did not consider them reproductions of his voice. In the same vein, Christine Miller, who made records for both Victor and Edison, wrote to Mr. Edison, "You have made the only true records of my voice." And when a Victor dealer told her he had some of her records and asked her to give a "tone test" with them, such as she gave for Edison, she replied: "You have no records of my voice. My name is on the label, but the voice is not mine."

— 0 —

Since this series was completed, Marion Hoffman, of Valley Center, Kans., has sent me a folder issued by Dalhart during his later years in Bridgeport. It contains probably one of the last photographs taken of the singer, who was offering his services in voice placing and professional coaching. (See beginning of this installment).

The folder describes Dalhart as having been a leading tenor in these operas: Trovatore, Cavalleria, Faust, Pagliacci, Butterfly, Aida, Bohemian Girl, and Girl of the Golden West; oratorios—Holy City, Messiah, Elijah, Persian Garden, Stabat Mater, and Rose Maiden; and light operas—Pinafore, Gondoliers, Spring Maid, Fencing Master, The Mikado, Naughty Marietta, Paul Jones, and the Merry Widow.

There was also a page of critical comment. The Boston American, for instance, had described Dalhart as "a remarkably fine tenor;" the New York Sun said "he has a charming voice and knows how to use it," and Alan Dale, in the New York American, said he "sang with purity and clarity and his voice floated easily over the Hippodrome."

Incidentally, either because of typographical errors or my own typewriting slips, there were two mistakes involving dates in the August installment. In one place the year of Guy Massey's death is given as 1936 instead of 1926. And the photo of Carson Robison was sent to me in 1950 instead of 1940.

J. W.

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. aul2698

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list.—Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. f3863

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Columbia Graphonola, floor model. Plays steel and regular records - 10 steel records - 96 regular records on portfolios famous singers and operas. Original mahogany finish turned slightly dark. Best cash offer.—D. R. Ferdue, 3409 Poplar, Pine Bluff, Ark. d3806

NOW READY FOR SALE: Hurdy Gurdys with and without cart, also miniature replicas. Disc and cylinder phonographs, talking doll, reproducers, springs, cranks, horns, gears and other parts. Cylinder and disc records, books, catalogs. Let me know your wants. Stamp for list of any item you wish.—Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. d1044

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

ORIGINAL: Mills Violano-Virtuoso manuals. Actual reprints, clean and new, with drawings, instructions for repair and operation. No photostats. Write:—The Old Collector, 2323 Arthur Street, Eugene, Ore. f3844

WANTED: Song Slide Illustrations and Advertising Slides (sometimes referred to as Lantern Slides) of songs from the 1890 to 1915 era.—W. K. Dorsey, Wilmington College, Wilmington, N. C. ja3464

REPRODUCER REPAIRING of all kinds. Have a supply of the original Edison Styluses and can install them in your reproducers. Send stamp for brochure on reproducers.—Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3826

FROM TINFOIL TO STEREO. The collectors story of the evolution of the phonograph. Pres cylinder stroboscopes for 120-160 r.p.m. with each copy, $9.95 postpaid.—Coppennoll's Record Department, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. f3805

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair; reasonable.—C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1865 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. jly120821

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED, OLD PHONOGRAPHS, cylinder and disc type with the horns, records, catalogs and parts or anything pertaining to phonographs.—Pollards, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3004

WANTED—Old cylinder phonos, and records, also disc phonos, roller organs and music boxes.—Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. ja3253

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change in address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rate.)

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 50c each.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. mh120821

FOR SALE: Cylinder and disc phonographs. Article "Phonographs as a Hobby" free. Eight pages pictures, present day values on 65 phonographs, $2.25 postpaid.—Miller's, 1017 Westgate, Troy, Ohio. ja3614

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired.—Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. ja6468

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonaphone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection.—Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. ja3887

Rare Phonographs: Edison, Columbia, Victors and many others. Records, horns, horn cranes, reproducers, parts and repairs. Send 25c for list.—Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3845

PIANO FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Steinway Grand - Duo-Art electrical reproducer, 5'11", jet black, plain case, completely reconditioned, like new, inside and out. Plays classics and jazz, old and new rolls, as the artist played them with accent. A rare treasure.—B. Pellfort, P.O. Box 481, Farmington, New Hampshire. f3867

PIANO & ROLLS

NEW ROLLS and repair supplies (belows cloth, tubing, leather) available for all types of automatic pianos.—Durrell Armstrong, Player Piano Co., 222 S. Vassar, Wichita 8, Kans. ap124661

Wanted: DuoArt and Ampico piano rolls.—Thomas Grattelo, 1519 California St., San Francisco, Calif. ja3863

For Sale: Steinway Duo-Art reproducing player, 7 foot Grand. Beautiful hand-rubbed mahogany case. In mint playing condition. An heirloom for some music lover to enjoy the finest instrument that money can buy. Write to: D. Nicholson, 1209 W. North Ave., Baltimore 17, Maryland. d30801

PIANO ROLLS wanted, all types, any quantity, especially Welte-Mignon, Deluxe and Duo-Art. Also rolls for sale. Information exchanged with collectors.—A. Giragosian, 603 So. Walter Reed Dr., Arlington 4, Va. jly120291

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

REGINA MUSIC BOX COMPANY old and new tune discs for sale; all types of antique music boxes and other mechanical musical items bought, sold and repaired.—Lloyd G. Kelley, Broadway & Route 3, Hanover, Mass. jly120422

Mira Music Box Discs, 18 1/2", $3; 15 1/2", $2.50; 9 15/16", $1, plus postage.—Squires, 2328 Channing Way, Berkeley, Calif. f3234

CRITERION MUSIC BOX, 22" wide x 20" long x 10 1/2" high, carved cherry cabinet, beautiful tone, 14 disc records 15 1/2" diameter, $150. Shipping extra.—Lake, 15466 Artesian, Detroit 23, Mich. d1042

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Pioneer Song Writers Who Made Records

By JIM WALSH

Nineteen years of writing about pioneer recording artists have brought me thousands of inquiries.

One of the most intriguing questions recently came from an enthusiastic HOBBIES reader, David E. Kemp, of Shinglehouse, Pa., in a letter denouncing the atrocious quality of most present-day popular music. By contrast, Kemp points out, "from 40 to 50 years ago there probably were at least 200 writers who turned out good song hits occasionally or regularly. I would like to know how many of these lyric writers and composers made records, whether singing, instrumental, or what-not, and would appreciate information as to what they were and where they can be found. I think a collection of recordings by popular and semi-popular song writers would be unusual and fascinating."

When I read Kemp's letter it was obvious he had struck on a new idea, for no such survey as the one he suggested had ever been made. So I decided to make it. Even so, some reservations are involved, for the line must be drawn somewhere. As an example, many popular artists have written songs. Examples are Gene Austin, Frank Crumit, Vaughn De Leath, and Bert Williams. Others, notably the late Al Jolson, have been credited with assists on a good many tunes, whether or not they actually had anything to do with writing them. I decided that to conserve space this run-down must be largely restricted to the men and women who were primarily song writers rather than listing those who were essentially entertainers, but indulged in writing as a sideline.

No guarantee is given that the following listings are 100 per cent complete, and details of recordings must necessarily be sketchy. Almost certainly, some of the old-time writers and composers made records for obscure brands that have escaped me. I hope, however, this information will be useful not only to Dave Kemp but to others who feel, as he does and I do, about the days when "they wrote the sort of songs they can't turn out today."

But please don't write and ask where you can buy these records.

They may be found, if you are lucky, in second-hand stores, or the stocks of dealers in second-hand discs and cylinders like those who advertise in HOBBIES. And if you have some of these records, don't ask me where you can sell them. I don't know—unless it is to those same HOBBIES advertisers. There is no need of anyone ever writing to me, asking where records can be sold, when HOBBIES Magazine's classified advertising carries offers every month from dealers who buy record collections. I am not a dealer and do not want to buy records.

HARRY AKST made piano duets with Frank Banta for Columbia. "Ding Toes," and "Typhoon" are among them.

FELIX ARNDT, a victim of the 1918 flu epidemic, made many piano and celesta solos for Victor. Piano numbers included his own compositions, "Nola," "An Operatic Nightmare," "Desecration Rag," and "From Soup to Nuts." He also played in the earlier records of the Van Eps Trio.

ERNEST R. BALL proved himself a fair singer on his 1916 Columbia record of one of his great ballad successes, "Goodbye, Good Luck, God Bless You." Apparently it is the only record he ever made.

IRVING BERLIN, when he was 21, in 1910, was invited to make a Columbia record of a dialect ditty he had written with Ted Snyder, "Oh, How That German Could Love." I always laugh when I read the back-handed compliment in the April, 1910, Columbia supplement:

"The latest song by the author of 'My Wife's Gone to the Country.' It is natural that the writer of a song knows best how he wants his production sung, and as Mr. Berlin is a singer of no mean ability besides being a character artist of the first rank, we have secured him for this unique interpretation. This is probably the first time that the exact ideas of a song writer have been put into effect in the recording of a song. The result has been most strikingly successful and Mr. Berlin will undoubtedly be called up to do more and even better work for us in the future as he becomes more experienced in recording work."

The high, piping voice revealed on the 50-year-old Berlin record is not of operatic caliber. In a letter to me commenting on the record, Irving says: "We have a copy somewhere in our files and I heard it about a year ago and laughed my head off. Not at how funny I was, but at how brave I was to do a song in German dialect that I had written for Sam Bernard."

Berlin was not called on to do "more and even better work" for Columbia; at least no more records by him were issued. Forty-odd years later, when Decca cataloged an album of selections from "This Is The Army," one of the numbers, "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning," was sung by "Mr. Irving Berlin with supporting cast and soldier chorus."

EUBIE BLAKE played the accompaniment of most of Noble Sissle's vocal records for various companies. He also made piano solos, including "Ma," and "Sweet Lady" (Irving Kaufman sang a refrain in the latter) for Emerson.

FREDERICK V. BOWERS is one of the few surviving big-timers from the golden age of popular music—which was the 1890's and the early 1900's, rather than the 1930's, as the Johnnies-come-lately so often contend. Around 1911 Bowers sang five Columbia records: "Heigh, Ho," "Here Comes a College Boy" (his own composition), "I Love the Girls From A to Z," "Let's Make Love Among the Roses," and "Mary, You're a Big Girl Now."

SHELTON BROOKS made a fairly large number of Okeh records featuring blackface songs and sketches.

LEW BROWN served as a helper in the Columbia, and Brunswick records of his song, "She Gives Them All the Ha! Ha! Ha!" made by Frank Crumit and Fred Whitehouse respectively. Crumit wrote a good many songs, and Whitehouse several, among them "Sam, You Made the Pants Too Long."

GEORGE M. COHAN, A.S.C.A.P.

Please Credit American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers
For Additional Photographs or Biographical Data Please Query:
ASCAP - 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York
Phone - COLUMBUS 5-7464
Telegrams - "ASCAP" - WUX - New York
Cables - "ASCAP" - New York
January, 1939

GEORGE M. COHAN, "The Yankee Doodle Boy," recorded seven of his own compositions in 1911.

GEORGE M. COHAN made seven 1911 Victor records of his compositions. The most popular was "Life's a Funny Proposition, After All." Some preposterous statements have been made about the Cohan records, such as that they were sung in 1905 and that "since Victor didn't have master records then, each had to be sung separately and only 200 copies were made of each." Victor had permanent masters from the beginning, and "Life's a Funny Proposition" probably sold over 200,000 copies, rather than 200.

ZEZ CONFREY led his dance band on many records, and also made piano solos for Victor, Edison, Emerson, and Brunswick. Titles included "Kitten On the Keys," "Greenwich Witch," "Coaxing the Piano," and "Poor Buttermilk."

BENNY DAVIS made several Columbia records of popular songs around 1921.

MELVILLE ELLIS came through with one of the all-time piano record oddities in 1911 when he combined a piano arrangement of tunes by Irving Berlin and Richard Wagner. On one side of a Columbia record he played "Alexander's Ragtime Band," contrasted and combined with strains from "The Magic Fire Scene" from "Die Walkure." He played "In the Shadows" on the second side.

SAMMY FAIN, "The Crooning Composer," made a few vocal records of popular songs for the Harmony, and Velvet Tone labels in the early electric era.

ARTHUR FIELDS, who helped write "On the Mississippi," "Aba Daba Honeymoon," "Auntie Skinner's Chicken Dinner," and many other hits, of course was one of the most

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1825
EXPERT REPAIRING
FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE
FREE ESTIMATES, Appraisals and Lists.

Bornand Music Box Co.

139 4th Ave. (PE 8-1506) FLEHAM, N.Y.
tfo

ELECTRIFY

PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
Box 595, Tujunga, Calif.

d16p

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS of GREAT SINGERS on ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York
tfz

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW, ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.
Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island
tfo

OLD SALZBURG MUSIC BOXES

Bought

Sold

Repaired

Cases expertly refinished, inlays restored and retinted to original condition.

Free Estimates — All Work Fully Guaranteed.

The only shop south of New York specializing in new &
Antique Music Boxes

Located in Historic Old Georgetown in the Nation's Capitol

1645 Wisconsin Ave. N.W.

D. Konvalinka, Prop.

Washington 7, D. C.

Hudson 3-4553

(SEE OUR FULL PAGE, ILLUSTRATED AD ON PAGE 35)

tfo

Once More, A HAPPY NEW YEAR TO THE GREAT HOBBIES FAMILY

Students of cat folk ways say that where there are three or more, one is "elected" to scrub the tops of the others' heads. Nipper, seen here washing Roger while Gray sedately eats, is proud of his scrubbing privilege.

Petey, who was left behind by the former owners of Jim Walsh's "new home" at Vinton, meows a cordial "Happy New Year."

Gray, enjoying his favorite indoor sport—eating. (Notice how small Nipper, in the background, appears by contrast.)

Christmas Eve night, Nipper carefully tied up a gift for Santa Claus.

Roger peering intently into what he is sure will be a happy 1961.

*And, Looking Forward Into the Future
A MERRY CHRISTMAS, 1961*

From ROGER, GRAY, LITTLE NIPPER, PETEY & JIM WALSH
225 North Maple Street, Vinton, Virginia
jax

Left to right:

THEODORE MORSE, one of the greatest pioneer composers of popular songs, who was also the original pianist for the Eight Famous Victor Artists, made a Pathe record of "Jazzin' Around."

—Photo by Apeda, N. Y.

L. WOLFE ("Wolfie") GILBERT did the vocal honors in the Edison record of his song, "The Natchez and the Robert E. Lee," played by Vincent Lopez's Orchestra.

—Photo by Jean Raeburn, N. Y.

JACK NORWORTH recorded many songs, both as solos and with his first wife, Nora Bayes.

prolific recorders from 1914 to 1930. He and FRED HALL wrote many comic songs and hill-billy skits, some of which they recorded together.

MALVIN FRANKLIN played piano accompaniments on many Emerson vocal records in 1917-18.

HUGO FREY, besides conducting dance bands, joined Frank Banta in piano duets in some of the Victors by Joseph C. Smith's Orchestra.

RUDOLF FRIML made piano solos for Victor, and Columbia of some of his big hits, including "Indian Love Call," "Huguette," and "Song of the Vagabonds." Earlier, he had sought to make Edison records, but Thomas A. Edison gave a written opinion Friml couldn't play well enough to qualify for Diamond Discs!

GEORGE GERSHWIN played piano in Paul Whiteman's Victor's of "Rhapsody in Blue" and also made Columbia records of some of his songs.

L. WOLFE GILBERT sang, or rather chanted, the vocal part of a 1923 Edison record of his song, "The Natchez and the Robert E. Lee," by the Broadway Dance Orchestra, which was Vincent Lopez's band in disguise.

LT. HARRY GITZ-RICE teamed with his fellow Canadian, Henry Burr, in 1918, to make Victor and Columbia records purporting to describe "Fun in Flanders," and "Life in a Trench in Belgium." For Pathe he sang his compositions, "Sammy Lad," and "The Road That Leads Back Home," playing his own accompaniment.

JACK GLOGAU in 1921 made a Hy-Tone piano record of "All By Myself," and "Just Like a Rainbow." He also played accompaniments for duets by Al Campbell and Jack Kaufman on Edison, Harmony, and other records.

EDDIE GREEN made comic Negro dialect sketches for Victor, and Okeh.

WENDELL HALL's 1923 versions of his big hit, "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'," may be found on Victor, Edison, and Gennett. He also sang many other records for Victor, and Brunswick.

W. C. HANDY led his Memphis Orchestra on several Columbia platters in 1917. They recorded later for Okeh. Many records by Negro artists may be found on the Black Swan label of the early 1920's, HENRY CREAMER and TURNER LAYTON among them.

VICTOR HERBERT conducted his orchestra on Edison cylinders and for a couple of years, beginning around 1910, was Edison's musical adviser. Then he signed up with Victor, for which he played several 'cello solos.

"Victor Herbert's Band," which turns up on Zon-o-phone discs made around 1902, was merely the Zono house group with a few Herbert men sitting in. Herbert allowed his name to be used, but had nothing to do with making the band records, which were conducted by the late FRED HAGER.

HAGER was one of the first performers to make violin records, beginning with two-minute wax Edison cylinders in 1898. He also made Berliner, and Zon-o-phone discs, on which it's hard to hear his fiddle for the scratch. Hager wrote more compositions, especially for phonograph use, than any other composer.

CLIFF HESS made piano duets with Frank Banta for Columbia in the early 1920's. Two titles were "Roll On, Silvery Moon," and "Remember the Rose."

JOE HOWARD once told me he made Columbia records in 1909, but they were never issued. In the early 1930's Joe sang a medley of his hit tunes for Vocalion, and several years later made a four-record Deluxe album "Joe Howard's Gay Nineties Revue."

ELSIE JANIS in 1911 made Victor records of her songs, "Fascinating Baseball Slide," "Fo' de Lawd's Sake Play a Waltz," and "When Antelo Plays the 'Cello." She made other records in England.

HARRY JENTES shared a double-faced Okeh piano record of the early 1920's with Pete Wendling. Jentes' side was "Blooeey Blues," and Wendling's "Papa Blues."

F. HENRI KLICKMANN played the piano accompaniment to Roy Smeck's ukulele wizardry on "Twelfth Street Rag" for Edison.

JOE MAXWELL used his excellent tenor voice on several 1910 Edison cylinders. "Planning" was one of the songs he recorded.

THEODORE MORSE teamed up in 1918 with Abe Frankel to make a piano duet - "Jazzin' Around" - for Pathe sapphire ball records.

JACK NORWORTH in 1910 made several Victor records with Nora Bayes, who was then his wife. He also made a few solos. One of the latter, "For Months and Months and Months," always brings a laugh nowadays from the standpoint of "how things have changed."

It tells of how a daring lady thought it would be fun to cause a sensation by publicly smoking a cigaret. Then, sings Norworth, "the newspapers roasted her . . . and I don't think she'll smoke again for months and months and months."

That may sound unbelievably old-fashioned in 1960. But there are still innumerable men who wish the same standards of feminine proprieties were in vogue today as were the rule 50 years ago.

Norworth made a large number of Pathe records.

GEOFFREY O'HARA made an Edison cylinder and a Victor disc in 1914, describing his research among the Navajo Indians and singing some of their songs. From 1916 to 1918 he recorded popular songs for Victor.

CHAUNCEY OLCOTT sang many of his Irish songs on Columbia records, beginning around 1913. (I haven't gone to the trouble of looking up exact dates for records mentioned in this article.)

RAY PERKINS, who for many years has been on the air in Denver as one of the West's most successful radio disc jockeys, began a successful song-writing career more than 40 years ago. In 1921 he began making piano records for Edison. Then Brunswick engaged him to sing, which he does very well, to his own accompaniment.

ARTHUR PRYOR, for several years sub-conductor of Sousa's Band, directed the band for record making. John Philip Sousa, who is said to have originated the derisive term, "canned music," took the money but thought it beneath his dignity to conduct.

In 1904 Pryor organized his own band and orchestra, which made hundreds of Victor records. He also recorded trombone solos. "Dearie," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," and "Love Me and the World is Mine," and "O Dry Those Tears" were included. And he made duets with cornet virtuosos.

J. RUSSEL ROBINSON assisted Al Bernard in many comic blackface sketches, mostly for Brunswick.

WILLARD ROBINSON sang some of his songs for Victor, and Perfect.

TED SHAPIRO played the accompaniment on many Sophie Tucker records, and NOBLE SISSLE made a large number of vocal selections from 1918 to 1929 on Pathe hill-and-dale discs. The accompaniments were by Lt. Jim Europe's Hell-Fighters Band.

After Europe's tragic death in 1920, when he was stabbed by a drink-crazed drummer, Sissle formed a partnership with Eubie Blake and together they made records for virtually all the major companies. Jim Europe's Orchestra made Victor dance records 45 years ago.

TED SNYDER'S TRIO made a Zon-o-phone record before 1910 of what appears to have been one of the pioneer laughing specialties. It was called "Make Me Laugh." I wonder if Ted Snyder remembers who the other members were. Could his song-writing partner Irving Berlin, have been included?

HENRY I. MARSHALL, who wrote "Be My Little Baby Bumb!.. Bee," and "On the 5:15," did some recording for Columbia.
—Photo by Bill Witt, Newark, N. J.

CHARLES GILBERT SPROSS recorded several piano solos for Victor around 1910.

SAM H. STEPT was one of the original "Record Boys" (the others were Al Bernard and Frank Kamplain), who sang, played, and yodeled for several companies, notably Brunswick.

CHARLEY STRAIGHT played piano on more than 30 double-faced records made by Gene Greene in England from 1912 to 1914. (These are the records for which I have so long been advertising that I will pay $3 each for copies not in my collection. I now have about half of them.) Straight's dance band made Brunswick records in the 1920's.

DAN J. SULLIVAN made some records in the 1920's for Victor's special Irish series.

WILBUR C. SWEATMAN made a jazz clarinet record for Emerson in 1917. Later his jazz band recorded for Columbia, and Edison.

JAMES L. THORNTON intoned snatches of his famous "Barber Shop Monolog" on a 7-inch Emerson in 1917. The record will prove a painful disappointment to anyone who has heard how side-splittingly funny that monolog was. Jim must have saved the best parts for stage use. The record isn't amusing.

PETE WENDLING, who played a mean ragtime piano, displayed his talents on a few Okeh's, including "Page Paderewski." In 1927 he played Cameo piano versions of "Mary Lou," and "I Meet Her in the Moonlight." Both have refrains by an unidentified woman who sounds like Kate Smith. The Cameo was also issued under the Romeo label with Wendling's name changed to Peter Ling.

PERCY WENRICH seems not to have made records, but his wife, DOLLY CONNOLLY, sang a large number of songs, mostly written by Wenrich, for Columbia, around 1912. Later she went to Emerson. Especially good is the Wenrich classic, "Red Rose Rag." As Dolly sings it, it's ragtime in excelsis.

HENRY I. MARSHALL made a couple of records for Columbia in 1916-17, his own song, "Somewhere There's a Little Cottage Standing," and "Whose Pretty Baby Are You Now?"

FRANK WESTPHAL conducted his dance band for Columbia and made several piano solos.

Many Negro song writers, including CLARENCE WILLIAMS, JAMES P. JOHNSON, PORTER GRAINGER, and DUKE ELLINGTON, made records, either piano solos or with dance bands, for the various companies' "race" supplements. These, however, were mostly done far into the electric recording era and do not properly belong here.

MUSIC BOXES

What does an African Zanze look like?
Have you ever seen a MUSICAL WATCH?
Was Plato's Clepsidra or water-clock the 1st automatic musical instrument?
When was the changeable cylinder invented for Music Boxes?

In this ONE book
THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES
by Roy Mosoriak

is told the historical development, craftsmanship & kinds of music boxes. Forty pages of pictures show musical dolls, clocks, snuff boxes, birds, cylinder & disc music boxes, etc. Drawings explain important details.

Also included are:
Points to remember in buying,
A word to Collectors,
Checklist of makers,
The care of a music box,
Repairing the music box,
Manufacturers of Music Works and Music Boxes

Another HOBBIES Special
for COLLECTORS
$5.00

HOBBIES Magazine
1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

Elise Stevenson

By JIM WALSH

I. "Still Lively as a Kitten"

Mrs. L. W. Kraus, of 26 Aubrey Road, Upper Montclair, N. J., is one of my thousands of friends whom I know only by correspondence. Australian-born Ann Kraus and I have at least one cause in common—a life-long love of cats. She is untiring in the work of the Cat Protective League of Montclair, and all "men and women born with Heavenly compassion in your hearts" should join her crusade for humane treatment of the beautiful creatures whom she and I hold to be the most lovable of pets.

Having learned of my equally life-long devotion to the artists who recorded in the days when both they and the phonograph were young, Mrs. Kraus has sent me a clipping from a Montclair newspaper, showing a photograph of a lovely young lady and announcing her coming marriage.

Unfortunately, I have mislaid the clipping, but the bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rusling Wood, Jr., of Montclair, and Mr. Wood is the son of one of the popular record makers of more than 50 years ago—Mrs. Rusling Wood, Sr., whose discs and cylinders usually bore her maiden name of Elise Stevenson.

Receiving the clipping reminded me that for many years I have wanted to write the story of Elise Stevenson's recording career. It also reminded me that last March a friend at the Edison Laboratory National Monument in West Orange, N. J., sent me Mr. Wood's telephone number, and I surprised him on Sunday morning, March 13th with a long distance call.

He was most cordial in our conversation, and delighted me with the news that his mother was living and "still as lively as a kitten," although she was then 82 (she was born in Liverpool, England, on February 9, 1878) and had broken her hip in April, 1959.

Mr. Wood told me he has a sister, Mrs. Barbara Epel, who was born in 1910, and lives in North Hollywood, Calif. He was born in 1912. For several years after her husband's death his mother lived in an apartment house opposite Hotel Suburban in East Orange, but spent the winters with her daughter.

His mother then decided to make California her year-round home and now lives with her brother at San Elise Stevenson became a member of the Victor Light Opera Company when it was organized in 1909. She is the first woman in the second row. The other artists are identified in the article.

Clemente, "below Capistrano." Rusling Wood, Jr., assured me "we are very proud of her and what she did in the early recording days."

II. First Victor Records

Elise Stevenson was 28 and a singer of reputation in church and concert when she began, in 1906, a busy but too brief, recording career that lasted for the next five years. She became a familiar figure before the recording horns of the pioneer talking machine companies because a fine bass singer, who has now been dead just a little more than half a century, needed a soprano to help him sing duets.

The partner-seeker was William Stanley Grinstead, who was born December 29, 1868, and died December 12, 1910, aged 41. From 1898 to his death he was known the world over on records as Frank C. Stanley, and for a couple of years prior to 1898, while still a bank employee, he had played banjo accompaniments under the assumed name of George S. Williams for Edison cylinders by other singers. Even earlier, he had won the five-string banjo playing championship for the State of New Jersey.

Elise Stevenson's association with Stanley began at the most crowded period of his incredibly active life. In 1906 the tireless Mr. Stanley was not only making solo records for some 18 or 20 labels, but was singing in church, and giving recitals. He was the leader and manager of the Metropolitan Trio, the Invincible Male Quartet (whose name he was about to change to the Peerless Quartet), the Mendelssohn Mixed Quartet, and the Lotus Glee Club.

He was also recording duets with two tenors — Byron G. Harland and Harry Macdonough — and was soon to add Henry Burr to the list. He had been working with two contraltos — Corinne Morgan, whose full name was Corinne Morgan Welsh, and "Grace Nelson," who was really Grace Hornby. He and Harland had also recorded a long series of comic "rube" sketches written by Stanley and based on rustic characters he had observed.

In his "spare time" he was an alderman in his home town of Orange. But until his association with Miss Stevenson this versatile genius

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
Box 595, Tujunga, Calif.

had never recorded two-part harmony with a soprano. The new soprano-baritone combination proved so popular, however, he gave up making duet records with contraltos.

Stanley's last duet records with Corinne Morgan, who spent much of 1906 in Europe, appeared in the Victor and Columbia lists for August of that year. Elise Stevenson's name was first seen in the Victor supplement for that same month. She and Stanley were represented by two serio-comic duets, "Cross Your Heart," and "I Would Like to Marry You."

Two months earlier, however, the first records by the Lyric Quartet had been announced. Old Victor catalogs give the names of the quartet members as Stevenson, Stanley, Morgan, and Macdonough, so the young soprano presumably sang in those initial issues. They were a 10-inch disc, No. 4690, "Evening Chimes," and a 12-inch, No. 31524, of "Incline Thine Ear to Me."

The latter was described as "an impressive sacred number opening with a fine bass solo, followed by an anthem for four voices. This new organization, which will sing exclusively for the Victor, is composed of four well-known New York choir singers. Their voices blend here extremely well."

Besides recording duets with Stanley, Miss Stevenson soon was singing soprano-tenor duos with Harry Macdonough (John Scantlebury Macdonald), for many years manager of the Victor artist and repertoire department. Their first joint effort was 4940, "Don't You Tell," which came out in January, 1907.

In the same supplement the Lyric Quartet sang the Gloria from the Twelfth Mass attributed to Mozart; and the Schubert Trio, composed of soprano, tenor, and baritone, was heard in "Praise Ye," from Verdi's "Attila." The trio sounds like Stevenson, Macdonough, and Stanley.

Miss Stevenson also sang in the Trinity Choir, composed of several Victor artists who were professional church singers, and when the Victor Light Opera Company was organized in 1909 she became a member and took part in some of the medleys recorded by that gifted group.

Versatility was one of Elise Stevenson's assets. With Frank Stanley's guidance, she recorded every type of music, from "coon songs" to hymns, and from popular ballads to light and grand opera.

A photograph of the Victor Light Opera Company is reproduced with this article from the November, 1913, Victor Records catalog. Miss Stevenson is the first woman in the second row. Also in the middle row are Steve Porter; Walter B. Rogers, who arranged and conducted the light opera "Gems"; Harry Macdonough; John Barnes Wells; Ada Jones; and Billy Murray.

The top row consists of Harriette Keyes, Reinald Werrenrath, S. H. Dudley, Elsie Baker, William Wheeler, Elizabeth Wheeler, and John Biebling.

In the bottom row are George Carre, Marguerite Dunlap, Frederick Gunster, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, William F. Hooley, and Inez Barbour.

An out-of-the-ordinary record appeared in May, 1907, when Miss Stevenson and Miss Morgan sang a 12-inch duet (No. 31628) of "Holy Mother, Guide His Footsteps," from "Maritana." The supplement said: "The famous duet between Maritana and Lazarillo in the second act of Wallace's opera . . . is a striking number, and is beautifully rendered by these two Victor singers."

The duet, however, was perhaps a bit too "classical" for most buyers of Black Label records. It sold poorly and was cut out of the catalog in November, 1908.

Elise Stevenson did not immediately begin making solo records for Victor. Her first was an 8-inch, No. 5109, of "When the Swallows Homeward Fly," issued in June, 1907. Her next solo in April, 1908, was one of a group of five specially recorded numbers from "The Merry Widow," then the reigning musical comedy craze. It was "The Vilia Song," done with the help of a male chorus.

Others were a Red Seal of the famous "Merry Widow Waltz" sung by Marcella Sembrich; "Maxim's," by Harry Macdonough; "The Silly Cavalier," a Stevenson-Stanley duet, and "Women," the first Victor record by the Peerless Quartet. Three other Stevenson solos were listed in the 1909 Victor record catalog — "Are You Sincere?" "Dear Heart," and "Through Sunny Spain," with this comment:

"Miss Stevenson, who has been represented in the Victor catalog for some time in duets with Mr. Macdonough and Mr. Stanley, now appears as soloist in some remarkably fine records—a famous old song of Spain by Tito Mattei; a new sentimental ballad by Gumble, which is

FRANK STANLEY

Elise Stevenson began her recording career in 1906 as a duet partner of the popular basso, Frank C. Stanley, who was born in December 1868, and died in December 1910, just a little over 50 years ago.

meeting with much success; the favorite 'Villa,' given with male chorus, and the ever popular 'Dear Heart.'

Among the duets by Miss Stevenson and Macdonough were "Tell Me Pretty Maiden," a re-make of the catchy number from "Floradora" which the tenor had originally made with the late Grace Spencer and which continued to have the old catalog number, 1362. There was also a 12-inch of "I Will Magnify Thee, O God."

The 1909 catalog contained six Ste-

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.
Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

OLD SALZBURG MUSIC BOXES

Bought

Sold

Repaired

Cases expertly refinished, inlays restored and retinted to original condition.

Free Estimates — All Work Fully Guaranteed.

The only shop south of New York specializing in new &

Antique Music Boxes

Located in Historic Old Georgetown in the Nation's Capitol

1645 Wisconsin Ave. N.W.

D. Konvalinka, Prop.

Washington 7, D. C.

Hudson 3-4553

venson-Stanley duets: "Cross Your Heart," "Good Evening, Caroline," "It's Up to You to Do the Rest," "I Would Like to Marry You," "Piccolo," from Oscar Strauss' "A Waltz Dream," and "The Silly Cavalier."

"Piccolo" is charming and so, in a different way, is "Good Evening, Caroline," written by Jack Norworth and Albert Von Tilzer. It might be described as a pseudo "coon song" with an attractive melody and some fine harmonizing by the singers.

On October 20, 1908, Victor announced its first list of double-faced records. One hundred were 10-inch and 25 were 12-inch. Numbers began at 16000 for the small size and 35000 for the large. No. 16013 combined "I Would That My Love," and the Miserere from "Trovatore," by Miss Stevenson and Macdonough.

On 16014 Miss Stevenson and Stanley sang "Honeymooning," coupled with "Sailing," by the Haydn Quartet. "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden," occupied 16061, with Macdonough's "In the Shade of the Palm," completing the coupling. On 16066 the previously single-faced version of "Piccolo" was doubled with "Rah! Rah! Rah!" from "The Soul Kiss," by the Peerless Quartet.

III. Recording for Zon-o-phone

In 1903 Victor acquired control of the Universal Talking Machine Co., which made Zon-o-phone records, and some ostensibly exclusive Victor artists appeared regularly by special permission in the Zono lists.

Elise Stevenson's Zon-o-phone debut was in March, 1907, when she and Stanley collaborated in a 12-inch record of a Theodore Morse song, "Take a Little Ride With Me." In April, on a 10-inch disc, they sang "The Linger Longer Girl."

An oddity is that although Victor always printed correctly Miss Stevenson's first name as Elise (pronounced Aye-lease), Zon-o-phone insisted on calling her "Miss Alice Stevenson," sometimes with a C. in the middle. It was a change she didn't like but couldn't get corrected.

In May, the Stanley-Stevenson combination was responsible for "Because You're You," Victor Herbert's great hit from "The Red Mill." The Mendelssohn Mixed Quartet (which appears to have been the same as Victor's Lyric Quartet, except that Henry Burr took the place of Harry Macdonough) sang "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

In June, the new duet combination was represented with "Cross Your Heart," which Stanley had previously sung with Corinne Morgan for some of the other companies. And, in February, 1908, "Miss Alice C. Stevenson" and Frank C. Stanley sang "If I Should Fall in Love With You," which the supplement said was "bright and melodious" and "rendered by Miss Stevenson and Mr. Stanley in their usual acceptable manner."

A little earlier, Miss Stevenson had begun making solo records for Zon-o-phone. In December, 1907, her name adorned a 12-inch version of "Home, Sweet Home." By the time the first catalog of Zono double-face discs appeared in 1909 she had sung four 10-inch solos — "For All Eternity," and "Are You Sincere?" coupled on 5099, and "Sweetheart," and "Carissima," No. 5161.

Among the 12-inch records, her "Home, Sweet Home," was combined (No. 4041) with "The Last Rose of Summer," by Roberta Granville; and the duet of "Take a Little Ride With Me," on 4042, with "Shine On, Oh Stars," by Henry Burr.

There were four double-faced records with both sides by Stevenson-Stanley, five by the Metropolitan Trio (Stevenson, Stanley, and Burr) and four by the Mendelssohn Quartet. A good many other records by these various artists and combinations were issued later.

Victor discontinued Zon-o-phone's rather surreptitious activities two or three years after Stanley's death. Meanwhile, in 1907, he had taken his charming young protege, nine years his junior, to the studios of such companies as Leeds and Catlin, American and International, and they recorded for all.

Stanley's free-lance activities reached their peak in 1907, for toward the end of that year all the disc manufacturers who were making lateral cut records in competition with Victor and Columbia were put out of business by court order for infringing the major manufacturers' patents.

IV. A Long Columbia List

Although Elise Stevenson and Frank Stanley didn't appear in the Columbia catalog quite so early as they had in the Victor, they clicked big when they did begin "operations" and probably made more records together for Columbia than for any other company.

Their first Columbia duet appearance was in February, 1907, when they sang "The Linger Longer Girl," on XP cylinder 33074. A month later the same song was issued on disc 3573. On three-minute BC cylinder 85105 they sang "Take a Little Ride With Me." (Observe that they recorded much the same songs for the different companies.) In April they obliged with "Because You're You," issued on cylinder 33098 and disc 3590.

When Columbia "jumped the gun" on Victor late in 1908 by combining its best selling single-faced records in double-face, the new series contained a long list of Stevenson-Stanley duets. There was one solo by Miss Stevenson, A591. "Don't Be Cross With Me," which teamed up with Henry Burr's "You Have Always Been the Same Old Pal."

I have enjoyed turning through some of the 1909-10 Columbia supplements and digesting the occasionally amusing descriptions of the duet team's recordings. In January, 1909, the following was said of their 12-inch record of "Good Evening, Caroline," incongruously paired with a talking comic sketch, "Shipmates," by Billy Golden and Joe Hughes:

"Many will remember how 'Good Morning, Carrie' was sung the country over some years ago. 'Good Evening, Caroline' is in every way a better song. . . . The characters are very matter-of-fact individuals who approach the momentous question of a marriage proposal in a manner showing much individuality and ingenuity."

In June, the soprano and baritone sang "Under the Honeymoon," from "Mr. Hamlet of Broadway." This was described as:

"... a bright piece of musical dialog in which is described, with considerable detail, the best conditions under which the gentle art of 'spooning' should be conducted. A lively and attractive melody gives the singers excellent opportunity for a high-class vocal work."

For the December, 1909, list Miss Stevenson sang a solo, "A Little China Doll," from the musical comedy, "A Broken Idol." Columbia couplings were usually eccentric in the beginning of the double-faced era, so the doll song — a lovely little number — was paired with the "Lullaby from 'Jocelyn,'" sung by one of Columbia's English tenors, Bernard Turner. "A Little China Doll" was for a long time my late mother's favorite record, and she sometimes called Elise Stevenson "the best woman singer in the world."

The supplement said:

"The story tells of the disastrous love affair of a diminutive china doll and a toy soldier, suspended on the same string in a toy shop. One day the string breaks, however, and when they are picked up from the floor it is found that the doll, being of china, is broken, while the soldier, who comes from Germany, and is of tougher fibre, has escaped unharmed, the moral being that hearts, like china, are brittle, and should not be worn on a string. Miss Stevenson's crystal-like voice is perfectly adapted to the character of this selection."

The soprano, still as "Alice C. Stevenson," sang "The Little China Doll," coupled with "Rose of the World," on Zon-o-phone 5582.

There was marked contrast between the delicacy of the china doll song and the Stevenson-Stanley duet, "I've Lost My Gal," which appeared the same month, but both were the work of the same successful song writing team, Harry Williams and Egbert Van Alstyne. The Columbia supplement annotator said "I've Lost My Gal"

"... tells of the woes of Henry Baxter, a colored gentleman whose girl goes back on him. He is inconsolable until another charmer comes along, and discovering the cause of 'all his pinin' and heavin' of the chest,' explains how he may get a new and better girl, namely, herself. The selection is decidedly catchy and pleasing as rendered by Miss Stevenson and Mr. Stanley."

In February, 1910, after Frank Stanley had entered upon the last year of his life, the duettists sang "That Would Be Lovely," with Prince's Orchestra playing "Selections from 'The Chocolate Soldier,'" to go along with the vocal number.

April and May seemed to set the duet partners off on an animal "kick." In April their choice was "Two Giddy Goats," from "The Belle of Brittany," described as:

"... a piece of contagiously melodious humor (that) will probably long remain unequalled. Being mainly in very rapid tempo with short staccato notes it is a rather difficult number to sing, which fact brings out all the more prominently the excellent work done by Miss Stevenson and Mr. Stanley."

Their May duet was "My Little Kangaroo." Stanley sang, to go along with it, a comic Harry Von Tilzer composition, "Keep Your Foot on the Soft Pedal." The duet was described as:

"... a selection of the better class of ragtime, very recently published and already having a great sale in sheet form. ... The love tale of the two Australian kangaroos which it exploits will entertain everybody. Its light and breezy music all will find attractive. It is sung in a cleverly arranged dialog setting."

May also was marked by Miss Stevenson's first Columbia duet with a tenor. She and John Young sang the Trovatore "Miserere" on 12-inch record A5165, with Prince's Orchestra playing "Selections from 'Aida'" to blend into the operatic atmosphere. Very likely the Stevenson-Young duet was inspired by the success of the "Miserere" which Miss Stevenson and Harry Macdonough had previously done for Victor. Columbia described its version as:

"... a new and splendid recording of the great 'Miserere' scene from the fourth act of 'Il Trovatore'—possibly the most celebrated concert number in all opera. ... We feel justified in being proud of the record here presented, in which these eminent soloists and the chorus have given of their very best to make the record the success which it unquestionably is."

Columbia's British affiliate waited until May, 1911, before issuing the "Miserere" under the Columbia-Rena label, but it was announced with a whoop. An advertisement in the Talking Machine News was headed: "The Celebrated 'MISERERE' Duet in English at Usual Prices — NOT HIGHER!" It continued:

"The 'Miserere,' one of the most impressive of all concerted numbers, is here presented (in English) in a manner that defies description. It is so perfect a record that the question of charging (as is so often done) a higher price was seriously debated. But we want the public to have the BEST at OUR PRICES and this is one of the best. Remember this is a TWELVE-INCH record of two Grand Opera selections in English (the other, 'Home to Our Mountains,' and both the gems of 'Il Trovatore') and is sold at the regular COLUMBIA-RENA PRICE—4 shillings. This record proves there is no need to pay more!"

British buyers got better value than Americans, for instead of the band medley on the reverse of the "Miserere," there was a contralto-tenor duet of "Home to Our Mountains" by Merle Tillotson (to become well known later as Merle Alcock) and Young. The T. M. N. review read, in part:

"The 'Miserere' is probably the most heart-rending farewell in all the regions of lyric drama, and here it is very beautifully rendered by Miss Elsie (Sic!) Stevenson, a sweet soprano, and Mr. John Young, a light tenor of admirable quality. ... On the reverse is the renowned duet, 'Home to Our Mountains,' sung by Miss Marie (Sic!) Tillotson ... and Mr. Young. ... Miss Tillotson has a fine deep contralto voice and sings with taste and feeling."

As 1910 moved inexorably toward the month of December, in which Frank Stanley would die of pneumonia, taken after giving a recital in New York's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Miss Stevenson's name gradually ceased to appear in the record lists. She was anticipating the birth of her first child.

V. Edison, Indestructible, and U. S. Cylinders

Elise Stevenson was fortunate in having Frank Stanley not only as her professional associate but as her business manager. An artist of genial manner and magnetic personality, he was also an astute business man, who knew how to arrange recording dates on a free-lance basis from all the companies at the highest attainable fees.

He was late, however, in taking Miss Stevenson to the Edison laboratory, and, according to his widow, the late Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Grinsted, it was actually the soprano who brought him back to Edison after he had quarreled with its recording department.

Mrs. Grinsted said the Edison experts heard disc records by Miss Stevenson and wanted her to sing for their cylinders, but she replied that Grinsted was her business manager and negotiations must be conducted with him. The upshot was that she was engaged and he returned to Edison at a payment schedule twice as high as he had previously received. Mrs. Grinsted commented: "We all considered this quite a feather in Miss Stevenson's cap."

Even so, Miss Stevenson did little work for Edison. Her first appearance on an Edison cylinder occurred when the initial list of 50 four-minute Amberol records was announced in November, 1908. As a member of the Metropolitan Trio, she sang the part of Marguerite in the Trio from "Faust" (No. 19.) Stanley was Mephistopheles, and Henry Burr, known to the Edison public as Irving Gillette, took the tenor role of Faust. The supplement assured prospective buyers that "not a word or note is cut from the stage version, which is rendered with artistic finish."

In February, 1909, on Amberol No. 79, Miss Stevenson, Stanley, and a chorus gave an elaborate presentation of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Listen to this description, in which John Young is referred to as Harry Anthony, the name which he was then using when singing for Edison:

"A remarkably fine presentation of Julia Ward Howe's stirring national anthem. Mr. Stanley, baritone, sings the first verse; Miss Stevenson, soprano, the second verse; Mr. Stanley and Mr. Anthony the third verse, and Miss Stevenson and Mr. Anthony, the fourth verse. The chorus between the verses are sung by the Mixed Quartet. The singers are accompanied by the New York Military Band, which also plays a number of original interludes, these being among the most attractive features of the record. It will be strange, indeed, if this does not prove one of the largest selling records ever made for the Edison phonograph."

In March, 1910, the Manhattan Mixed Trio, which apparently was the same as the Metropolitan, sang "Do They Think of Me at Home" on Amberol No. 367. This old-time song was still popular 50 years ago and the cylinder was taken into the Blue Amberol catalog as No. 1973.

Only two Stanley-Stevenson duets were issued by Edison, both in the two-minute size. The first, "Under the Honeymoon," came out in October, 1909. The second, "Two Giddy Goats," already mentioned as a Columbia disc, appeared in May, 1910.

Almost as soon as the Indestructible Phonographic Record Co., of Albany, N. Y., began making unbreakable two-minute cylinders in the fall of 1907, Frank C. Stanley was included in its list of artists. His first two duets, which probably had been recorded a considerable time before they were issued, were with Grace Hornby, the contralto who served only a short time as his partner.

In February, 1908, Stanley and his associates were represented by a special group of "Merry Widow" recordings, such as those they had made for Victor. One was a Stevenson-Stanley duet, "I Love You So" (the "Merry Widow Waltz"), and on another, Miss Stevenson, with the aid of a chorus, sang "Vilia."

Indestructible issued eight "authentic" "Merry Widow" records that month, not to mention "I Want to be a Merry Merry Widow," by Ada Jones, and "Chimmie and Maggie at 'The Merry Widow,'" by Miss Jones and Len Spencer.

In all, Indestructible published six Stevenson-Stanley duets, and three solos by Miss Stevenson, besides 26 Stanley solos, 29 duets by Stanley and Henry Burr, two Nelson-Stanley duets, and one between Stanley and Steve Porter.

The supplement descriptions of two of Miss Stevenson's solos make good reading. In the April, 1909, Columbia record list (Columbia had taken over distribution of the Indestructibles under its own brand name), this is said of 1042, "Don't Be Cross With Me."

"The naive confession of an unaffected and unsophisticated young girl who cannot see why it should be wrong to ask a man to hold her hand when she wants him to. She has 'lots of trouble with her smile,' as she simply cannot keep it from 'breaking through,' when any man whose appearance she likes smiles at her. Miss Stevenson sings this delightful little song in such a manner that, whether we agree with the sentiments or not, we simply can't be 'cross with her.'"

In December, 1909, on No. 1219, she sang "Dear Heart."

"A delightful song by one of the best modern song composers—a sincere and tender expression of unchanging affection. This is unmistakably one of the best soprano records ever issued in a Columbia Indestructible series, made so by the exquisite quality of Miss Stevenson's voice and her intelligent conception of the interpretative demands of the song."

The U. S. Phonograph Co., of Cleveland, O., followed Indestructible by about a year in making unbreakable cylinders—the U. S. Everlasting. The October, 1912, U. S. catalog does not contain any solos by Miss Stevenson, but there is one four-minute Stevenson-Stanley duet (with her name spelled as Stephen-son), "What Makes the World Go Round?"

VI. Conclusion of Career

As has already been said, Frank Stanley died in December, 1910, and no more was heard of Miss Stevenson in record supplements for the next several months. Then in April, 1911, Victor published a photo of her, together with an announcement of single-faced record No. 5830, which she had sung as a duet with Henry Burr:

"After a long illness, Miss Stevenson makes a welcome reappearance in the Victor lists in a duet with Mr. Burr; the number selected being the charming 'Day Dreams,' from 'The Spring Maid,' that delightful comedy in which Christie MacDonald is now starring."

The "illness" was her daughter's birth.

Presumably, Burr had become Miss Stevenson's duet partner because he had succeeded Stanley as the manager of the Peerless Quartet and, in all probability, as the soprano's business manager. The new Stevenson-Burr combination also recorded "Day Dreams," and another "Spring Maid" number, "Two Little Love Bees," for Indestructible.

For U. S. Everlasting they sang "Day Dreams," and "When You're in Town." Incidentally, in some cylinder record list I have seen records described as being by "Elise Wood" (using her married name) and Burr, but am not sure which one it was.

Burr sang "Day Dreams," on a Columbia disc assisted by a soprano, Margaret Mayew, with whom he made several records, but I doubt that Mayew was a disguise for Miss Stevenson, although no information was given concerning her.

The only Columbia disc by Stevenson-Burr was A1021, "When You're in Town," issued about the same time as the Indestructible cylinder. It is rather surprising to find Miss Stevenson, in September, 1911, giving, on No. A1029, a raggy interpretation of Shelton Brooks' Negro song classic, "Some of These Days," which has been immortalized by Sophie Tucker.

Miss Stevenson had the shouting assistance of the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet. That was her last Columbia appearance, but in the same supplement she and the still living Walter Van Brunt sang, on A1023, "Hannah, Won't You Smile Awhile On Me?"

After five successful years, Elise Stevenson's recording career was coming to a close. In June, 1911, however, she and Burr made a highly popular record (No. 16854) of "Love is Like a Red, Red Rose," coupled with Guido Gialdini, probably the greatest of all whistlers, trilling "My Hero Waltz," from "A Chocolate Soldier."

In September, the month in which her last Columbia appeared, she sang (on 16898), "When You're in Town," with Burr, coupled with "I Only Know I Love You," by Macdonough. One month later she and Burr occupied the B side of 16907 with a charming duet, "Save Up Your Kisses for a Rainy Day." Van Brunt and John Bieling took side A with "The Owl in the Old Oak Tree."

That was the last Elise Stevenson record except that "The Garden of Dreams," which she sang with Macdonough, was recoupled on 16932 with Elizabeth Wheeler's vocal version of "The Glow Worm," after having previously been issued under a lower number.

The reason why Elise Stevenson gave up her recording career is made clear in a letter she wrote to me on August 29, 1947. Her husband preferred for her to concentrate on being a housewife and mother rather than a professional entertainer, and she acceded to his wishes. In part the letter says:

"My dear Mr. Walsh: Your letter finally reached me in Spring Lake (N.J.) where I am spending the summer. Needless to say that it surprises me very much that anybody would remember Elise Stevenson. (The Alice was a mistake, but the company insisted on standing by that mistake, so—who were we in those days to dictate as to what they did?)

"Thank you for the compliment of wishing to see me, but I am going to my daughter's home from here next week. She lives in Montrose, Calif., and I do not know just when I will return to East Orange—some time next year, as each time I go I usually stay over the holidays. My son and his family live in Montclair, so I see them all spring and summer.

"Yes, I was the soprano in the Metropolitan Trio.

"... About Corinne Morgan, or Welsh, I only know she married and went West.

"... About the 'China Doll,' I didn't remember it. I haven't any list of all the records made by me for any of the companies. If you have one would it be too much to ask you to let me have a copy? My son seems to be particularly interested, on account of his children—one daughter and two sons.

"Mr. Wood died in July, 1943, after a long illness. I never kept up with any of my musical associates. Mr. Wood left the musical for the business world... and as I had my two children and the home to look after, I thought it better to 'keep the peace.'

"I'm sorry I can't help you, but I do appreciate your passing interest in 'Elise Stevenson.' It certainly picked up my morale to think that anyone would have the slightest interest in a back number. Thank you sincerely, ELISE S. WOOD."

I compiled as nearly complete a list as I could of Mrs. Wood's records and sent it to her. I also assured her my interest was not merely a "passing one," but had been with me ever since I first heard a record by her, and that thousands of record collectors considered her anything but a back number.

That assurance I now repeat. And I wish there were space to publish a virtually complete list of her recordings, but she made too many for that to be possible.

And so—in the style of the old movie "travelog" editors—we bid farewell to Elise Stevenson in her sunny California home and hope that she will enjoy many happy years as a good neighbor of her fellow song birds, the Swallows of Capistrano. (Lacking first-hand knowledge, I'm assuming swallows do sing!)

And here's wishing happiness also to her granddaughter, the bride, and wishing that I hadn't lost the clipping giving her photo and full name! My four cats—Roger, Gray, Nipper, and Petey, join me in these good wishes.

P. S. Since this article deals in part with marriage, perhaps this is a suitable place to quote from a letter sent to me by a travelling evangelistic singer, Wilbur Leverett of Lamar, Mo. In my recent series concerning Vernon Dalhart I said I wondered what had become of his violinist, Adelyne Hood. Mr. Leverett writes:

"I was in Tuscaloosa, Ala., in 1952 or 1954, and called on Adelyne Hood's cousin, who told me that Miss Hood had married an importer, and they travelled all over the world together. I forget what Miss Hood's husband imported, but he sounded like a very important man."

How Much Federal Aid Did The Pilgrims Get?

They were in a Depressed Area. No one guaranteed them high prices for anything. Their only roads and schools were built by themselves. For Security they did their own saving, or starved.

All they had was Character. All they did was work. All they wanted was Self Respect.

The sum of those three traits became AMERICA.

But what's going to be the sum of the traits you see today—the traits of character, or rather, lack of it, that demand more money for less work, put security above self-respect, pamper self-pitying criminals instead of punishing them, give away resources we desperately need to protect ourselves, listen to weaklings that want government to take care of them when they should take care of themselves.

Long years of early-American self-respect and hard work built America, but the traits you see today can destroy it, in half the time.

Warner and Swasey,
Cleveland, Ohio

MUSIC BOXES

What does an African Zanze look like?
Have you ever seen a MUSICAL WATCH?
Was Plato's Clepsydra or water-clock the 1st automatic musical instrument?

When was the changeable cylinder invented for Music Boxes?

In this ONE book
THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES
by Roy Mosoriak

is told the historical development, craftsmanship & kinds of music boxes. Forty pages of pictures show musical dolls, clocks, snuff boxes, birds, cylinder & disc music boxes, etc. Drawings explain important details.

Also included are:
Points to remember in buying,
A word to Collectors,
Checklist of makers,
The care of a music box,
Repairing the music box,
Manufacturers of Music Works and Music Boxes

Another HOBBIES Special
for COLLECTORS

$5.00

HOBBIES Magazine
1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill.

March 22, Bohème: Same cast as November 18 except: Marcello - Lo. se, Alcindoro - Tavecchia.
 March 24, Madama Butterfly: Same cast as November 30 except: Butterfly - Destinn, Suzuki - Swartz, Kate Pinkerton - G. Fisher, Sharpless - Polese, Commissioner - Huddy.
 March 25, Matinee, Manon: Same cast as February 15 except: Manon - Garden, Lescaut - Gilly, Guards - Strozso, White.
 March 25, Fanciulla del West: Same cast as January 17 except: Jack Rance - Polese.

As Father Palmer pointed out in his first listing of the Boston Opera, a link obviously existed between many of its artists and the domestic Columbia label.

Witness Boninsegna for one—no sooner had she joined the newly-formed Boston operatic forces than Columbia signed her up. To a greater or lesser extent the same is true of Bronskaja, Dereyne, Freeman, Gay, Lipkowska, Nielsen, Olitzka, Baklanoff, Mardones, Destinn, Garden, Gay, Swartz, Villani, Carolina White, Blanchart, Goritz, Slezak, Zenatello.

It would appear, then, that were it not for the Boston Opera, our collecting might be somewhat different now. Goodness, just imagine not having those nice "banner labels" of Boninsegna, Garden, Gay, Olitzka and others to look for.

After this sobering thought we hasten with our thanks to Henry Russell, the brain behind the Boston organization, for saving us from such a dire fate, and to Father Palmer for giving us the first glimpse behind the Boston Opera curtain.

This latter contribution is what in the journalistic jargon would be defined as a "scoop."

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

PART I

I. Unrivalled American Basso

"The unrivalled American basso," as Columbia record catalogs used to call the late Frank Croxton, has been mentioned frequently in articles about other pioneer record makers. Among his associates whose biographical sketches have already appeared are Charles Harrison, Reed Miller, Lambert Murphy, and the Eight Famous Victor Artists. Now I have decided it is time to publish an appreciation of the recording career of Frank Croxton himself.

In 1924 the late George Pullen Jackson, then a member of the music faculty of Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn., was writing a series of articles on "Southern Musicians" for Sunday newspapers. I don't believe I can give a more effective general introduction to Frank Croxton and his achievements than by quoting what Dr. Jackson said about him:

Frank Croxton

By JIM WALSH

"I think it would be a fair guess that big, jolly, golden-voiced Frank Croxton has provided the United Statesers with more unalloyed musical enjoyment than has any other American bass singer. You want me to prove it? It can't be done, of course. It was only a guess.

"But show me the man whose phonographic records have gone into millions of homes; who has, for a number of years, given a hundred recitals per season from coast to coast; who has functioned for full 14 years as soloist in one of New York's best churches, and whose artistry, during a term of ten years as head of the vocal department of the Chautauqua (N. Y.) assemblies, has brought him into touch with uncounted thousands. Show me one other man of the basso variety who has a record that will match this one, and I shall have to acknowledge that my guess was a bad one.

"If the Blue Grass State doesn't stop producing great singers and players we shall have to change the general title of these articles to 'Kentucky Musicians.' And we shall have to say of that Commonwealth that it is the home of 'fast horses, fair women and famous artists.'

"Frank Croxton saw the light of day in Paris, Ky., in 1877, and passed the first five eventful years of his life there before his parents moved to Lexington. It was in Lexington that he got his general education in the public schools and in Transylvania University, where he graduated in 1898. It is there also where he received his first musical instruction at the hands of his father, Chester F. Croxton, who is now, by the way, a prominent choir leader in Fort Worth, Texas.

"Immediately after young Croxton's graduation he went to New York City and laid his musical talents in the hands of Frank Herbert Tubbs, voice builder. Later he worked also with the noted masters, Oscar Saenger and John Denis Mehan. The European part of Mr. Croxton's vocal education was gained in Paris in 1907 and 1908 under Frank King Clark, a well known music pedagogue of the French capital, for whom Mr. Croxton, after his return to America, arranged a master class in New York, which was attended by many of the best American singers.

"At this time Mr. Croxton was in the midst of his work at Chautauqua, summer after summer. And it was at this time that he started his long period of service as soloist at the Brick Church in New York. In the years following, the basso did, in addition to the above-mentioned singing, an ever increasing amount of concert and recital work. He was for a long time a member of a concert quartet, the other noted members of which were Agnes Kimball (soprano), Nevada Van Der Veer (contralto), and the late Reed Miller (tenor).

"Mr. Croxton's present occupations are threefold: He runs down from his Morristown, N. J., home (30 miles from New York on the Lackawanna) to Camden once in a while to make records for one of America's most prominent talking machine concerns; he takes a concert tour as often as he can get away with the 'Eight Victor Artists'; and he devotes the rest of his energies, mainly during the summer, to teaching vocal

Photos of the Peerless Quartet, reproduced from a 1919 Aeolian-Vocalion record catalog.

—Photo by Grooks Studio, Flint, Mich.

Frank Croxton autographed this photo in person for Jim Walsh.

—Photo by Apeda, New York City

art at his Morristown studios, far removed from the mechanical distractions of the big city, and still within reach of its art life.

"In 1899 Mr. Croxton married Elizabeth Lloyd of New York. Mrs. Croxton is an excellent soprano singer and is now associated with her husband in his summer master-class work."

II. Newspaper Death Notice

Frank Croxton had about a quarter of a century of life remaining after George Pullen Jackson's eulogy was put into print. When he died, September 4, 1949, the following appeared in the New York Herald Tribune:

"Frank Croxton, 71, a church soloist for 40 years and a basso who toured the United States and Canada with various singers and symphony orchestras, died yesterday at Sanger's Nursing Home, 500 West 67th Street. He lived at 441 West 57th Street.

"Born in Paris, Ky., Mr. Croxton's singing career encompassed opera, concerts, oratorios, recitals, phonograph recordings, and radio programs, usually in supporting roles. He was soloist at the Brick Presbyterian Church, when it was at Fifth Avenue and 36th street, for 25 years, and later at the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, Fifth Avenue and 48th street, for 15 years. He resigned from the latter two years ago.

"Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Croxton, and four sons, Chester H., Lucius, John C., and Frank Croxton, Jr. The funeral service will be private."

The death certificate issued by the City of New York Department of Health says the eminent basso had lived in New York for 45 years. By an error, it gives his birth date as October 7, 1887, instead of 1877. He was 71 years, 10 months, and 27 days of age at his death.

His profession is set down, inac-

THE NEW PHONOGRAM

20 Cents a Year OCTOBER, 1911 2 Cents a Copy

The New Edison Records for October

THE NEW PHONOGRAM, October, 1911

—All photos from the collection of the author curately, as "actor." His father's name, as we already know, was Chester Croxton, and his mother's maiden name, Mary Anderson.

He had been in the Sanger Home for 20 days, and his death occurred at 4:30 p.m. on September 4. His physician, whose signature I can't decipher, attributes death to "generalized arterio-sclerosis." The body was cremated at Fresh Pond Crematory and the funeral was held on September 6.

III. Other Brief Sketches

Additional information concerning Frank Croxton may be found in the 1914 catalog of Blue Amberol records and the 1920 Columbia list. The Edison cylinder booklet says:

"Frank Croxton was born in Paris, Ky. His father, Chester F. Croxton, had a remarkable basso voice and sang only the best song literature; consequently the young son knew the great songs and arias before he had any thought of becoming a professional singer. Mr. Croxton spent several seasons in opera and has sung every bass role in the grand and light operas commonly sung in repertoire companies, and has always ranked high among America's leading oratorio and concert basses. Among the great orchestras with which he has appeared may be mentioned the Boston Symphony, New York Symphony, New York Philharmonic."

It is obvious that Croxton was an artist of sound musical attainments, but I wish we had more information about his operatic career. The Columbia catalog referred to him both under his own name and as a member of the famous Columbia Stellar Quartet. I have combined the two references:

"Music lovers throughout the United States will commend our action in securing Mr. Frank Croxton, the unrivaled American basso, for a number of selections. Mr. Croxton has been known for years as one of the ablest and most gifted vocal artists the concert stage of the country has been able to boast, his continuous engagements with most of the large orchestras and in oratorio performances bringing him closely in touch with the best of the musically inclined portion of the American public."

"Frank Croxton was born in Kentucky and was educated at the Kentucky

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES

Specialists Since 1825

EXPERT REPAIRING

FINE MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE
FREE ESTIMATES, Appraisals and Lists.

Bornand Music Box Co.

139 4th Ave. (PE 8-1506) PELHAM, N.Y.

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single-faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.
Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

OLD SALZBURG MUSIC BOXES

Bought

Sold

Repaired

Cases expertly refinished, inlays restored and retinted to original condition.

Free Estimates — All Work Fully Guaranteed.

The only shop south of New York specializing in new &

Antique Music Boxes

Located in Historic Old Georgetown in the Nation's Capitol

1645 Wisconsin Ave. N.W.

Washington 7, D. C.

D. Konvalinka, Prop.

Hudson 3-4553

University. At the youthful age of six his remarkable voice was developing under the tutelage of his father. At 21 he came to New York and built up a reputation which has taken him as soloist with orchestras and choral societies throughout the United States. The outstanding quality of Croxton's voice is an unusual clearness seldom found in a voice of such low bass register. In his solo passages this clarity is particularly noticeable."

IV. Beginning a Recording Career

When his recording career began, Frank Croxton was a tall, barrel-chested, strongly built man of 33. His photographs usually show him wearing glasses and a sardonic expression. It is amusing to observe how he towers over his three associates of the Columbia Stellar Quartet in a picture published in HOBBIES for March, 1958.

The first Croxton record I have traced is a two-minute U. S. Everlasting cylinder No. 239, which must have been made late in 1910 or early in 1911. It is a duet version of an Ernest R. Ball song hit, "In the Garden of My Heart," which he sang with that most prolific of all duetists, Henry Burr.

Like Croxton, Burr had been a star pupil of the distinguished singing coach, John D. Mehan, and it is probable that the most popular ballad singing tenor in the history of the phonograph deserves the credit for persuading Croxton to make records.

A few other Croxton records are listed in the U. S. Everlasting catalog for October, 1912. They include the following four-minute cylinders: 1447, "Hosanna;" 1320, "The Lord is My Shepherd," a duet with Reed Miller, and 1562, "Flora's Holiday," by the Frank Croxton Quartet.

V. Singing for Edison

The basso's first Edison appearance occurred in October, 1911, when he and Reed Miller sang, on Amberol cylinder No. 799, the "Lost, Proscribed" air from "Martha."

The New Phonogram editor remarked: "Mr. Miller is too well-known among Edison enthusiasts to require an introduction; Mr. Croxton's robust baritone voice and his dramatic style in singing will endear him at once to all purchasers of this record. The perfect blending of the two voices, coupled with the fact that the record is sung in English, is sure to make it extremely popular among lovers of grand opera."

In November, on No. 835, Miller and Croxton sang "The Lord is My Shepherd." Said the editor: "Reed Miller and Frank Croxton have both sung the anthem hundreds of times in their church work and it naturally follows that their rendition of it is beyond unfavorable criticism."

Croxton was one of the few recording artists who headed a quartet featuring his name. In January, 1912, the Frank Croxton Quartet was represented with an Amberol cylinder, No. 884, of the "Flora's Holiday—Song Cycle," which has already been mentioned as a U. S.

Everlasting record. The description said:

"'Flora's Birthday' is a cycle of songs by H. Lane Wilson, who has been unusually successful in arranging quaint and charming melodies in the old English style. Our record contains: 'Come All Ye Lads and Lassies,' an original song in 2-4 time; 'Gentle Dawn,' an arrangement of an English melody of the 15th century, which is in madrigal form, sung unaccompanied; and 'Country Dance,' a characteristic melody in 6-8 time, full of life and spirit. The fine organization of the Frank Croxton Quartet, now en tour in concert work, is shown by the clear enunciation of the singers and their spirited work throughout."

Besides Croxton, the quartet consisted of Agnes Kimball, soprano; Reed Miller, tenor, and Miller's wife, Nevada Van Der Veer, contralto—all now dead. Their photos were published on the front cover of that month's Edison supplement. The New Phonogram said of Croxton, "there is not a prominent oratorio society in America that has not had him for soloist at one time or another," and commented about the Quartet:

"The Frank Croxton Quartet is composed of singers of the highest rank individually and collectively. Their work has never been excelled in America by any organization of vocalists. It represents several years of earnest effort together, more with the idea of perfect ensemble from an art point of view than from any idea of exploiting their work publicly. The demand for their services has been so insistent that the artists are making several short tours during the season to all parts of the country. The quartet, when in New York, sings at Dr. Henry Van Dyke's famous Fifth Avenue Brick Church. The members of the organization have the distinction of singing over 100 concerted numbers from memory—a record that will probably stand for many years."

In February, the quartet sang "I Love, Love" from "The Red Widow." And in March, Mrs. Kimball, with the other members assisting, was heard in the "Inflammas" from "Stabat Mater." Croxton and Miller were present with a duet rendition of "Crucifix." May brought a three-part interpretation of "God is Love, His Mercy Brightens," by Kimball, Miller, and Croxton.

A month later, Croxton's first Edison solo was announced. It was the composition with which he perhaps was most identified, "Gypsy Love Song" from Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller," and was made with the help of a mixed chorus—no doubt the other three members of the quartet, which also sang the record of the beautiful waltz, "Carmena."

A second Croxton solo, "Hear Me! Ye Winds and Waves" was issued in July, with this comment:

"Surging with the spirit of the elements, this great masterpiece of Handel's has been one of Mr. Croxton's most successful songs as baritone soloist with the New York Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony, Victor Herbert and Theodore Thomas Orchestras. A recitative from Handel's 'Julius Caesar' and the air from 'Scipio' are combined by an orchestra accompaniment in which is heard the ceaseless booming of the restless waves."

No more Croxton records were issued by Edison before the first list of unbreakable Blue Amberol cylinders came out in November, 1912.

VI. Croxton as a Columbia and Victor Singer

Croxton's Columbia debut was only a month later than his Edison. In February, 1912, attention was called to his 12-inch record, No. A5344, of two standard bass numbers, "Out on the Deep" and "Thy Sentinel Am I."

March brought a 10-inch version, No. A1114, of "Off to Philadelphia," coupled with "The Little Irish Girl," sung by W. Francis Firth. Croxton and Miller teamed in April to sing "The Wanderer's Night Song" on one side of a 10-inch disc while Grace Kerns and Bessie Volckmann sang "O Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast" as its coupling.

Croxton also offered a bass solo of "Hosanna." Its mating was "Welcome, Happy Morning," by the Columbia Mixed Quartet—possibly another name for the Croxton Quartet.

In July, Miller and Croxton were heard in "A Stein Song," "Brown October Ale," sung by another basso with the initials F. C.—Frank Conly—was pressed on the other side.

In November, Miller and Croxton sang a 12-inch version of "The Lord is My Shepherd." Its pairing was Handel's "Largo," given in Italian by the great German baritone lieder singer, Alexander Heinemann.

For December, 1912, Croxton cashed in on the Christmas trade by making a 12-inch version of Gounod's "Nazareth," sung with the help of the Columbia Mixed Chorus. The other side was occupied with "And the Glory of the Lord," by the Columbia Oratorio Chorus. The monthly supplement said, concerning the Croxton side:

"This celebrated song—one of the best achievements of its equally celebrated composer, and especially adapted to the male voice of low register—still stands supreme among songs of its class. It is sung for our list by Mr. Frank Croxton with the entire strength of our unrivaled Mixed Chorus."

Croxton's only solo Victor record also appeared in December, 1912. It, too, was a solo rendition of "Nazareth," but without the aid of a chorus, and was doubled with "Yuletide," a "Christmas fantasia" played by Arthur Pryor's Band. Said the supplement:

"The Victor introduces a new bass in Gounod's majestic song of the Nativity. Mr. Croxton's rich and resonant voice and good delivery are already familiar to concert-goers throughout the United States, and his Victor records will present him to a new and much larger audience."

Strangely, in view of the way Croxton had immediately "caught on" with Edison and Columbia patrons, his name didn't appear again in a Victor list for almost seven years, even though the "Nazareth" record sold well. And, although Victor issued solo records by Agnes Kimball and Reed Miller, the Frank Croxton Quartet was never among the Victor recording groups.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

I. Established Artist

By the end of 1912 Frank Croxton was established as a recording artist, but one who sang operatic and concert songs almost entirely and did not go in for "popular" music.

His absence from the Victor lists after the "Nazareth" record may have been due to his signing a contract to make lateral cut discs only for Columbia. I have never, however, seen any mention of his being an exclusive Columbia artist for solo work.

When the first list of Edison Blue Amberol cylinders was issued in November, 1912, Croxton, Kimball, and Miller were heard on No. 1502, in the Trio from "Faust." After describing the scene in which the Trio is sung, the supplement said: "Miss Kimball and Messrs. Miller and Croxton have been singing in concert for years as soprano, tenor, and baritone, respectively, of the celebrated Frank Croxton Quartet. An effective record of their concerted efforts is offered lovers of grand opera in English."

A month later, on No. 1537, Croxton and a chorus of female voices sang to an accompaniment of harp, organ, and orchestra, "List! The Cherubic Host" from Alfred Gaul's oratorio, "The Holy City."

Another ambitious undertaking came in the fourth Amberol list when the four sang the Quartet from "Rigoletto" (No. 1528). I have never heard this record, but I found an intriguing reference to it in a recently acquired copy of the English magazine, The Gramophone, for September, 1923.

Felix Sykes, recording secretary of the City of London Phonograph Society, reported that "Mr. Hillyer

Frank Croxton

By JIM WALSH

PART II

had some interesting remarks to make upon the record of the Quartet from 'Rigoletto.' He said that he had heard all the leading discs of this title—several made by celebrated artists—but the Blue Amberol cylinder easily came out on top. The meeting was in complete agreement with this opinion."

On No. 1517 Croxton sang "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep" as a solo. His only Edison Diamond Disc (No. 88072) combined "Rocked in the Cradle" with "My Pretty Jane," sung by John Young and Frederick Wheeler. The basso's sonorous tones are heard to scintillating effect.

In the sixth list, issued in March, 1913, Croxton, with the help of a chorus, sang "O, Little Mother of Mine." The following month, on 1745, the Quartet rendered a hymn, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

In August, on 1805, Croxton gave a rousing interpretation of "Father O'Flynn." Kimball, Miller, and Croxton sang "God is Love, His Mercy Brightens" (1862) for the September list, and in October, on 1991, the trio was heard in "Praise Ye" from Verdi's "Attila." Also in October, on 2004, Miller and Croxton sang Faure's "Crucifix."

Frank Croxton's last Blue Amberol record, 2110, issued in December, 1913, contained the "Gypsy Love Song," which, like "God is Love," had already appeared on the wax Amberol.

In view of the standard type of the numbers sung by Croxton and his associates it is probable that all the Blue Amberol records had been made originally for wax cylinders. This lends more color to the supposition that he became an exclusive Columbia artist for a period of two years or so.

II. Columbia and Others

Croxton recorded so extensively for Columbia from 1912 to 1920 that it would be tedious to trace his activities. The November, 1914, catalog lists 17 solos by him, as well as duets with Henry Burr, Harry McClaskey (who was also Henry Burr!) and Reed Miller; a rendition of the "Good Night Quartet" from "Martha," with Grace Kerns, Mildred Potter, and Miller; and two records by the Croxton Mixed Quartet.

A little later he took part in a 12-inch version of "Carmena," the other singers being Kerns, Potter and Craig Campbell. He also sang in the Columbia Mixed Quartet, with Kerns, Potter, and Charles Harrison. After Miss Potter's death in 1915, the women members became Beulah Gaylord Young (Mrs. Charles Harrison), soprano; and Rose Bryant, contralto.

Shortly before Miss Potter's death Croxton took the bass role in a recording of the Lucia Sextet, the other members being Kerns, Potter, Harrison, Reed Miller, and Albert Wiederhold, who also recorded under the name of Herbert Stuart. Charles Harrison is the only survivor of the Sextet singers.

For half a dozen years Croxton was especially prominent among Columbia artists as a member of the famous Stellar Quartet, whose first record appeared in January, 1914. The Quartet was formed because Columbia Recording Director, George Clarence Jell, wanted a four-voice group that would specialize in the unaccompanied singing of higher type music than the ordinary popular song.

For a record or two John Barnes Wells was the second tenor; Charles Harrison, the first; Andrea Sarto, baritone, and Croxton, bass. Henry Burr also sang the lead tenor part once or twice, but then Reed Miller was obtained, and the personnel remained constant until Croxton signed exclusively with Victor in 1920.

Two of the members—Miller and Croxton—were "lifted" from the Frank Croxton Quartet. The Columbia Stellar organization won a deserved recognition as the best group of its kind. Although some Stellar Quartet records were issued after Croxton left Columbia, I have no idea who took his place.

Left to right:

This informal snapshot was taken at the Victor Jobbers' Convention in Atlantic City, June, 1920. Billy Murray, Frank Croxton, and Frank Banta are "doing stunts" to amuse Mrs. Murray.

A 1923 photo of the Peerless Quartet. Henry Burr, the manager, thought it bad luck for the quartet to have its picture taken "four in a row," so insisted on Croxton bringing up the rear. In front—John Meyer, Burr, and Albert Campbell.

Beginning around 1915, Croxton did some recording for the minor companies that made hill-and-dale records in the hope of sharing the phonograph's growing popularity. I have a Rex sapphire record on which Croxton sings "The Clang of the Forge," backed with "Annie Laurie," by the Peerless Quartet.

The Croxton Quartet sang a medley of Christmas Carols on Gennett 7620. When Okeh began to make vertical cut records in 1917 Croxton and his associates were engaged.

On one double-faced record the Croxton Trio sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." On another the Quartet sang "Goodbye, Sweet Day," and on still another Croxton was heard in a solo version of "When the Bell in the Lighthouse Rings." On others the Trio sang "Praise Ye" and the Quartet, "Sweet and Low."

Croxton and Miller recorded a Pathe duet (No. 30400) of "The Two Beggars." And when Okeh began to make lateral cut records in 1919 the Croxton Trio did a "Christmas Hymns Medley."

While I can't prove it, I suspect that "Franklin Careau," a bass who sang "Gypsy Love Song" and other standard numbers for the 7-inch Emerson list in 1916-17, was Croxton. Both singers had the initials F. C. — and performers who were using an assumed name usually liked to give some clue as to who they really were!!

III. Peerless Quartet and Eight Victor Artists

In 1919 Frank Croxton became a member of the Peerless Quartet and the concert group which was to become known the following year as the Eight Famous (or Popular) Victor Artists. Croxton took the place of Arthur Collins, the baritone who had been a Quartet member for more than 10 years but was frequently at odds with the second tenor and manager, Henry Burr. John Meyer, the Peerless bass, switched to the baritone part, and Croxton took the bass.

After an absence of almost seven years, Croxton's name and photo appeared in the Victor supplement for November, 1919, when, on record 18609, he and Burr harmonized a ballad, "Weeping Willow Lane."

It was combined with the Peerless Quartet version of a favorite sentimental tear-jerker, "When I'm Gone You'll Soon Forget." This record was such a big seller that when electrical recording was introduced in 1925, Victor had both sides remade by the same artists and issued as 19870.

Until late in 1920 Peerless was kept busy recording as free lances for every record company in the United States, excepting Edison and Brunswick, and also making periodic trips to Canada. Albert Campbell, the first tenor, recalled they scheduled recording "dates" in morning, afternoon, and night shifts in order to make discs enough to satisfy all the companies and still take long concert tours.

Frank Croxton (center, lower left) was one of the many artists represented in the first list of Edison Blue Amberol cylinders issued in November, 1912.

It must have been a relief to the Quartet, from the standpoint of avoiding excessive work, when an agreement was reached to make records exclusively for Victor, and the concert troupe's name was changed from the Record Makers to the Eight Famous Victor Artists.

It is amusing that Burr had one odd superstition concerning the Peerless. He had no objection to photos being taken of himself, Campbell, and Meyer as a group, and old Victor supplements contain many pictures of the Sterling Trio, as the three were known. But Burr considered it bad luck for all four members of the Quartet to appear in the same picture and strenuously objected to Croxton's being added for photo purposes to the Trio.

On just one occasion he was persuaded to allow the Peerless to be photographed as an ensemble, instead of separately, but only on condition that one of the four must not be in line with the others. So Croxton was posed in the background, operating a camera, and Burr was placated—more or less.

The Quartet's exclusive Victor engagement was announced in The Voice of the Victor for December, 1920, but by that time it was not news. The Eight had been guests at the Victor jobbers' convention in Atlantic City late in June, and it was known then that negotiations were under way to place Billy Murray, Campbell, Burr, Meyer, and Croxton under contract to record only for "His Master's Voice."

I think it is generally agreed that the Peerless Quartet reached the height of its popularity and musical attainment during the six years Croxton was its "foundation." Arthur Collins was one of the finest comedians of his day, but he was not Croxton's equal as a quartet member.

For near-perfection in ensemble singing, the combination of Campbell, Burr, Meyer, and Croxton probably has never been surpassed, even though Meyer occasionally had a tendency, as Billy Murray said, "to cut in too strong."

Other members of the Eight Famous Victor Artists, during the years Croxton made cross-country tours with it, were Fred Van Eps, banjoist, who was succeeded by the greatest of saxophone virtuosos, Rudy Wiedoeft; Monroe Silver, comedian; and Frank Banta, pianist. Of this group only Van Eps and Banta are still living.

Some years ago a man who heard the Eight several times in concert recalled a time Croxton sang the Volga Boatman song. Before singing Croxton gave a spoken introduction in which he said he considered the late Feodor Chaliapin the greatest living basso and would try to sing the Boatman song as nearly as possible in Chaliapin's style. After Croxton completed his bravura rendition the man said he was convinced Croxton was as good as Chaliapin.

One of the Peerless Quartet records in which Croxton is heard to excellent advantage is the 1924 Victor of "There's Yes, Yes in Your Eyes." Ordinarily, Burr, as lead tenor, took all the solo lines, but in this number Croxton is allowed to dominate a chorus, and his resonant, sonorous tones make delightful listening.

He is also heard to splendid effect in "Where the Dreamy Wabash Flows." On an earlier Columbia record, the quartet occupied both sides of a disc singing "Hits of Days Gone By," a medley of old Harry Von Tilzer compositions. Croxton comes out strong in the last selection on side two, "Row, Row, Row."

It is worth mentioning, too, that from 1920 on Croxton was the bass of the American Quartet on Victor records. As soon as the exclusive contract was signed, the American became the same as the Peerless except that Murray was substituted for Burr.

The Eight was one of the first ensembles to make an electric recording. Immediately after the new process was developed, Burr's popular organization made double-faced 12-inch disc No. 35753, "A Miniature Concert by the Eight Popular Victor Artists." This record, issued in June, 1925, condensed their accustomed two hour concert programs to eight minutes.

Banta played "Strut, Miss Lizzie," Silver talked about his mythical friend, Cohen; the Sterling Trio sang "Love's Old Sweet Song," Burr, "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," and Murray obliged with "Casey Jones," on side one. On the second, Campbell and Burr sang "Sweet Genevieve," Wiedoeft tootled "Saxophobia," Croxton sang "Gypsy Love Song," and the Quartet, for a rousing finale, was heard in the chorus of "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" and "Massa's in de Cold, Cold Ground." It seems generally agreed that Croxton's segment is the outstanding vocal achievement.

Unfortunately, Burr's personal relations with the Quartet gradually became less harmonious than the singing, and late in 1925 he decided to replace the other three members with singers who were capable but not so well known. Campbell, Meyer, and Croxton gave way to Carl Mathieu, first tenor; Stanley Baughman, baritone; and James Stanley, bass. The first record by the new Peerless Quartet was announced in the Victor supplement for January, 1926.

Being dismissed must have been a hard blow for Albert Campbell, who had sung in the Peerless and its predecessor, the Columbia Quartet, since the early 1900's. He soon formed a fairly successful duet recording partnership with Jack Kaufman.

Meyer, after making a few records with Henry Moeller, who disguised himself for duet purposes as Henry Fairbank, returned to the New York florist shop he had owned all through his recording career. Croxton went back to teaching, church work, and his many other activities.

IV. Later Years

After his break with Burr, Croxton joined another male quartet in the late 1920's. This was a group, organized primarily for concert and radio work, which at first consisted of Charles Harrison and Redferne Hollinshead, tenors; Vernon Archibald, baritone, and Croxton, bass.

After Hollinshead gave way to Lambert Murphy, the Quartet made some fine Victor, Columbia, and Edison records. Its activities were discussed in the biographical sketches of Harrison and Murphy, already published in this department.

The depression put an end to the quartet's activities, but Croxton continued to be active in teaching and church singing. By this time two of the members of his original Frank Croxton Quartet—Agnes Kimball and Reed Miller—had died. Nevada Van Der Veer, Miller's wife, was the last survivor of the group. She died September 26, 1958.

I never corresponded with Frank Croxton and met him only once. That was on October 18, 1940, when I went with Billy Murray and two dear friends, Jimmy Martindale and Walter P. Macdonald, to a place in New York City, where some formerly popular recording artists were rehearsing a minstrel show which they hoped would be suitable for radio. Among those present I recall Gus Van, Charles Harrison, Everett Clark, Harry Donaghy, Joe White—the Silver-Masked Tenor," and Croxton.

After the rehearsal, at which I remember Murray sang "Bill Bailey" and Croxton "Massa's in de Cold, Cold Ground," I handed Croxton a photograph of himself that Billy had given me and asked him to autograph it. As the tall, florid-faced man wrote, he remarked with a sort of sadly humorous look: "It's hard to believe I ever looked that young. That's the way my son looks now!"

Croxton at that time was 62 years of age, but I thought his voice was unimpaired. I also showed him a picture of John Meyer, which I meant to have Meyer sign (he did, a few hours before I left New York) and Croxton affectionately remarked: "Well, Well, there's John Meyer, the old rogue!"

So ended my personal knowledge of Frank Croxton, whom I consider one of the most genuinely accomplished of the "popular" recording artists. Actually, he hardly belongs in the popular classification, since his recording of that type of music was restricted almost entirely to occasional duets with Burr and his work in the Peerless Quartet. When he died a little less than nine years after our meeting, the world of music lost a genuinely able, versatile, and sincere interpreter of the best in vocal art.

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Jly120821

SHEET MUSIC

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list. —Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. my3863

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. au12698

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WILL PAY CASH for cylinder reproducers of all types. Also, books and old record catalogs. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ap3253

WANTED—Old cylinder phonos, and records, also disc phonos, roller organs and music boxes. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. ap3253

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

PRICES LOWERED again on over 100 antique cylinder and flat disc phonographs and antique radios. Prices to be lowered periodically until this list is sold. These are from my private collection because I am specializing in one kind. They are all the best you can find, and at no doubt the lowest prices you'll find. Lists 25c. — Miller's, 1017 Westgate Rd., Troy, Ohio. my38501

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. jly6468

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonophone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. ap3887

Rare Phonographs: Edison, Columbia, Victors and many others. Records, horns, horn cranes, reproducers, parts and repairs. Send 25c for list. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ap8426

ATTENTION! Antique phonograph service. Cylinder and disc phonographs, records, parts. Almost everything in this line available. No lists. Please send wants. All replies answered. Include stamp in first letter. Satisfaction guaranteed. List of what I have available for stamp. — Antique Phonograph Service, c/o Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State, Brewer, Maine. my48001

FOR SALE: Phonograph made for Exposition of 1902 found in private collection. For details write: Reed & Long, c/o Gregory R. Reed, R.F.D. 4, Allentown 5, Pa. ap3004

EDISON cylinder phonographs: Standard model, Cygnet horn, No. 10, $75. Home and Standard models, $40. Amberol model 50, $30. Amberol Console model 75, $36. Complete, playing, with 10 records. Busy Bee disc phonograph, $50. Standard disc phonograph, model A, $40. Harry Lauder; Cal Stewart - "Uncle Josh" disc records, 78's, 10", $1; 12" $1.50. Wanted: Player piano rolls and cylinder records. Will trade. — W. R. Harvey, 948 14th St., Apt. E., Santa Monica, Calif. my34811

FOR SALE: Old Victrola XI. Good condition. Many good records, both popular and classical. — Hylah R. Bender, 7816 Forest Ave., Munster, Ind. my3253

Harold Jarvis

PART I

By JIM WALSH

I. Tenor's Namesake

For the past 18 years I have hoped some day to tell the life story of the late Harold Jarvis. I have wanted to do this not only because of my admiration for the eminent Middle Western tenor, but also because I felt HOBBIES readers should know of my Roanoke, Va., friend, that great and good man, Harold Jarvis Yates, who was named for the Detroit songbird.

In 1943, I left Johnson City, Tenn., where I was then editorial writer of the Press, and came to Roanoke as a staff member of the World-News. In those war days the staff was small and considerable "doubling up" was necessary, so I was soon assigned to the police beat, among a great many other things.

A detective who especially interested me was a tall, hazel-eyed, pipe-smoking gentleman, H. J. Yates. Mr. Yates had a command of English—"The gift of gab," as his crony and inveterate "needler," Detective Cecil Daniel (Friday) Webster, termed it—and an intellectually whimsical sense of humor that delighted me. I soon came to think of him as—what I still consider him although we meet rarely nowadays—one of my best friends.

One afternoon, "Friday" Webster facetiously addressed Detective Yates as "Harold Jarvis." That caused me to remark: "Why, that's funny! Did you know there used to be a famous tenor named Harold Jarvis?"

"Heck yeah, I knowed it!" Mr. Yates returned, with grammatical exactitude. "An aunt of mine married a kinfolk of his, and she tagged me after the guy!"

He beamed complacently, ignoring Webster's comment: "If that character could sing you sure don't take after him!"

This was indeed surprising news. I inquired into the circumstances of how the aunt persuaded Mr. Yates' parents to name him after a distinguished singer, and he related the circumstances to the best of his memory.

A few days ago, with this article in mind, I called up H. J. and asked him to restate the facts. He did, and he also had me call his sister, Mrs. Dorothy Jones, whose recollection, he said, would be more accurate than his.

Between the sister and brother, I learned their parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Henry Yates, were originally from Saginaw, Mich., where Mr. Yates was in the lumber business. In the early 1900's they came to the South, and lived at Johnson City, and in Bland county, Va., where Harold Jarvis Yates was born, before they moved to Roanoke.

Mrs. Yates had been a Davidson. Her sister, Sadie Davidson, who remained in Michigan, married Leon (usually known as Len) Jarvis—and Leon was an uncle of Harold Jarvis, the tenor. "Aunt Sadie," and "Uncle Len," who was in the building supply business, often visited the Yates family, and were on hand when the Yates baby son arrived. There was a discussion as to what he should be named. Father Yates said he'd like for him to have the same name as his own father—Henry James Yates—or at least the same initials.

Then Aunt Sadie, a strong admirer of her husband's handsome and gifted nephew, who lived in Detroit, spoke up. "Why don't you name him Harold Jarvis Yates?" she asked. "You'd still be keeping the initials, H. J., and maybe he'll grow up to be a famous singer like Harold Jarvis."

The suggestion found favor. Harold Jarvis Yates the infant became, and it is a name on which he has cast individual radiance. While he has not become the talented tenor for whom Aunt Sadie hoped, during his years as a detective he induced many a law violator to "sing."

Sadie and Len visited their Roanoke relations regularly for many years. My friend says one of his earliest recollections is of meeting Santa Claus, whom he later had reason to believe was "Uncle Len" in disguise.

The Michigan couple had no children of their own, but Len had a son by a former marriage. After the son's death, he and his Sadie adopted Len's granddaughter, Alice.

Len survived his nephew, Harold Jarvis, by two years, dying in 1926. Aunt Sadie is also dead. Harold Jarvis never visited Roanoke, and Mr. Yates never saw the celebrity whose name he bears.

And that is the story of how my Roanoke friend, who quit detective work well over a decade ago to become, like "Friday" Webster, a valued investigator for Associated Transport, came to be named Harold Jarvis Yates. We are not quite done with him, however.

Conducted by
JIM WALSH

Before proceeding to consider the life and recordings of Harold Jarvis, I must give myself the pleasure of publishing here, for the benefit of future generations, a poem I wrote some 15 years ago, in which I paid tribute to the remarkable qualities of Harold Jarvis Yates.

II. "Lines in Praise of a Great and Good Man"

I am proud of that poem. Whenever I despondently suspect my life has been in vain and I have written Nothing That Will Live, I console myself by re-reading the painstakingly wrought effusions which I termed "Lines in Praise of a Great and Good Man." The more I observed Mr. Yates the more I was impressed by his almost superhuman strength of character, and the more I longed to lay my meed of praise at his amply proportioned feet.

At last I succeeded. I realize, of course—and this is an opinion in which Harold Jarvis Yates, with a modest, but well grounded knowledge of his own virtues, wholeheartedly concurs—that no poem could do absolute justice to his manifold merits.

But it is my considered belief that, for subtlety, unflinching reality, and sympathetic portrayal of a great man's character, there is no other ode in the English language to equal it. Mr. Yates himself says that although it does not do him entire justice it starts in where Shakespeare leaves off.

Among many other felicities, I hope you will note the superlative ingenuity by which the reader is permitted to substitute "chest" or "vest," if he prefers, for "breast" in the second stanza. But I must confess, to be perfectly honest, that although Mr. Yates highly approves of the poem as a whole, there are two expressions in the third stanza which he deprecates.

Those regrettable lines must be attributed to other members of the Detective Bureau—and especially "Friday" Webster. They, no doubt, were somewhat jealous of the poetic tribute which Mr. Yates had received. They accused me of taking indecent liberties with the truth and insisted on changes being made. They even threatened to refuse me further news if I didn't make them. In order to remain a productive reporter, I had to do violence to my artistic integrity.

I had written "never with rum his thirst he sates, but gladly for cold water waits." "Friday" insisted on this becoming, "ever with rum his thirst he sates, and never for cold water waits." When I flatly refused to make that change, we compromised, after some bickering, on "seldom with rum—."

I had also written, "the truth he durn nigh always states." Mr. Webster objected even more strongly to this, and demanded that it become, "the truth he almost never states" or "the truth he hardly ever states."

Once more I declined, even though warned the Detective Bureau might be declared out of bounds for me. "Friday" next suggested, "the truth he with reluctance states," but I wouldn't have that, either. Finally, we agreed to substitute, "the truth he on occasion states."

It is those changes which Mr. Yates feels do violence to the overall concept of him as a noble, heroic character. But here, with all its merits (too numerous to mention) and its defects (precious few) is my poem in praise of that great and good man, who has even more merits and fewer faults than the work of art:

"Thrice blessed of the shining Fates
Is he yeleft H. Jarvis Yates!
He holdeth friendly tete-a-tetes
With gentlemen who burgle freights,
And ladies who hacksaw their mates
Confide to him their better traits,
The while he strokes their lovely pates
And fingerprints perpetuates.
Shy damsels snatched from hotel dates
Sob on the breast (*) of Harold Yates.
Neighbors' quarrels he arbitrates
And fussy females he placates,
But sin he manfully berates,
Envisioning the Pearly Gates;
Aught that's depraved he staunchly hates,
(So surely pure is Jarvis Yates!)
Seldom with rum his thirst he sates,
But gladly for cold water waits;
The truth he on occasion states.
Brawls he rarely originates—
A fact that clearly indicates
No vulgar rows he tolerates.
In Fame's fair Hall he richly rates—
Our Harold (H. J.) Jarvis Yates!
(* Or chest, or vest, if you prefer.)

And now, with this amiable horse-play disposed of, we may proceed to a serious consideration of the life and achievements of Detroit's favorite tenor, Harold Jarvis.

III. Death Certificate

Harold Jarvis' death certificate, which the Detroit Department of Health sent me, proved disappointing. I was surprised to find Jarvis' wife, whose maiden name was Marie Judson (his second wife), didn't know the date of his birth. His age was given as "about 59," and his home as 702 Glynn Court. His occupation was set down as "artist."

Jarvis was born in Toronto, Canada, which no doubt partly accounts for his popularity in Canada and for his recording the national Canadian anthem, "O Canada!" His father's name is given as George Jarvis, and he was born, the certificate says, somewhere in England. His mother's maiden name was said to be unknown, but she, too, was believed of English birth.

Dr. G. P. Cooley's report said he had treated Jarvis from 1921 until his death on March 31, 1924, for edema of the lungs and aortic obstruction, which I interpret to mean a combination of dropsy and a heart ailment. Burial took place in Woodlawn Cemetery on April 3. There was no mention of any children.

Harold Jarvis, Detroit church and concert tenor, well established before the 20th century.

Since the certificate reached me, I have had a windfall of further Jarvis information from Kurtz Myers, chief of the Music and Drama Department of the Detroit Public Library. Mr. Myers sent photostatic copies of virtually everything concerning Harold Jarvis in the Library's files, and graciously assured me: "We certainly wish to be helpful in the preparation of your article about one of Detroit's few musical celebrities."

He surely has been. In fact, I can't think of any time when any other person or institution has been more helpful! From the newspaper clippings and other material enclosed in Mr. Myers' bulky envelope I can give much information I did not previously have. In fact, I am almost swamped, but gratefully so, by the wealth of Jarvisiana which has descended upon me!

IV. Considered for Light Opera

Before me is a newspaper story which reveals that, well before the 20th century, Harold Jarvis was established in the Detroit area as a church and concert tenor of exceptional ability. On January 3, 1899, a Detroit newspaper published a long news story saying the manager of the Alice Nielsen Opera Company was thinking of engaging Jarvis, to give the Company a tenor of the artistic stature of its famous basso, Eugene Cowles. Here is a condensed version of what appeared under the heading, "Jarvis May Join a Great Opera Company:

"Manager Frank L. Perley, of the Nielsen Opera Co., has ambitious plans for that organization for next season, and one of them is to secure Detroit's tenor, Harold Jarvis, as a member of the company.

"Mr. Perley had heard Mr. Jarvis spoken of as one of the leading tenors of the country, and when he came to Detroit last week made overtures to get his name to a contract. Mr. Jarvis receives many offers of this kind and has persistently refused to be tempted from his present pleasant and remunerative work, but after witnessing a performance of 'The Fortune Teller,' he said that was the first light opera organization he had seen that he would consent to become a member of. He made an appointment with Mr. Perley to sing for him at the Hotel Cadillac yesterday, but was unable to do so on account of the illness of Arthur Depew, his accompanist. Mr. Perley will, however, be given an opportunity to hear his voice next week in Chicago, during the engagement of 'The Fortune Teller' in that city.

"I am going to make the Nielsen Company the leading light opera organization in this country," said Mr. Perley yesterday, "and am on the lookout for a tenor who will equal Mr. Cowles as a basso. If all I have heard of Mr. Jarvis' singing is true he will fill the bill."

I wonder what happened. So far as I know, Jarvis didn't join the "Fortune Teller" company or any other light opera ensemble. Probably he decided he preferred to stay amid the congenial surroundings of Detroit, where he was a local celebrity with great personal popularity.

Although the death certificate mentioned no children, Harold Jarvis was already a father when he was considering light opera status. The Detroit News-Tribune for January 1, 1899, contained a photograph of a baby boy, with a cut line, "Rulers of Our Homes." Beneath the cut line appeared the following:

"Harold Jarvis, Jr., whose wise little face looks out from this picture, is the handsome son of Harold Jarvis, the well-known and popular singer of Detroit. The face of little Harold shows not only beauty, but intelligence, and there is a dreamy expression in his large dark eyes, quite unusual in so young a child. The portrait was reproduced in half-tone from a photo taken by James Arthur."

Unfortunately, little Harold, Jr. (the first of two boys to bear that name) did not have a long life. His story ended tragically. He gave great promise, as he grew up, of becoming an accomplished pianist.

While he was still a boy, in 1910, his mother took him to Leipzig, Germany, to study. On the ship going over he suffered a fall which caused his death after he arrived in Leipzig. A sequel to this sad occurrence was published in the Detroit Free Press for September 11, 1913:

"Mrs. Harold Jarvis, wife of the well-known Detroit tenor, died Wednesday noon at the family residence, 39 Atkinson avenue.

"Grief and worry over the death of her only child, Harold Reginald Jarvis, who died in Germany three years ago last June, caused Mrs. Jarvis to fall ill about a year and a half ago. She never recovered her health, and her condition was such that her death Wednesday was not unexpected by her husband and other relatives.

"Mrs. Jarvis, the daughter of Dr. W. H. Gelkie, late dean of Trinity Medical College, Toronto, married Mr. Jarvis in Toronto 21 years ago. Other surviving members of her family, in addition to her husband, are two brothers, Dr. W. W. Gelkie, of Elmira, Ontario, Dr. W. W. Gelkie, of Toronto, and a sister, Miss Ethel Gelkie, of Toronto."

A newspaper story published after Jarvis' death said Mrs. Jarvis, whose maiden name was Laura Gelkie, was an accomplished singer. The loss of both his son and wife was described as "a crushing blow" to the tenor,

"and it is believed to have had much to do with the tender expression always apparent when Mr. Jarvis sang at the burial of friends."

V. Recital Reviews

Despite his bereavement, Jarvis continued active in church and concert work. In 1914, for instance, he sang twice within a few weeks at recitals in Buffalo, N. Y. The reviews which he received then may be considered typical of those throughout his career. Concerning his recital on January 21, 1914, given less than four months after Mrs. Jarvis' death, the Buffalo Inquirer said:

"Harold Jarvis, of Detroit, the distinguished concert and oratorio tenor, was the leading attraction at the delightful musical concert held yesterday afternoon in the piano salon of the J. N. Adam Company. . . and attended by nearly 1,500 people. Mr. Jarvis won instant favor with his listeners and through his various songs scored the same brilliant success that he won at his former appearance in this city as a soloist several years ago."

On February 25, the Inquirer reported:

"The handsome piano salon of the J. N. Adam Company was crowded yesterday afternoon to hear Harold Jarvis, the noted Scotch tenor of Detroit, in a return engagement, his recital several weeks ago having been so successful as to bring many requests to hear him again. Mr. Jarvis is one of the most popular concert artists before the public. He has a tenor voice of robust quality, full of color, while his ingratiating stage presence at once puts him on agreeable terms with his audience."

"Mr. Jarvis substituted for the first number on his program a beautiful musical setting of Tennyson's 'Crossing the Bar,' which he sang with exquisite feeling for both the text and music. The Scotch ballad, 'Mary of Argyle,' won such applause that the singer sang as an extra number, 'The Battle Hymn of the Republic,' in which he asked the audience to join in the chorus. Mr. Jarvis sang the stirring music of this song with superb declamatory style."

"Another hit was 'The Irish Courtship,' which Mr. Jarvis sang with inimitable effect, and, being recalled, asked the audience which of two songs those present preferred to hear him sing - 'A Perfect Day,' by Carrie Jacobs Bond, or 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere.' 'Both' was the response, so with customary good nature Mr. Jarvis sang both with splendid vocalization."

Probably few of those who saw the tenor accede graciously and smilingly to requests had any conception of the grief with which he was struggling.

(To be continued)

SHEET MUSIC

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell, trade. Send 10c stamps for big list. —Dean Snyder, 102 S. Main, Los Angeles 12, Calif. my3863

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 6, Colo. au12698

MELODEONS FOR SALE

BEAUTIFUL RESTORED instruments. Also buy and repair; reasonable. — C. Lamper, C-Sharp Hobby Shop, 1365 Bristol, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich. jly120821

GLENN P. HECKERT, Massillon, Ohio.

Mr. Heckert recently retired from his clock and jewelry business in Massillon. But he set up a basement shop at his home, and confesses that in his retirement he seems "busier than ever."

Many readers of HOBBIES know him also as a music box enthusiast. He is an expert on the mechanism of the old music box, and wrote the 32-page chapter on "Repairing the Music Box," for the book, "The Curious History of Music Boxes," published by the Lightner Publishing Corp.

He is one of the guiding spirits in the Music Box Society, which numbers an exclusive membership all over the country.

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WILL PAY CASH for cylinder reproducers of all types. Also, books and old record catalogs. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ap3253

WANTED—Old cylinder phonos, and records, also disc phonos, roller organs and music boxes. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. ap3253

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, old disc phonographs with outside horns. Old record catalogs, books. $7 and up for cylinder reproducers (part that holds the needle). — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly3694

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

PRICES LOWERED again on over 100 antique cylinder and flat disc phonographs and antique radios. Prices to be lowered periodically until this list is sold. These are from my private collection because I am specializing in one kind. They are all the best you can find, and at no doubt the lowest prices you'll find. Lists 25c. — Miller's, 1017 Westgate Rd., Troy, Ohio. my36501

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. jly6468

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonophone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. jly3867

Rare Phonographs: Edison, Columbia, Victors and many others. Records, horns, horn cranes, reproducers, parts and repairs. Send 25c for list. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ap3426

ATTENTION! Antique phonograph service. Cylinder and disc phonographs, records, parts. Almost everything in this line available. No lists. Please send wants. All replies answered. Include stamp in first letter. Satisfaction guaranteed. List of what I have available for stamp. — Antique Phonograph Service, c/o Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State, Brewer, Maine. my48001

EDISON cylinder phonographs: Standard model, Cygnet horn, No. 10, $75. Home and Standard models, $40. Amberol model 50, $30. Amberol Console model 75, $35. Complete, playing, with 10 records. Busy Bee disc phonograph, $50. Standard disc phonograph, model A, $40. Harry Lauder; Cal Stewart - "Uncle Josh" disc records, 78's, 10", $1; 12" $1.50. Wanted: Player piano rolls and cylinder records. Will trade. — W. R. Harvey, 948 14th St., Apt. E., Santa Monica, Calif. my34811

FOR SALE: Old Victrola XI. Good condition. Many good records, both popular and classical. — Hylah R. Bender, 7816 Forest Ave., Munster, Ind. my3263

AUTOPHONE (mahogany). 46" high carrying 12 Blue Amberol cylinders playing one after the other continuously. Write: Benj. Franklin, Sr., Haynesville, Va. je3633

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 75c each.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. ap120821

FAVORITE Pioneer Recording ARTISTS

Conducted by
JIM WALSH

Harold Jarvis

PART II

By JIM WALSH

I. Jarvis Records for Victor

Harold Jarvis had a rather late start as a recording artist. He must have been about 43 when he made his first appearance in the Victor studio. And he never became a professional recording artist—that is, one whose principal occupation was record making and who sang in public only as a sideline. Instead, recording remained subordinate to his high standing as a concert singer.

I have been able to trace a total of only 18 record sides by Jarvis, 12 for Victor, four for Columbia, and two Edison Blue Amberol cylinders. Most of his records had comparatively small sales, and his rating as a favorite pioneer recording artist today is based on the popularity of just one Victor disc.

Victor's issuing exactly 12 numbers from Jarvis' repertoire makes it appear plausible that the records, all issued within three months, were sung during one engagement occupying him only a few days. Probably he accepted an offer to make a dozen records and was never called on for repeat performances.

An examination of Jarvis' titles reveals that most were ill chosen for wide popularity. They were the sort of thing that an English "drawing room tenor" might have selected in Charles Dickens' day when called on to give a command performance at Windsor Castle before Queen Victoria, but they had little interest for American record buyers of the early 1900's. If he had chosen material less dated and of more popular appeal, his career as a Victor artist might have been extended.

The first two Jarvis records were announced in August, 1908. They both had a Scotch flavor—5486, "March of the Cameron Men," and 5487, "My Ain Countrie." The catalog editor said: "It is with pleasure that Victor offers two solos by this favorite tenor. In the cities of Canada and the Middle West, Mr. Jarvis is a great favorite, and we predict that he will make new admirers by his spirited rendering of the favorite Scotch battle hymn."

In view of Jarvis' fondness for old Scotch songs, I wonder if his parents were born in Scotland instead of England.

In October, the tenor had a 12-inch record, 31706, of "The Death of Nelson," commemorating the great English naval commander's victory and death at Trafalgar. About the same time his 10-inch record, 5517, of the Canadian national hymn, "O Canada!" was issued.

The 1910 Victor catalog explained American dealers were not required to handle this record but could obtain it on special order. It was one of "a special series of records which are not usually carried in stock by dealers because they are of interest

WELL-KNOWN DETROITER.

HAROLD JARVIS.
The Tenor.

Harold Jarvis, Detroit tenor church and concert singer, during the days of his record making.

—From small photo in record catalog.

only to certain classes of people—religious communities, societies, and persons in certain sections of the country. Many novelties will be added to this list in the future. Any of these special records will be promptly ordered by your dealer on request."

An interesting description of "The Death of Nelson" was given in the supplement:

"This famous song was composed by John Braham about 1810, and formed part of the comic opera, "The Americans," produced at the Lyceum Theater, London, in 1811. The stirring patriotism of the number insured its success at once; but it has, besides, unusual dramatic qualities—such as its effective commencement in recitative—

"O'er Nelson's tomb, with silent grief oppress, Britannia mourns her hero, now at rest,"

"and the refrain, quoting the immortal words of the great commander, which are most impressive passages in a noble song. Curiously enough, however, Braham not only appropriated bodily the beginning of Mehul's Chant du depart (1794), but also the first and last lines of Norris' glee commemorating the death of Cumberland, in 1765, without giving credit to either author or composer.

"This number is one of the most successful in Mr. Jarvis' repertoire, and he delivers it most dramatically."

No doubt Jarvis sang the song effectively. But what was supposed to be the attraction of this 100-year ballad for American record buyers, especially when it was single-faced and cost a dollar in the hard cash of 1908?

II. For Dickens Lovers

I have never seen or heard the record, but it has a certain appeal to me as a Dickens lover. Perhaps you remember how, in the famous chapter of "David Copperfield," when David runs away from London trying to find his aunt Betsey at Dover, he sells his jacket to a crazy old storekeeper. He has to wait hours for his money, while the old man lies in bed and yells, "in a frantic way, to his own windy tune, 'The Death of Nelson,' with an Oh! before every line and innumerable Go-ros interspersed."

Probably you remember, too, how Mr. Micawber sardonically commented on Nelson's statement, "England expects every man to do his duty," by saying: "If England expects every man to do his duty it is the most sanguine country on the face of the earth and will find itself continually disappointed."

One of the oddest records in my collection is an 8-inch Broadcast, made in Australia on which Keith Desmond, a comedian, gives an impersonation of a London Cockney reciting "The Death of Nelson." To the right listener it might be funny.

Two more single-faced Jarvis records were issued: 5526, "Guard While I Sleep," and 31714, "The Ninety and Nine"—both religious. The former was described as, "A favorite hymn which is an especial favorite in the Middle West. Mr. Jarvis sings it reverently, with a most distinct enunciation of the words."

The 1909 record catalog describes "My Ain Countrie" as "a beautiful old hymn, which was always a favorite in the Moody and Sankey meetings."

The catalog also contains a small photo of Harold Jarvis. It reveals him as having dark hair parted in the middle, and a black mustache curling downward. Later catalogs carried a better picture, but one which left no doubt the tenor probably was stout and certainly was not a "bleached blonde."

III. Double-Faced Victor Records

On October 20, 1908, in order to meet cut-throat competition from Columbia, Victor angrily issued its first group of double-faced records. Apparently all the remaining Jarvis recordings were included in this list. On 16006 he sang another Scotch song, "The Standard o' the Braes o' Mar," combined with a "nautical ballad," "The White Squall," by Alan Turner, an English baritone. 16007 contained the Jarvis version of "Jesus, I Am Resting," while another tenor, Frederic C. Freeman, occupied the B side with "My Jesus, I Love Thee."

The third 12-inch double-faced Victor, 35002, had Jarvis singing "Come Into the Garden, Maud," a musical setting by Michael W. Balfe of Tennyson's poem, while Turner did the Prolog from "Pagliacci." Jarvis' only double-faced Victor with both sides by himself was 16033, on which he sang "The Bay of Biscay," an English sea song now more than 150 years old, and a slightly more modern Scotch ballad, "Mary of Argyle." All these double-faced records were dropped into the catalog without comment.

Once more I find, however, something of Dickens interest. That author was familiar, of course, with "Come Into the Garden, Maud," and probably knew "Mary of Argyle." "The Bay of Biscay" is mentioned in his novels more than once.

Who can forget the scene in Dickens' first complete novel, the ever-green "Pickwick Papers," when Bob Sawyer, the medical student, gave a party at his Lant street lodgings, and Jack Hopkins obliged with "The King, God Bless Him?" This "he sang as loud as he could, to a novel air compounded of 'The Bay of Biscay' and 'A Frog He Would.' The chorus was the essence of the song, and as each gentleman sang it to the tune he knew best the effect was very striking indeed."

And in "Dombey and Son," when the simple, warm-hearted Captain Cuttle is telling his friend, Jack Bunsby, that he fears young Walter Gay has been drowned, he sorrowfully paraphrases the song by saying: "There he lays, all his days—"

"Mr. Bunsby, who had a musical ear, suddenly bellowed, 'In the Bay of Biscay, O!' which so affected the good Captain, as an appropriate tribute to departed worth, that he shook him by the hand."

I found a copy of Jarvis' "Bay of Biscay" record in the City Drug Store at Marion, Va., many years after it had been cut from the catalog, and can testify that it is a splendid performance. In the days when it was recorded Victor singers supposedly were under instructions to adopt a restrained approach and to draw back from the horn in taking a high note, but Jarvis is not "under wraps." He fairly shouts, "A sail, a sail, sa-a-a-ill!" and finishes with a ringing high note. "Mary of Argyle" is sung expressively, with delicacy and restraint.

IV. "Beautiful Isle"

I have saved for final mention among Jarvis' Victor records the most important of all, 16008. He sings the song most intimately identified with him, "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," with the Hayden Quartet, doing an Easter hymn, "Christ Arose," as its mating. Today, whenever anyone thinks of a Harold Jarvis record it is almost certain to be "Beautiful Isle."

Until just before the advent of electric recording, it was one of the most consistent sellers in the Victor catalog and always led Victor's annual list of suitable Easter music. Probably it outsold any other record in that first Victor double-faced list, although some, such as 16029, "Hearts and Flowers," 16046, "The Rosary," and 16092, "St. Louis Tickle," would have given it a good run. Jarvis sings the familiar hymn beautifully, but it sounds to me as if he makes a strange mistake. Unless my ears trick me, instead of singing "God lives and all is well," he says, "God lives and all is still."

I wish I could estimate the emotional impact Jarvis' interpretation of this song had upon innumerable listeners during the 15 years it stayed in the Victor catalog. And I hope the tenor knew of an incident which was reported under the title of "A Victor in the Wilderness," in The Voice of the Victor for July, 1916. A man named Neel Greene wrote of meeting La Fonde, a French cobbler, in the North woods of Canada. Visiting La Fonde's cabin, he and his companion asked, "What do you do to keep from going mad up here alone?" The article continues:

"He pointed to a corner of the room, and there stood a talking machine, a small one and a very prehistoric model, but still a talking machine.

"I will play it for you," he said, and straightway there sounded a familiar strain, 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere,' at two o'clock in the cold Northern dawn in a little cabin in the North woods. . . .

"That is my religion, my God and my church," said La Fonde. "That has made it possible for me to live and be contented."

"When we said good-night and started down the road to the hotel we were still silent."

"When they made that record," Jim said finally, "they didn't realize that it was growing up to be a missionary, did they?"

The article ended with "EDITOR'S NOTE.—This really happened as it is told. The record mentioned was that made by Harold Jarvis."

Jarvis himself singled out that record in a testimonial he wrote in 1918 or 1919, after his recording career had ended, praising the Brunswick phonograph:

"The tone of the Brunswick was a revelation to me. Vocal records particularly have a sweet, full richness of sound, with a very vibrancy of life. I was of course specially interested in the productions of my own records. I have never heard them played as lifelike on any other instrument. In the 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere' the Brunswick brings out shadings that I never knew was possible on a reproducing instrument."

The Brunswick folder referred to Jarvis as "a distinguished performer for one of the prominent record makers."

If Jarvis had met La Fonde and received his thanks, his emotions probably would have been like those of Arthur Collins, related in the Edison Amberola Monthly for January-February, 1920:

"Last November, Collins and Byron G. Harlan were in Effingham, Kans., for a few days, and while there visited the store of Carl Latenser, the Edison dealer. . . .

"Sitting hunched up in a wheel chair was an old man, hopelessly crippled. He had never been able to walk. Two young farmers who lived nearby had agreed to bring him into town just so he could see Collins and Harlan. . . . He gripped Mr. Collins by the hand and said, 'You have brought sunshine into my life for many years. I consider it a rare privilege to be able to see and hear you in person and I want to shake hands with you.'

"Mr. Collins gripped his hand while tears came into his eyes and a lump rose in his throat so that he could scarcely speak. He said afterwards he considered it the highest compliment he had ever had paid him."

What greater tribute could any artist want than the one the isolated cobbler paid to Jarvis' record, or that the crippled man bestowed upon Arthur Collins?

It seems strange no more Victor records were ever issued by Harold Jarvis. Most of the 12 disappeared from the catalog in a few years. By November, 1910, "March of the Cameron Men" and "The Ninety and Nine" were gone. (The latter had succumbed to strong competition from versions by two other tenors, Richard Jose and Freeman-tel.)

Six months later, "The Death of Nelson" and "Guard While I Sleep" were missing, leaving "O Canada" as the only single-faced Jarvis disc. In November, 1913, "O Canada" also was dismissed (though perhaps it was retained by Victor's Canadian affiliate) so was "The Standard o' the Braes o' Mar" and—strangely, for a standard hymn tune record usually sold consistently and was seldom cut out—"Jesus, I Am Resting" also went.

This left only "The Bay of Biscay" and "Mary of Argyle" combination, which stayed on through 1919, and "Beautiful Isle." That perennial favorite remained until 1923, but in that year Victor had it re-made by the most popular ballad singer of the day, Henry Burr.

The Shannon Quarter remade the Haydn's version of "Christ Arose." So in 1924, the year he died, Harold Jarvis' name passed forever from the Victor catalog. "Beautiful Isle" and "Christ Arose" were remade electrically by Burr and the Shannons, respectively, late in 1925, and given the number of 19883.

Yet an odd thing happened in 1927 when Victor issued a special catalog of "Records of Historical and Personal Interest." These were acoustically recorded discs for which Victor said there had been so much public clamor it was necessary to reinstate them. No. 16008 was listed, but with Jarvis' version of "Beautiful Isle" instead of Burr's remake. "Christ Arose" remained by the Shannon Quartet instead of the Haydens. Another oddity, Burt Shepard's 12-inch record of "The Robin," which had been cut out in 1907 was again offered. So were all the long deleted yodel records of Al H. Wilson. Many of Billy Murray's old numbers were picked up, but his most popular record, "Casey Jones," was omitted.

V. Columbia and Edison Records

Harold Jarvis reappeared as a recording artist in 1912, making two double-faced discs for Victor's arch rival, Columbia. The first appeared in May, as A1121, and combined "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," with an obscure coupling, "What is Heaven?" For some reason, this Columbia record, which I have never seen or heard, did not catch on and was discontinued in December, 1916. It must have given little competition to Victor 16008.

The second Columbia record by Jarvis, A1122, was issued in October, 1912. It combined a setting of another Tennyson poem, "Crossing the Bar," with "Oh, It Is Wonderful." Seemingly this, too, should have sold well, but it was cut out in the 1918 catalog.

The October, 1912, Columbia supplement contained a small photo of Jarvis, still with his mustache but looking as if he had lost a quantity of hair since the Victor picture was made. There was this comment:

"Another record by Harold Jarvis, the well known Detroit tenor. Mr. Jarvis sings this time two well-known sacred numbers with an interpretative command that years of familiarity have brought him. To Alfred Behrend's beautiful setting of Tennyson's last poem Mr. Jarvis brings a sympathy and understanding that wins everyone who hears it rendered by him. 'Oh, It Is Wonderful,' a simple, devotional hymn, is treated with the same sincerity and earnestness as others that have made so much for Mr. Jarvis' success."

Jarvis' only two Edison Blue Amberol cylinders were announced in the Edison Phonograph Monthly for March, 1914, with his first name misspelled as Harrold:

"Harrold Jarvis possesses a tenor voice that shows much careful training. He makes his debut this month with two songs: 2284, 'Scots, Wha Ha'e wi' Wallace Bled' and 2281, 'The Gift,' both so artist-ically rendered that we long to hear him sing again and again."

I have not heard the "Scot" song, which should have made some appeal to Edison owners of Scottish descent, but I have "The Gift," another number written by Behrend. It is a quasi-lullaby and a poor song, so dull and devoid of interest it's hard to understand why either Jarvis or Edison officials chose it for recording. Probably both cylinders—seemingly the last records Jarvis ever made—had a disappointing sale.

Mr. Jarvis continued active in church and concert work for several years both before and after he ceased to make records.

(To be continued)

ANGEL RECORDS

(Continued from page 33)

top authorities in their respective fields appear in glittering assemblage, each a golden particle of the priceless weave that is the history of Carnegie Hall.

Walter Damrosch and Tchaikowsky, on May 5, 1891, officially opened the Music Hall, as the edifice was then called. But it was actually an obscure pianist Franz Rummel, who gave the first recital there, on April 1, in the basement lyceum hall, while construction was still in progress. Thus his Beethoven was punctuated by the hammering noises coming from the main hall.

In its pre-inaugural days, two other pianists of more lasting fame—Arthur Friedheim and Leopold Godowsky—helped initiate the new building with their concerts.

Then, on the appointed date, amidst pomp and fanfare, the revered Peter Ilyitch Tchaikowsky figuratively broke the champagne bottle when he launched the now hallowed auditorium upon its historic course. In the process, he took the New York musical and social circles by storm.

Scores of world celebrities strove to do their best for the critical human mass across the footlights of this American concert Maximus. And many, at the onset of their careers, found its prestige an advantageous stepping stone in their climb to success.

Of the singers we know on records, Patti, Melba, Sembrich, Nordica, Garden, McCormack, Gigli, Schipa, Kiepura, to mention but a few at random, all were anxious to try out their voices on the splendid acoustics and discriminating audiences of Carnegie Hall.

While the book is studded with awesome music personalities, exponents of the dance, literature, politics, and so on, are also given wide prominence on its 438 pages.

Tastefully illustrated, wittily written, with deep understanding of the subject from its embryonic stage to the present day, "The World of Carnegie Hall" is not only an important compilation of historical data but an engrossing tale overflowing with human interest as well.

As the note on the books' jacket rightfully states, it is "The rich and resonant history of one of America's most famous landmarks."

A.F.-A.

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, old disc phonographs with outside horns. Old record catalogs, books, $7 and up for cylinder reproducers (part that holds the needle). — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly3664

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. jly6468

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flow-ered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonaphone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. jly3367

FOR SALE: Phonograph made for Exposition of 1902 found in private collection. For details write:—Reed & Long, c/o Gregory R. Reed, R.F.D. 4, Allentown 5, Pa. au3064

ATTENTION! Antique cylinder & disc phonographs bought, sold, repaired. Repairs done on all makes & models, parts replaced, reproducers bought, sold repaired. I will buy anything in this line. Large list of what I have for sale for stamp. Many rare and hard to find machines in stock. Almost everything in this line available. All machines and parts are perfect. No Junk. — Antique Phonograph Service, c/o Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State St., Tel. 2-4985, Brewer, Maine. au38611

CYLINDER PHONO with 50 cylinder records. Good condition. Best offer buys it complete. Write to—Christian League for the Handicapped, Box 364, Walworth, Wisconsin. jel291

AUTOPHONE (mahogany), 46" high carrying 12 Blue Amberol cylinders playing one after the other continuously. Write: Benj. Franklin, Sr., Haynesville, Va. je3633

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 75c each.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. ap120821

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3161 High, Denver 5, Colo. au12698

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

REPRODUCER REPAIRING of all kinds. Have a supply of the original Edison Styluses and can install them in your reproducers. Send stamp for brochure on reproducers. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly3825

HARRY BELLEFONTE material: records, pictures, articles, paper music, whatever you have. All letters answered. Request this material pertain to the time before he hit fame. — Mary Belle Smith, 2717 Hampshire Blvd., Huntington Beach, Calif. je3884

FAVORITE Pioneer Recording ARTISTS

Conducted by
JIM WALSH

Harold Jarvis

By JIM WALSH

Part III

I. Death of Harold Jarvis

On April 1, 1924, the Detroit News published a long news story telling of the death of Harold Jarvis and revealing the esteem and affection in which the tenor was held by the people of his adopted city. It is too long for complete quotation, but I shall use the greater part:

"Harold Jarvis has gone to the 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere.'

"Detroit's most beloved singer, whose golden voice for more than a generation has soothed the grief-stricken and bereaved, died last night after an illness of more than 10 weeks. The famous tenor had long suffered from a heart affliction.

"Harold Jarvis came here as the tenor soloist for the First Presbyterian Church. That was in 1891, and the lithe, powerful figure with its easy grace and wonderfully strong, clear voice had been ever since a Detroit institution. His hold on the people never waned. A few years ago, on a Board of Commerce excursion, the big boat ran into a fog and many were nervous. To quiet the crowd Mr. Jarvis sang to them almost the whole night through.

"A crippled girl living in Windsor, whose infirmity made it impossible for her to leave her home, often expressed a longing to hear Jarvis sing. A friend told Mr. Jarvis of the girl's longing, and the singer, taking an accompanist with him, visited her home and spent nearly the whole afternoon singing her favorite selections.

"Mr. Jarvis was a singer from childhood. He was born in Toronto 59 years ago, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jarvis. (The death certificate said George Jarvis.—J.W.) His mother was a famous Canadian singer, Annie — (the last word is illegible.) Little Harold, in Highland costume, was a favorite in Scotch songs before he could more than lisp, and when he entered his teens it became known he was a singer of promise.

"When he was 14, he went into the Merchant Marine service on the Allen Line, operating between Montreal and England. The captain of his boat chanced to be a musician, and noticing the boy's promise as a vocalist, encouraged him to continue his singing practice while at work. Mr. Jarvis advanced to first mate before relinquishing the sea life. He studied at the Royal Academy in London and received offers which meant an opera career, but preferring church singing he came to Detroit, to the First Presbyterian Church, as tenor soloist. He had held the position until his death. He had been a teacher of singing in Detroit for many years.

"Mr. Jarvis numbered the most prominent people in Detroit and throughout the country as his friends, and was equally at home with the humblest. He frequently visited the waterfront, due to his old sailor association, and is affectionately remembered by veteran lake men.

"Mr. Jarvis sang at the reception to Gen. John J. Pershing in Detroit after the war. His selections were "My Own United States" and "The Sword of Bunker Hill." The Commander-in-Chief of the Army was enthusiastic in his praise.

"The second Mrs. Jarvis, who survives him, was Marie Judson, of Detroit. She has two sons, Murray and Harold, Jr.

"A brother, Sidney, now is singing in New York City. A sister, Mrs. William Hope, lives in Montreal, and a brother, Col. Arthur Murray Jarvis, in Victoria, B. C.

"Funeral services for Mr. Jarvis will be held in the First Presbyterian Church Thursday at 2:30 p.m. The body will be taken to the church at 10 a.m., where friends will be permitted to view it until shortly after 2. The Rev. Joseph A. Vance, pastor, is in Bristol, Tenn., recovering from his recent illness, and it is not known whether he will be able to officiate. If he cannot come, he will send a special message to be read at the service."

II. Memorial Tributes

Two thoughts occur to me after reading that death notice. As a child, looking at the photo of Jarvis in the Victor catalog, I had a feeling he was in sailor costume, and since he had gone to sea and risen to first mate I may have been right. Second, I believe the tenor's mother probably was Annie Murray before her marriage, since Jarvis had a brother whose middle name was Murray and one of his sons was given that name.

The illegible name in the clipping could easily be Murray.

No, I guessed wrong. A shorter death notice in the Detroit News gives the name as Annie McLearn.

Dr. Vance was unable to return to the funeral service, but a message from him was read by the associate pastor, the Rev. C. E. Mieras, who conducted the service:

"It is no wonder that his fame became international, that people traveled hundreds of miles through zero weather to hear him sing; that the church where he poured forth this ministry of music, alike inspiring to preachers and people, to ignorant and cultured, to sinner and saint, was known most of all as 'the church where Harold Jarvis sings.'"

The Rev. Mieras himself said:

"Harold Jarvis will be missed beyond words for his place in this church where he sang for 33 years. His last song to this congregation, 'Peace, Wonderful Peace,' was sung at the request of a dear friend. He labored at his tasks with a faithful heart and has gone to his reward."

The Free Press radio station, WCX, broadcast a memorial service.

In Windsor, Ontario, T. Stanley Perry, tenor soloist of the First Presbyterian Church, sang "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," and the pastor, the Rev. H. M. Paulin, paid a tribute in which he said:

"Mr. Jarvis sang himself into the hearts of very many in the provinces. Not only did he visit our cities and large towns, but with that fine modesty and gracious generosity which characterized him, he went to the hamlets and out-of-the-way places. There are thousands of Canadian hearts that feel a sense of loss because he has passed on."

The Detroit News obituary notice mentioned that Jarvis continued his church singing until the middle of January, 1924, when he was taken to Harper Hospital for treatment of the heart condition.

"Aunt Sadie" Jarvis, who named Harold Jarvis Yates for the famous tenor, Harold Jarvis, is shown here with Mr. Yates when he was a member of the Roanoke, Va., police department. Beside him is Will Yates Belote, youngest son of Mr. Yates' sister, Mrs. Dorothy Jones.

The Free Press said Jarvis had traveled as a concert soloist "through every state in the Union and throughout Canada the last 34 years. His phonograph records are popular all over the world, and he was particularly famous as the introducer of 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere.'"

A feeling tribute was paid the tenor by a Canadian religious publication:

"Within a short time, one of the best known and most loved singers in Detroit has passed beyond sight; and England through Canada could claim him. A sweet and genial nature found expression in simple melodies with an appeal that never failed to win an answer. It is a question whether any singer of ballads will ever be more successful than Harold Jarvis, but it is beyond question that anyone will ever sing songs of the sea with more absolute perfection. It may not be generally known that Mr. Jarvis put aside brilliant opportunities for a wider career in deference to the prejudices of some of his connections. This alone would show him to have been of no ordinary character. He was most fortunate in the loving Christian appreciation of those ministers and fellow church members with whom he was associated to the general advantage for so many years. His going seemed all too soon, but his sun went down in the beauty of loving remembrance and well won observance."

III. Harold Jarvis Memorial Fund

A man may be a great artist but a poor business man. If he sings for the joy of singing, as Harold Jarvis did, the chances are he will be imposed on financially or at least not drive a sufficiently hard bargain with those who would exploit his services.

But it must have come as a shock to many of the beloved tenor's friends and admirers to learn he had not left an estate large enough to provide for the upkeep and education of his small sons—Murray and the second Harold Jarvis, Jr., then aged four and two. Both were born when their father was far into his 50's.

So a Harold Jarvis Memorial Fund was established with Malcolm McGregor as chairman and William P. McCorkle as treasurer.

A letter signed by McGregor said: "Neither you nor I know what is ahead for these youngsters. . . except that they have their lives to live. We do know, however, that the estate Harold Jarvis left is too small to give them the care and education that he would have given them if he had had the time." The letter continued:

"If you have never thrilled to the spiritual music of Jarvis' voice, then you are the rarest of Detroiters. Perhaps you still put a record on your phonograph of an evening, and recapture that feeling which his rendering of 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere' always aroused.

"I sometimes wonder, when I think of Harold Jarvis, dead, just how to put a valuation on the good that he did in his quiet way. For every time he sang for money, there were a dozen times when he sang without return in that sense. I never knew him to refuse to sing where money was not forthcoming—in fact I don't believe that money meant to him what it means to most of us. He would sing for hours every week to the poor youngsters in an orphan asylum, just because they loved to hear him sing. As chairman of the Harold Jarvis Memorial Fund I am offering you the opportunity to do something for Harold Jarvis' children which he never hesitated to do for other children—to give a share of what you have to give. "The fund thus created will be handled by the Detroit Trust Company and will be devoted to the purpose of caring for and educating these two children.

One result of the Fund appeal was a memorial program given by a group of Jarvis' friends and professional associates in Orchestra Hall on Friday evening, June 13, 1924. The program was directed by Frank Wrigley, organist of the church in whose choir loft Harold Jarvis had sung for so many years.

The Rev. Mr. Vance, who had returned from Tennessee, spoke briefly in praise of the dead tenor, "referring to his splendid personal qualities and the inspiration which his music had given to hosts of his fellow citizens over many years." The concert closed with "Crossing the Bar," led by Wrigley, and sung by a choir composed of Jarvis' most intimate professional associates.

IV. An Old-Timer's Memories

During the 37 years since Harold Jarvis' death, George W. Stark, a veteran columnist for the Detroit News, has many times reminisced about the tenor, whose impress on the community's life was so deep and enduring. I shall compress several of these columns sent by Mr. Myers, head of the Music Department, Detroit Public Library, into one general "stream of recollections."

"As a concert soloist, the late Harold Jarvis was Detroit's most notable contribution to the song history of America. Such is the eminent opinion of Sam Slade, who sang with Jarvis for more than 20 years in the quartet at the First Presbyterian Church. In Detroit, Jarvis was little less than an idol. Today he remains a great part of our musical tradition.

"A Canadian by birth, he came of such distinguished stock that one of the principal residential streets of Toronto is named in honor of his ancestors. In that city he was a prime favorite always, but this was his adopted home and it was here that he came in for a special form of adoration. His singing of 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere' was an event that no true lover of music soon forgot. When he made a phonograph number of that song, the record sales mounted to prodigious heights.

"But Harold Jarvis was a very human man, with a deep and abiding sense of grotesque comedy. He was not above an occasional prank that would bring discomfiture to his fellow singers. Once he brought a limburger cheese into the Harold Jarvis, singing in Detroit's First Presbyterian Church.

—From the Burton Historical Collection loft of the church where he was singing and almost disrupted a solemn Sunday service. But he had his little joke and was very happy over it.

"Mr. Jarvis lived on Woodward Avenue, not far from the Bethune police station, at one time. He was very popular with the mounted police, who made their headquarters at Bethune, and he was popular with the horses, too. All during the winter months, Harold Jarvis' basement door was open (to the men, that is) and they always stopped in there about midnight to eat a delectable snack. That basement was warm and comfortable.

"When the day of a concert arrived, so did a terrific snow storm. Mr. Jarvis called the captain of Bethune on the telephone. 'Captain,' he said, 'I have an engagement to sing at a church over at West Warren and the Boulevard, and there are no street cars running. What can I do?'

"The ladies were almost ready to concede that the weather had cancelled out their concert when the singer arrived, in a horse-drawn patrol wagon. He was snug and warm and untouched by the snow. The horses were delighted to have been able to perform this little service for their friend. The ladies were delighted, too, and charmed by Harold Jarvis' songs, as were many thousands of others down through the enchanted years."

V. Finding Jarvis Records for His Son

About 13 years ago, Harold Jarvis, Jr., then a man of around 26, told Mr. Stark he would like to own some records by his father. He especially wanted to hear the elder Jarvis sing "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere." Stark published the young man's appeal and on February 18, 1948, gave this account of the response:

"Harold, Jr., was only two years old when his gifted parent died, hence had no actual memory of the voice that thrilled and comforted many thousands of Detroiters as well as music-lovers all over America. Town Talk printed Harold Jr.'s request. That was a week ago, and now Harold, Jr., has his choice of at least 50 records. They have now been turned over to Harold, Jr., his brother

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
Box 595, Tujunga, Calif.

my26p

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements.

Murray, and his mother, who dwell together in Highland Park.

"I thank all the good people who searched their basements and their attics for their musical treasure and who were willing to forego it for the sake of giving happiness to Harold Jarvis' sons. They had searched their hearts, too, and the results were good.

VI. "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere"

This survey of the life and achievements of Harold Jarvis may fitly end with another "Town Talk" column by George W. Stark:

"The years are many and the years are long since Harold Jarvis went to the Beautiful Isle of Somewhere, of which he sang so sweetly that the busy world stopped in its tracks to listen.

"Jarvis, in his fair young days, was the darling of Detroit's troubadours. Possessed of a tenor voice of singular sweetness, he had a sunny disposition to match it. On the streets of the town he was a striking figure, tall, handsome, immaculately dressed.

"As long as Belle Isle remains the playground of the people, the name of Harold Jarvis will never be dissociated from it. He was the most popular singer ever to adorn the nightly band concerts held over the grand canal on Belle Isle. When Jarvis was scheduled to sing, the crowd thronged over the old wooden bridge with its stone piers and iron structure. They poured over on the ferry boats. They clambered aboard their bicycles and rode over. It went on for years, but the populace never grew weary of him.

"Harold Jarvis and Sam Slade were members of the famous quartet that sang for years at the First Presbyterian Church. The unforgettable tenor and basso duets between Jarvis and Slade was a musical unit that endured for 21 years. On the distaff side of the famous quartet were Winifred Scripps Ellis and Emma Beyer Lewis. These four were most lavish of their exuberant musical gifts. Harold Jarvis particularly would sing for even less than his supper.

"No distinguished funeral was complete in Harold Jarvis' day unless he were there to sing 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere.' Eventually he sang the song for the phonograph records. It is impossible to estimate how many of these discs found their way into the homes of America."

So with that final mention of "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," this review of Harold Jarvis' life and recordings closes. I have no doubt he would be happy to know that at least one of his records is so well remembered and is still cherished in thousands of homes, even though it was too popular and sold too well ever to become a so-called "collector's item."

Certainly, few men have left such an unmistakable impress for good in their dwelling places as Harold Jarvis did in his adopted city of Detroit.

THE END

Money may be the husk of many things, but not the kernel. It brings you food, but not appetite; medicine, but not health; acquaintances, but not friends, servants, but not loyalty, days of joy, but not peace or happiness. —Henrik Ibsen

Egotism is the art of seeing qualities in yourself which others can't see. —Survey Bulletin

EMMA EAMES ON LP

(Continued from page 31)

commonly made out to be, but a determined young woman who sets out to find José, and Carmen or no Carmen, succeeds in her purpose. It is always refreshing to have this inconsequential character acquire a personality which justifies its presence in the opera.

A record of exceptional beauty is Eames' "Gretchen am Spinnrade" — even to the "frog" on the last note. Here's where subtle handling is a definite necessity, and also that perfect melting line of which she had such superb mastery — to depict the dreamy sighing of the fair spinner stricken by Cupid's arrow.

In the Mozart duet — which is a musical gem in itself — the Sembrich - Eames team weaves its delicately chiseled phrases into a pattern of sheer loveliness. The lighter soprano of Sembrich blends deliciously with the more weighty one of Eames, and in the repeated passages for both, it is often difficult to identify the voice in action unless one knows the score.

Equally beautiful is the "Lakmé" duet with Homer, who lends her voluptuous contralto to form a glorious combination with Eames' entrancing soprano. The swelling lull of the two magnificent voices, the solo passages imbued with grace, all contribute to making this joint effort one resplendent whole.

Henschel's "Spring," a descriptive piece of cuckoos, chirping, and other such aviary sounds hailing the vernal season, is done fetchingly and with lightness of touch. On the other hand, the "Year's at the Spring," heavier fare, has Eames greeting the wakening of nature with greater and more intense effusion.

"Chanson des Baisers," a waltz, and "Si Tu le Veux," more romantic in vein, are both appealing French songs; while "Dixie" is a one stanza affair done with dignified drive — and with the "holds" Gounod taught her not to do in "Roméo."

If someone sang the Aubade (meaning Morning Song) under my windows early in one morning, I guarantee mayhem would ensue. The Vive amour qui rêve of the dancer l'Ensoleillad may have been all right for the lady-killer Chérubin, but a spirited ditty in Spanish style is definitely not my idea of a morning song. And besides, the gusto with which Eames delivers it is enough to awaken our Valhalla hill down to the house where Washington once slept.

But joking aside, Rococo R29 is a very desirable disc — and on my part, special thanks for the absence of "Who Is Sylvia?." Personally, I never cared to find out.

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, old disc phonographs with outside horns. Old record catalogs, books, $7 and up for cylinder reproducers (part that holds the needle). — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. jly3694

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. jly3668

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonophone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. jly3867

FOR SALE: Phonograph made for Exposition of 1902 found in private collection. For details write:—Reed & Long, c/o Gregory R. Reed, R.F.D. 4, Allentown 5, Pa. au3004

ATTENTION! Antique cylinder & disc phonographs bought, sold, repaired. Repairs done on all makes & models, parts replaced, reproducers bought, sold repaired. I will buy anything in this line. Large list of what I have for sale for stamp. Many rare and hard to find machines in stock. Almost everything in this line available. All machines and parts are perfect. No Junk. — Antique Phonograph Service, c/o Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State St., Tel. 2-4985, Brewer, Maine. au38611

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 75c each.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa.

VICTOR Talking Machine, table model with beautiful wooden horn, good condition, $95. — Bornand, 139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. au3403

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS, I buy and sell. Big list 10c. — Dean Snyder, 739 San Fernando Bldg., Los Angeles 13, Calif. n6637

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3161 High, Denver 5, Colo. au12698

SHEET MUSIC, 1900 and up. Over 300. Send for free list. All $1 each.—Ric Verdi Antiques, 854 Taunton Ave., East Providence, Rhode Island. d6867

LLOYD G. KELLEY

MUSIC BOX CO., Inc.

P. O. Box 355 Hanover, Mass.
Telephone TAYlor 6-4361

1. A 20 1/4" Regina music box which changes records automatically. In a mahogany cabinet and mechanism is all in A-1 condition with 17 tune discs. Price is $575, crated & ready for shipment.
2. A 24 1/4" Polyphon with Circassian walnut cabinet with or without coin slot, single record player, cabinet and mechanism in A-1 condition. Price, $375. F.O.B. Hanover, Mass.
3. Old mechanical whistling figure from the Black Forest, all in good working condition, price $50.

We have many other mechanical musical items for sale, just send for our list. jlyc

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

FAVORITE Pioneer Recording ARTISTS

Conducted by
JIM WALSH

Elizabeth and William Wheeler

By JIM WALSH
PART I

APPROVAL AND APPRECIATION FROM MR. AND MRS. WHEELER Cleveland, May 21, 1961

Dear Jim: It was very cheering to hear your voice this morning and that of Mr. Via. And again I marvel at how a fortuitous reading of an article in a magazine can set up a chain reaction—and what a pleasant one it is! . . . We think you have done a fine job throughout, and we are very grateful to you . . . The second section of your, and our, story is staggering when one considers the amount of research involved, and again I say that the FBI missed a bet when they allowed you to slip through their fingers. . . . Our family in Chagrin Falls read the two drafts of the story with vast interest and appreciation yesterday evening.

Cordially and sincerely,
the Wheelers, per William.

I. A Delightful Discovery

Like history, I sometimes repeat.

More than once in the past, I have written that I never cease to be amazed at the unforeseeable fashion in which I eventually obtain information concerning pioneer recording artists about whom I have long wanted to write. It's likely that I shall be heard to the same effect in future, for fate, coincidence, or whatever it is, never seems to tire of making me the beneficiary of its benevolent tricks.

My discovery of Elizabeth and William Wheeler is the latest example. Nearly all my life I have enjoyed and admired the recorded art of Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler, whom I consider the most successful husband-and-wife duet pair in the history of the phonograph. Never, however, could I come upon the information I needed to do them justice.

Occasionally there would be a glimmer of hope. During the 1944 presidential campaign, Life published an article saying the Republican nominee, Thomas E. Dewey, had studied singing at the University of Michigan in the early 1920's. Then the article mentioned that the head of the voice department of the University's School of Music at that time was a tenor, William Wheeler, and that his wife also was a member of the music faculty, I was sure they must be the Elizabeth and William Wheeler who had made so many records from 1908, or thereabouts, to 1920.

Immediately, I wrote to Governor Dewey, telling him why I was interested in Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler and asking if he could give me their address. Soon afterward I received a letter from Dewey's secretary, saying the Governor would be away from his office for some time, but my inquiry would be answered when he returned. Since it was not, I assume that the inquiry was misplaced somewhere.

I also wrote to Mr. Wheeler in care of the University of Michigan with a request for the letter to be forwarded. It apparently was not, for Mr. Wheeler didn't receive it. So I appeared to be checkmated.

But Fate, Destiny, or Kismet was genially biding its time. Last February, I published a HOBBIES article about the soprano, Elise Stevenson. Not having a conventional photograph of the lady, I submitted a group photo of the Victor Light Opera Company, of which Miss Stevenson had been a member. Elizabeth and William Wheeler also appeared in that picture. A HOBBIES reader in Cleveland, Ohio, whose name I didn't know but to whom I must always be grateful, saw the group photo and passed the magazine on to Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler.

Then came the exhilarating discovery that this richly gifted husband and wife were alive and active. One morning in March I opened my post office box and picked up an envelope postmarked Cleveland, with the return address of William Wheeler, 2472 Overlook Road.

My heart missed a couple of flips as I asked myself, "Can I be hearing from the William Wheeler?" A quick reading showed that indeed I could be. The warm tone of the letter convinced me that Fate was once more active in my behalf and that I must lose no time in obtaining information that would permit me to tell HOBBIES readers all about the famous Wheelers.

The result has been a friendship that I consider one of the most delightful experiences of my many years of writing about recording artists. And publication of this article will mean a fulfillment of a cherished dream.

It will also serve, I hope, as an only slightly belated birthday tribute to Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler. I have written with more than "all deliberate speed," in the hope that it can begin in the August HOBBIES, only a few days after this remarkable husband and wife have both observed their birthdays.

From left to right:

Elizabeth and William Wheeler celebrating their Golden Wedding in 1954, at the Cleveland, Ohio, Music School Settlement.

A typical pose of "Bess" and "Will" Wheeler as they look today.

—From the collection of the author

II. William Wheeler's Letter

Mr. Wheeler's memorable first letter to me was dated March 5, and read:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: A friend recently handed to us the February issue of HOBBIES containing your interesting and full account of Elise Stevenson and her Victor and other records. It was like reading a chapter from our own biography, as Mrs. Wheeler and I were very much involved in those early days of recording, both with the Victor Company, and also with Leeds and Catlin, Zonophone and Pathe—mostly with the Victor, however.

"We never knew Miss Stevenson personally, as she was slightly before our time, but did know very intimately all the persons connected with her. Our contact with the Victor Company began somewhere around 1910, and lasted until 1919, when we moved to Ann Arbor, Mich., where I was head of the voice department at the University School of Music, and where Mrs. Wheeler also was on the faculty.

"We left there for Cleveland in 1924, and we have been here ever since, teaching singing, and singing around a good deal, as well as conducting choral groups. (As we celebrated our golden wedding anniversary six years ago, it goes without saying that we haven't sung in recent years.)

"It was interesting to see our faces on the third row of the Victor Light Opera Company picture which appeared in your article. We are much pleased when every so often someone says that he remembers our records very well—this after 40 years.

"We have many, but not all of our records, many of them from the time, years ago, when Victor discontinued many of their records, but gave us the opportunity of securing those that we wanted. Thank you for writing the article, thus reminding us of some bits of ancient history.

"Sincerely yours, the Wheelers, Elizabeth and William."

The letter was signed by Mr. Wheeler. Replying, I mentioned that my brother, Chad Walsh, who heads the English department and is poet-in-residence at Beloit College in Wisconsin, attended Michigan for five years, but long after Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler were no longer there.

In his second letter, the tenor told me he was much interested in Chad's association with Beloit College, because he himself had been a student there and was graduated in 1900, "to give the gruesome details." He said he and Mrs. Wheeler would be happy to send me any information needed for compiling the HOBBIES article which you are now reading.

As soon as I could spare the time, I prepared separate questionnaires for the husband and wife to fill in and return. Then, on a Sunday morning a few days later, I had a long distance telephone conversation with the singers who must have had one of the longest successful careers in all American musical history.

That was a genuine event for one who had so long admired them and felt as if they were old friends, even during the years when they had never heard of me. (Mr. Wheeler began his second letter, "Dear Seems-like-an-old-friend!")

The first voice I heard that Sunday morning was a lovely soprano which it was easy to recognize as Mrs. Wheeler's. She almost breathlessly explained that they had a busy morning ahead because they were arranging their apartment for a group meeting that afternoon. She remarked that they were both in their 80's.

Elizabeth and William Wheeler and their son John, who was born in 1907, listening to one of their records.

When I replied that they certainly seemed to keep busy and active, she replied: "Oh, my dear, we stay so busy we hardly know what to do with ourselves!"

We talked a few moments about old recording days and she asked me if I had known her friend, the late Lucy Isabelle Marsh, who had been another of Victor's leading sopranos. I told her I had.

"Will wants to talk to you," she said.

And then a familiar voice said, "Hello, Jim!"

I was almost taken aback, for I had played some of William Wheelers Pathé records two nights before and this voice was so like the singing tones I had listened to it might almost be coming from the record. It was the same clear lyric tenor and, as best one could judge from a 'phone conversation, was completely unchanged from what it had been when the records were made almost 45 years ago.

I complimented "Will," as I now take the liberty of calling him, on the fine preservation of his voice. He told me that my letter and questionnaires had been received the day before, and would be answered as soon as he and "Bess" could find time to sit down together and go over the questions.

I had suggested that they might like to talk into a tape recorder and discuss old times in a husband-and-wifely way, but he said he'd rather use his typewriter. He wanted to know what sort of a machine I had used to write my letter, which was in unusually large type.

I told him it was an ordinary model, but specially equipped with big letters to make it easier to read radio and television copy on the air. After the conversation ended, I felt that my Sunday had been greatly brightened by that brief conversation with Bess and Will Wheeler.

Another such delightful event occurred on the morning of Sunday, May 21, when I was being visited by one of my dearest friends, the South Boston, Va., record collector, Albert Via, Jr. I dialed Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler's number in Cleveland, and "Jack" was thrilled at having an animated conversation with both the singers whom he had so long admired. They had received the manuscript of this article only a day or two before, and I was made happy by their enthusiastic praise.

III. Elizabeth Wheeler's Early Days

The two questionnaires came back to me after a week or so and were full of engrossing information. Scarcely in all my experience have I met with such painstaking and intelligent cooperation as I received from my friends in Cleveland. And not long after the questionnaires arrived, I received some wonderful photos to be used in illustrating this article.

Acting on the principle of "ladies first," we'll start with Mrs. Wheeler's replies to my questions. I was delighted to find that, just as I had a sort of bond with her husband because of his and my brother's associations with Michigan and Beloit, so I had one with her because we share the same birthdays. We both were born on July 20. The year of her birth was 1875, so by the time these lines see print she will have passed her 86th birthday.

The future soprano was christened Bess Nicholson when she was born in Kokomo, Ind., to John and Mary Nicholson, but she afterwards adopted the first name of Elizabeth as being more dignified for a singer. Her father was born in Kentucky and her mother in Indiana. Her brothers and sisters in order of age were John, Thomas, and Nell.

Bess' father was a man of "very artistic temperament." He was a photographer and artist, who loved to sing the old songs to his guitar accompaniment. Early in the 1880's he established a photograph gallery in Crawfordsville, Ind. Mrs. Nicholson was "chiefly a homebody." Bess' half-sister, Eva Kirsch, was fond of elocution and enjoyed staging children's plays and entertainments.

The future Elizabeth Wheeler's first remembered stage appearance was in a program of nursery or Mother Goose numbers (sounds like a foreshadowing of many of the "educational" records she grew up to make for Victor!) in which she was "Little Miss Muffet." When the big stage spider was lowered over the chair where she sat eating her "curds and whey," she threw her dish to the floor and ran screaming from the stage. (Mr. Wheeler comments that she was "always extremely responsive and dramatic.")

Bess' sister, Nell, was a fine amateur singer, with a beautiful voice, from whom Bess learned how a beautiful singing tone should sound. Her brother, Tom, was a noted local impresario who put on concerts and other entertainments, and he and his brother, John, were well-known photographers.

She studied singing one or two summers in Crawfordsville with an Italian-trained teacher, Miss Dubois. She also studied with John D. Beall in Springfield, Ill., and at the Ithaca Conservatory of Music in Ithaca, N.Y. Going to Chicago, she studied with Genevieve Clark Wilson and D. Alva Clippinger. After her marriage she was a pupil of John Walter Hall (with whom Lucy Marsh also studied) and Percy Stephens in New York City.

And here the life streams of Bess and Will Wheeler begin to merge. Many a small boy has dreamed wistfully either of growing up to get even with his teacher or has imagined himself in love with her and hoped some day to marry her. Will Wheeler is one man who did marry his teacher, but not the divinity who taught him in grammar school. That happened because Bess became a voice teacher in a small music school at Danville, Ill.

After William was graduated from Beloit, he lived for one year with his cousin, Mrs. Willis Parsons, whose husband was minister at the Danville Presbyterian church. Here he studied music under the direction of Miss Bess Nicholson. In 1903 they both went to Rochester, N. Y., where they were soloists in the same church. They were married in Rochester on August 31, 1904.

They moved on to New York in May, 1906, and their only child, John, was born there April 18, 1907—a year or so before his mother began making a name for herself as a recording artist. John and his family live in Chagrin Falls, near Cleveland. He is associated with a prominent Cleveland architectural firm.

A New Zealand-born baritone who came to this country as a child and grew up in Kansas heard Mrs. Wheeler sing and recommended her to the Leeds and Catlin Company, one of the large independent recording firms of the early 1900's.

The baritone was Percy Hemus, who had made a few records for Columbia under the disguise of Charles Gordon, but had now begun singing for Leeds as his true self. Her records, like Hemus', were immediately successful, but Leeds and Catlin were put out of business in 1908 for alleged infringement of Victor patents.

Mrs. Wheeler not long afterwards became an exclusive Victor artist for disc records, but was at first allowed to make cylinders for other companies. (Hemus, too, became a Victor artist.) Here are some interesting facts drawn from her questionnaire:

She made all sorts of records—"standard" songs, Victor Light Opera records, hymns, many duets with her husband and other singers, and many educational records for the schools of the country, for which she is still remembered by the old-time music educators. During her association with Victor, she met and sang with many of the big names of the time, Caruso, McCormack, et al.

Many times while she and her husband were living in New York they were kept awake at night by hearing their own records coming across the court from neighboring apartments. They never gave a concert or recital across the country at which people did not come up afterwards to express their pleasure at hearing "live" their favorite recording artists.

The old-time recording of a song or concerted number (Mr. Wheeler comments) was a complicated and difficult matter. The sound was conveyed to the diaphragm by a system of separate horns, some large, some small, some long, some short, and necessitated a good deal of scrambling on the part of the singers for the necessary place in the sun—or, rather, horn. It was always a surprise that the end product was as good as it was.

At the University of Michigan from the fall of 1919 to the spring of 1924, William was head of the voice department and Elizabeth also was on the voice faculty. Both sang in the same church choir. She went back to Camden once or twice to make educational records.

In the fall of 1924 she chaperoned two daughters of one of her pupils on a

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell. Big list 10c.—Dean Snyder, 739 San Fernando Bldg., Los Angeles 13, Calif. n6637

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1860. Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. au12698

SHEET MUSIC, 1900 and up. Over 300. Send for free list. All $1 each.—Ric Verdi Antiques, 354 Taunton Ave., East Providence, Rhode Island. d6867 four-months tour of Europe, and on her return to the States joined her husband in Cleveland, where he had gone to establish their home and studio.

Since moving to Cleveland, Mrs. Wheeler has been busy, both with teaching separately and with her husband in their joint vocal studio. In 1954 they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with a big surprise reception arranged by their pupils.

Mr. Wheeler fondly says: "A good many wrinkles have appeared on the scene, and age has done its best to exact its toll, but the spirit and enthusiasm are young and undiminished. Her hair now is nearly white, but her eyes blue and her figure slender. She has always been well-dressed and well 'turned out.'"

IV. Will Wheeler's Account of Himself

On turning to the questionnaire which William Wheeler answered in his own behalf, we find the same (Continued on page 36)

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, old disc phonographs with outside horns. Old record catalogs, books. $7 and up for cylinder reproducers (part that holds the needle). — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3694

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. jly6468

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonaphone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. d3867

FOR SALE: Phonograph made for Exposition of 1902 found in private collection. For details write:—Reed & Long, c/o Gregory R. Reed, R.F.D. 4, Allentown 5, Pa. au3004

ATTENTION! Antique cylinder & disc phonographs bought, sold, repaired. Repairs done on all makes & models, parts replaced, reproducers bought, sold repaired. I will buy anything in this line. Large list of what I have for sale for stamp. Many rare and hard to find machines in stock. Almost everything in this line available. All machines and parts are perfect. No Junk. — Antique Phonograph Service, c/o Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State St., Tel. 2-4985, Brewer, Maine. au38611

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 75c each.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. ap120821

Rare Phonographs: Edison, Columbia, Victors and many others. Records, horns, horn cranes, reproducers, parts and repairs. Send 25c for list. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3426

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 34)

explicit detail, brightened by touches of his characteristic humor, that marked the one devoted to his wife.

William Rogers Wheeler lacks just a week of having the same birthdate as Bess. He was born July 13, 1879, in Shawano, Wis. His father, Willard Watson Wheeler, and his mother, Ellen Topping Wheeler, were both born in New York State, but didn't meet until both families moved to St. Clair county, Michigan.

William had a sister, Sybil, and a brother, Russell, both older than he. He says, "I am now the only leaf left on the original family tree."

The Wheeler family enjoyed music in the house around the parlor organ. Willard Wheeler had a high, untrained, tenor voice. Will himself was allowed to sing instead of reciting pieces in grade school. His voice never changed but slowly dropped from boy soprano to tenor.

At Beloit College he sang in church choirs, in the college quartet and glee club, as well as in a mixed quartet, "and made a respectable sum of money by singing in neighboring small towns. I took what music courses the college had to offer—few in those days—and graduated from the college in 1900."

His visit to Danville, Ill., where he met Bess Nicholson, followed:

"After one year's study with her, fraught with admiration on my part and wailing on hers that she couldn't teach a man to sing, we both went to Ithaca, where we graduated from the Conservatory in 1902.

"She then went to Chicago and I to Rochester, N. Y., where I did some singing in concerts and always in church, as well as very tentatively taking up classes in singing in two small near-by towns. I studied there with our Ithaca teacher, Dr. Beall.

"In New York, from 1906 to 1919, I studied with Percy Stephens and coached with Arthur Whiting, Kurt Schindler, and Arthur Mees. During that time I was soloist at St. Bartholomew's Church and Temple Emanuel, besides doing a lot of oratorios and concerts and recitals with Elizabeth. I sort of sneaked into recording in the train of Mrs. Wheeler, who was a much better recording artist than I.

"At Michigan, I was too busy with teaching to do a great deal of singing, but did direct and sing in the Methodist church choir, and went on one tour of some Eastern colleges and universities with Arthur Whiting, doing lecture recital programs, as well as making two appearances at the Ann Arbor May Festivals.

"Aside from Tom Dewey, my most famous student was Donald Dame, tenor, who was at the Metropolitan for a season or two and was to have been re-engaged at the time of his death in his early 30's, while on tour with a Fledermaus company sponsored by the Met. (This was after we had come to Cleveland.)

"Life in Cleveland has been varied: Explanatory folksong recitals, including a radio series, other recitals and oratorio engagements, private teaching and a period of 10 years at the Cleveland Institute of Music, back again in our own studio with Mrs. Wheeler, classes in music appreciation at Cleveland College and Lake Erie College in Painesville, a woman's chorus for 15 years—till I got tired of it.

"Several years ago I was elected to the American Academy of Teachers of Singing, an organization limited to 40 male teachers throughout the land. That,

I think, is my greatest honor.

"Health pretty good, considering year of the model; height a little under six feet, eyes blue as Jack Benny's, weight about 175. Ambition—not to retire but, as we have done, to cut down on our activities, take it easy as possible, and take good care, each of the other, in our declining years. (Excuse the cliché.)

"Our state has begun to scan with a jaundiced eye drivers of my age, and so last fall my driver's license was revoked, subject to renewal on passing a new driver's test. The first time I ignominiously flunked, unable to park properly, but later on, after several lessons under my son's tutelage and the purchase of a smaller car—a Lark—I passed gloriously and was able to thumb my nose at the authorities in Columbus."

After I sent Mr. Wheeler a copy of the list of the Elizabeth and William Wheeler records which will appear at the end of this series, he wrote on May 7th: "Seeing the name of the Whitney Brothers Quartet reminds me that I substituted for Alvin, the first tenor, who was ailing, for several months—in 1902 or 1903, I think it was."

Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler's recording activities will be related in detail next month. Meanwhile, this seems to be the best place to quote a feature story about them, by Jacqueline Taylor Wattenberg, a pupil of theirs, which appeared in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, when they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1954. I shall condense the article somewhat, to omit mention of things already told about:

"Husband and wife dance teams are pretty common—and so are couples who act or write together. But here in Cleveland we have something unique—a couple who have been teaching the complex art of singing for about 20 years—and have enjoyed a happy married life together for 51 years, also no routine accomplishment.

"They are Mr. and Mrs. William Wheeler of Cleveland Heights. The harmony of their married life has apparently extended to their co-operative teaching. "It's the greatest thing in the world for a husband and wife to be interested in the same thing, if they have sense enough not to be jealous of each other," asserted the slender, animated Mrs. Wheeler.

"Their pupils find this 'double-header' teaching doubly profitable. 'If one by any chance misses a trick, the other catches you on it. They're wonderful!' This is the comment of a well-known Cleveland soprano who recalls with distaste her struggles with 'name' teachers in New York City.

"Constant fighting" took up all their lesson time some 50 years ago when William Wheeler was persuaded by a minister cousin in Danville, Ill., to come there and study with a young teacher 'with a beautiful voice' at the local conservatory.

"I told him the first day he came to me that he better not stay at all—I didn't know a thing about singing!" Mrs. Wheeler recalled over a cup of tea.

"But I had heard her sing," her husband interrupted, "and I told her anyone who can sing like that can teach me."

"When Bess left for study in Chicago, Bill Wheeler moved on to Rochester, N. Y., and became part of the musical life there. After a year he wrote Bess to come to Rochester because there was so much musical opportunity. 'Oh, I may have been a sly dog,' he conceded with a chuckle. They were married in 1904. In 1906 they headed for New York City and soon were making records for Victor.

"She had the better recording voice," said her husband and described her easy production, and the evenness and beauty of quality. They came to know McCormack and Caruso.

"Everybody loved Caruso," Mrs. Wheeler recalled, "from the bellboys to the musicians. He was grand to everybody. One year at holiday time he gave every bellboy in his hotel a $20 gold piece."

"The Wheeler records ranged from opera and standard art songs to such popular light songs as those of Carrie Jacobs-Bond. Roy Chapman Andrews, a friend, once told them that the first record his expedition played in the Gobi Desert was one of 'The Wheelers.'

"Mr. Wheeler did a great deal of oratorio work and gave concerts with Rosa Ponselle and Alma Gluck. His wife and he toured hinterlands together, where people who owned their records were happy to see what 'The Wheelers' looked like.

"After 14 years of recording they moved to Ann Arbor, Mich., where Mr. Wheeler headed the voice department of the University of Michigan Music School. One of the most outstanding pupils was a young law student named Tom Dewey, who was a regular visitor to their house and became 'like a son.'

"He had a good bass-baritone voice," Mr. Wheeler related, "but he was especially outstanding for his ability to interpret and to tell a story." The young man was hovering between law and music in those days.

"After five years in Ann Arbor, the Wheelers headed for Cleveland. Mr. Wheeler taught at the Cleveland Institute of Music for 12 years, and his wife was singing teacher at Schauffler College for 20 years. But their private teaching, in partnership, has progressed so that they now jointly teach all their pupils.

"It just kind of grew," Mrs. Wheeler said simply. "He's better in languages than I am, the better student, more conservative and set. I believe in change and I try to see new ways. So we talk things over."

"I'm more analytical," Mr. Wheeler observed, "while my wife has this tremendous enthusiasm."

"Mr. Wheeler may start your lesson off with vocalizing—exclusive, inspired-on-the-moment exercises for your individual problems, not a set of standard exercises for all pupils. Then you do your songs, and it's right here, as your lessons progress, that Mrs. Wheeler's role emerges. When she can't restrain herself, she comes up to you with some of that enthusiasm: 'Why, that was lovely; a fine high B flat.'

"Yes," her husband may assent, "and now let's work on this line here . . ." and perceptively, gently, subtly, he sets out improving the tone, breath, and musicianship. Mrs. Wheeler sits listening to a song, then rises and, arms 'directing,' urges the pupil to feel and express the song's message.

"During lesson time Mrs. Wheeler sometimes baby-sits for young singing mothers and—being a fond grandmother—finds the task easy. Their son John, an architect who lives in Chagrin Falls, has two children, Barbara, now 14, and William R. II, 9."

Having typed the Plain Dealer article, I find myself wondering which Wheeler record the Andrews expedition played in the Gobi Desert. From a standpoint of suitability, there could have been none more appropriate than Victor 16506, on which Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler sang one of the loveliest of hymns, "Abide With Me!"

I find myself pleased, too, by the knowledge that there are still many thousands—probably millions—of mature music lovers who vividly remember the "Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler" records of 50 years ago. For instance, when I told James H. Moore, president of Radio-Television Station WSLs, for which I work, about my joy at discovering the Wheelers, he exclaimed: "Elizabeth and William Wheeler! Boy, I remember them! They used to make lots of beautiful hymn records!"

(To be continued)

Elizabeth and William Wheeler

PART II

By JIM WALSH

I. Elizabeth Wheeler's First Records

As we already know, Elizabeth Wheeler's first records were made for Leeds and Catlin. This firm had begun by manufacturing wax cylinders, but changed to discs in the early 1900's and made the single-faced Leeds record, whose labels were gold colored with a crinkly effect. In 1904 or 1905 the Leeds label was succeeded by the Imperial, possibly because Leeds was establishing an agency in England.

My only Imperial record catalog, dated October, 1906, contains no mention of Mrs. Wheeler. The first reference I have found to any of her records is in the March 16, 1908, issue of the English Talking Machine News:

"We learn from the Imperial Disc Record Co. that they will shortly issue a complete set of Grieg's Peer Gynt on four records. They will also publish soprano solos by Miss Natalie Hillmar and Miss (!) Elizabeth Wheeler, and various selected pieces from the Merry Widow. Mr. Alan Turner's records which were issued last month have, we understand, sold extremely well."

Since records were made at least six weeks to two months before they were sold, and since there would have been additional delay in their reaching England, it appears reasonable to assume that "Miss" Wheeler first faced the horn during the latter half of 1907.

A review of Imperial records in the May, 1908, T. M. N. said:

"Two of the vocal records are not only good in themselves, but are also conspicuous from the fact that they have an attractive accompaniment on piano, violin and flute. They are Freeborn's 'Land of Golden Dreams,' (45580), sung by Natalie Hillmar, who has a fine soprano voice, and Tosti's 'Goodbye' (45582), sung by Elizabeth Wheeler, another soprano of parts."

The oddly praised "soprano of parts" also had another Imperial record listed that month, the familiar "Dreams," by Anton Strelezki, which seems to have been one of her favorite recording choices. Its number is given as 45581. A little later, the News again listed a Wheeler disc of "Dreams," with the number published as 45601. It is not clear whether two versions were issued or whether a mistake was made in printing one number, but the latter appears more probable. However, in the list of her records at the end of this installment, I have included both.

Who, you probably join me in wondering, was Miss Natalie Hillmar? Whoever she was, her fame has not endured like that of Elizabeth Wheeler.

In June, we find:

"Miss Elizabeth Wheeler has a fine soprano solo with violin obbligato of 'In the Calmness' (45685) from Gounod's Romeo and Juliet, and also gives, with piano accompaniment, an effective rendering of 'Happy Li'l Sal' (45636)."

In a separate listing, the number of "In the Calmness" appears as 45635. "Happy Li'l Sal" seems to have been another of the soprano's favorites. It is a Carrie Jacobs-Bond song with words by Richard F. Outcault, the cartoonist whose "Yellow Kid" was the first colored "funny paper" feature and who afterwards drew the popular Sunday comic strip, "Buster Brown." Another mention of "Sal" refers to the singer as "Madame Wheeler."

Still another favorite in the Wheeler repertoire, Gounod's "Ave Maria," was offered to English record buyers in June. In September, the magazine said: "'Mighty Lak' a Rose' is sung with much finish and expression by Miss Elizabeth Wheeler, with violin obbligato."

In October, we find:

"Miss Elizabeth Wheeler gives us 'Dreams' (45601). She has a voice of much sweetness and purity, and the record is also noteworthy for a pleasing accompaniment of piano, violin and flute, which adds much to the charm of the song."

After that I find no more listings of Imperial records by Elizabeth Wheeler, but she may have made others not mentioned in the Talking Machine News. Victor's successful suit against Leeds and Catlin for patent infringement became effective late in 1908, and, as mentioned last month, the firm had to quit business. Imperial records were also issued under other labels for private traders. These included Busy Bee, Century, Concert, Clico, Royal, Symphony, Talkophone and Vim, so it would not be surprising to find an occasional Wheeler disc appearing under those, or other "off brands."

Conducted by
JIM WALSH

II. Indestructible, Edison and U. S. Everlasting Cylinders

About the time that Leeds & Catlin sank, by legal decree, out of existence, Mrs. Wheeler began making cylinder records. Four two-minute "rollers" which she sang as solos for the Indestructible Phonographic Record Co., of Albany, N. Y., are of the 1909 and 1910 period. They include "The Last Rose of Summer" and "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," both issued in January, 1910. A duet with the contralto, Idelle Patterson, of "Oh Morning Land" appeared that same month. Her record of "Good Night, Dear" was issued in February, 1910, and received this catalog description:

"This song, of delicate and refined sentiment, is widely known through being sung by Miss Billie Burke in her great comedy success, 'Love Watches.' It is a tenderly expressive number, and admirably adapted to Mrs. Wheeler's delightful soprano voice."

The records already mentioned were two-minute. One of Mrs. Wheeler's two four-minute cylinders, "Bonnie Sweet Bessie, the Maid of Dundee," also came out in February, with this comment:

"Mrs. Wheeler's solo this month is the best known of the several delightful Scotch ballads by J. L. Gilbert. There are few who have not, at one time or another, felt the charm of its plaintive words and air. Mrs. Wheeler's interpretation is, as always, an example of perfect vocalism and incomparable diction and phrasing."

The other 4-minute, Tosti's "Goodbye," had been issued in January. Our sweet-voiced soprano's name also appeared on a few Edison cylinders, all issued during a four-month period, from December, 1909, through March, 1910. With the exception of one solo, all the "Elizabeth Wheeler" Edisons were duets with John Young, who was then using the name of Harry Anthony. I must point out, however, that although Mrs. Wheeler says she knew Young well, she emphatically denies having ever made records with him and insists she never sang for Edison. She and Mr. Wheeler also knew Young's partner, the baritone, Frederick Wheeler. He was not related to William Wheeler. For the sake of historical interest, I shall, despite Mrs. Wheeler's disclaimer, list the Edison cylinders. The first Edison mention of Elizabeth Wheeler appeared in The New Phonogram for December, 1909:

"'The Garden of Dreams' (Elizabeth Wheeler and Harry Anthony.) A soprano and tenor duet, with Miss Wheeler singing the verses. The song is a sentimental composition of a higher order of merit, both in words and melody, by the same author who wrote 'Dearie'—Clare Kummer. This is a record that will find its way into every collection of high class numbers."

"Garden of Dreams" was a four-minute Amberol cylinder. The same list also contained a two-minute Wheeler-Anthony duet:

"Dreamland Faces" . . . An unusual degree of attractiveness in composition and melody marks this number, which is rendered in duet form by soprano and tenor. The sentiment of the song is daintily expressed in lines that are refreshingly original and clever. The artists are so well and favorably known as to require no special word of commendation—their work is consistently artistic."

In January, 1910, three more Wheeler-Anthony duets were offered. The first two mentioned below were four-minute; the other played just half as long:

"Ring O' Roses" . . . This number is from 'The Dollar Princess,' a musical comedy which is now both a European and an American success. It is now playing to crowded houses in New York. . . . 'Ring O' Roses' . . . is the most melodious and attractive number in the production and always elicits many encores. "Gobble Duet," from 'The Mascotte,' . . . We confidently expect that this beautiful soprano and tenor duet . . . will prove one of the most popular records in our catalog. It is the famous 'Gobble Duet' from the comic opera, 'The Mascotte,' which was first produced at Paris in 1880 and, up to Aug. 29, 1897, had reached its seventeen hundredth performance. . . .

"Meet Me Tonight in Dreamland." . . . In this charming love ballad, the lines of whose verses are sung by the artists alternately, and the chorus in duet form, Miss Wheeler and Mr. Anthony display in a marked degree those talents that have established their popularity with the phonograph public."

February, 1910, brought a Wheeler-Anthony duet of "Sweet Bunch of Daisies," which Anita Owen had written as a successor to "Daisies Won't Tell." This was a two-minute cylinder:

"A dainty little effusion, wedded to a particularly sweet air, and rendered in duet form by a soprano and tenor whose names are synonyms of excellence, is a concise and truthful description of this record."

"Miss" Wheeler's only solo Edison cylinder, a four-minute Amberol, issued in March, 1910, marked her final appearance in the Edison catalog.

"Dreams" . . . To those who discriminate in favor of vocal selections of the higher grade this sentimental number will make a distinct appeal. Miss Wheeler's beautiful voice and artistic style are strongly in evidence in this selection, which she sings with an ease and brilliancy delightful to hear. Piano accompaniment with violin obbligato. . . .

Of these several Wheeler records, the Gobble Duet proved the longest lasting. After the unbreakable Blue Amberol cylinders were introduced, the duet was re-issued in 1913, as a new style cylinder, but with the tenor's name changed from Anthony, which he had then discarded, in favor of the rightful John Young. It is a fine record, which deserved its popularity.

The facetious thought arises that, although "Miss Elizabeth Wheeler's" Edison association was a short one, it was dreamy while it lasted!

She not only told of the charms of "Dreams," she also visited the garden of dreams, wistfully recalled dreamland faces and extended an invitation to meet her in dreamland, where the invited one probably would show up toting a sweet bunch of daisies!

In 1909, Albert Benzler, who had been one of the most useful men around the Edison recording studios, left Thomas A. Edison and, with some of his associates, began working for the new U. S. Everlasting cylinder record company. U. S. business headquarters was in Cleveland, now and for many years past the home of Elizabeth and William Wheeler. The only U. S. catalog I have, dated October, 1912, contains a two-minute cylinder of Mrs. Wheeler, "Last Rose of Summer," and a four-minute by her husband, "Drink To Me Only With Thine Eyes."

III. Mrs. Wheeler Begins Recording for Victor

The musically significant portion of Bess Nicholson Wheeler's recording career began in 1909, when she signed a Victor contract. Leeds & Catlin's compulsory liquidation had left her available to other offers. Someone at Victor apparently had heard her Imperial records and decided she would be a notable addition to the staff of Eldridge R. Johnson's company. That at least is the impression given by the comment on the Wheeler records, which appeared in Victor catalogs from 1912 to 1922, and in a slightly different form had been published as early as January, 1910:

"A soprano who can give a song the proper expression and yet pronounce the words distinctly is a rare discovery. In Mrs. Wheeler the Victor presents a soprano whose diction is really remarkable; and this fact is quite apparent in the records she has made."

"After hearing Mrs. Wheeler's first records, the Victor Company at once secured her exclusive services for disc work; and she has sung a number of old favorites, besides several of the popular ballads and many duets, both sacred and secular, with Mr. Wheeler, the soprano and tenor blending in most attractive style."

In 1923, after Mrs. Wheeler had given up recording and was busy with her teaching at the University of Michigan, the write-up was changed to:

"Elizabeth Wheeler is an old friend of the Victor and of Victor audiences. She is a soprano who cannot only sing but enunciate, and she preserves admirably the balance between these two essentials of good balladry."

"She has made a number of standard favorites, both alone and in combination with other artists; some of these are simple and 'homey,' and others call for rare and subtle qualities of artistic expression."

On turning to the numerical list of Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler's records, you will find that several of her Victor single-faced discs bear lower serial numbers than the remainder. This is because Victor had recently changed its recording process and was remaking most of the selections already in the catalog. Mrs. Wheeler was called on to sing fresh versions of numbers previously listed by artists no longer available or whose services were no longer required.

"I Dreamt That I Dwelt In Marble Halls" had previously been sung by the contralto, Corinne Morgan; "Ave Maria" by a soprano, Florence Hayward; "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," by Florence Hinkle, who afterwards returned and became a Victor favorite (she was the wife of the basso, Herbert Witherspoon, later manager of the Metropolitan Opera), and "Rock Me To Sleep, Mother" and "The Last Rose Of Summer," by Helene Noldi. Besides these solos, the duets by Mrs. Wheeler and Harry Macdonough of "The Mocking Bird" and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" had been originally sung by the contralto-basso combination of Miss Morgan and Frank C. Stanley.

Next we come to a puzzle—one which I observed for the first time while preparing the list of Wheeler recordings. In the Victor supplement for February, 1909, record No. 5657, "The Glow Worm," was listed as a soprano solo by Elise Stevenson. It also appeared in March under Miss Stevenson's name. But in the next complete Victor catalog, for January, 1910, although the same number is retained, the record is said to be by Elizabeth Wheeler and, in both single and double-faced form, it was sold for many years under her name.

Now, what happened? Was "The Glow Worm" sung in the beginning

Left to right:

Elizabeth and William Wheeler at the beginning of their recording careers (from a 1910 Victor record catalog).

Elizabeth and William Wheeler (from the July, 1917, Victor record supplement).

Elizabeth Wheeler knitting (from a 1920 Victor record supplement).

By Bess Wheeler but attributed to Miss Stevenson through an error? If so, Mrs. Wheeler, whose name had not then appeared in a monthly Victor list, must have been making "His Master's Voice" records in the latter half of 1908. If it was actually by Miss Stevenson, why was a re-make necessary within a few months of issue? And why wasn't Miss Stevenson, who was still singing regularly for the company, permitted to do the new take herself, rather than assigning it to another soprano?

The first Victor record which Elizabeth Wheeler may be said to have made "on her own" was "Goodnight, Dear," which appeared in August, 1909. In September she was represented by the first of her long series of gospel hymns, "A Child of a King," and in October, under the heading of "A Perfect Record of the Favorite 'Last Rose,'" appeared this enthusiastic reference to her delicious version of "The Last Rose of Summer."

"It is with pleasure that we are able to offer a beautiful and all but perfect record of this most beloved of English ballads at a price of sixty cents. Mrs. Wheeler sings the dear old melody exquisitely, and delivers the words with absolute clearness."

In January, 1910, the supplement contained this eulogistic review of Mrs. Wheeler's record of a Carrie Jacobs-Bond song, "His Buttons Are Marked U.S.":

"One of the most delightful of the compositions of Carrie Jacobs Bond, whose songs of childhood are notable for their charming simplicity. This exquisite little gem, which Mrs. Wheeler has given so clearly and touchingly, expresses the thoughts of a child on seeing his father in a soldier's uniform; when he quaintly imagines that as the buttons are marked U. S., it signifies 'us,' and therefore his papa must belong solely to 'dear mamma and me!'"

Another of Mrs. Wheeler's favorite Bond songs, "Happy Li'l Sal," appeared in February.

While going through the complete Victor catalog for January, 1910, hoping to solve "The Glow Worm" mystery, I was surprised to find that Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler were mistaken in believing they never knew Elise Stevenson. The soprano at least sang with Miss Stevenson on one or more occasions. I quote the following from a description of a 12-inch single-faced record, 31757, "Gems From 'A Broken Idol,'" made by the Victor Light Opera Company:

"... The medley contains a bit of the dainty song, 'A Little China Doll,' sung by Mrs. Wheeler: 'Love Makes the World Go 'Round,' with its pretty swing, given first as a duet by Mrs. Wheeler and Mr. (Frederick) Gunster, then as a quartet, with Miss Stevenson and Mr. (S. H.) Dudley: 'Marie,' by the orchestra; 'Signs of a Honeymoon,' quartet by Wheeler, Stevenson, Macdonough and Gunster; and, finally, that lively ditty, 'Alabama,' with Billy Murray and full chorus. . ."

Actually, the correct title of the second song is "What Makes the World Go Round?" Speaking of the Light Opera Company, I remember Billy Murray telling me years ago all Mrs. Wheeler's associates thought her rendition of "Moonbeams Shining" in "Gems from 'The Red Mill,'" was remarkably beautiful.

William Wheeler took one of the tenor roles in an English-language Purple Label record (No. 70036) of the Lucia Sextet, recorded March 27, 1911. Macdonough was the other tenor, and the remaining singers were Lucy Marsh, Marguerite Dunlap, Reinald Werrenrath and William F. Hooley.

Turning back to October, 1909, we find evidence that "The Gobble Duet" from "The Mascotte," must have been one of Mrs. Wheeler's favorites. The Edison duet with John Young has already been mentioned, but even earlier Victor had issued it by Mrs. Wheeler and Harry Macdonough. Sam Rous ("S. H. Dudley") the catalog editor, remarked:

"No one can resist the spell of Audran's music, and certainly none can fail to admire the gem of the entire opera—this charming 'Gobble Duet,' so pleasantly sung by Mrs. Wheeler and Mr. Macdonough."

To use his own term, Mrs. Wheeler must have "sneaked" William in as a Victor artist late in 1909, for their first duets began to appear early the next year. Their only single-faced offering was a 12-inch version of Schubert's Serenade. "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs" (but they consistently did!) was their first 10-inch double-face, with the Whitney Brothers Quartet singing "For-saken" on the reverse. For some time the Wheeler duets were listed, not as by Elizabeth and William Wheeler, or Mr. and Mrs. William Wheeler, but simply as by "Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler," thus making it likely that a puzzled posterity would wonder which Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler had sung so exquisitely. Most of their duets were hymns, but there were also some standard art songs. No. 16700 contained their "Dear Lord and Father, While I Stray," combined with John Barnes Wells' "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere." I wonder why Victor issued a second tenor version of "Beautiful Isle" in only a little more than two years after Harold Jarvis' now classic interpretation had appeared on record 16008. In spite of the Jarvis competition, however, the Wheeler-Wells coupling remained in the catalog until electric recording was introduced and was afterwards included in a special catalog of historically interesting records. When it was announced in February, 1911, the supplement described it as "a new record of the beloved 'Beautiful Isle,' which has been for years one of the most popular numbers in the Victor's sacred list; combined with a new gospel hymn much used in evangelistic services."

Obviously, not all the records of so popular and prolific an artist as Elizabeth Wheeler can be mentioned here in the detail they deserve. She seldom sang passingly popular music, and one of her few records of that type, "Don't Be Cross With Me," is among her rarest discs. The song didn't "click" and the record was soon discontinued. Besides her husband and Harry Macdonough, (who was John Macdonald, head of the Victor Artist and Repertoire department), her only other male duet partner for Victor was the baritone, Reinald Werrenrath, with whom she sang "Two Little Love Bees," from "The Spring Maid." This single-faced disc had a short life, for Victor engaged Christie McDonald, the soprano star of "The Spring Maid," to make some Purple Label records. When she and Werrenrath sang the "Love Bees," the Wheeler-Werrenrath version was deleted.

Since Mrs. Wheeler's single-faced records were largely of the "standard" type, most were afterwards brought forward into the double-faced list.

In 1911, Victor, with characteristic enterprise, established an Educational Department. An external horn machine was produced, chiefly to play marching music for use in public schools, and Mrs. Frances Elliott Clark, who had been supervisor of music in the schools of Milwaukee, Wis., was placed in charge of educational activities. She began energetically to issue both vocal and

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell. Big list 10c. — Dean Snyder, 739 San Fernando Bldg., Los Angeles 13, Calif. n6637

SHEET MUSIC, 1900 and up. Over 300. Send for free list. All $1 each.—Ric Verdi Antiques, 854 Taunton Ave., East Providence, Rhode Island. d6867

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, old disc phonographs with outside horns. Old record catalogs, books, $7 and up for cylinder reproducers (part that holds the needle). — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3694

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. au6465

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flow-ered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonophone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. d5867

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 75c each.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. ap120821

Rare Phonographs: Edison, Columbia, Victors and many others. Records, horns, horn cranes, reproducers, parts and repairs. Send 25c for list. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3426

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. ja6468

instrumental records designed primarily for school purposes. These "educational records," as they were usually known, were not listed alphabetically in the Victor catalog, but were restricted to a special section. Their sale also was confined largely to educational institutions, and the majority of the titles were not widely known to the general record buying public. Within a short time, Elizabeth Wheeler was one of the leading contributors to the educational series. She sang solo records of Mother Goose rhymes and other children's numbers, and recorded duets and trios with Marguerite Dunlap, Elsie Baker and Olive Kline. Many beautiful records were produced as the result of this all-feminine collaboration.

It was during the period in which his wife was becoming more and more identified with educational records that the only Victor solo by William Wheeler was issued. In November, 1912, his splendid tenor rendition of an old-time ballad, "Marguerite," was announced, coupled with the late Reed Miller singing "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." The monthly supplement said:

"Two old favorites which the Victor has revived in response to requests from many customers who are not in sympathy with the cheap sentiments and coarseness of many popular songs of the day. Both are beautiful songs which in their time were immensely popular, the combined sales being more than a million copies. Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Miller are to be congratulated for their admirable renditions of these attractive old songs."

There is an amusing reference to the Wheeler-Miller coupling in the same supplement. Editor Rous was discussing record 17172, which combined "The Million Dollar Ball," warbled by Billy Murray, with "When I Get You Alone Tonight," dashingy sung by my dear friend, the still living Walter Van Brunt. Sam said:

"Another rousing Hanky Panky success, combined with a song of the 'spoony' type popular just at present, but which can hardly be called refined. It is refreshing to note signs of a change in public sentiment, manifested in an increasing demand for old-time ballads such as 'Marguerite' and 'Sweetest Story Ever Told,' listed on another page of this bulletin."

Since some of the popular songs of almost 50 years ago earned Sam Rous' disapproval, one wonders what, if he were still alive, he would think of rock-'n-roll!

I have an almost lifelong personal association of my own with the "Marguerite" record. As a child, I did not at first identify the William Wheeler who made the record as the tenor who sang with Elizabeth Wheeler. Instead, I imagined him as an impoverished veteran of the Civil War, who still could sing, and who had been engaged to make a record so that his fee would enable him to eat more regularly and often. I imagined him wearing his military cap and uniform as he recorded, and as afterwards being presented by the great-hearted Victor folks with a big Victrola and scads of records. I also imagined, incorrectly, many details of Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler's courtship and marriage.

IV. Zonophone, Later Victor and Pathe Records

Although Mrs. Wheeler's services must have been exclusive to Victor after 1910, she and Mr. Wheeler were permitted to sing for the Zonophone records, which Victor rather surreptitiously issued. Zonophone discs sold at 65 cents, a dime less than the standard Victor 10-inch price, and were intended to compete with Columbia's 65 cent record. Many "exclusive" Victor artists appeared on Zonophone records until that label was discontinued, apparently during 1913. My Zonophone lists do not include the last half of 1912 or any part of 1913, so it's possible both Elizabeth and William Wheeler made more Zono discs than are listed at the end of this article. I take Mr. Wheeler's solo, "Oh Lola, Fair as Flowers," to be an English version of the Siciliana from Cavalleria Rusticana. The old ballad, "Sweet Miss Mary," was rather incongruously paired with a popular song, "Curly Head," sung by Byron G. Harlan.

Victor gave Mrs. Wheeler a few popular songs to sing in 1915 and 1916. One, "In Monterey," was paired with "Little Honolulu Lou," sung by Charles Harrison. Two 1916 songs by the former Miss Bess Nicholson were marketed under the assumed name of Jane Kenyon. Mr. Wheeler says his wife doesn't remember anything about that name being used and can't say whether she or some Victor official selected it. Commenting on the list of their recordings which I sent him, Mr. Wheeler remarked: "It is most interesting to be reminded of all those records we made for Victor and the others, records in the latter case which we had completely forgotten. . . . The FBI has nothing on you in the matter of records."

The final Victor record by Elizabeth and William Wheeler came out in July, 1917—"What a Friend We Have in Jesus," which proved to be one of their most popular duets. Mrs. Wheeler had another educational record (18330) a few months later. From then until June, 1920, the Wheeler name disappeared from the monthly supplements. Her last record, issued after the couple had taken up their duties at the University of Michigan was 18665, another contribution of primarily educational interest.

Meanwhile, William Wheeler began singing, late in 1917, for the Pathé hill-and-dale records played with a round sapphire ball. One of his dozen or so sides was "Hawaii and You," which he sang to a Hawaiian guitar accompaniment by Helen Louise and Frank Ferrara. The others were gospel hymns, mostly with organ accompaniments. A few nights ago I played several of these Pathé discs and was impressed not only by the excellent reproduction but by the artistic restraint with which Mr. Wheeler sang. He was at the opposite extreme from the ranting, ear-splitting type of evangelistic singer. His voice production was marked by clarity, dignity and unaffected expressiveness. "I Walk With the King" is especially good.

Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler's old friend, Percy Hemus, had begun making Pathé records in 1917, and the tenor says he thinks, but isn't sure, Hemus might have suggested that Pathé add him to its list of singers. When Pathé discontinued the sapphire records in 1922 and began issuing the needle-cut Actuelles, many of the older records were transferred to the new type, often with the names of the artists changed. I suspect that some of the records by a tenor, "Paul Hardy," which duplicate titles William had previously made, are dubbings of his sapphire discs.

The last catalog Victor issued before electrical recording was introduced was published early in 1925. Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler by that time had left Ann Arbor and gone to live in Cleveland, but solo records No. 16398, 16401, 16405, 16863 and 18076 by Mrs. Wheeler were still listed. Her Latin version of "Ave Maria" and the "well-nigh perfect" "Last Rose of Summer" had been re-made in 1924 by a young soprano, Della Baker. Duets and trios in which she had sung, exclusive of those with Mr. Wheeler, and which were still available, included 17209, 17987 and 35581. William Wheeler's solo of "Marguerite" was holding its own as one of the most consistent sellers, and duets still catalogued by the husband and wife were 16490, 16500, 16563, 17940 and 18287. Two more of their old numbers still clung to the catalog, but had been re-made. In 1922, "Near the Cross" had been done over by "Alice Green and Raymond Dixon"—disguises for Olive Kline and Lambert Murphy. In 1924, under their own names, Kline and Murphy re-made "Dear Lord and Father."

When the 1926 catalog was issued, a rush to re-record standard numbers electrically was under way. The only Wheeler recording left was their last duet, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

But that was not quite the end of the pair's Victor repertoire. A year later, Victor was moved, "by insistent public demand," to issue a special catalog of Records of Historical and Personal Interest, which music lovers felt should still be available.

Several Wheeler records were resurrected, including Mrs. Wheeler's solos of "Mother Goose Songs" (16863), "Humpty Dumpty," etc. (18076) and "Pull a Cherry" (18330)—all, it will be noted, of the educational type. Wheeler and Wheeler duets brought back to life included 17940, "The Homeland" and "My Jesus, As Thou Wilt," and 16490, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say." And here we run into another puzzle. In one place the special catalog says that the Latin version of "Ave Maria" on the other side of 16490 was sung by Elizabeth Spencer; in another, that it was by Della Baker, who had re-made it in 1924. Also restored were the Della Baker "Last Rose of Summer," and the Kline-Murphy, "Near the Cross" and "Dear Lord and Father." These old favorites remained available until the record business came within a gasp of dying for several years during the 1930's, and Victor's special pressing service was discontinued.

Looking back over her long list of discs and cylinders, Mrs. Wheeler says she thinks her best records would include "Elizabeth's Prayer," Hollman's "Love Song," Tosti's "Goodbye," and "The Kerry Dance." She and Mr. Wheeler vote for "Ah Yes, I Love You," from Reginald De Koven's "Fortune Teller," Tosti's "Serenade" and "A Night in Venice," by Lucantoni, as among their more important duets.

So now we have come to the end of our story, but not to the end of the story of Elizabeth and William Wheeler. With a wish that they may enjoy many more vigorous years of installing appreciation and the love of good music and faultless singing methods into their pupils, we may pass to a comprehensive listing of their recorded efforts. No claim is made that the following tabulation is 100 per cent complete, for, as has already been pointed out, there may be Imperial and Zonophone about which I know nothing. It is even possible I have overlooked one or two Victors, but I hope not. However, there is no doubt that most of the best of the recorded work of the "Wonderful Wheelers" will be found here.

—0—

RECORDS BY ELIZABETH AND WILLIAM WHEELER

Imperial single-faced discs by Elizabeth Wheeler (1907-08)

10-inch

45581, Dreams; 45582, Goodbye; 45601, Dreams; 45636, Happy Li'l Sal; 45663, Mighty Lak' a Rose; 45685, Romeo and Juliet—In the Calmness.

Victor Solo Records by Elizabeth Wheeler (1909-1920)

10-inch - Single-faced

2980, I Dreamt That I Dwelt in Marble Halls; 4251, Ave Maria; 4874, Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms; 5215, Rock Me to Sleep, Mother; 5657, The Glow Worm; 5709, Good Night, Dear; 5726, Child of a King; 5739, Last Rose of Summer; 5752, His Buttons Are Marked U. S.; 5759, Happy Li'l Sal.

10-inch - Double-faced

16330, Don't Be Cross With Me; Reverse: Recipe for Love (Elsie Stevenson and Frank C. Stanley.)

16398, I Dreamt That I Dwelt in Marble Halls; Reverse: Then You'll Remember Me (originally by Harry Macdonough, but later remade by Lewis James.)

16401, Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms; Reverse: Sally In Our Alley (Whitney Brothers Quartet.)

16405, Rock Me to Sleep, Mother; Reverse: In the Gloaming (originally by Corinne Morgan, remade by Elizabeth Spencer.)

16454, Loch Lomond; Reverse: Old Folks at Home (Whitney Brothers Quartet.)

16490, Ave Maria, (in Latin); Reverse: I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say (Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler.)

16660, Child of a King; Reverse: Abide With Me (Richard Jose.)

An excellent recent snapshot of Elizabeth and William Wheeler.

16813, Last Rose of Summer; Reverse: Tannhauser—the Evening Star ('cello solo by Victor Sorlin.)

16828, Mary (with Hayden Quartet); Reverse: I'm Fancy Free (Inez Barbour.)

16863, Mother Goose Songs; Reverse: 1. The Moo Cow Moo. 2. His New Brother (Henry Allan Price.)

16865, There, Little Girl, Don't Cry; Reverse: Red, Red Rose (John Barnes Wells.)

16893, Cradle Song; Reverse: Dry Yo' Eyes (Marguerite Dunlap.)

16932, Glow Worm; Reverse: Garden of Dreams (Stevenson and Macdonough.)

17004, 1. A Dew Drop. 2. Rain Song; Reverse: Mother Goose No. 1.

17095, A Girl Like Me (with Lyric Quartet); Reverse: Whistle It (Ada Jones.)

17167, May Day; Reverse: Hi, Li'l Feller (Marguerite Dunlap.)

17177, Summer Lullaby; Reverse: 1. The Oriole's Nest; 2. Wind Song.

17187, No Candle Was There and No Fire; Reverse: Silent Night (Dunlap.)

17203, Daddy; Reverse: I'm Wearing Awa' (Wells.)

17210, I Wish You a Very Good Day, etc.; Reverse: See Saw, Margery Daw, etc.

17282, 1. Indian Lullaby. 2. The Ginger Cat; Reverse: 1. Robin's Journey. 2. Goodnight, Pretty Stars.

17283, 1. Under Their Blanket of Snow. 2. Pussy Willow; Reverse: Voice of Spring. 2. Ladybird.

17513, 1. The Cuck-coo Clock. 2. Slumber Song; Reverse: The Secret, etc.

17883, In Monterey; Reverse: Little Honolulu Lou (Charles Harrison.)

18053, My Grandfather's Girl (issued under the assumed name of Jane Kenyon); Reverse: Where the Shamrocks Grow (Geoffrey O'Hara.)

18065, At the End of a Beautiful Day (issued under the name of Jane Kenyon); Reverse: Love Me at Twilight (Herbert Stuart, who was really Albert Wiederhold.)

18076, Humpty Dumpty, etc.; Reverse: Sing a Song of Sixpence, etc.

18330, Pull a Cherry, etc.; Reverse: The Postilion, etc.

18665, Skye Boat Song. 2. The Hills of Tyrol; Reverse: Mother's Prayer, etc.

Victor Solo Records by William Wheeler (1912)

17165, Marguerite; Reverse: Sweetest Story Ever Told (Reed Miller.)

12-inch Victor Solo Records by Elizabeth Wheeler

Single-face

31774, Love Song (Josef Hollman.)

Double-face

35082, Merry Widow - Villa Song; Reverse: Then You'll Remember Me (Macdonough.)

35096, Tannhauser—Elizabeth's Prayer; Reverse: A Night in Venice (Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler.)

35102, Goodbye; Reverse: Simple Confession (Sorlin.)

35199, Kerry Dance; Reverse: Asthore (Reinold Werrenrath.)

35225, Mother Goose Songs; Reverse: Vowel Songs.

35595, Primary Songs and Exercises for Teaching—parts 1 and 2.

10-inch Victor duets by Elizabeth and William Wheeler (1909-1917)

16369, I Cannot Sing the Old Songs; Reverse: Forsaken (Whitney Brothers.)

16465, He Leadeth Me; Reverse: Light of the World is Jesus (Whitney Bros.)

16490, I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say; Reverse: Ave Maria (Elizabeth Wheeler.)

16500, Softly Now the Light of Day; Reverse: Beyond the Smiling and the Weeping (Peerless Quartet.)

16506, Abide With Me; Reverse: Some Day (Harry Anthony—James F. Harrison.)

16563, Beautiful Valley of Eden; Reverse: New Born King (Hamilton Hill.)

16688, Near the Cross; Reverse: Some Sweet Day (Anthony and Harrison.)

16700, Dear Lord and Father; Reverse: Beautiful Isle of Somewhere (Wells.)

16705, Oh That We Two Were Maying; Reverse: Story of the Rose (Wells.)

16827, Tales of Hoffman - Barcarolle; Reverse: Fatinitza Selection (Arthur Pryor's Band.)

16869, I've Found a Friend; Reverse: The Lord is My Shepherd (Miller and Werrenrath.)

17423, Serenade—Tosti; Reverse: Serenade—Schubert.

17940, The Homeland; Reverse: My Jesus, As Thou Wilt.

18287, What a Friend We Have in Jesus; Reverse: That Sweet Story of Old (Elsie Baker.)

12-inch Victor single-face

31753, Schubert's Serenade.

12-inch Victor double-face

35096, Night in Venice; Reverse: Tannhauser—Elizabeth's Prayer (Elizabeth Wheeler.)

35192, Ah Yes, I Love You; Reverse: Answer ("That Girl" Quartet.)

Other 10-inch duets and trios in which Elizabeth Wheeler sang

Single-face

4080, The Mocking Bird (Wheeler and Macdonough.)

5733, Mascotte—Gobble Duet (Wheeler and Macdonough.)

5836, Spring Maid—Two Little Love Bees (Wheeler and Werrenrath.)

5863, I Know a Bank (Wheeler and Dunlap.)

5864, "O Wert Thou in the Could Blast (Wheeler and Dunlap.)

Double-face

16361, When You and I Were Young, Maggie (Wheeler and Macdonough); Reverse: Vacant Chair (Hayden Quartet.)

16392, Mocking Bird (Wheeler and Macdonough); Reverse: Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep (Frank C. Stanley.)

16527, Gobble Duet (Wheeler and Macdonough); Reverse: Prince of Pilsen Selection (Souza's Band.)

16986, 1. On the Sea. 2. Gaelic Cradle Song; Reverse: The Foot Traveller (Wheeler and Dunlap.)

17106, Thy Flowery Banks o' Lovely River; Reverse: Voice of the Western Wind (Wheeler, Dunlap and Baker.)

17209, Over Hill, Over Dale (Wheeler, Dunlap and Baker); Reverse: Summer Now Hath Come Among Us (Wheeler and Dunlap.)

17211, Gently Fall the Dews of Eve; Reverse: Lift Thine Eyes (Wheeler, Dunlap and Baker.)

17218, Golden Slumbers Kiss Your Eyes (Wheeler, Dunlap and Baker); Reverse: Swing Song (Wheeler and Dunlap.)

17987, Lady of the Lake—Coronach (Elizabeth Wheeler, Olive Kline and Marguerite Dunlap); Reverse: Soldier, Rest (Olive Kline and Elsie Baker.)

12-inch

35581, Jocelyn—Berceuse (Wheeler, Kline and Dunlap); Reverse: Blow, Trumpet, Blow, for the World is White With May (Orpheus Quartet.)

35617, By the Shores of Gitchee Gumee. 2. Then the Little Hiawatha (Wheeler, Kline and Dunlap); Reverse: Ewa-ya (Elsie Baker.)

10-inch double-face Zonophone solos by William Wheeler (1910-1911)

5629, Forget, Forgive; Reverse: Thine Eyes So Blue and Tender.

5632, Oh Lola, Fair as Flowers; Re-

(Continued on page 58)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 31)

era, remaining one of its leading tenors for 12 consecutive seasons. And from 1932 to 1935 he became a prized member of the Metropolitan Opera forces, returning there for the 1940-41 season.

Meanwhile, he frequently went to Italy and South America, sang in France, gave recitals in England and elsewhere, composed, recorded, made movies in Italy, and in 1957 did what seemed to be the fashionable thing—visited the USSR. Now retired, Schipa teaches singing in Rome.

From the electrical recordings Schipa made for HMV in Milan, Angel has chosen a group fully representative of the famed lyric tenor:

TITO SCHIPA, Opera and Song Recital, Angel Record COLH 117:

Side I - Sento nel Core (Scarlati) (April 19, 1932): Le Violette (Scarlati) (January 1939); Son Tutta Duolo (Scarlati) (January 1939); La Sonnambula: Prendi, l'anel ti dono, w. TOTI DAL MONTE (October 4, 1933), L'Elisir d'Amore: Una furtiva lagrima (December 13, 1929); Don Pasquale: Com'è gentil (October 8, 1932); Don Pasquale: Tornami a dir che m'ami, w. TOTI DAL MONTE (October 4, 1933).

Side II - Orfeo ed Euridice: Che farò senza Euridice (May 9, 1932); Werther: Ah! non mi ridestar (May 4, 1934); Manon: Ah! dispar, vision (May 4, 1934); O del Mio Amato Ben (Donaudy) (October 12, 1933); L'Amico Fritz: Suzel, buon di... Tutto tace (Cherry Duet), w. MAFALDA FAVERO (January, 1937).

Schipa's voice is among those difficult to describe, for it possesses a peculiar fascination all its own. Fine of texture and slightly veiled when not released with brightness, it is amazingly light and agile, yet had enough stamina to fill substantially the parts of Turiddu, Loris and Cavaradossi among weightier fare. His extensive repertoire also included roles in "Mignon," "Lucia," "Sonnambula," "Lakmé," "Mefistofele," "The Barber," "Traviata," "Fra Diavolo," "Bohème," "Zaza," "Favorita," "Rigoletto," "Don Pasquale," "Don Giovanni," "Falstaff," "Manon Lescaut," "Butterfly," "Werther," "Marcella," "L'Elisir," "La Rondine," etc.

However ethereal in mezza-voca or nimble in rapid passages, one of the admirable attributes of Schipa's singing was the absence of anything resembling the production or the female voice. Instead of the male false falsetto, which is the equivalent of the female head voice often used by tenors to ease a high tone, Schipa applied a well-proportioned mixture of the chest, palate and pharynx resonators.

And that is the way it should be. Those pharyngeal (false falsetto) tones in men make them sound like old-time vaudeville female impersonators. It's good in fun, but not in serious singing. Let men sing like men, and women like women, and as the French wisely put it—Vive la difference!

The Angel COLH 117 is an excellent collection of recordings by a splendid artist—every selection a thing of beauty. He could have changed "Son Tutta Duolo" to "Son Tutto Duolo," though. If a song was written for a girl, no sense keeping it that way when a man sings it.

Both the Battistini and Schipa Long Play Angel discs are superbly recorded and faultlessly set in correct pitch. Could one ask for more?

ELIZABETH &amp; WILLIAM WHEELER

(Continued from page 37)

verse: Love Abiding (Henry Burr.)

5665, My Soul is Athirst for God; Reverse: When I Know That Thou Art Near Me (Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler.)

5691, Sweet Miss Mary; Reverse: Curly Head (Byron G. Harlan.)

5768, 'Tis All That I Can Say; Reverse: Save Up Your Kisses for a Rainy Day (Elise Stevenson and Henry Burr.) 10-inch Zonophone duets by Elizabeth & William Wheeler

5630, See the Pale Moon; Reverse: How d'ye Do?

5631, When Life Is Brightest; Reverse: I Cannot Sing the Old Songs.

5665, When I Know That Thou Art Near Me; Reverse: My Soul is Athirst for God (William Wheeler.)

2-minute Edison Standard cylinder duets by Elizabeth Wheeler and Harry Anthony (John Young.)

10266, Sweet Dreamland Faces; 10290, Meet Me Tonight in Dreamland; 10302, Sweet Bunch of Daisies.

4-minute Edison Amberol cylinder solo by "Miss Elizabeth Wheeler"

376, Dreams.

4-minute Edison Amberol cylinder duets by Elizabeth Wheeler and Harry Anthony 315, Garden of Dreams; 328, Ring o' Roses; 332, Mascotte—Gobble Duet.

4-minute Edison Blue Amberol cylinder duet by Elizabeth Wheeler and John Young 1874, Mascotte—Gobble Duet.

2-minute Indestructible (Columbia) cylinder solos by Elizabeth Wheeler 1239, Last Rose of Summer; 1256, Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms; 1279, Goodnight, Dear.

2-minute Indestructible cylinder duet by Elizabeth Wheeler and Idelle Patterson, contralto 1253, Oh, Morning Land.

4-minute Indestructible cylinder solos by Elizabeth Wheeler

3024, Goodbye; 3038, Bonnie, Sweet Bessie.

2-minute U.S. Everlasting cylinder solo by Elizabeth Wheeler

209, Last Rose of Summer.

4-minute U.S. Everlasting cylinder solo by William Wheeler

1244, Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes.

10-inch double-face Pathe solos by William Wheeler (1917-18)

(Both sides by Mr. Wheeler unless otherwise noted.)

20159, Brighten the Corner Where You Are; Reverse: If Your Heart Keeps Right.

20160, I Walk With the King; Reverse: Since Jesus Came Into My Heart.

20212, Hawaii and You (with accompaniment by Louise and Ferara Hawaiian Orchestra); Reverse: The Glow Worm (Louise and Ferara Hawaiian Orchestra.)

20242, O Holy Night; Reverse: Holy, Holy (Marion Crawford, contralto.)

20251, Ninety and Nine; Reverse: Safe in the Arms of Jesus.

20275, I Need Thee Every Hour; Reverse: One Sweetly Solemn Thought (Rose Bryant, contralto.)

20304, Saved By Grace; Reverse: Softly and Tenderly.

WANTED

IVES, IVES-BLAKESLEE, Carpenter, Kenton, Hubley, N. N. Hill Brass Co., Gong Bell Manufacturing Co., Shepard Hardware Co., J. & E. Stevens Co., Kyser, Rex and Wilkins. Want any catalogs issued by these companies. See my large ad in the Old Mechanical Banks Department of this issue. — F. H. Griffith, P.O. Box 10644, Pittsburgh 35, Pa. t1x

WANTED: Old iron hitching posts and old tin tobacco tags. — R. F. French, 507½ Highland Drive, Marshalltown, Iowa. f122611

BOTTLES, FLASKS and bitters. Buy or sell. List 25c. Wanted: New England Pineapple only oval dish, handled mugs and cruets. — The Empty Bottle, Box 27, New London, Conn. ap128271

WHISKEY AMERICANA: Bottles, ads, posters, licenses, books, magazines or anything relating to pre-prohibition whiskey business. — Barton Distilling Company, 134 North LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. f120061

AUTO, toy & train catalogs wanted: Old Lionel, American Flyer, Ives, etc., train catalogs; all toy manufacturers or jobbers catalogs; all automobile sales literature, catalogs and service manuals; old toys and toy cap pistols and clipper ship sailing cards. — A. J. Koveleski, 331 Adams Ave., Scranton 3, Pa. Phone 1-717-DL 2-1963. n3008

DENTAL WANTED: Instruments, advertising material and unusual old toothbrushes and dentifrices. — Dr. Francis M. Blauston, 39 Greenridge Ave., White Plains, N. Y. au6407

PLEASE NOTE my display ad in Mechanical Bank Department of this issue, listing various wants. — F. H. Griffith, P.O. Box 10644, Pittsburgh 35, Pa. t1x

MEDICAL INSTRUMENTS: Bleeders, etc. — J. Koelliker, 4610 Wood St., Wilmoughby, Ohio. f12407

WATCHFOBS WANTED advertising contractors, threshers, farm machinery. Buy single or lots. — Howard Shideler, Lathrop, Calif. f12069

LACY SANDWICH, salts, cup plates, lamps, blown glass, flasks, paperweights, historical china, spatter, soft paste, Lowestoft, American pottery, pewter, primitive paintings, fracturs.—Virginia Wood, 4 Hillside Rd., Baltimore 10, Md. f6069

Antique Clothing Wanted: mens, womens, childrens, clothing for years 1850 to 1926. Also accessories, costume jewelry, etc. State price, color, condition, size. — Eve Doyer, 1626 N. 46th St., Phoenix, Ariz. o3027

FANS. Fine old fans, particularly 18th century, early 19th century. Send desc. & price. Send on approval if you wish. Please pack well in crush-proof box and include price. — Mrs. Frank Sanchez, 77 Longview Ave., White Plains, N. Y. o3065

ART BOOKS, also ships, adventure, medicine, Americana, old school books, etc. wanted. — P.O. Box 538, Gloucester, Mass. ja6676

ORNATE HAND MIRROR, shears, lance, preferably pearl.—Dr. F. Blauston, 39 Greenridge, White Plains, N. Y. o3652

HOOR GLASSES. Please state age, price, description.—18th Century Shop, 10 So. Brentwood Blvd., Clayton 5, Mo. s1821

Conducted by
JIM WALSH

Joe Natus and Will F. Denny

By JIM WALSH

PART I

I. After Many Years

Ever since my name first appeared in HOBBIES, I have been wanting to tell the life stories of two unquestionably pioneer recording artists — Joseph Natus and William F. Denny.

I always think of these two long-dead singers together, for there were many resemblances in both their careers and their looks. Both appear to have been born in 1860, so if they were still living they would be 100 or 101 years of age. Both had dark hair parted in the middle, but Denny's was the thicker. Both wore bow ties.

Both were tenors and both were around 40 before they became well known record makers. The recording careers of both ended before double-faced records became common. Natus' name never appeared on a double-faced disc, and Denny's was on just one. Neither made a four-minute cylinder or was listed in a cylinder record catalog after 1912.

There was an element of pathos in the deaths of both at relatively early ages, and neither seems to have left many near relations. Natus was survived by a brother and Denny by his wife.

Neither was much of a "team work" man. Natus made duets with only one other artist, and Denny was always a "lone wolf." But both were featured in a series of Edison "Vaudeville Specialties." Denny's was No. 5 and Natus' No. 6.

There were differences between the two. Natus was of German descent, and Denny presumably was Irish. Except in his duets, Natus was almost entirely a ballad singer, while Denny did little except comedy work. Natus had a clear, robust tenor, Denny's was the high and rather thin typically Irish comic type. But the thing that joins the pair most closely today is the relative obscurity of their lives.

As I said, I have wanted to write about Natus and Denny for many years, but it seemed I should never be able to piece together sufficient information. Finally, I ordered photostatic copies of the scanty material concerning them in the New York Public Library's archives. From this I learned Natus died in 1917 in Rome, N.Y. I already knew Denny had died in 1908 in Seattle, Wash.

I then obtained copies of the death certificates of both, and along with getting Natus' came a pleasant incident. I received a handwritten note from the Rome registrar of vital statistics, Mrs. Emily M. Boustedt, which said:

"Enclosed is the death certificate, as you requested. . . I do hope this will help you in your writing for HOBBIES Magazine. If you could send me a copy of the magazine with the article I certainly would enjoy it."

During the years I have been writing these HOBBIES articles I have received generally courteous treatment from custodians of death certificates, but this was the first time a registrar had ever shown warm interest in what I was doing. Mrs. Boustedt is obviously the type of person one likes at first sight, and if I should ever visit Rome, N.Y., I shall call on her. During the months that have followed she has become one of my best friends through correspondence.

Meanwhile, you may be sure that this issue of HOBBIES will go with my best wishes to the friendly registrar. With the aid of the photostat she sent, I am now able to tell as much as I am likely to find out at this late date concerning Joe Natus. And after his story I shall set down what I have learned of Will Denny.

II. Natus Records for Edison

Joseph Natus was born in Detroit, Mich., on March 1, 1860 — a little more than a year before this nation became embroiled in the Civil War whose centenary is now being observed. His father was John Natus and his mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Hass. Both were born in Germany.

As Joe Natus grew up he developed a tenor voice of more than ordinary quality. He probably was not yet 21 when he began to appear on the stage as a ballad singer and comedian, mostly with minstrel companies.

His recording career began not later than 1900 and conceivably earlier, although I have not been able to find his name in any catalog prior to the beginning of this century. It is possible that he made Berliner discs in the late 1890's, but I lack Berliner catalogs and have not found any Berliner records by him, with one exception to be mentioned later. And it certainly was not recorded before 1901.

I don't know how it happened that Natus first began singing for phonographs and was soon being engaged by all the important companies of 60 years ago. The late Fred Rabenstein, Edison's recording paymaster for many years, told me he believed Natus was related to Albert Benzler, the versatile gentleman who provided piano accompaniments for Edison artists, recorded bell, xylophone, and piano solos, and even on occasion, played a violin in the Edison orchestra. It may be that Benzler's influence won Natus his chance before the recording horn.

Natus' first solo records were successful and he soon became the first duet partner of one of the most brilliant of recording comedians, Arthur Collins, whose phonograph career had begun in 1898.

The name of Natus' first two-minute Edison cylinder sounds like a comic song instead of the ballad type with which he came to be chiefly identified. The title was "Since I Married That Actor Man," and its number, 7490, indicates it was issued about the middle of 1900. The following other solos were listed before he made his first duet with Collins:

7495, "She Rests By the Suwanee River;" 7496, "Bethlehem" (a sacred number); 7497, "Why Did They Sell Killarney?"; 7518, "Side by Side" (not the song by the same name which became popular in 1927); 7521, "The Afterwhile"; 7522, "My Dorothy"; 7537, "Her Name Is Rose"; 7546, "My Department Store Girl"; 7562, "I'd Still Believe You True"; 7564, "Green Above the Red" (this could be either a song about train engineers' signals or an Irish defiance of England!); 7565, "Vaudeville Specialty No. 6"; 7585, "Little Black Me"; 7586, "Blue and the Gray"; 7587, "A Bird in a Gilded Cage"; 7594, "Star of My Life"; 7601, "Fatal Rose of Red"; 7609, "Garden By the Sea"; 7627, "For Freedom and Ireland"; 7631, "Dear Old Bess and I"; 7632, "A Flower From the Garden of Life"; 7652, "Give Us Another Lincoln"; 7709, "Lovers Once But Strangers Now"; 7736, "Down By the River Side," and 7741, "Where the Mississippi Flows."

Most of these largely trivial tunes are gone and forgotten now, but a few are well remembered. "She Rests By the Suwanee (or Swannee) River" seems to have been one of Natus' stock numbers, for he recorded it extensively.

In the short-lived vaudeville specialty, he sang "You May Forget the Singer," and impersonated the yodler, J. K. Emmett, the Irish tenor, William Scanlan, and J. W. Kelley, the "Rolling Mill Man" monologist.

The first Collins and Natus duet for Edison was announced early in 1901. It was No. 7756, "Coon, Coon, Coon" (a title that today would be barred from public use), which had been written in 1900 by Gene Jefferson and Leo Friedman. The latter is best remembered now as the composer of "Meet Me Tonight in Dreamland" and "Let Me Call You Sweetheart."

This photo of Joe Natus was taken from a 1906 booklet containing photographs of Edison cylinder record artists. Denny made no Edison records after 1902. On the same page were the great cornet player, Bohumir Kryl, and Cal Stewart, the "Uncle Josh" monologist, who died in December, 1919. Kryl died August 7, 1961, aged 86, at his summer home in Wilmington, N. Y.

Looked at from the sympathetic point of view, there is a touch of tragedy in the plaint of the Negro who says "I wish my color would fade . . . morning, night, and noon, I wish I was a white man 'stead of a coon, coon, coon!" Collins and Natus, however, shouted it in the burlesque, boisterous manner typical of "coon song" interpreters of their era.

But in 1940 an unidentified basso, who sounds like Wilfred Glenn, gave the song real poignancy and pathos when he sang it in a Victor album of Song Hits of 1900.

Three Collins and Natus duets were listed in the May, 1901, catalog, and others followed rapidly during the less than two years in which the team's association endured. Before the end of 1901 they had recorded:

7754, "Marooned and His Bike;" 7755, "Oh, Such a Business" (a Jewish dialect number); 7816, "I Never Trouble Trouble Until Trouble Troubles Me;" 7850, "I must-A Been a Dreamin';" 7889, "I Got Mine" (one of the greatest favorites in their repertoire); 7905, "Tell Us, Pretty Ladies" (one of several parodies or burlesques on "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden" from "Floradora"); and 7935, "Love Me, Lize."

Meanwhile, Natus had recorded these solos:

7752, "Day By Day;" 7775, "A New World;" 7776, "Everlasting Light;" 7791, "Sweet Annie Moore" (an unusual combination of sentiment and frivolity); 7804, "The Village Belle;" and 7871, "I've a Longing in My Heart for You, Louise."

One of the most popular stage attractions in those days was a series of musical plays featuring the Rogers Brothers, specialists in comic German impersonations. Maurice Levi, who had his own band which recorded for Edison from 1908 to 1910, wrote the music for the Rogers Brothers shows. One of the brothers was married to the comedienne, Maude Raymond, who made a handful of Victor and Edison records.

The Phonogram for November, 1901, listed a Collins and Natus duet (No. 7969) of "The Wedding of the Reuben and the Maid," from "The Rogers Brothers in Washington." In that same issue, Natus had a solo, 7994, "When the Lilies of the Valley Bloom Again."

Other duets and solos followed, made by the old-time duplicated process. One of the most popular was No. 7997, an early Harry Von Tilzer composition, "Whoa, Bill!"

Early in 1902, Thomas A. Edison introduced his "gold moulded" method which did away with the duplicating system, and the June, 1902, Phonogram announced "Whoa, Bill!" had been remade by the new process. The duplicating procedure was permanently discontinued July 25, 1902.

The June, 1902, Phonogram also listed 8008, "McManus and the Parrot," by Collins and Natus, and 8031, "Endless Day," a religious solo with organ accompaniment, by Natus. In July, the duo sang one of their most popular comic skits, No. 8045, "Back, Back to the Woods," and there were gold mould remakes of "Tell Us, Pretty Ladies," "The Wedding Of The Reuben and the Maid," and No. 8000, "Tell Me, Dusky Maidens" — another "Floradora" take-off.

In September, the pair was on hand with another remake, No. 7955, "Love Me, Lize." October was a big month for them. On 8161, Natus asked "Could You Be True to Eyes of Blue?" He also sang 8179, "Rosalie, My Sweet Rosalie," and 8205, which turned out to be his last Edison solo, "Have You Seen My Sweetheart in His Uniform of Blue?"

On 8163, Collins and Natus were heard in "You Couldn't Hardly Notice It At All," and on 8175, in "Nursery Rhymes" — From "The Beauty and the Beast." They also had an amusing offering, No. 8196, called "Marion," about a girl named Marion who lived in Marion, Ohio, and whose sweetheart was dead set on marryin' her.

In the November Phonogram were three more Collins and Natus duets — the last Edison was ever to offer: 8218, "Down the Line With Molly;" 8219, "Jerry Murphy is a Friend of Mine," and 8220, "Shirtwaist Band."

There was also two duets by Collins with Byron G. Harlan, who succeeded Natus as Collins' partner. Collins and Harlan sang together on records for 22 years and had the most successful, long-lasting partnership in the history of the phonograph. Their initial Edison was 8238, on which they sang Harry Von Tilzer's smash hit of 1902, "Down Where the Wurzbürger Flows," and 8239, "The Troubles of the Reuben and the Maid," from "The Rogers Brothers in Harvard."

After this there was never another new Edison record by Joe Natus. During his Edison association of a little more than two years he had recorded 36 solos and 19 duets with Collins. When Edison discontinued the two-minute wax cylinders in the fall of 1912, only one Natus solo was left, J. Fred Helf's old-fashioned sob-song, "The Fatal Rose of Red." "I Got Mine" stayed on, but had been remade in 1906 by Collins and Harlan.

Joe Natus was the first duet partner of Arthur Collins, shown here at the right of a New Edison Diamond Disc phonograph. Byron G. Harlan, who succeeded Natus, is at the left. This photo was taken in 1923 or 1924 when Collins and Harlan were giving an Edison "tone test" in Portland, Ore. They made records together for 22 years and were the most successful duet team in the phonograph's history.

We probably shall never know why Collins and Natus separated, but the "split" probably was caused by Natus' health, which seems to have been poor for much of his mature life. He did no more duet work after 1902, and his appearances as a soloist thereafter were not frequent.

His relations with Harlan must have been friendly, for I had almost forgotten this — a male ensemble composed of Collins, Harlan, Natus, and A. D. Madeira, calling itself the Big Four Quartet, made five Edison cylinders between October, 1900, and May, 1901. The titles were: 7728, "Goodbye, Dolly Gray;" 7765, "My Charcoal Chamer;" 7766, "There's Where My Heart is Tonight;" 7767, "Ben Bolt;" and 7781, "Corn Bread."

III. Lambert Indestructible Cylinders

During the period in which he was making Edison Standard records, Natus also was singing for Lambert, the Chicago firm which marketed the first Indestructible cylinder. I have seen only the September, 1903, Lambert catalog, but it contains five Natus solos: 500, "My Creole Sue;" 504, "My Wild Irish Rose;" 505, "The Honeysuckle and the Bee;" 506, "When You Were Sweet Sixteen;" and 508, "Tale of the Kangaroo."

No Collins and Natus duets are listed under their names, but there is a group of miscellaneous duets by unidentified performers, in which three almost certainly are by them: 570, "Coon, Coon, Coon;" 571, "McManus and the Parrot;" and 572, "Whoa, Bill!"

Collins and Harlan have two under their own names: 932, "Nursery Rhymes;" and 935, "Jerry Murphy is a Friend of Mine," both of which Collins and Natus had sung for Edison.

Because of insufficient capital and patent litigation, the Lambert Company was short-lived. I doubt that Natus made any records for it other than those just mentioned.

IV. Columbia Cylinders and Discs

Trying to trace all the Columbia records which Joe Natus or any other artist made close to 60 years ago is my idea of a tough assignment. It is a job the researcher finds almost impossible to handle satisfactorily, because, for half a dozen years ending in 1907, Columbia didn't publish names of singers in its catalogs.

Instead, "vocalists" were identified simply as tenor, baritone, contralto, and the like. The idea seems to have been that since the records had spoken announcements telling who was doing the work there was no need of repeating that information in the catalogs. The needs of record collectors were given little consideration in that remote era when catalog owners were asked to "destroy all previous lists" as soon as a new one came out.

Faced with this handicap, all I can do is jot down the names and numbers of records that sound as if they might have been made by Natus, giving special consideration to those which duplicated titles he had sung for other companies. I would say, then, it's likely, but I don't guarantee, that the following listed in the 1901 Columbia cylinder catalog, were sung by Joe Natus:

4227, "Why Did They Sell Killarney?;" 4233, "Blue and the Gray;" 4240, "Little Black Me;" 4249, "My Department Store Girl;" 4250, "Bethlehem;" 4251, "Flower from the Garden of Life;" 4273, "She Rests By the Suwanee River;" 4280, "Green Above the Red;" 31418, "Eyes of blue;" and 31420, "For Freedom and Ireland."

It's quite likely, of course, that some of these were sung by other artists — also that, with nothing but "tenor" to guide me, I have missed some that Natus made.

When I turn to the 1906 Columbia cylinder catalog, I find no solos that I can attribute with reasonable assurance to Natus. The 1907 catalog, in which the sensible custom of identifying artists by name was resumed, contains none.

A fair number of titles in the 1906 Columbia disc catalog, however, sound as if they may have been made by Natus, although a majority may be the work of other tenors — among them Henry Burr, Harry Macdonough, George Gaskin, Albert Campbell, and Dan W. Quinn — who recorded for Columbia. Among them are:

113, "Goodbye, Dolly Gray;" 171, "Uncle Harry, What Is Love?;" 326, "He Laid Away a Suit of Gray to Wear the Union Blue;" 352, "Story of the Rose;" 359, "Side by Side;" 688, "As Your Hair Grows Whiter;" 895, "Rosalie;" 913, "Rose of Killarney;" 942, "My Starlight Queen;" 1012, "I Wonder If Your Love Will Last;" 1153, "In the City of Sighs and Tears;" and 1457, "Like a Star That Falls from Heaven."

I can positively identify seven-inch record 1159, issued in January, 1904, as being by Natus, because I have a file of The Columbia Record from 1904 to 1907 in which it is listed. This was Joe Natus' last appearance as a Columbia singer. The title was "Just Remember I Love You."

Besides the solos, the 1906 disc catalog contains several numbers that had originally been recorded as Collins and Natus duets and were taken from what may be considered their "standard repertoire." There is a possibility, however, they had been re-made by Collins and Harlan:

597, "I Got Mine;" 627, "Moriarity;" 763, "Back, Back to the Woods;" 789, "Coon, Coon, Coon;" 790, "Whoa, Bill;" 791, "Wedding of the Reuben and the Maid;" 792, "I Never Trouble Trouble Until Trouble Troubles Me;" 793, "Oh, Such a Business."

The following may also have been by Collins and Natus, but in view of a considerable gap in the numbering it's more likely they were made after the team had become Collins and Harlan:

882, "Shirt Waist Band;" 911, "Nursery Rhymes;" 969, "Jerry Murphy is a Friend of Mine;" and 944, "Troubles of the Reuben and the Maid."

All were cut out in 1908, when Columbia discontinued single-faced records, excepting "The Wedding of the Reuben and the Maid," which was combined on A403 with "Uncle Josh at the Roller Skating Rink," by Cal Stewart.

The "Reuben" song was listed in the double-faced catalog as by Collins and Harlan, which makes it appear more likely the other duets might also have been remade.

The chief reason the various companies had Collins and Harlan remake the more popular Collins-Natus numbers probably was a desire to take advantage of recording improvements, real or imagined. This included substituting dull, clacking orchestral accompaniments for the

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell. Big list 10c. — Dean Snyder, 739 San Fernando Bldg., Los Angeles 13, Calif. n6637

SHEET MUSIC, 1900 and up. Over 300. Send for free list. All $1 each. — Ric Verdi Antiques, 854 Taunton Ave., East Providence, Rhode Island. d6867

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, old disc phonographs with outside horns. Old record catalogs, books. $7 and up for cylinder reproducers (part that holds the needle). — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3694

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonophone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann, Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. d5867

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 75c each. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. ap120821

ATTENTION! Antique cylinder & disc phonographs bought, sold, repaired. Repairs done on all makes & models, parts replaced, reproducers bought, sold, repaired. I will buy anything in this line. Large list of what I have for sale for stamp. Many rare and hard to find machines in stock. Almost everything in this line available. All machines and parts are perfect. No Junk. — Antique Phonograph Service, c/o Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State St., Tel. 2-4985, Brewer, Maine. d38811

Rare Phonographs: Edison, Columbia, Victors and many others. Records, horns, horn cranes, reproducers, parts and repairs. Send 25c for list. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. o3426

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. ja6468

sometimes tin-panny but frequently brilliant piano, played chiefly on the treble keys.

Too, it must be admitted that in the less than two years they worked together, Collins and Natus did not bring their comedy to the unsurpassable peak reached by the succeeding team. They did little of the hilarious dialog work that was to become such a delightful feature of the efforts of Collins and Harlan, who in all their long career never turned out a poor record.

I have reserved for special mention six discs issued when Columbia made its first flat records in 1902. I know two are by Natus because I have the records, and I believe the other four are his because the numbers run together, and it was the custom in those days to issue batches of records, numbered consecutively, by the same artist.

The six are 52, "Sweet Annie Moore;" 53, "When the Harvest Days Are Over;" 54, "The Game of Eyes;" 55, "In the House of Too Much Trouble;" 57, "Good-bye, Sweet Dreams," and 58, "Just for Today."

There probably also had been a No. 56, but, like "Sweet Annie Moore," it had been cut out before the 1906 catalog was compiled.

The "Annie Moore" song, written in 1901 by John H. Flynn and Ludwig Hollander, is an unusual and amusing affair with a catchy tune. While purporting to be sentimental, it flagrantly indulges in punning by saying: "Annie Moore, Annie Moore, we will never see sweet Annie any more."

The second verse reveals the cause of Annie's disappearance. Her father, Owen Moore, had a big grocery store, but couldn't pay his creditors. Each day found Owen owing more, so he had to leave the old neighborhood by stealth. Natus announces "Sweet Annie Moore" himself.

"In the House of Too Much Trouble" is an oddity. It is a seven-inch, and unannounced, but the singer is Natus. This was one of the innumerable "tear-jerker" songs about sick, deserted, and dying children — most of them irritatingly mawkish and maudlin — that appeared in the 1890's and early 1900's. But, in this instance, the perpetrators, by exercising restraint, have written something I find genuinely touching, much in the manner of Eugene Field's "Little Boy Blue."

The words are by an unusually skilled but unjustly forgotten lyricist, Will A. Heelan, and the pretty tune by J. Fred Half, who became the music publishing partner of a veteran recording director, Fred Hager. Its story tells of a lonely little boy, whose parents objected to the noise he made at play. The chorus goes:

"In the house of too much trouble,
Little boy was in the way.
No one ever seemed to reason
That a boy must sometimes play.
Soon his baby woes and worries
Left a trace upon his brow;
In the house of too much trouble
There are quiet moments now."

Regardless of what sophisticates may think, I can never hear Natus sing that refrain — especially the last two lines — without a choking sensation, for I know there have been too many children who were treated like the lonely little boy of the song.

I imagine that line, "little boy was in the way," suggested the title of Charles K. Harris' "Always in the Way," also recorded by Natus. Harris pulled out all the stops in his "sob-stuff" and made a career of writing about suffering tots.

V. Zon-o-phone and Victor

The Universal Talking Machine Company, which made Zon-o-phone records, was one of the companies for which Natus sang. The June, 1905, Zon-o-phone catalog lists the following nine-inch solos by him, several of which he seems not to have made for any other company:

5881, "I'll Do the Same for You;" 5882, "Man in the Overalls;" 5883, "On a Good Old Trolley Ride;" 5884, "You're the Sweetest Flower That Grows in Tennessee;" 5885, "Always in the Way;" 5886, "Like a Star That Falls From Heaven;" 5887, "Just Remember I Love You;" 5888, "Voice of the Hudson;" 5925, "Dear Old Girl;" 5927, "Down on the Farm;" 5928, "Every Day is Sunshine When the Heart Beats True;" 5931, "For Sale—a Baby;" 5935, "Mississippi Mamie;" 5937, "My Lady Moon."

The titles indicate these songs were recorded in 1903 and '04, when they were popular. Zon-o-phone began making 10-inch records in 1904, but there were none by Natus, who was then in poor health.

The 1905 Zono catalog contains half a dozen records of songs that had been identified with Collins and Natus, but all are listed as by Collins and Harlan.

Since Victor acquired the Zon-o-phone business in 1903, Natus was also recording for Victor when he sang his Zono discs. His Victor career, however, went farther back, for he was one of the first singers to make 10-inch "Monarch" records.

Victor did not begin business as the Victor Talking Machine Company until 1901, but even before that Joe Natus had made records for Eldridge R. Johnson, founder of "His Master's Voice's" fortunes. The oldest Victor catalog I have, dated February, 1902, contains this list of single-faced discs by "Mr. Natus, sentimental ballads" (his first name isn't given):

676, "She Rests By the Suwanee River;" 677, "There is No North or South Today;" 678, "I'd Still Believe You True;" 679, "All for a Man Whose God Was Gold;" 680, "Calling to Her Boy Just Once Again;" 681, "Where the Mississippi Flows;" 682, "A Flower from the Garden of Life;" 683, "The Fatal Rose of Red;" 684, "The Afterwhile;" 685, "Eyes of Blue;" 1108, "My Lonesome Louisiana Lady;" 1111, "The Village Belle;" V1112, "When the Blue Sky Turns to Gold;" V1113, "I Wonder If It's Spring Time;" 1114, "Day By Day;" and 1115, "Mr. Volunteer."

This line-up corresponds pretty closely to Natus' two-minute Edison cylinder list. All the Victors could be had in either seven-inch or 10-inch, except the two which had numbers starting with V. They were seven-inch only.

Early as this catalog was, the first 10 Natus records had already been renumbered. For instance, I have the Victor Monarch record of "She Rests By the Suwanee River," with its original number, 3107.

Many collectors, examining old record lists, have been puzzled as to why Victor appeared to have issued discs numbered through 2,999, then in 1904 skipped over the 3,000 series and resumed numbering at 4,000. Perhaps this is a good place for a brief explanation.

When Victor first began making 10-inch records in 1901, it decided to give them the name of Monarch and start numbering them at 3,000. Numbers of seven-inch records, which had been made earlier under the Improved label, began at 1.

With the arrival of the 10-inch Monarchs, the smaller "platters" were called Victors. After a few months, however, Victor decided there were many selections it would be advisable to offer in both the seven-inch size for 50 cents and the $1.00 10-inch version. Therefore, it was decided to change the system by doing away with the 3,000 series and renumbering them.

Each Monarch had also been given a secondary number denoting the order in which it was recorded, and this became the new catalog number. Thus, because "She Rests By the Suwanee River" was the 676th in recorded sequence, it became record No. 676.

I have Monarch 3001, "When Reuben Comes to Town" (we can't seem to get away from those Roger Brothers songs!) by S. H. Dudley, but the 1902 catalog lists it as No. 519. My own copy has 519 scratched on it as an indication of recording order. It has a piano accompaniment, but by the time the 1902 catalog came out, had been remade with orchestral support.

The Monarch label was used through 1904, and records which were supplied only in 10-inch size had numbers prefixed by M. The highest numbered 3,000 series records in the 1902 catalog is M3622, "Somehow It Made Him Think of Home," from "The Chaperones," by
(Continued on page 40)

RECORDS FOR SALE

(Continued from preceding page)

78 rpm GOLDEN-AGE vocals, rare operatics, orchestral and instrumental records, old catalogs, photos of singers — all may be found on our monthly lists. Also large selection of imported European LPs. — Ross, Court & Co., 3244 Yonge St., Toronto, Canada. mh60821

ROCOO RECORDS. Famous Voices of the Past on modern LP. Caruso, Melba, Patti, Marchesi, Eames, Tammagno, De Luca, Gigli, etc., etc. As reviewed in HOBBIES. Send for complete catalog to 3244 Yonge St., Toronto, Canada. d3065

F.R.P. RE-ISSUES of famous singers. Send for free list and name of nearest dealer. — Famous Records of the Past, 2060 First Ave., New York 29, N. Y. ap128271

I BUY, SELL, TRADE 12" & 16" radio transcriptions, all types. — Paul Scriven, Niles, Ohio. d3422

narrow tan velvet ribbon. It has a round neck edged with a narrow white lace ruffle, shirred on, with a heading of tan velvet ribbon.

The front of the dress is trimmed with lace sewn onto a "V" shape at the waistline. Very short sleeves have an embroidered cuff edged with lace. Open skirt and pantalets are beautifully embroidered to match the waist and belt.

This may be seen at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City. Rendering is by Jean Peszel.

3. A child's dress of 1833. It is of chintz with a dotted ground, floral medallions, scrolls in brown, faded red, and blue on a creamy ground. It is entirely hand-sewn. The hem and bodice are lined with homespun cotton.

The present owner is E. C. Goodwin.

Rendering is by Marie Famularo.

This was a New Jersey state project. The others shown were New York State projects.

4. A child's dress of about the same period as 3. It is of brown linen trimmed with embroidery in the interesting grapevine pattern.

Present owner, Brooklyn Museum. Rendering is by Dorothy Gernon.

5. Child's dress of the same general style as 3 and 4. It is, nevertheless, dated about a decade later—1840. All three of these dresses have full sleeves at the shoulder, tapering down to the wrist. This is a heavy tan cotton three-piece dress with a separate belt.

The high, round neck is finished with piping. The waist is shirred in by a bias fold forming a yoke. Sleeves are finished with a cuff, buttoned with two pearl buttons. The dress is open in front and fastened at the waistband with hooks and eyes.

The long skirt, finished down the front with a tuck, has a two inch hem, the same width as the two tucks over it. The jacket, fastened in front, has the same yoke.

The little costume may be seen at the Museum of the City of New York.

Rendering is by Nancy Crimi.

6. A girl's dress of 1842. It was worn by Charity Maria Banta, aged six years. Judging by the length of the skirt, it probably reached the ankles of Charity and was designed to last a year or two.

It is of printed cotton with a tan ground, pattern of green, red, and black. The straight, tight bodice is shirred in front into a shaped yoke, the shirring drawn to a point at center of waist-line.

A full, shaped sleeve is shirred at the top into a small armhole and trimmed with a narrow ruffle of the same material. The sleeve at wrist is drawn into a narrow double band.

The full skirt has four widths of material. Seams, with the exception of the skirt, and under the arms, are finished with narrow bias piping of the same material as the dress.

Present owner, Mrs. Melville Demorest.

Rendering is by S. Garfinkle.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

a forgotten singer, Walter Jones. After 1904, both 7 and 10-inch had the Victor label.

The discarded numbers of the 3,000 series didn't go to waste. They were transferred to the Victor foreign catalog and used for hundreds of Argentine, Bohemian, Danish, French, French-Canadian, Latin, Norwegian and Swedish selections. Incidentally, for some abstruse reason, Victor's chief rival, Columbia, in 1905 skipped over all numbers from 2,000 to 2,999 in numbering its discs, and at one jump advanced from 1,999 to 3,000.

No Collins and Natus duets appear in the 1902 Victor catalog, but there are four in the dealers' numerical catalog for November 30, 1904. They belong to the pair's already mentioned standard repertoire — 1294, "Coon, Coon, Coon," 1295, "Back to the Woods," 1297, "I Got Mine," and 1298, "Whoa, Bill!" 1299 is a Natus solo, "A Little Boy in Blue."

But here is something odd. The dealers' alphabetical listing, also dated November 30, 1904, says 1295 and 1298 are by Collins and Harlan, and the other two by Collins and Natus! And the catalog issued to the public on August 31, 1904, places all four in the Collins and Harlan column with no mention of Collins and Natus.

As if this weren't confusion enough, I have a Monarch of "Back to the Woods" with a label saying it is by Collins and Natus, but which Collins announces as by Collins and Harlan. And I also have a Grand Prize Victor, made in 1905 after the Monarch label had been discontinued, of "I Got Mine," whose label gives the singers as Collins and Natus. There is no announcement, but the voices are unmistakably Collins and Harlan's.

Apparently, all the Collins and Natus duets were remade by the later team, but through carelessness in labeling and catalog editing their names were sometimes retained. I likewise have a copy of the Monarch version of "Coon, Coon, Coon," announced as by Collins and Natus (Collins again does the announcing), with the recording date, March 15, 1902, scratched on the label. Edison had issued this song by the team a year earlier.

"I Got Mine" is an amusing record. Collins tells of how he went to a colored "crap game." When the place was raided, he grabbed all the money before diving through a window, and he unctuously sums up: "I got mine, boys, I got mine . . . been a leader of society since I got mine!"

In the second stanza, he calls on a girl but another suitor objects to his being there. Again he heads for the window, "but I couldn't get through it in time. Been taking my meals from the mantelpiece since I got mine!" Harlan inquires, "Well, where do you get it?" and Collins, in coy "embarrassment" replies, "Uh—really I wouldn't care to say."

In the late 1920's the song was revived by a clever South Carolina hill-billy recording artist, Chris Bouchillon, who no doubt had heard the ancient recorded interpretation, and it had a lively sale as a Columbia Viva-Tonal disc.

"I Got Mine" is also introduced hilariously in a 1906 Columbia record, "Seeing New York; A Trip on the Rubberneck Coach." The imaginary sightseers hear men lustily singing, "Yes, I got mine, boys, yes, I got mine!" and the driver—either Len Spencer or Bob Roberts—explains, "That's a banquet of the life insurance directors at the Fifth Avenue Hotel," referring to a then notorious insurance scandal. As the singing is resumed, an Irish "passenger" ruefully exclaims, "Yes, an' be gorra, they got mine, too!"

The Victor catalog for August 31, 1904, contains a few new solos by Natus.

Besides "A Little Boy in Blue," there
(Continued on page 45)

DOLL CLOTHES

WANTED: Wholesale market for doll clothes, make them now for outlets from coast to coast. Write for prices, listing your doll costume needs. — Lawana Peetz, P.O. Box 45, Gordonville, Mo.

n3894

DOLL PARTS

MANY ANTIQUE ball jointed doll parts. Reproduction china and bisque arms, legs, and lovely heads.—Country-side Doll Hospital, Salem, Ind. d4084

DOLL ACCESSORIES

DOLL STANDS—11 sizes, 40c to $4.50. Wig Mohair, 9 colors, $1 per yard. Elastic Cord, 6 sizes, 5c to 30c per yard. Literature, samples. — Bessie Magee, Randolph 4, Vermont. f6069

DOLL HATS. Dress up your doll collection with the addition of attractive doll hats. They're wonderful for gifts for the small fry, too. I also do doll repairing, such as rebuilding bodies, feet, fingers, shoulders (on the German jointed dolls that have bisque heads). I can mend kid bodies, if they can be mended, or make a new cloth body. Satisfaction or your money back. — Mary Upshaw, Doll Repairing, 2601 Forbes St., Jacksonville 4, Fla. s13

DO YOU want your dolls dressed correctly? Research done for each. Patterns made to measure for historic dolls. Stamp please.—Miss Christine Spraker, 304 Arnold Ave., Port Allegany, Pa. n3464

GLASS DOLL EYES MFG. All kinds. Estab. 1892. Inquire Lists. No C.O.D. White Hard Wax Doll Use No. 375 Colored Wax Flesh Dolls, White Beeswax, Glass Eyes Dolls Use, etc.—Schumacher, Halladay St., Jersey City, N. J. f60211

DOLL PARTS

10,000 ANTIQUE DOLL PARTS—torsos, arms, legs, complete bodies. Over 400 bisque heads. We will repair, restring, and restore your dolls or sell just parts. Stamp please for price. — Dorothy J. Rawlings, 44934 3rd St. East, Lancaster, Calif. d3426

PAINTINGS FOR SALE

ORIGINAL OIL PAINTINGSBy
European Artists

Direct from Importer!

Landscapes, seascapes, florals or fruits on canvas, in three sizes. Samples 12x16", 3 for $10; low dealer prices in quantities. Italian & Paris scenes to size 24x36".

DEALERS: Write for wholesale price list and illustrations.

MAIL-O-SALES, Dept. H
1115 Walton Ave., New York 52, N. Y.

FOR SALE: Original David Cileland "Lindbergh" painted 1929. Formerly hung in museum. Old Roman gold rubbed frame. Photo 25c. Price $10,000. Write Box 115, Pine Meadow, Conn. o3004

OIL ORIGINALS by Vatano, noted Italian artist, reasonable. Beautiful work. Write. (Imported). — Cook, Box 8023-A, Evansville, Indiana. o1631

PAINTINGS WANTED

Antique Paintings, any subject, even family portraits. Also trade signs and wood carvings. Price no object if desirable item is offered. Please describe. — Leonard Beans, 654 Stuyvesant Ave., Trenton, N. J. d3027

NEW PRINT PRICE GUIDE

Handbook lists prices on approximately 6,000 prints of Currier & Ives, Kellogg and other print makers. Price $4.00 postpaid.

E. G. WARMAN Publishing Co.
8-10 FRANKHOVER STREET
Uniontown, Penna. ifc

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

are 1300, "On a Saturday night;" 2335, "Only a Dream of the Golden Past;" 2336, "The Voice of the Hudson;" 2328, "I'll Wed You in the Golden Summer Time;" 2326, "Like a Star That Falls from Heaven;" 2448, "You'll Always Be the Same Sweet Girl;" M2658, "The Man in the Overalls;" M2664, "Always in the Way;" and 2666, "The Sweetest Flower That Grows in Tennessee."

In addition, two of his 1902 offerings had been renumbered — "A Flower From the Garden of Life" as 2192, and "Mr. Volunteer" as 2193 — and others had been cut out.

Among the later issues, "The Man in the Overalls" deserves attention. It was first listed in the April, 1904, supplement, with the brief comment, "dedicated to the working man." "Always in the Way" and "The Sweetest Flower" came out at the same time. The "Overalls" song, by Raymond A. Browne, is a paean in honor of the ordinary working man and its well written words and stirring music are so effective it's a wonder labor groups haven't adopted it as a sort of unofficial Labor Day anthem. The refrain goes:

"Whatever we are, or whatever we'll be,

At home or afar, on the land or the sea,
There's no brighter star, though of humble degree,

And no one his name recalls.

The man in the blue and the man in the gold

Have done well, that's true — may their fame ne'er grow old!

But greatest of all is the one that we call

The Man in the Overalls!"

Natus sings it splendidly, with plenty of fervor and expression. I have two copies of the record. The first is made with piano accompaniment and has B942 as its index number. By December 1, 1905, however, it had been done over, with index number B2501, and an orchestral background. The earlier version, with the sparkling piano accompaniment, is more to my liking than the second, but Natus perhaps phrases better in the later attempt.

There were no further Natus records until July, 1905, when 4361, "By-Gone Days in Dixie" was announced:

"Admirers of Mr. Natus will be glad to see that he is once more with us, after many months of serious illness. It will be noticed that his voice did not suffer from the confinement, and that in this ballad of Dixie Land his clear tenor and crisp enunciation are the same as of old."

In August, Natus was represented by 4388, "Waltzing With the Girl You Love," described as:

"One of the best waltz songs of the season, with clever words and a most melodious air. It describes the delights of waltzing with the girl of your heart."

That was the last record Victor was ever to issue by Joe Natus. It also marked his permanent disappearance from the recording studios. Never afterwards, my research indicates, did he make another record.

Only four of his numbers were retained in the January, 1908, Victor catalog — "Always in the Way," "The Man in the Overalls," "Waltzing With the Girl You Love," and "I'll Wed You in the Golden Summer Time." These had all disappeared when the 1909 catalog came out.

One more Natus disc remains for consideration and it is a puzzler. It is a 10-inch, reddish-brown single-faced record with a metal ring in the center, manufactured by "E. Berliner, of Montreal, Canada," and bearing patent date of February 24, 1897. The label says it is sung by "Mr. Jos. Natus," and the title is "Tell Me the Way to Go."

The Victor dog trademark is engraved on the blank side. The 10-inch size and the "His Master's Voice" picture show it was not made before 1901. Berliner records were usually made from Victor matrices, but I cannot find that this sobby song ever appeared in a Victor catalog. It tells of a little girl's asking how she could find the way to Heaven to be reunited with her dead mother.

VI. Last Days

Twelve years of life remained to Joe Natus after he made his last record. Just what he did during much of that time is a matter of conjecture, but he probably returned to singing on the stage when his health permitted. During the last six years preceding his death he lived in Utica, N. Y.

On April 27, 1917, The Morning Telegraph, a New York City newspaper which specialized in theatrical and racing information, carried this obituary notice:

"OLD-TIME MINSTREL MAN DIES—Joe Natus Was Famous Tenor—Was Ill But Short Time.

"Utica, N. Y., April 26.—Joe Natus, a famous tenor singer and minstrel man, died at the County Hospital at Rome Saturday, after a brief illness. Mr. Natus (Continued on page 55)

LOGGING IN PENNSYLVANIA. Artist - Linton Park. Size 21X"

AMERICAN PRIMITIVE PAINTINGS WANTED

We want them of every description.

Please describe and send snapshot, if possible.

ARGOSY GALLERY — 116 E. 59th St., New York, N. Y.

tfc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 45)

was very popular as a minstrel man for 35 years, being at various times connected with Haverly's, Primrose & West, Lew Dockstader and Al G. Field. He was very popular among his associates, a man who won the friendship of all whom he met. He was one of the first of the famous tenors who sang and worked for the old Edison Phonograph Company. Six years ago he came to Utica as one of the first of the cabaret entertainers here, and he had been heard by thousands in Utica and vicinity. Two years ago his health failed and he retired from the entertainment business and accepted a position as clerk in the Metropolitan Hotel, where he could still meet many of his friends in the theatrical profession. He was buried in Forest Hill Cemetery. He is survived by a brother."

The death certificate shows Natus was born March 1, 1860, and was single. He died at 12 noon, April 21, when he was 57 years, one month and 20 days of age. Dr. E. Leroy Wilson, of Oneida County Hospital, gave the cause of death as diabetes mellitus, for which he had been treating Natus since March 3.

The certificate said Natus had lived in New York State for 35 years and his last address was the Metropolitan Hotel in Utica. His occupation was listed as actor. He was buried April 24. The name of his surviving brother was not given.

It will be seen that, like Vernon Dalhart, who was just becoming known as a recording artist when Natus died, the one-time minstrel tenor spent his last working days as a hotel clerk.

I wonder if, during those final weeks in the hospital, Natus gave much thought to the time when he had been a singing star and recorded duets with Arthur Collins, who had remained a popular recording artist and was a member of the Record Makers troupe.

As HOBBIES for April, 1957, shows, Collins was with the Record Makers, later the Eight Famous Victor Artists, when they gave a concert in Pulaski, Va., just nine days before Natus's death. On the day he died the troupe was on tour in Pennsylvania.

Probably it didn't occur to Natus that his career would interest a later generation and anyone would go to the trouble, as I have, of trying to find out all that could be learned about him.

I'm sure, though, he would have been pleased if he could have known he would not be forgotten and that, although his old records are growing scarce, some would still be preserved and played almost a half century after his death.

(To be continued)

BELLS

BELLS WANTED

BELL CATALOG, $1. Illustrated with 363 bells and prices I pay. Your $1 refunded when you sell me a bell. —Altman's Antique Bells of the World, 4703 McPherson Ave., St. Louis 8, Mo. o124891

BELLS FOR SALE

BELLS FROM INDIA, for elephant, cow, sheep, prayer, worship. Any one $1.50; dozen assorted $12. —Motiwala, Third Bhoiwada, 38H, Bombay 2, d9069

BRASS Chinese dinner bells, hand-made, figure handle, 5½" overall, from Taiwan, $2.—Cook, Box 6023-A, Evansville, Indiana. o1441

HAME BELLS - a fine set of 5 each leader team bells, $250. —Hap Magee, Danville, Calif. n3652

COMPLETE "Frisco" locomotive bell crated & shipped $185. —Selma Hennessee, 1614 E. Sunshine, Springfield, Mo. n3422

NEWS OF 1861

The events and moods of Civil War days are recreated again in reprints of various issues of the Richmond Enquirer, called by many the "Voice of the Confederacy."

It is interesting to note the format of the old newspapers. In size the Enquirer measured 18" wide by 23" long as opposed to 14" wide and 22" long, the size of the Chicago Tribune today. They did not go in for bold large headlines as present papers do. Articles were longer and tended to a more narrative style than today's style of news writing.

An excerpt from the August 13, 1861 issue concerning the Pony Express follows.

"Fort Kearney, August 6. — The pony express passed this point at 8 o'clock this afternoon, with San Francisco dates of July 27.

"The pony express arrived yesterday with Eastern dates to the 18th inst.

"The overland mail continues to arrive regularly. The price of passage from Sacramento to St. Joseph has been fixed at $150. . ."

Pretty fancy prices for pre-inflationary days, we would say.

A notice for a runaway slave reads as follows: "$100 Reward For the delivery to me of my carriage driver, Beverly. He is 27 years old; color black; six feet high; face covered with short beard and moustache; large eye-brows and curling eye-lashes. He probably travels in a dark grey mixed summer coat, or blue cloth, with brass buttons and carpet bag. He says he has read Shakespeare, and may travel with a forged pass, and shave off his beard when he reads this. He has relatives at Dr. R. H. Stewart's in King George, and Mrs. Dr. Frank Taliaferro's in Orange, with whom he has been recently corresponding by letter. His object being evidently to escape, he is doubtless lurking about the shore of the Potomac, or making his way Northward, and may be about our encampments. The above reward will be paid if caught over 50 miles from Fredericksburg, otherwise $50.

A. N. Bernard"

Most of the news is concerned with the progress of the war. Eyewitness accounts of engagements are given and run on at some length. The news, as one may imagine, is rather biased in favor of the South. However, in spite of getting a one-sided view of the war, it is almost like being there when it happened. Truly reading these reprints makes one feel as if he were an eyewitness to history in the making.

Yearly subscriptions of 52 issues at $12 may be obtained by writing Civil War Enquirer, Inc., Box 9086, Arlington 9, Va. Packets of three newspapers for $1 are also available.

OLD VEHICLES

WANTED

ANYTHING pertaining to early automobile era - cars, trucks, chassis, motors, brass lights, horns, etc. Literature all kinds - catalogs, trade publications, manuals, folders, posters, pictures. Motorcycle, bicycle, horse era literature. —B. J. Pollard, 14300 Prairie, Detroit 38, Mich. o3255

Wanted: Instruction and parts manuals for Sear's Motor Cars, 1910 Buick Model "19," and 1913-1914 Moyer. Also Penna. licensed drivers badges, and brass duster buttons picturing old cars. —Carl M. Rustine, R.D. 3, Stroudsburg, Pa. o122553

WANTED: Automobiles, any condition: Mercer, Simplex, Packard, Rolls Royce, Locomobile, Thomas Flyer, Pope Hartford Losier, Alco. —David Tunick, Brook Dr., Greenwich, Conn. o124431

OLD AUTO LAMPS, horns, books, old cars, etc., wanted. —D. D. Way, 11 Eastwood Ct., Oakland, Calif. n6675

AUTOMOBILE catalogs, manuals, magazines. Please describe fully, with price for each item offered. —Reverdy Whitlock, 15 Broadway, New Haven, Conn. n6046

OLD AUTO ITEMS WANTED: Brass auto lamps, bulb horns, radiator mascots and ornaments in metal and glass, radiator name plates and emblems, Pennsylvania license plates, old auto books and show-room catalogs, service manuals. Royal Doulton china: Plates, cups, saucers and pitchers; any pieces with old auto pictures. Early toy autos and toy cap pistols. —A. J. Koveleski, 331 Adams Ave., Scranton 3, Pa. Phone 1-717 - DI. 2-1963. n34201

FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Pierce-Arrow priming cups, new condition, large stock $3 each. Write to: Duminaco's Antiques, Washington Rd., Angola, N. Y. d3253

FOR SALE ANTIQUE BICYCLES

Evolution of cycling 34. Specimen from the waker through the Gay Ninety's.

Museum Pieces

W. LOWELL CAMPBELL

129 N. Pearl St.

Bridgeton, N. J.

FAVORITE Recording ARTISTS

Joe Natus and Will F. Denny

By JIM WALSH
PART II

VII. Early Obscurity

Since the preceding installment was written, I have found a program issued by the Lew Dockstader Minstrel Company, which shows Joe Natus was a member during its 1907 season. The troupe had a remarkable group of singers including several who were famous for their talking machine records.

Besides Natus, there were Will Oakland, W. H. Thompson, and Gus Reed; and Manuel Romain had been with the Company the season before. The back page reproduces the sheet music cover of "I'll Be Waiting, Dearie, When You Come Home," with the statement that it was "being sung with great success by Joe Natus, with Lew Dockstader and His Great Minstrel Company."

Besides singing, Natus appeared in two comic skits. He was "Officer Squadeal, just in time," in "A Quick Lunch," featuring Neil O'Brien, and took the part of "Chief Gezizzerus" in "Joining the Elks," "a good-natured travesty on secret societies." Gus Reed was "First Lieutenant Gezizzerus."

If it has been hard to find anything concerning the early life of Joe Natus, the obscurity surrounding Will F. Denny is worse. I do not even know when or where Denny was born, but seem to have heard that Boston was his birthplace.

The first reference to him I have found is in the July, 1898 Phonoscope, under the heading of "Gallery of Talent Employed for Making Records," where he is mentioned as a Columbia artist. Along with the familiar photo of a mustachioed man approaching middle age is this remark:

"Will F. Denny is a very popular vaudeville singer. His specialties are ballads and comic songs. He has a dashing style that gives to all his songs a peculiar freshness, and has made him a favorite with the large public that gets its music through the graphophone."

"Mr. Denny came to New York with the prestige of a high reputation achieved in Boston. He took a place very quickly among the record-makers whose work is always in demand. He has therefore much to keep him employed and is a very industrious worker."

The foregoing may be supplemented by two mentions of Denny which I have found in letters from the late Frank Dorian, a pioneer Columbia Phonograph Co. official. I always inwardly bless Mr. Dorian's name when I think of his unvarying kindness and patience in answering the letters I wrote to him as an eager-beaver youngster, anxious to learn all I could about the early phonograph days. Much of what he told me has been passed on in these HOBBIES articles. In one letter Mr. Dorian said:

"Will Denny was another one of the real old-timers. His first records were made for the New England Phonograph Co. (Boston) in the early days when Calvin G. Child was the recording expert for that Company. After the New England Phonograph Co. failed, Denny moved to New York and made records promiscuously for any of the numerous cylinder record makers who flourished during the period from 1895 to 1905. As far as I know Denny made few, if any, disc records."

The "high reputation" which The Phonoscope said Denny achieved in Boston obviously was with the New England Phonograph Co. I have only one of that Company's catalogs, dated August 1, 1893, and it contains nothing but band, orchestral, and instrumental records. There is a foreword, reading:

"In addition to our instrumental music, we carry in stock a large variety of vocal records obtained from the leading operatic singers and comedians passing through our city. We do not catalog these numbers, as it is frequently impossible to obtain but a limited number from some of our best performers, and we prefer not to disappoint our patrons by presenting to them a long list of songs, etc., which after a few days we would be utterly unable to fill. We shall always be pleased to furnish at any time lists of records on hand not in our catalog."

Denny may have been among the unnamed "best performers."

Mr. Dorian's second reference to Denny covers much the same ground as his first:

"I also remember Will Denny and Edward M. Favor; but do not know whether either of them is still alive. Both of them started their careers as recording artists with the old New England Phonograph Co. In Boston, at the time Calvin G. Child was in charge of that recording laboratory. "Later, some time after Child had left New England Company to join the Columbia organization, Denny and Favor migrated to New York. There they made records for both the Columbia and Edison Companies."

It probably will surprise most record collectors to learn that Child ever was associated with Columbia. His claim to remembrance rests almost entirely on his having been, for many years, the head of Victor's Red Seal department, and the intimate associate and confidante of most of the great "classical" singers and instrumentalists.

Conducted by
JIM WALSH

During Child's Victor years he assumed a hoity-toity attitude toward the popular performers and inveighed against the "Coney Island influence" in recorded music. Despite, however, his association with, and admiration for Caruso, Paderewski, Schumann-Heink, Melba, and scores of other exalted musicians, it was he who first gave Will Denny his chance to become a popular recording artist.

An interesting article about Denny was published in The Dramatic Mirror for May 23, 1903:

"In this issue of THE MIRROR there appears a picture of Will F. Denny, the well-known singing comedian. Mr. Denny began his career in Boston in concert work, and followed this line for a long time. He made a brilliant record in Boston, and sang for nearly six years at the most exclusive affairs and the best concerts given at the 'Hub.'

"He came to New York several years ago, and made an instantaneous hit at clubs, musicales, and concerts, getting more work than he could attend to. He remained in this field for some time, and finally made up his mind to go into vaudeville."

"His reception proved that this was a wise move, and he immediately established a reputation that has been increasing ever since. He has toured this country from one end to the other, and has a large following in every city."

"Mr. Denny's methods are original. He believes in changing his songs as frequently as possible, and uses the greatest care in picking out his selections, so that there are never any 'dead ones' in his collection."

"Many of the songs that have been popular during the past 10 years have been introduced by him. He has paid the penalty for this by having to constantly add new songs to his repertoire, as he himself discards a song as soon as it is taken up by those who believe in following rather than leading."

"Mr. Denny is a genuine 'bell-cow,' and will never 'fall in behind,' if he can help it. He is one of the few singers whose services are in constant demand by the phonograph people, as his voice is peculiarly adapted for the making of good records."

VIII. Denny's Victor and Zono-phone Records

Those quotations constitute the only background I have been able to establish for Will F. Denny. What remains now is to consider his records. Although Victor was by no means the first company for which he recorded, I have a reason for beginning with his Victor output.

It contains several numbers which he sang for other companies and which seem to have been staple items in his repertoire. Going through the old record catalogs, one does not get the impression that Denny was as quick to discard songs as the Mirror article suggests. The following titles are in the Victor catalog (with his name misspelled as Denney) for February, 1902:

"953. I Want Someone to Care for Me. V954. How the Irish Beat the Band. 956. Any Old Place I Can Hang My Hat Is 'Home, Sweet Home' To Me. 957. I'm Looking at You, Lize. 958. The Tick, Tack Tocking of the Clocking on Her Stocking. 959. The Shadows on the Door (comic laughing song). 960. Oh, Don't It Tickle You? 961. At the Pan-I-Marry-Can (the Buffalo Exposition Song). 962. Sarah From Syracuse. M3563. The Turkey and the Turk."

All these could be obtained in both 7 and 10-inch, except V954 which was seven inch only, and M3563 which was restricted to 10-inch. The sequence of the other 10-inch records suggests they had originally been in the 3,000 Monarch Series, then had their numbers changed.

That is evidently true, for I have "The Shadows on the Door," numbered 3567. The label is too faded for me to make out the date of recording on this disc "manufactured exclusively by Eldridge R. Johnson, Camden, N. J."

These 10 records were all Denny made for Victor—at least all that were issued. Possibly he had sung earlier for Berliner. And a strange thing is that they stayed in the catalog such a short time. By 1904 all had been discontinued. We must wonder why Victor gave such short shrift to Denny and never again employed him when he went on steadily making records for other companies.

Whatever the reason, it must not have been caused by a falling out, for Denny made records for Zonophone, which was controlled by Victor, after all his waxings for the parent company had been deleted.

The 1905 Zon-o-phone catalog contains the following 9-inch records by the high-voiced comedian:

"5278. Anna, Let Me Hear From You. 5279. Any Old Place I Can Hang My Hat. 5336. I Want Someone to Care for Me. 5339. I Was Certainly Dreaming. 5337. Rip Van Winkle Was a Lucky Man. 5410. Turkey and the Turk. 5921. All Aboard for Dreamland. 5930. Follow the Merry Crowd. 5934. Meet Me in St. Louis, Louis."

Denny made no Zon-o-phone records after the Company introduced 10-inch discs in 1904. Possibly he signed a joint contract with Columbia and Edison, although such agreements were a rarity. Ordinarily, an artist with a joint contract made Victor discs and Edison cylinders, but excluded Columbia.

IX. Columbia Cylinders and Discs

It is easy to trace Denny's earlier Columbia records through the old catalogs, as long as artists' names were given, but the task becomes harder from 1901 to 1907, when they were omitted. He was one of a group of popular recording artists who signed an exclusive agreement with Columbia on May 1, 1898:

"To the Columbia Phonograph Co.: We hereby accept the proposition you have made us, to give our EXCLUSIVE services as makers of talking machine records to the Columbia Phonograph Company during the ensuing year. Vess L. Ossman, Geo. W. Johnson, Dan W. Quinn, Spencer Trio, and Imperial Minstrels, per Len Spencer, manager; Geo. J. Gaskin, Steve Porter, Columbia Orchestra (Musical Director, Tom Clark); Columbia Brass Quartet (Tom Clark), Len Spencer, Minnie Emmett, Will F. Denny, George Schweinfest, Russell Hunting."

Denny had 59 records in the 1899 catalog of two-minute brown wax Columbia cylinders. The catalog said: "Mr. Will F. Denny's comic songs are sung with dash and spirit and in an entirely original vein. His work is a standard." If you want to see a list of almost completely forgotten passingly popular compositions, cast your eyes down the following, made after he left Boston and came to New York, where Columbia had set up its headquarters in 1897:

6301. Oh, Don't It Tickle You? 6304. You Can't Think of Everything. 6305. She Was There. 6306. I Didn't Know Till Afterwards. 6309. I Couldn't. 6310. Three Girls in a Boat. 6311. They Don't Speak to One Another Now. 6313. Enoch Brown. 6314. Jones, Smith, and Brown. 6315. The Shadows on the Door. 6316. All Doing a Little Bit. 6317. You Can Tell Where He Has Been. 6318. And the Parrot Said. 6319. It's Another Color Now. 6320. Like a Girl. 6321. Never Mind the Moon, John. 6322. I've No Use for It. 6323. He's Got Them Again, By Jingo. 6324. When a Woman Loves. 6325. A Pity to Waste It. 6326. Give My Love to Mary. 6327. Tell Them I'm All Right. 6328. Up Came Johnny With His Camera. 6330. Poor Brother Jonathan. 6331. One Touch of Nature. 6332. Just a Simple Story. 6333. What a Beautiful Dream. 6334. A Song That Will Live Forever. 6335. Oblige a Lady. 6336. She Never Said a Word. 6337. Dear Little Lady. 6338. Can't

"THE SOUND OF FAME"

A 12" LP containing re-recordings of Edison cylinders and discs from 1889 to 1929. Issued by

THE EDISON FOUNDATION in commemoration of the election of THOMAS ALVA EDISON to the Hall of Fame this year.

$5.00 Postpaid
COPPERNOLL'S ANTIQUES
Palatine Bridge, N. Y.

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Leo Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
Box 595, Tujunga, Calif.

my26p

Antique

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

EXPERT REPAIRING - cylinders repinned, combs repaired & tuned, all parts repaired, cases refinished, all work guaranteed.
Free estimates, appraisals & lists.

Bornand Music Box Co.
139 4th Ave. (PE 8-1506) Pelham, N.Y.
Specialists since 1825

tfo

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION

RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York

tfx

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss music boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW ESPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of music boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.
Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

OLD SALZBURG

MUSIC BOXES

Bought

Sold

Repaired

Cases expertly refinished, inlays restored and retinted to original condition.

Free Estimates — All Work Fully Guaranteed.

The only shop south of New York specializing in new &

Antique Music Boxes

Located in Historic old Georgetown in the Nation's Capitol

1645 Wisconsin Ave. N.W.
Washington 7, D. C.

D. Konvalinka, Prop.
Hudson 3-4553

1. WILL F. DENNY began his recording career in the 1890's with the New England Phonograph Co., of Boston, Mass. Their recording manager was Calvin G. Child, best remembered today as, for many years, the head of Victor's Red Seal recording activities. In this photo, Child is in the front seat, beside Enrico Caruso, whom he had just brought to the Victor Studios at Camden, N. J., in 1909, for a recording engagement. In the rear seat are Harry O. Sooy, then Victor's chief recording expert, and Walter B. Rogers, conductor of the Victor Orchestra.

Stop. 6339. Slap Dab. 6340. Kiss Your Goosie Woosie. 6341. Time is Money. 6342. The Tattered Flag. 6343. Job Like That. 6346. It Came Off. 6347. White Silk Dress. 6348. Baby. 6349. Nora Dear. 6350. Then and Now. 6351. What Ze English Call Ze. 6352. Birds Sing Sweeter, Lad, At Home. 6353. Remember the Maine. 6354. Somebody's Mother. 6355. You Didn't Tell Me That Before We Married. 6356. A Man Took a Girl. 6357. Different Styles of Singing. 6358. Take Care, Beware. 6359. That's When You Learn to Love Them More and More.

Since these records are numbered consecutively, with a few spaces missing, it's likely a few other Denny cylinders had been made earlier but cut out. As will be seen, the list consists largely of comic songs (though how funny they would seem today is a question), together with a sprinkling of ballads, and such a rabble-rousing appeal to patriotic emotion as "Remember the Maine."

I confess this list gives me a depressed feeling. The great days of the American comic song certainly had not arrived in the 1890's!

Denny, it seems to me, specialized in the English "silly" type of comedy. The 1901 Columbia cylinder catalog contains several more numbers in the 6300 series that may be confidently attributed to Denny, although the singer is identified only as "Tenor."

"6344. I Was There. 6345. Mammy's Pickaninny. 6360. Good Old Glory. 6361. I'm Not Particular. 6362. How'd You Like to be the Ice Man? 6364. Mary Ellen Simpkin's Bike. 6365. Miss Helen Hunt. 6366. Kelly, the Bar Man. 6370. My Old Westchester Home. 6372. What, Marry Dat Gal? 6373. Jack Pot. 6374. You're the Only One. 6375. His Little Wife Was With Him All the Time. 6376. Gripman's Grip. 6377. My Family Troubles."

I imagine Denny also made a series of parodies, numbers beginning with 7,000, on the songs listed below:

7000. Moth and the Flame. 7001. Mid the Green Fields of Virginia. 7002. Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee. 7003. One Night in June. 7004. Just One Girl. 7005. Because. 7006. A Picture No Artist Can Paint.

My file of The Columbia Record from the beginning of 1904 to early in 1907 makes it easy to determine what records Denny made in that period.

In March, 1905, he was credited with a mock ballad, "Beautiful Dreamy Eyes" on cylinder No. 32632 and disc No. 3057. In April, he sang what sounds like one of the then popular "sob songs." It was called "Skylark! Skylark!; or The Boy's Message," and appeared on cylinder No. 32656 and disc No. 3072.

A more cheerful note was struck in May, 1906, when Denny sang what deserves to be recognized as a comic song classic, "Nothing Like That in Our Family." The extremely amusing words were written by Edward P. Moran and Will A. Heelan, and the music by Seymour Furth.

ALBERT BENZLER
EDISON AND COLUMBIA

WILL F. DENNY TENOR

FRED VAN EPS

2. WILL DENNY'S photo appeared in a booklet published about 1906 describing the Edison laboratories and giving photos of Edison recording artists. On the same page were one of Edison's most versatile musicians, Albert Benzler, also Fred Van Eps, whose life story was told in HOBBIES from January through April, 1956. Mr. Van Eps died November 22, 1960, aged 81, while waiting for his driver's license to be renewed in Glendale, Calif.

The Columbia Record description said:

"... 10-inch disc No. 3368, cylinder No. 32919. A comic selection by Will F. Denny which cannot fail to provoke laughter, as in this record Denny surpasses himself. His voice is a pleasant one and his enunciation is decidedly good."

I hardly think Denny surpassed himself. His interpretation was adequate, but it falls a long distance short of the unequalled rendition Billy Murray gives of the same song on Victor and Zon-o-phone records.

The July, 1906, Columbia list brought another Denny offering, of which the magazine said:

"Cole and Davis' 'Nonsense'—10-inch disc No. 3427, cylinder No. 32968—sung in Will Denny's clearest tenor, is a musical excerpt from 'In the Land of Nod.' Denny's rendition, with orchestra accompaniment, is very pleasing."

In August, Denny came through with a genuinely amusing number, on the order of "Pol the Rol Lol," a "bunch of limericks," which was extremely popular in those days. It was a nonsensical ditty, "Pol de Iddley Ido," from "The Pearl and the Pumpkin," composed by J. W. Bratton, and sung on 10-inch disc No. 3440 cylinder No. 32978.

Denny must have made records only between coast-to-coast vaudeville engagements, for I don't find another Columbia until August, 1907. He then had two cylinders, No. 33140, "Ask Me Not," and No. 33157, "You'll Have to Get Off and Walk."

The latter song was also made on disc No. 3662, and when Columbia introduced double-faced records it was coupled on No. A489 with "Iola," sung by Frank C. Stanley and Henry Burr. It stayed in the catalog until 1913 and was the only record by Denny that ever appeared in double-face.

Besides the records I have already listed, the 1907 Columbia cylinder catalog contained two more by Denny: No. 4282, "A Little Bit Off the Top," and No. 32134, "When We Are Married."

Besides those already mentioned, the following Columbia discs can be identified as by Denny:

172. And the Parrot Said. 176. A Little Bit Off the Top. 1241. When We Are Married. His discs, of course, did not begin to appear before 1902, when he had already made the greater part of his Columbia cylinder repertoire. Sixteen cylinders were still listed in the 1907 catalog.

X. Denny's Edison Cylinders

There was nothing slow about the way Will Denny turned out two-minute Edison Standard cylinders, once he had begun making them after his one-year Columbia contract expired. By my count, the 1899 catalog contains 34 titles by him, many of which also were included in the Columbia listings.

The three with the lowest numbers did not appear until the Edison supplement dated November 20, 1899, but he had previously made many others. All three were parodies, which, like his Columbia offerings in that branch of humor, had been given a special numerical sequence.

No. 6600 was a parody on "Family Troubles;" No. 6602, a parody, on "A Widow's Plea for Her Son;" and No. 6603, a parody on "Just One Girl." Presumably No. 6601 also was a parody, but it was never issued.

The parody on "A Widow's Plea" probably was the most popular Edison record Denny ever made. It stayed in the catalog—no doubt remade on a good many occasions—until the two-minute cylinders were discontinued late in 1912.

This burlesque of one of the Gay Nineties tear-jerkers was written by Frank North, a vaudeville comedian who himself made a few Edison cylinders. He was a member of the team of Howard and North.

Two of North's records followed

Denny's parodies in numerical order—No. 6604, "Strolling Round the Town," and No. 6605, "J. W. Kelly's Favorite Story." His record No. 8039, a parody on "I've Waited, Honey, Waited Long for You," came out in July, 1902; and No. 8085, a parody on "Goodbye, Dolly Gray," in August. No. 8280, a parody on "Alice, Where Art Thou?" was issued in December, 1902.

Frank North, unlike Denny, lived to extreme old age. He died July 20, 1960, in Red Bank, N. J., aged 89.

The "Widow's Plea for Her Son" desecration was comedy of the hard-boiled type. Instead of a tearful parent pleading with the judge not to impose sentence on a wayward youth, it had the father of the offender, whose gravest misdeeds appears to have been smoking cigarettes, drinking beer, and being a "sport," stand before the judge and declaim:

"Remember I'm his father and his mother is my wife.
Don't let him off with 20 years but send him up for life!
And if he gets tired of living just keep him there for fun,
For no one wants to feed a sport—
a father or a son."

The boy's antics so scandalized the jury that all 12 members fell dead. The judge also lived only 20 minutes, but before dying gave the boy this advice:

"My boy, you are a daisy;
by others don't be done—
No matter who your father was,
you are your mother's son!
And if ever you get married just have one boy for fun,
But if he's a sport don't take him to court, but kill the son-of-a-gun!"

This macabre bit of balladry was revived in the late 1920's by a hill-billy performer who called himself "Moonshine Harry." He recorded it on a Supertone record, made by Brunswick and sold by Sears, Roebuck. In its new form it was called "Son-of-a-Gun."

JOE NATUS (No. 24) and WILL F. DENNY (28) were among the 42 Edison cylinder record artists photographed in 1900 near the Edison laboratory at West Orange, N. J. As far as can be ascertained, all the men and women in the photo are dead. The last survivor is believed to have been Fred W. Hager, who died March 31, 1958, aged 83, in Dunedin, Fla.

The group included, besides Natus and Denny:

1. Joe Belmont, whistler. 2. Nick Scholl, trombone. 3. A. Zimmerman, cornet. 4. L. W. Lipp, yodler. 5. Byron G. Harlan, tenor. 6. Fred W. Hager, violin. 7. Arthur F. Collins, baritone. 8. S. H. Dudley, baritone. 9. W. C. Deusing, German baritone. 10. M. Guarini, tenor. 11. William Tuson, clarinet. 12. Will N. Steele, recitations. 13. Jim White, recitations. 14. Walter H. Miller, recording manager. 15. George Broderick, bass. 16. Frank Kennedy, comedian. 17. Al Sweet, cornet. 18. B. Russell Throckmorton, recitations. 19. Harvey N. Emmons, chimes. 20. Ruby R. Brooks, banjo. 21. Samuel Siegel, mandolin. 22. Albert Benzler, piano. 23. Senorita Godoy, Spanish songs. 25. William F. Hooley, bass. 26. May Kelson, contralto. 27. J. J. Fisher, baritone. 29. John Bieling, tenor. 30. Marguerite Newton, soprano. 31. Fred Bachman, piano. 32. George W. Johnson, comedian. 33. A. D. Madeira, baritone. 34. Frank S. Mazziotto, piccolo. 35. Frank P. Banta, piano. 36. Charles D'Almaine, violin. 37. George P. Watson, yodler. 38. Dan W. Quinn, tenor. 39. Harry Macdonough, tenor. 40. Edward M. Favor, tenor. 41. Albert Campbell, tenor. 42. Jere Mahoney, tenor.

Other Denny records which Edison issued up to October, 1899, were:

7101. How'd You Like to be the Ice-man? 7102. I'm Not Particular. 7103. One Touch of Nature. 7104. I Didn't Know Till Afterwards. 7105. Shadows on the Door. 7106. When a Woman Loves. 7107. I Couldn't. 7108. She Was There. 7109. A Job Like That. 7110. Time is Money. 7111. Up Came Johnny With His Camera. 7112. You Can't Think of Everything. 7123. Miss Helen Hunt. 7124. All Doing a Little Bit. 7125. Never Mind the Moon. 7126. You Never Told Me That Before We Were Married. 7127. And the Parrot Said. 7128. My Old Westchester Home. 7134. A Pity to Waste It. 7135. Norah Dear. 7136. Take Care, Beware. 7137. Somebody's Mother. 7153. A Song That Will Live Forever. 7154. Naughty Banana Peel. 7155. I've Waited, Honey, Waited Long for You. 7156. White Silk Dress. 7157. They Don't Speak to One Another Now. 7158. Enoch Brown. 7159. Like a Girl. 7170. Change Will Do You Good. 7186. Oh, Don't It Tickle You? 7199. Man Took a Girl. 7200. Mandy, Will You Be My Lady Love? 7205. Different Styles of Singing. 7206. Can't Stop.

The resemblance between Denny's Columbia and Edison repertoires is certainly striking.

During the next few years the "Tenor" continued to add steadily to his Edison list. The following were announced between October, 1899, and June, 1902:

7332. All Birds Look Like Chickens to Me. 7379. Parody on "Because." 7380. Parody on "Moth and the Flame." 7534. Just Think This Over. 7536. That Minstrel Man of Mine. 7542. Cold Feet. 7556. Vaudeville Specialty No. 5, naming the rules of a country hotel and ending with the song, "Ain't You My Lulu?" 7582. Such Doings. 7593. Ain't You My Lulu? 7606. I Wonder if He's Waiting. 7671. I'm Looking at You, Lize. 7673. Is There Anything Else You'd Like? 7688. Tick Tack Tocking of Her Stockings. 7692. Sarah From Syracuse. 7711. You Said a Plenty. 7774. Since Malinda Hinda's in the Syndicate. 7801. Big Black Annie's Birthday Ball. 7807. How the Irish Beat the Band. 7808. Three-Thirty-Three in the Morn. 7843. Tact. 7867. Turkey and the Turk. 7875. Ain't Dat a Shame? 7901. Any Old Place I Can Hang My Hat. 7923. Go 'Way Back and Sit Down. 7980. Ma Ebony Belle.

In June, 1902, Denny had two new gold moulded records: No. 8015, Rip Van Winkle Was a Lucky Man, and No. 8016, I'm the Man Who Makes the Money in the Mint. He was on hand in August with No. 8091, Aladdin and His Lamp. After this he must have begun to devote more time to long vaudeville tours, for his records no longer appeared frequently.

The next seems to have been No. 8303, I'm Getting Quite American, Don't You Know? issued in January, 1903. It was followed in February with No. 8316, What's the Matter With Sarah? The next No. 8467, When We Get Married, didn't come out until August, 1903. In November, there was No. 8547, Mr. Breeze Was an Easy Mark, from "The Rogers Brothers in Washington." And in December, on No. 8552, he sang "Trixie."

The name of Will F. Denny was then conspicuously missing from the new Edison monthly lists for a long time. In the May, 1905, New Phonogram, "G. W. P." of Simpson, Minn., asked, "Are Will F. Denny and Len Spencer dead? I have heard it so stated."

He was told, "They are both living."

In May, 1906, Denny unexpectedly popped up as a performer in one of a series of six "At the Minstrel Show" cylinders issued that month. He appeared in the fourth of the series, No. 9278, which was described as:

"Introducing Will F. Denny in his great monolog entitled 'A Matrimonial Chatter. A bright, crisp comedy talk of the type that is always entertaining, with love, courtship and marriage as the chief topics, concluding with the topical song, 'It's All a Matter of Taste.'"

Two months later, Denny came through with No. 9306, containing that already mentioned comedy classic which deserves to be immortal, "Nothing Like That in Our Family." The New Phonogram said:

"Mr. Denny has favored us with a selection for our monthly supplement. Topical songs have always been his forte and this selection is similar in character. . . . The verses tell of the things that happened when the singer dined in the house of his swell friend.

"The second verse tells of the reception that the tramp met when he called at the house of Dr. Brown and asked for a pair of pants. Dr. Brown proved to be an old maid and her reply is amusing. Another verse tells of his treating experience with some friends."

Will Denny was to make only a handful more of records for Edison or any other company, but in May, 1907, he showed up with a number which elicited the comment, "Mr. Denny sings another of his old-time rapid-fire mirth provokers." This was No. 9581, "Ask Me Not," of which the write-up said:

"This comic song by Cobb and Edwards is one of those topical compositions with which Mr. Denny has been prominently identified in the past. It is written to be sung in race-horse time, and keeps its hearers on the QUI VIVE to catch the story. It tells of the things wifey does from time to time, but why she does them is met with:

Ask me not, ask me not,
ask me not, I pray,
All I know, this is so,
and happens every day.
Take my wife, take my life,
kill me on the spot,
But why she does
just what she does,
Oh, ask me, ask me not!

In June, 1907, Denny sang, on No. 9568, "You'll Have to Get Off and Walk," already mentioned as one of the last of his Columbias:

Dave Reed, Jr., must have had Mr. Denny in mind when he wrote the words and music of this comic song, for it fits his voice and style perfectly. Two verses and two choruses are given on the record, one part telling of the singer's lack of success in trying to ride a horse to town and the other of misfortunes that befell him when he took his girl out in an automobile. On the latter trip his rival Jones appeared on the scene just as his gasoline gave out and carried off the girl.

During 1907 a newspaper columnist wrote a limerick about a girl named Nan, who lived at Nantucket, and eloped with her father's cash in a bucket, and soon just about every other columnist in the country was adding his five lines to the saga. A man named Joe A. Budd decided to turn the "Nan" fad into a song, which was recorded by Denny under the title of "The Tale of the Bucket," on cylinder No. 9598. The New Phonogram said:

"A comic song something after the order of 'Fol-the-Rol-Lol,' which is so popular in our catalog. The story is told in seven short verses of how 'Nan ran away with a man,' and how they took her father's bucket in which he kept his cash. . . . There is a laugh in each verse. The melody, too, is attractive."

The last Edison record Denny was ever to make came out in August, 1907. It was No. 9620, "My Word! What a Lot of It!"

Dave Reed, Jr., the well-known song writer, in a humorous manner relates the misadventures that happened to Chauncey, who was inclined to overdo things. His first taste of champagne resulted disastrously because he took such a lot of it. Then he plunged recklessly into matrimony.

This apparently was one of the "silly" type of songs, taken from English models, in which I have already said Denny specialized. It was also his cylinder swan song. He never appeared in a new Columbia or Edison list, as far as I can find, after August, 1907.

XI. Will Denny's Death

More than a year went by in which the veteran tenor comedian's name was absent from recording lists. Then, when Denny's friends in the East read Variety for October 3, 1908, they must have been shocked by this brief paragraph:

"Just as he was to step upon the stage at the opening performance at Pantages, Seattle, September 21, Will F. Denny, the singing comedian, gasped and fell. When brother artists rushed to his side he was unconscious. Doctors pronounced the seizure a stroke of paralysis. He was removed to the hospital and later was said to be improving."

In the March, 1948, HOBBIES, I quoted the late Joe Belmont as telling me that Denny appeared on the stage of the Seattle theater, bowed to his audience and dropped dead, but the foregoing quotation shows either that Mr. Belmont had been misinformed or his memory had tricked him after many years. Denny was fatally stricken, but he did not fall lifeless. The October 10, 1908, Variety, however, brought the sad news of his death:

"Word was received by the Actor's Union in New York this week that Will F. Denny, the singer, who has played extensively in vaudeville all over the East, died in Seattle, Wash., October 3. No details accompanied the formal notice.

"Denny's illness began September 22, when he suffered a sudden seizure in his dressing room at Pantages Theater, Seattle. He was immediately rushed to Providence Hospital in that city, but paralysis seemed to have developed, and although he soon

(Continued on page 42)

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell. Big list 10c. — Dean Snyder, 739 San Fernando Bldg., Los Angeles 13, Calif. n6637

SHEET MUSIC, 1900 and up. Over 300. Send for free list. All $1 each. — Ric Verdi Antiques, 854 Taunton Ave., East Providence, Rhode Island. d6867

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, old disc phonographs with outside horns. Old record catalogs, books. $7 and up for cylinder reproducers (part that holds the needle). — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3694

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonophone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann, Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. d5867

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

recovered consciousness, death followed.

"Joe Hardman was with him at the last. Denny's wife was notified. Eddie Tanner, of Gilbert and Tanner, was in the sick room much of the time and is holding the dead artist's personal effects.

So, on a note of pathos, ended the life story of William F. Denny. His contemporary, Joe Natus, had ended his working days as a hotel clerk before dying in a Rome, N. Y., hospital of diabetes. Denny was permitted to carry on his profession until the last, but he was fated to die thousands of miles away from home, in a strange hospital and like Natus with no members of his family near him.

The copy of his death certificate which I received from the Seattle Department of Public Health disappointed me. Denny's age was given as 48. His birthdate was omitted. Probably no one in Seattle knew it, but he almost certainly was born in 1860, the same year as Natus.

Three question marks were used to indicate the physician's uncertainty as to whether he was single, married, widowed, or divorced. His occupation was given as actor, but nothing was told concerning his parents or birthplace.

Dr. John W. Crooks gave the cause of death as arterial sclerosis. The body was removed for burial to Philadelphia, where Denny and his wife presumably made their home.

For a few years after his death, some Denny records were still to be found in the Edison catalog. Columbia discontinued its wax cylinders in 1909, and, as I have already mentioned, only one of his discs was carried into the double-faced catalog, where it remained through 1912.

But in March, 1911, you could still get the following Edison two-minute cylinders by the dead comedian:

"And the Parrot Said," "Any Old Place I Can Hang My Hat," "Nothing Like That in Our Family," "The Parody on 'A Widow's Plea For Her Son,'" "You'll Have To Get Off And Walk," and "You Never Told Me That Before We Were Married."

When Edison discontinued wax cylinders about a year and a half later, the list was down to "And the Parrot Said," "Any Old Place," and the "Widow's Plea" parody. With the coming of 1913 it was impossible, so passing is human fame, to pick up any up-to-the-minute record catalog and find the name of Will F. Denny.

Yet today, 52 years after his death, there are Denny records in many collections and through them echoes of a voice that has been stilled more than half a century is still being heard.

ADDENDA

This will revise, for the sake of accuracy, a statement that I made in the last paragraph of Part VIII on page 33:

Until recently I had thought Denny made no 10" Zonophone records, but recently a HOBBIES reader, C. L. Quick of House Springs, Mo., sent me some Zonophone supplements for 1908, which list three Denny discs. Possibly there were others. In May, he was credited with 1048, "I'd Rather Be a Little Too Soon Than Just a Little Too Late." In June, he had 1081, "Since My Mariutich Learned 'The Merry Widow Waltz,'" and in July, "All the Girls Look Good to Me." At this stage of his vaudeville career, Denny often did impersonations of the theatre manager and actor, Tony Pastor.

Correction: In the first installment of this series, a cut line beneath a photo of Natus said, "Denny never made an Edison record after 1902." "Denny" should have been "Natus."

Death of Hughie Flaherty Who Was Husband Of Ada Jones

By JIM WALSH

HOBBIES, readers, I am sure will be both sorry and surprised to learn of the death of Hugh (Hughie) Flaherty, a formerly prominent song-and-dance man in vaudeville and musical comedy, who was married to Ada Jones, the most popular woman recording artist of the pioneer days of recording.

Miss Jones died in 1922 at Rocky Mt., N. C. After her death Mr. Flaherty remarried and, to avoid being bothered by admirers of his first wife's recorded work, encouraged the belief that he had died. He was pleased when newspapers in Huntington Station, L. I., where they had lived, published erroneous statements that he was dead, and welcomed the protection this gave him against intrusions on his privacy. When I wrote my biographical series about Ada Jones, which began in June, 1946, HOBBIES and continued through the following January, I repeated in good faith the information I had been given that Hughie Flaherty, like his wife and daughter, Sheelah, was dead.

HUGHIE FLAHERTY

Mr. Flaherty was born August 11, 1879, in the District of Tralee, County Kerry, Ireland, the son of John Flaherty and Kate Sullivan Flaherty. He died Sunday, July 9, 1961, in Kings County Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y. His funeral was conducted at the Walter B. Cooke Funeral Home and his burial was in Pinelawn Cemetery. So carefully had he concealed his identity that none of the newspaper death notices mentioned his having been married to Ada Jones.

When Hughie was a boy his parents moved to Lawrence, Mass. where the youngster became an expert in tap, clog and buck and wing dancing. His professional career began in 1898, with Clair Evans as his partner. In 1900 he moved to New York and stayed in a theatrical rooming house, at 82 East 10th St., where he met Ada Jones. As a partner of Billy Farrell, he worked as an end-man, did vaudeville routines and danced "solo" with the Byron Spahn traveling tent show. Ada was the feature of the Spahn show, singing with illustrated song slides.

In 1902 Hughie starred in "Huckleberry Finn" and a little later he joined the James Kennedy Repertoire Co. as a between-the-acts dancer. Ada Jones was a member of this troupe, which toured the Midwest out of Michigan. In 1903 he appeared in "The Belle of New York" with Elsie Janis and had the title role in "Jack and the Beanstalk."

Hughie and Ada Jones were married in Manhattan, N. Y., August 9, 1904. In 1904-5 he toured the country as star of "The Forbidden Land," with Ethel Johnson. In 1906, the year Sheelah was born, he was featured dancer and choreographer for "His Majesty" with Blanche Ring. Later productions in which he appeared were "The Rounders," "1492," "Simple Simon," "The Filbuster" and "In Africa." During this period, Flaherty took keen interest in Ada Jones' recording career, which had begun in 1904, and suggested some of the songs and skit situations that appeared in records by Ada and Len Spencer. The Jones-Spencer "Jimmy and Maggie at the Hippodrome" was his idea. He also suggested that Ada record "My Word" after hearing Katie Barry sing it in a theater. He was on tour, when Ada made her first records—aside from tests she had made in the 1890's.

While touring with shows in 1912, Hughie met his second wife, Hannah ("Annie") Lockett, who survives him. She was doing an Apache dance and he gave her a job. In 1916 they teamed as a dance pair, Flaherty and Stoning (Hannah had changed her name to "Jean Stoning") and the partnership continued in vaudeville, playing almost every town and city in the county, until vaudeville virtually died in 1932. Nine years after Ada Jones' death, Hughie and Miss Lockett were mar-

(Continued on page 44)

A Directory of Births and Deaths

By JIM WALSH

This month completes a 20 year period in which I have been writing for HOBBIES. This department has appeared every month during that period except in February, 1942, and August and September, 1943. I now have my sights set on writing it for at least another 30 years.

Not only that, but since I still have stored away enough information to keep me going another 100 years, I plan to devote much of my time in my retirement years (assuming that I live to retire!) to preparing articles that will keep "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" going for years after I am defunct.

To commemorate our 20th anniversary, I have done something that I have wanted to do for a long time — prepared an alphabetical list of pioneer recording artists, telling when and where they were born, and, if they are no longer with us, when and where they died.

I have done this partly because I think such a list is valuable in itself, and partly because it will take care of many of the questions I am frequently asked to provide answers to by mail. I consequently hope all readers who are seriously interested in record collecting will preserve this article for reference.

Perhaps at some time in the future it will be possible to publish a supplement and also to correct some of the errors which are bound to lurk in this compilation.

Making out this list has been the most arduous and wearisome task I have ever undertaken in preparing my HOBBIES contributions. Set in type, it may not appear to have involved much laborious exertion, but I figuratively sweat blood a good many times seeking for information about some performer whose life story has become obscure. An hour was sometimes devoted to obtaining information that will occupy one or two lines of print.

I was surrounded for a couple of weeks by such reference works as the Encyclopaedia Britannica, the Columbia Encyclopaedia, Pierre Key's Year Books, Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, the MacMillan Encyclopaedia of Music and Musicians, the World and Information Please Almanacs, the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary. Also Who's Who in the Theater, back copies of the Record Collector and The Gramo-phone, old record catalogs, my extensive card index, and other sources made my work room look as if a cyclone had dropped in to wreak some spontaneous and unrehearsed havoc.

Even then, the results frequently were unsatisfactory. When you consult six different reference works and get six conflicting dates for the birth of an Italian opera singer, your temper is frayed. Some of the valuable tomes I consulted give only the years of birth and death, omitting the day and month, which I especially wanted.

I never could find where Marie Dressler and Joseph Jefferson died. Because of factors such as this, the list is incomplete. Of course, no complete listing of all persons who made records could ever be assembled.

I believe only a few explanations are necessary. Wherever the information was available, I have told when and where an artist was born, and when and where he died. If only a part of the information was available, I have given what I could.

As an example, take the first name on the list, Suzanne Adams. I am almost positive I have read of the death of this opera soprano, probably in the late 1930's or early 1940's, but I never could find anything saying she was dead. Consequently, I have used a question mark to indicate my belief she is no longer living, but that I have no positive information.

B., of course, stands for "born" and d. for "died." Ab means "about." I have used "about" as an approximate indication of births and deaths when I could do no better than make what I hoped was a plausible guess. Dates so given may be off several years. When the date of birth is uncertain I have placed a person's age at time of death after the death date. This is in parenthesis.

Artists listed here are mostly of the operatic and "popular" types, with a representative compilation of instrumentalists. Space limitations forbade listing more than a scattering few jazz and country music artists. Names have been restricted almost entirely to persons whose recording careers began in the old acoustic days.

Obviously, by including dance band musicians, hill-billy singers, and opera singers better known in Europe or South America than in the United States, I could have added a couple of thousand more names which there wouldn't have been room for. Some artists I have included, however, because their obscurity makes it hard for the average collector to find out anything about them.

To save space, listings have been held to a minimum. Where persons are mentioned as having been born or died in famous cities, I have left off the name of the state or country. For instance, New York alone always means New York, N. Y., Chicago, Chicago, Ill.; London, London, England; Rome, Rome, Italy, etc. To further conserve space, I have not indicated what types of voices singers had, or what the instrumentalists played.

In order to get 1962 off with a bang, I shall begin publishing next month an extensive series about the performer who, under several names, has had the most remarkable recording career of anyone who has performed for the phonograph.

Incidentally, I have not tried to list all the assumed names used by such prolific recorders as Billy Jones, Ernest Hare, Vernon Dalhart, Irving Kaufman, and Arthur Fields. In a good many instances, where a performer used more than one name, I have given the "vital statistics" under the name that was most popular, and in other listings referred the information seeker to that name.

As an example, Henry Burr's real name was Harry McClaskey, but he was best known as Burr. Under "Burr, Henry," I have told when and where he was born and died, but anyone looking up Harry McClaskey, Alfred Alexander, or Irving Gillette, is referred to the information under Burr.

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS of GREAT SINGERS on ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD, ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS (such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue
Valhalla, New York
trx

- ADAMS, SUZANNE, b. Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 28, 1872; d. ?
 ADKINS, MORTON, b. Oct. 31, 1877.
 ALBANI, EMMA, b. Chambly, Canada, Nov. 1, 1852; d. London Apr. 3, 1930.
 ALCOCK, MERLE, b. Des Moines, Ia., ab. 1885.
 ALDA, FRANCES, b. Christ Church, New Zealand, May 31, 1855; d. Venice, Sept. 18, 1952.
 ALEXANDER, ALFRED—see Burr, Henry.
 ALEXANDER, GEORGE, b. Baltimore, July 9, 1867; d. New York, March 2, 1913.
 ALLEN, EDWARD—see Middleton, Arthur.
 ALTHOUSE, PAUL, b. Reading, Pa., Dec. 21, 1887; d. New York, Feb. 7, 1954.
 ANCONA, MARIO, b. Livorno, Italy, Feb. 28, 1860; d. Florence, Feb. 23, 1931.
 ANDREWS, MARK, b. Gainsboro, England, Mar. 31, 1875; d. Montclair, N. J., Feb. 23, 1931.
 ANTHONY, HARRY—see Young, John.
 ARMSTRONG, LOUIS, b. New Orleans, July 4, 1900.
 ARCHIBALD, VERNON, b. Morocco, Ind., June 30, 1886.
 ARNDT, FELIX, b. New York, May 20, 1899; d. New York, Oct. 16, 1918.
 ARRAL, BLANCHE, b. Liege, Belgium, 1864; d. Cliffside, N. J., Mar. 3, 1945.
 ASH, SAM, d. Hollywood, Oct. 21, 1951 (67).
 ATTLEE, JOHN YORKE, b. Detroit, Jan. 28, 1842; d. Washington, April 1, 1910.
 AUSTIN, GENE, b. Gainesville, Tex., June 24, 1900.
 AUTRY, GENE, b. Tioga, Tex., Sept. 29, 1907.
 AVERY, VAN, b. Chicago, ab. 1879.
 BAILEY, MILDRED, b. near Spokane, Wash.; d. Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1951.
 BAKER, ELSIE, b. Philadelphia, Sept. 27, 1886; d. New York, April 28, 1958.
 BALLARD, GEORGE WILTON, b. Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 24, 1877; d. Syracuse, April 6, 1950.
 BANTA, FRANK E., b. New York, Sept. 28, 1897.
 BANTA, FRANK P., b. 1870; d. New York, Nov. 1903.
 BARBOUR, INEZ, b. Bradford, Pa., ab. 1885.
 BARNES, J. FOSTER, d. Durham, N. C., Feb. 9, 1956 (61).
 BARRERE, GEORGE, b. Bordeaux, France, Oct. 31, 1876; d. New York, June 14, 1944.
 BARTH, HANS, d. Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 8, 1956 (59).
 BARTRAM, GUS, d. Traverse City, Mich., Oct. 7, 1951 (61).
 BAUR, FRANKLYN, b. Brooklyn; d. Brooklyn, Feb. 21, 1950 (46).
 BAYES, NORA, b. Joliet, Ill., 1880; d. Mar. 19, 1928.
 BEARD, BILLY, d. Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 14, 1954 (71).
 BEAVER, GEORGE—see Kaufman, Irving.
 BELL, DIGBY, b. Milwaukee, 1851; d. New York, 1917.
 BELLSTEDT, HERMAN, b. Bremen, Germany, Feb. 21, 1858; d. June 8, 1926.
 BELMONT, JOE, b. Shamokin, Pa., July 22, 1876; d. New York, Aug. 28, 1949.
 BENOIST, ANDRE, b. Paris, April 4, 1879; d. Middletown, N. J., June 19, 1953.
 BENZLER, ALBERT, b. Newark, N. J., Nov. 13, 1867; d. Newark, Feb. 19, 1934.
 BERGER, KITTY, b. England, 1870; d. 1925.
 BERGH, ARTHUR, b. St. Paul, Minn., March 24, 1882.
 BERLIN, IRVING, b. Temum, Russia, May 11, 1888.
 BERNARD, AL., b. New Orleans, Nov. 3, 1888; d. New York, March 9, 1949.
 BERRY, W. H., d. Herne Bay, England, May 2, 1951 (81).
 BIELING, JOHN, b. New York, Mar. 15, 1869; d. Hempstead, N. Y., Mar. 30, 1948.
 BINGHAM, RALPH, b. Richmond, Va., Aug. 2, 1870; d. Philadelphia, Dec. 27, 1925.
 BISHOP, GENEVRA JOHNSTONE, b. Van Wert, Ohio, Nov. 12, 1864; d. 1924.
 BISPHAM, DAVID, b. Philadelphia, Jan. 5, 1857; d. New York, Oct. 2, 1921.
 BLAKE, EUBIE, b. Baltimore, Feb. 7, 1883.
 BLAUVELT, LILLIAN, b. Brooklyn, Mar. 16, 1873; d. Chicago, Aug. 29, 1947.
 BONCI, ALESSANDRO, b. Cesena, Italy, Feb. 10, 1870; d. Viterba, Italy, Aug. 8, 1940.
 BOS, COENRAAD V., b. Leiden, Holland, Dec. 7, 1875; d. Chappaqua, N. Y., Aug. 5, 1955.
 BORDONI, IRENE, b. Paris, 1894; d. New York, Mar. 19, 1953.
 BOURDON, ROSARIO, b. Montreal, March 8, 1889.
 BOWEN, WILLIAM, b. Dec. 18, 1880.
 BOWERS, FREDERIC V., b. Boston, June 11, 1874; d. Los Angeles, April 29, 1961.
 BRICE, FANNIE, b. New York, Oct. 29, 1891; d. Hollywood, May 19, 1951.
 BROWN, ALBERT EDMUND, b. Derby, England, Dec. 9, 1874; d. Denver, Dec. 7, 1958.
 BROWN, EDNA—see Baker, Elsie.
 BROWN, FRED (of Six Brown Brothers), d. Chicago, Feb. 9, 1949 (55).
 BROWN, TOM (of Six Brown Brothers), d. Chicago, Aug. 29, 1950 (68).
 BROWNE, HARRY C., b. North Adams, Mass., Aug. 16, 1878; d. Boston, Nov. 15, 1954.
 BURBECK, FRANK, b. England, Dec. 30, 1857; d. Feb. 20, 1930.
 BURKHARDT, JOHN F., b. Newark, N. J., March 17, 1879.
 BURNLEY, MRS. HARDIN, b. South Carolina, May 21, 1880.
 BURR, CECILIA NILES, d. Chicago, Sept. 17, 1954 (87).
 BURR, HENRY, b. St. Stephen, New Brunswick, Canada, Jan. 15, 1882; d. Chicago, Apr. 6, 1941.
 BURTON, BILLY—see Harrison, Charles.
 CAHILL, MARIE, b. ab. 1874; d. New York, Aug. 23, 1933.
 CAIRNS, CLIFFORD IRVING, b. New Jersey, Aug. 30, 1880; d. New Smyrna Beach, Fla., Dec. 14, 1955.
 CALVE, EMMA, b. Decazeville, France, Aug. 15, 1858; d. Millau, Aveyron, Jan. 6, 1942.
 CAMPBELL, ALBERT, b. Brooklyn, N. Y., Aug. 17, 1872; d. Flushing, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1947.
 CANTOR, EDDIE, b. New York, Jan. 31, 1892.
 CARUS, EMMA, b. Berlin, 1879; d. New York, 1927.
 CARUSO, ENRICO, b. Naples, Feb. 25, 1873; d. Naples, Aug. 2, 1921.
 CASE, ANNA, b. Clinton, N. J., Oct. 29, 1889.
 CASE, CHARLIE, b. Lockport, N. Y., ab. 1858; d. New York, 1916.
 CAWTHORN, JOSEPH, b. New York, 1867; d. Beverly Hills, Calif., Jan. 21, 1949.
 CHALLA, ROSALIA, b. Havana, Nov. 17, 1864; d. Havana, Nov. 16, 1948.
 CHALMERS, DONALD, b. Pittsburgh; d. Asbury Park, N. J., May 17, 1939 (58).
 CHALMERS, THOMAS, b. New York, Oct. 20, 1884.
 CHAMLEE, MARIO (ARCHER), b. Los Angeles, May 29, 1892.
 CHEATHAM, KITTY, b. Nashville, Tenn.; d. Greenwich, Conn., Jan. 5, 1946 (81).
 CHIAFERELLI, ALBERT C., d. New York, 1945 (61).
 CHICK, LEONARD T., b. Washington, D. C., ab. 1882; d. Washington, D. C., Oct. 20, 1957.
 CLARANCE, EDWARD, b. Boston, 1863; d. ?
 CLARK, CARROLL C., b. Denver, ab. 1885.
 CLARKE, HERBERT L., b. Woburn, Mass., Sept. 12, 1867; d. Long Beach, Calif., Jan. 31, 1945.
 CLARK, HELEN, b. Rochester, N. Y., ab. 1890.
 COHAN, GEORGE M., b. Providence, R. I., July 4 or 5, 1878; d. New York, Nov. 5, 1942.
 COLLINS, ANNA L. (MRS. ARTHUR), b. Ireland, May 18, 1867; d. Fort Myers, Fla., May 14, 1949.
 COLLINS, ARTHUR, b. Philadelphia, Feb. 7, 1864; d. Tice, Fla., Aug. 3, 1933.
 CONFREY, ZEZ, b. Peru, Ill., April 3, 1895.
 COOK, PHIL, b. Coldwater, Mich., Sept. 27, 1893; d. Morristown, N. J., Sept. 18, 1958.
 COOMBS, FRANK, b. Bedford, Ia., July 26, 1871; d. Seattle, Wash., Oct. 31, 1941.
 CORDER, LEOTA, d. New York, Aug. 10, 1956 (66).
 COUTERIER, ERNST ALBERT, b. New York, Sept. 30, 1869; d. ?
 COWLES, EUGENE, b. Sanstead, Canada, Jan. 17, 1860; d. Boston, Sept. 22, 1948.
 CRANE, RALPH—see Dadmun, Royal.
 CRAVER, AL—see Dalhart, Vernon.
 CREATORE, GIUSEPPE, b. Naples; d. New York, 1952 (82).
 CROPPER, ROY, b. Jamaica Plains, Mass.; d. Miami, Fla., May 14, 1954 (58).
 CROSSLEY, ADA, b. Tarraville, Gippsland, Australia, Mar. 3, 1874; d. London, Oct. 17, 1929.
 CROXTON, FRANK, b. Paris, Ky., Oct. 7, 1877; d. New York, Sept. 3, 1949.
 CRUMIT, FRANK, b. Jackson, O., Sept. 26, 1889; d. New York, Sept. 7, 1943.
 CULP, JULIA, b. Groningen, Holland, Oct. 6, 1880.
 CZERWONKY, RICHARD, b. Birnbaum, Germany, May 23, 1886; d. Chicago, Apr. 16, 1949.
 DADMUN, ROYAL, b. Williamstown, Mass., ab. 1890.
 DALHART, VERNON, b. Jefferson, Tex., Apr. 6, 1883; d. Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 15, 1948.
 D'ALMAINE, CHARLES, b. Hull, England, June 13, 1871; d. Newark, N. J., June 17, 1943.
 DALMORES, CHARLES, b. Nancy, France, Dec. 31, 1871; d. Hollywood, Dec. 6, 1939.
 DALTON, JACK—see Kaufman, Jack.
 DAMROSCH, WALTER, b. Breslau, Germany, Jan. 30, 1862; d. New York, 1950.
 DAVENPORT, EDGAR L., b. Boston, 1862; d. ?
 DAVIS, LILLIAN—see Dunlap, Marguerite.
 DAWSON, PETER, b. Adelaide, South Australia, Jan. 31, 1882.
 DE CISNEROS, ELEANORA, b. New York, Nov. 1, 1878; d. New York, Feb. 3, 1934.
 DE GOGORZA, EMILIO, b. Brooklyn, May 29, 1874; d. New York, May 10, 1949.
 DEIRO, GUIDO, b. Salto, Canvonese, Italy, June 10, 1886; d. California, July 26, 1950.
 DEIRO, PIETRO, b. Salto Canvonese, Italy, Aug. 28, 1888; d. New York, Nov. 3, 1954.
 DE LEATH, VAUGHN, b. Mt. Pulaski, Ill., Sept. 26, 1896; d. Buffalo, N. Y., May 28, 1943.
 DE LUCA, GIUSEPPE, b. Rome, Dec. 25, 1876; d. New York, Aug. 26, 1950.
 DE LUSSAN, ZELIE, b. Brooklyn, Dec. 21, 1863; d. London, Dec. 18, 1949.
 DENNY, WILL F., b. Boston ab. 1860; d. Seattle, Wash., Oct. 2, 1908.
 DE PACHMANN, VLADIMIR, b. Odessa, Russia, July 27, 1848; d. Riga, Russia, Jan. 6, 1933.
 DE RESZKE, EDOUARD, b. Warsaw, Dec. 23, 1855; d. Garkopoland, May 25, 1917.
 DE RESZKE, JEAN, b. Warsaw, Jan. 14, 1950; d. Nice, France, April 3, 1925.
 DESTINN, EMMY, b. Prague, Feb. 20, 1878; d. Budweis, Bohemia, Jan. 28, 1930.
 DE TREVILLE, YVONNE, b. Galveston, Tex., Aug. 25, 1881; d. New York, Jan. 25, 1954.
 DE VERE, CLEMENTINE, b. Paris; d. Mt. Vernon, N. Y., Jan. 19, 1954 (89).
 DIETRICH, RENE, b. April 21, 1886.
 DIXON, RAYMOND—see Murphy, Lambert.
 DOCKSTADER, LEW, b. 1856; d. 1924.
 DOHERTY, JIM, d. New York, April, 1936.
 DONAGHY, HARRY, d. New York, June 1, 1949 (56).
 DONOVAN, HUGH—see Harrison, Charles.
 DRESSLER, MARIA, b. Cobourg, Canada, Nov. 9, 1873; d. July 28, 1934.
 DUDLEY, AUDLEY F., b. Eastern Shore of Maryland; d. Washington, Sept. 1, 1916 (37).
 DUDLEY, GEORGE N., b. Baltimore, April 24, 1877.
 DUDLEY, S. H., b. Greencastle, Ind., 1886; d. Los Angeles, June 6, 1947.

- DUDLEY, MRS. S. H., d. Los Angeles, June 7, 1947.
DUNLAP, MARGUERITE, b. South Carolina, 1883; d. Montclair, N. J., Jan. 7, 1960.
DUPREZ, FRED, b. Detroit, Sept. 6, 1884; d. at sea enroute to England, Oct. 29, 1938.
EASTON, FLORENCE, b. Middlesbrough-on-Tees, Yorkshire, England, Oct. 25, 1884; d. New York, Aug. 13, 1955.
ECKE, FREDERICK W., b. Germany, 1885; d. New Brunswick, N. J., Sept. 17, 1915.
EDISON, THOMAS A., b. Milan, O., Feb. 11, 1847; d. Orange, N. J., Oct. 18, 1931.
EISENBERG, HAROLD, b. Prague; d. New York, Aug. 23, 1961 (75).
ELLERMAN, AMY, b. Yankton, S. D.; d. New York, June 4, 1960 (71).
ELLISON, GLEN, b. Glasgow, Scotland, ab. 1885.
ELMAN, MISCHA, b. Tainoie, Russia, Jan. 21, 1931.
ERROLLE, RALPH, b. Chicago, Sept. 22, 1887.
EVANS, HENRY and WILLIAM T.—see Williams, Evan.
FARRELL, MARGUERITE, b. Providence, R. I., Sept. 16, 1883; d. Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 26, 1951.
FAVOR, EDWARD M., b. New York; d. New York, Jan. 10, 1936 (80).
FAVOR, MRS. EDWARD M. (EDITH SINCLAIR), d. Brooklyn, Nov. 27, 1942 (86).
FIELDS, ARTHUR, b. Philadelphia, Aug. 6, 1888; d. Largo, Fla., Mar. 29, 1953.
PINNEGAN, JOHN, b. Wilmington, Del., ab. 1875; d. ?
FIRTH, W. FRANCIS, b. Auburn, N. J.; d. Windsor, Ontario, Canada, June 25, 1943 (75).
FLAGSTAD, KIRSTEN, b. Hamar, Norway, July 12, 1895.
FORDE, FLORRIE, b. Sydney, Australia; d. Aberdeen, Scotland, Apr. 18, 1940 (64).
FOX, HARRY, b. Pomona, Calif.; d. Hollywood, July 20, 1959 (77).
FOX, LOIS, b. Jan. 17, 1886; d. ?
FRADKIN, FREDERIC, b. Troy, N. Y., Apr. 2, 1892.
FRANCHINI, ANTHONY JOSEPH, b. Bologna, Italy, Aug. 2, 1898.
FRANCISCO, CARLOS—see De Gogorza, Emilio.
FRANCIS, ADELIN, d. New York, Aug. 11, 1956 (80).
FRANKEL, HARRY, d. Richmond, Ind., 1943 (60).
FRANKLIN, ED—see De Gogorza, Emilio.
FRANKLIN, IRENE, d. Hollywood, June 13, 1941 (65).
FREEMANTEL, FREDERIC C., b. London, Apr. 20, 1873; d. New York, Nov. 21, 1949.
FREMSTAD, OLIVE, b. Stockholm, March 14, 1871; d. Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y., Apr. 21, 1951.
"FRISCO," LOU CHICA, b. Chicago, July 10, 1891; d. ?
FROSINI, PIETRO, b. Mascalucia, Italy, Aug. 9, 1885; d. Woodside, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1951.
FYFFE, WILL, d. St. Andrews, Scotland, Dec. 13, 1947 (62).
GADSKI, JOHANNA, b. Anclam, Germany, June 15, 1872; d. Berlin, Feb. 22, 1932.
GALLI-CURCI, AMELITA, b. Milan, Nov. 18, 1889.
GARDEN, MARY, b. Aberdeen, Scotland, Feb. 20, 1877.
GARRISON, MABEL, b. Baltimore, Apr. 24, 1886.
GASKIN, GEORGE, b. Belfast, Ireland, ab. 1860; d. ?
GATES, LUCY, b. St. George, Utah; d. Salt Lake City, Utah, Apr. 30, 1951 (70).
GAYLORD, CHESTER, b. Worcester, Mass., Feb. 23, 1899.
GERHARDT, ELENA, b. Leipzig, Germany, Nov. 11, 1883; d. London, Jan. 11, 1961.
GERSHWIN, GEORGE, b. Brooklyn, Sept. 26, 1898; d. Beverly Hills, Calif., July 11, 1937.
GIANNINI, DUSOLINA, b. Philadelphia, Dec. 19, 1902.
GIANNINI, FERUCCIO, b. Pont-a-Lana, Tuscany, Italy, Nov. 15, 1868; d. Philadelphia, Sept. 17, 1948.
GILLETTE, IRVING—see Burr, Henry.
GILLHAM, ART (ARTHUR LEWIS), b. Georgia, Jan. 1, 1895; d. Atlanta, Ga., June 6, 1961.
GILSON, LOTTIE, b. 1871; d. 1912.
GIRARD, GILBERT, b. San Francisco, ab. 1868; d. ?
GLENN, WILFRED, b. San Joaquin Valley, Calif., ab. 1880.
GLUCK, ALMA, b. Bucharest, Rumania, May 17, 1884; d. New York, Oct. 27, 1938.
GODDARD, HERBERT—see De Gogorza, Emilio.
GOLDEN, BILLY, b. Cincinnati, June 9, 1858; d. Newark, Jan. 30, 1926.
GOLDMAN, EDWIN FRANKO, b. Louisville, Ky., Jan. 1, 1878; d. New York, Feb. 21, 1958.
GORDON, CHARLES—see Hemus, Percy.
GREEN, GEORGE HAMILTON, b. Omaha, Nebr., May 23, 1893.
GREEN, JOE, b. Omaha, Nebr., Feb. 9, 1892; d. New York, Oct. 16, 1939.
GREEN, LEWIS, b. Omaha, Nebr., Oct. 25, 1909.
GREENE, GENE, b. Aurora, Ill., June 9, 1877; d. New York, April 5, 1930.
GREET, BEN, b. England, 1856; d. England, May 17, 1936 (79).
GRIFFIN, GERALD, b. Chicago, May 19, 1891.
GUSKOFF, MICHAEL, b. New York, May 15, 1895.
HACKETT, CHARLES, b. Worcester, Mass., Nov. 4, 1889; d. Jamaica, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1942.
HAGER, FRED, b. Susquehanna County, Pa., 1874; d. Dune-din, Fla., Mar. 3, 1958 (83).
HAHL, ADOLPH J.—see Hall, Arthur.
HAJOS, MIZZI, b. Budapest, April 27, 1891.
HALL, ARTHUR, b. New York, 1888.
HALL, FRED, b. New York, Apr. 10, 1898; d. New York, 1954.
HALL, WENDFELL, b. St. George, Kans., Aug. 23, 1896.
HAMILTON, EDWARD—see Werrenrath, Reinald.
HARDING, ROGER, d. 1901.
HARE, ERNEST, b. Norfolk, Va., Mar. 16, 1883; d. Jamaica, L. I., Mar. 9, 1939.
HARLAN, BYRON G., b. Paris, Kans., Aug. 29, 1861 (this is being typed on the 100th anniversary of his birth); d. Orange, N. J., Sept. 11, 1936.
HARRIS, MARION, b. ab. 1896; d. New York, Apr. 23, 1944.
HARRISON, CHARLES, b. Jersey City, N. J., Sept. 11, ab. 1890.
HARRISON, JAMES F.—see Wheeler, Frederick.
HARROLD, ORVILLE, b. Muncie, Ind., 1878; d. Darien, Conn., Oct. 23, 1933.
HART, CHARLES, b. Chicago, May 16, 1884.
HARVEY, MORTON, b. Omaha, Nebr., 1886.
HAVRILLA, ALOIS, b. Presor, Austria, June 7, 1891; d. Englewood, N. J., Dec. 7, 1952.
HAZEL, JOHN, d. Williamsport, Pa., Jan. 26, 1948 (82).
HELENA, EDITH, b. Brooklyn, Dec. 23, 1876; d. Mt. Kisco, N. Y., Nov. 27, 1956.
HEMPPEL, FRIEDA, b. Leipzig, Germany, June 26, 1885; d. Berlin, Oct. 7, 1955.
HEMUS, PERCY, b. Auckland, New Zealand; d. New York, Dec. 22, 1943 (65).
HERBERT, VICTOR, b. Dublin, Feb. 1, 1859; d. New York, May 26, 1924.
HILL, MURRY K., b. New York, Apr. 15, 1865; d. Chicago, Oct. 23, 1942.
HILLEBRAND, FRED, b. Brooklyn, Dec. 25, 1893.
HILLIARD, ROBERT, b. May 28, 1857; d. 1927.
HINKLEY, ALLEN CARTER, b. Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 11, 1877; d. Yonkers, N. Y., Jan. 29, 1954.
HINDERMYER, HARVEY, b. Easton, Pa., ab. 1882; d. Garden City, N. Y., Oct. 22, 1957.
HINKLE, FLORENCE, b. Columbia, Pa., 1885; d. Cincinnati, Apr. 19, 1931.
HOLT, AL S., b. Milwaukee; d. London, Aug. 1, 1924 (50).
HOMER, LOUISE, b. Pittsburgh, Apr. 23, 1871; d. Winter Park, Fla., May 6, 1947.
HOOD, ADELYNE, b. Chester, S. C., ab. 1892; d. Pittsburgh, Apr. 11, 1958.
HOOLEY, WILLIAM F., b. Cork, Ireland, Apr. 16, 1861; d. New York, Oct. 12, 1918.
HORNSBY, DAN, d. Atlanta, Geo., May 18, 1951 (51).
HOUSE, JUDSON, b. New York, Jan. 30, 1894; d. Dumont, N. J., Jan. 6, 1945.
HOWARD, ANNA—see Marsh, Lucy Isabelle.
HOWARD, FRANK—see Campbell, Al.
HOWARD JOE E., b. New York, Feb. 12, 1867; d. Chicago, May 19, 1961.
HUGHES, JOE, b. Chicago, Mar. 21, 1863; d. ?
HUGHES, THOMAS, d. Long Beach, N. J., Oct. 3, 1947 (82).
HUMPHREY, HARRY E., b. San Francisco, ab. 1877.
HUNTING, RUSSELL, b. West Roxbury, Mass., May 8, 1864; d. New York, Feb. 20, 1943.
IRWIN, MAY, b. Whitby, Ontario, Canada, June 27, 1862; d. New York, Oct. 2, 1938.
JACOBY, JOSEPHINE, b. New York; d. New York, Nov. 13, 1948 (73).
JAMES, LEWIS, b. Dexter, Mich., July 29, 1892; d. Western Springs, Ill., Feb. 19, 1959.
JANIS, ELSIE, b. Delaware, O., Mar. 16, 1889; d. Hollywood, Feb. 27, 1958.
JARVIS, HAROLD, b. Toronto, 1865; d. Detroit, Mar. 31, 1924.
JAUDAS, EUGENE A., b. New York, Oct. 11, 1869; d. ?
JEFFERSON, JOSEPH, b. Philadelphia, Feb. 20, 1829; d. Apr. 23, 1905.
JELL, GEORGE CLARENCE, b. Wardsville, Ontario, Canada, ab. 1880.
JOHNSON, ELDRIDGE R., b. Wilmington, Del., Feb. 6, 1867; d. Morristown, N. J., Nov. 17, 1945.
JOLSON, AL, b. St. Petersburg, Russia, Mar. 26, 1886; d. San Francisco, Oct. 23, 1950.
JONES, ADA JANE, b. Oldham, Lancashire, England, June 1, 1873; d. Rocky Mount, N. C., May 2, 1922.
JONES, BILLY, b. New York, Mar. 15, 1889; d. New York, Nov. 23, 1940.
JONES, ISHAM, b. Coalton, O., Jan. 31, 1894; d. Hollywood, Fla., Oct. 19, 1957.
JONES, REESE—see Jones, Billy.
JORDAN, HENRY—see Hart, Charles.
JORDAN, MARY, b. Cardiff, Nov. 27, 1879; d. San Antonio, Tex., May 15, 1961.
JORN, KARL, b. Riga, Latvia, Jan. 5, 1876; d. Denver, Dec. 19, 1947.
JOSE, RICHARD, b. Cornwall, England, June 5, 1872; d. San Francisco, Oct. 20, 1941.
JOURNET, MARCEL, b. Grasse, France, July 25, 1867; d. Vittel, France, Sept. 5, 1933.
JUCH, EMMA, b. Vienna, July 4, 1865; d., 1939.
KAISER, MARIE, b. Kans.; d. New York, Jan. 23, 1950 (63).
KAUFMAN, IRVING, b. Syracuse, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1890.
KAUFMAN, JACK, d. Valley Stream, L. I., Feb. 27, 1948 (65).
KELLOGG, CHARLES K., d. on his Southern California ranch, Sept. 4, 1949 (80).
KELLY, DAN, b. New York, Jan. 22, 1842; d. ?
KELLY, WALTER C., d. Philadelphia, Jan. 6, 1939 (65).
KENNEDY, EMIL, b. Magdeburg, Germany, 1866; d. ?
KERNELL, FRANK—see Dudley, S. H.
KERN, GRACE, b. Norfolk, Va., 1886; d. in car wreck near Williamsburg, Va., Sept. 10, 1936.
KIMMEL, JOHN J., b. Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 18, 1866; d. Brooklyn, Sept. 8, 1942.
KINDLER, HANS, b. Rotterdam, Holland, Jan. 8, 1892; d. Watch Hills, R. I., Aug. 30, 1949.
KING, ROXY, b. Alliance, O., Feb. 23, 1878; d. ?
KLAUSEN, HENRIK, b. Kopervik, Norway, 1844; d. Christiana, 1907.
KOCIAN, JAROSLAV, b. Ustinad Orlici, Bohemia, Feb. 22, 1883; d. Prague, Mar. 8, 1930.
KREISLER, FRITZ, b. Vienna, Feb. 2, 1875.
KRONOLD, HANS, b. Krakau, Austria, July 3, 1872; d. ?
KRUESI, JOHN, b. Switzerland, 1843; d. Schenectady, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1899.
KRYL, BOHUMIR, b. Horice, Czechoslovakia, May, 2, 1876; d. Wilmington, N. Y., July 7, 1961.

(Continued on page 34)

- LANGE, HENRY W., b. Toledo, O., July 20, 1895.
 LAPITINO, FRANCIS J., b. New York, June 5, 1879; d. New York, Nov. 30, 1949.
 LA RUCCA, NICK, b. New Orleans, Apr. 11, 1889; d. New Orleans, Feb. 22, 1961.
 LASHWOOD, GEORGE, d. Worcestershire, England, Jan. 20, 1942 (79).
 LAUDER, HARRY, b. Portobello, Scotland, Aug. 4, 1870; d. Strathaven, Scotland, Feb. 26, 1950.
 LAZZARI, CAROLINA, b. Milford, Mass., Dec. 26, 1891; d. 1946.
 LAZZARI, VIRGILIO, b. Assisi, Italy; d. New York, Oct. 4, 1953 (66).
 LBACHMAN, SILAS F., b. Louisville, Ky., Aug. 20, 1859; d. Chicago, Apr. 28, 1936.
 LENNOX, ELIZABETH, b. Ionia, Mich., ab. 1893.
 LENT, JAMES I., d. Brooklyn, Mar. 14, 1945 (59).
 LEVY, JULES, b. London, Apr. 28, 1858; d. Chicago, Nov. 28, 1903.
 LEWIS, TED, b. Circleville, O., 1890.
 LLOYD, ALICE, d. Banstead, England, Nov. 17, 1949.
 LOPEZ, VINCENT, b. Brooklyn, Dec. 30, 1898.
 LUPSKY, MARSHALL P., d. Milwaukee, Dec. 11, 1948.
 LUTHER, FRANK, b. Lakin, Kans., Aug. 4, 1905.
 LYONS, DAUIS, b. St. Paul, Minn., ab. 1870; d. ?
 MACDONALD, CHRISTIE, b. Picton, Nova Scotia, 1875.
 MACK, CHARLES E. (of "Two Black Crows"), d. Arizona, 1934.
 MACDONOUGH, HARRY, b. Windsor, Ontario, Canada, 1868; d. New York, Sept. 26, 1931.
 MACFARLANE, GEORGE, b. 1877; d. 1932.
 MALOOF, ALEXANDER, d. Englewood, N. J., Feb. 29, 1956 (72).
 MANN, ESTELLA LOUISE, b. Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 1, 1871; d. Evansville, Ind., Aug., 1947.
 MANTELLI, EUGENIA, b. Italy, 1860; d. Lisbon Mar. 3, 1926.
 MANTIA, SIMON, d. New York, June 25, 1951 (78).
 MARLOWE, JAMES, d. New York, Mar. 21, 1917 (58).
 MARLOWE, JULIA, b. Caldbeck, England, Aug. 17, 1866; d. New York, Nov. 12, 1950.
 MARSH, LUCY ISABELLE, d. Providence, R. I., Jan. 20, 1956 (77).
 MARTIN, FREDERIC, b. Rhode Island; d. New London, Conn., Sept. 12, 1945 (78).
 MARTIN, RICCARDO, b. Hopkinsville, Ky., Nov. 18, 1878; d. New York, Aug. 12, 1952.
 MARTINELLI, GIOVANNI, b. Padua, Italy, Oct. 22, 1885.
 MARVIN, JOHNNY, b. Butler, Okla., July 11, 1897; d. North Hollywood, Dec. 20, 1944.
 MATZENAUER, MARGARET, b. Temesbar, Hungary, June 1, 1881.
 McCLASKEY, HARRY—see Burr, Henry.
 McCLINTOCK, HARRY, b. Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 8, 1882; d. San Francisco, Apr. 24, 1957.
 McCONNELL, "SMILIN' ED," d. Newport Beach, Calif., July 25, 1954 (62).
 McCOOL, JAMES, b. Philadelphia, 1875; d., 1936.
 McCORMACK, JOHN, b. Athlone, Ireland, June 14, 1884; d. Dublin, Sept. 16, 1945.
 McGUIGAN, MADELEINE, d. Philadelphia, Aug. 5, 1961 (61).
 McQUHAE, ALLEN, b. Bray County, Wicklow, Ireland; d. Corpus Christie, Tex., 1960 (69).
 MEEKER, EDWARD, b. Orange, N. J., Jan. 22, 1874; d. Newark, N. J., Apr. 19, 1937.
 MELBA, NELLIE, b. Burnley, Australia, May 19, 1859; d. Sydney, Australia, Feb. 23, 1931.
 MELTON, JAMES, b. Moultrie, Ga.; d. New York, Apr. 21, 1961 (57).
 METCALFE, EDWARD, d. Brentwood, L. I., Apr. 2, 1951 (84).
 MEYER, JOHN H., b. New York; d. Flushing, N. Y., May 3, 1949 (71).
 MICHALOWA, MARIE, b. Russia, ab. 1866; d. Russia, ab. 1916.
 MIDDLETON, ARTHUR, b. Logan, Iowa, Nov. 28, 1880; d. Chicago, Feb. 16, 1929.
 MILLER, BOB, b. Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 20, 1895; d. New York, Aug. 26, 1955.
 MILLER, POLK, b. Grape Lawn, Va., Aug. 2, 1844; d. Richmond, Va., Oct. 20, 1913.
 MILLER, REED, b. Anderson, S. C., Feb. 29, 1880; d. New York, Dec. 29, 1923.
 MOLE, CHARLES, d. New York, Jan. 8, 1905.
 MOOR, WYATT K., b. Delft, Holland; d. Tajunga, Calif., Aug. 21, 1959 (ab. 73).
 MOORE, GRACE, b. Jellico, Tenn., Dec. 1, 1901; d. Copenhagen, Denmark, Jan. 26, 1947.
 MORAN, GEORGE (of "Two Black Crows"), d. Oakland, Calif., Aug. 1, 1949 (67).
 MORGAN, CORINNE, b. ab. 1875; d. ab. 1945.
 MORRIS, ELIDA, b. Philadelphia, ab. 1888; d. ?
 MORTON, EDDIE, b. Philadelphia, May 15, 1870; d. Wildwood, N. J., Apr. 11, 1938.
 MORTON, FERDINAND "JELLY ROLL," b. New Orleans, Sept. 20, 1885; d. Los Angeles, July 10, 1941.
 MUNN, FRANK, d. St. Alban's, Queens, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1953 (58).
 MURATORE, LUCIEN, b. Marseilles, 1878; d. France, 1954.
 MURPHY, LAMBERT, b. Springfield, Mass., Apr. 15, 1885; d. Hancock, N. H., July 24, 1954.
 MURRAY, BILLY, b. Philadelphia, May 25, 1877; d. Jones Beach, L. I., N. Y., Aug. 17, 1954.
 MURRAY, PETE, b. New York, Mar. 28, 1875; d., Dec., 1940.
 MUZZO, CLAUDIA, b. Pavia, Italy, 1892; d. Rome, May 24, 1936.
 MYERS, J. W., b. Wales, ab. 1864; d. ?
 MYERS, WILLIAM F., b. California, 1888; d. San Francisco, Feb. 22, 1892.
 NASH, HEDDLE, d. London, Aug. 14, 1961 (67).
 NATUS, JOE, b. Detroit, Mar. 1, 1860; d. Rome, N. Y., Apr. 21, 1917.
 NIELSEN, ALICE, b. Nashville, Tenn., June 7, 1876; d. New York, Mar. 8, 1943.
 NOLDI, HELENE, b. Chicago, Feb. 25, 1874; d. ?
 NORTH, FRANK, d. Red Bank, N. J., July 20, 1860 (89).
 NORWORTH, JACK, b. Philadelphia, Jan. 5, 1879; d. Laguna Beach, Calif., 1960.
 OAKLAND, WILL, b. Jersey City, N. J., Jan. 15, 1880; d. on bus enroute to Newark, May 15, 1956.
 O'CONNOR, GEORGE, b. Washington, D. C., Aug. 20, 1874; d. Washington, Sept. 28, 1946.
 O'HARA, GEOFFREY, b. Chatham, Ontario, Canada, Feb. 2, 1882.
 OHMAN, PHIL, b. New Britain, Conn., Oct. 7, 1896.
 OLCOTT, CHAUNCEY, b. Buffalo, N. Y., July 2, 1858; d. Monte Carlo, Mar. 18, 1932.
 OLITZKA, ROSA, b. Berlin, Sept. 6, 1873; d. Sept., 1949.
 OSSMAN, VISS L., b. Hudson, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1868; d. Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 8, 1923.
 PARKER, J. DONALD (JACK), d. Westchester, N. Y., Sept. 1940 (47).
 PARLOW, KATHLEEN, b. Calgary, Alberta, Canada, Sept. 20, 1890.
 PARSONS, JOSEPH M., d. Long Beach, Calif., Dec. 22, 1947 (66).
 PARVIS, TAURINO, b. Torino, Italy, Sept. 15, 1879; d. Barcelona, May 9, 1957.
 PASTERNAK, JOSEPH A., b. Czenstachowa, Russian Poland, July 1, 1881; d. Chicago, Apr. 29, 1940.
 PATTI, ADELINA, b. Madrid, Feb. 10, 1843; d. Craig-y-nos Castle, Wales, Sept. 27, 1919.
 PERKINS, RAY, b. Boston, Aug. 23, 1896.
 PETERSON, MAY, b. Oshkosh, Wis., Oct. 7, 1889; d. Austin, Tex., Oct. 8, 1962.
 PETERSON, WALTER C., d. Chicago, Mar. 21, 1945 (52).
 PHILLIPS, JOSEPH A., b. Buffalo, N. Y., ab. 1880.
 PLANCON, POL, b. Furnay, France, June 12, 1854; d. Paris, Aug. 12, 1914.
 POLLOCK, FRANK, b. Abingdon, Ill., Nov. 11, 1878.
 POLLOCK, MURIEL, b. Kingsbridge, N. Y., Jan. 21, ab. 1893.
 PONSELLE, CARMELA, b. Schenectady, N. Y., June 7, 1892.
 PONSELLE, ROSA, b. Meriden, Conn., Jan. 22, 1897.
 PORTER, STEVE, b. Buffalo, N. Y., 1864; d. New York, Jan. 13, 1936.
 PRICE, GEORGIE, b. New York, Jan. 5, 1900.
 PRIHODA, VASA, b. Vodnany, Bohemia, Aug. 24, 1900; d. Vienna, July 27, 1960.
 PRINCE, CHARLES ADAMS, b. San Francisco; d. San Francisco, Oct. 10, 1937 (68).
 PRYOR, ARTHUR, b. St. Joseph, Mo., Sept. 22, 1870; d. West Long Branch, N. J., June 18, 1942.
 PUCKETT, GEORGE RILEY, d. Atlanta, Ga., July 13, 1945.
 QUINN, DAN W., b. San Francisco, d. New York, Nov. 7, 1938 (79).
 RACHMANINOFF, SERGEI, b. Onega, Novgorod, Russia, Apr. 2, 1873; d. New York, Mar. 28, 1943.
 RANDOLPH, EMORY B., b. Western New York State, ab. 1878.
 RAPFOLD, MARIE, b. London, 1880; d. North Hollywood, May 12, 1957.
 RAYMOND, MAUD, d. New York, 1961 (89).
 REA, VIRGINIA, b. Kentucky, ab. 1896; d. ?
 REIMERS, PAUL, b. Lunden, Schleswig-Holstein, Mar. 14, 1878; d. New York, Apr. 14, 1942.
 RICE, GITZ, LIEUTENANT, b. New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, Mar. 5, 1891; d. New York, Oct. 16, 1947.
 RICE, GLADYS, b. Philadelphia, ab. 1896.
 RINALDI, MICHELE, d. Jan. 29, 1949, Atlantic City, N. J.
 RING, BLANCHE, b. Boston, Apr. 24, 1877; d. Santa Monica, Calif., Jan. 13, 1961.
 RING, JUSTIN, b. New York, June 28, 1876.
 ROBERTS, BOB, d. Cincinnati, Jan. 21, 1930 (51).
 ROBERTS, VICTOR—see Jones, Billy.
 ROBERTSON, DICK, b. Brooklyn, July 3, 1903.
 ROBEY, SIR GEORGE, b. London, Sept. 20, 1869; d. Saltdean, Sussex, England, Nov. 29, 1954.
 ROBINSON, J. RUSSELL, b. Indianapolis, July 8, 1892.
 ROBISON, CARSON, b. Chetapa, Kans., Aug. 4, 1890; d. Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Mar. 24, 1957.
 RODEHEAVER, HOMER, b. Union Furnace, O., Oct. 4, 1880; d. Winona Lake, Ind., Dec. 18, 1955.
 RODGERS, JIMMY, b. Meridian, Miss., Sept. 8, 1897; d. May 26, 1933.
 ROGERS, WALTER B., b. Delphi, Ind., Oct. 14, 1865; d. Brooklyn, Dec. 24, 1939.
 ROLFE, BENJAMIN ALBERT, b. Brasher Falls, N. Y., d. Walpole, Mass., Apr. 23, 1956 (76).
 ROMAIN, MANUEL, b. Boston, 1870; d. Quincy, Mass., Dec. 22, 1926.
 ROSEDALE, LILLIAN, b. Mitchell, S. Dak., May 30, 1888.
 ROSE, EUGENE C., b. Danzig, Germany, July 26, 1866; d. Freeport, L. I., Aug. 21, 1961.
 ROSENBLATT, JOSEF, b. Biala Cierkiew, May 9, 1882; d. Jerusalem (51).
 ROYE, RUTH, d. New York, June 12, 1960.
 RUBSAM, EDWARD F., d. Newark, N. J., 1946 (71).
 RUFTO, TITA, b. Piza, Italy, June 10, 1877; d. Florence, Italy, July 6, 1953.
 SADLER, JOSIE, b. New York, ab. 1873; d., ab. 1934.
 SALVI, ALBERTO, b. Venice, Dec. 13, 1893.
 SANDERSON, JULIA, b. Springfield, Mass., Aug. 20, 1887.
 SASSOLI, ADA, b. Bologna, Sept. 23, 1887; d. Rome, Dec. 3, 1946.
 SCANLAN, WALTER—see Van Brunt, Walter.
 SCHENK, JOE, b. Brooklyn; d. Detroit, June 28, 1931 (39).
 SCHMITZ, E. ROBERT, b. Paris, 1889; d. San Francisco, Sept. 5, 1949.
 SCHUMANN-HEINK, ERNESTINE, b. Lieben, Bohemia, June 15, 1861; d. Hollywood, Nov. 17, 1936.
 SCHWEINFEST, GEORGE F., d. Newark, June 8, 1949 (87).
 SEAGLE, OSCAR, b. Chattanooga, Tenn., Oct. 31, 1877; d. ?

- SEGOVIA, ANDRES, b. Linares, Spain, Feb. 18, 1894.
SHIELDS, ELLA, b. Baltimore; d. Lancashire, England, Aug. 5, 1952.
SHILKRET, JACK, b. New York, Oct. 13, 1896.
SHILKRET, NAT, b. New York, Dec. 23, 1895.
SILVER, MONROE, b. New York, ab. 1880; d. New York, 1947.
"SINGIN' SAM"—see Frankel, Harry.
SISSE, NOBLE, b. Indianapolis, July 10, 1889.
SMALLE, ED, b. Roxbury, Mass., Nov. 3, 1887.
SMITH, "WHISPERING JACK," d. New York, May 13, 1950 (52).
SODERO, CESARE, b. Naples, Aug. 2, 1886; d. New York, Dec. 16, 1949.
SOUSA, JOHN PHILIP, b. Washington, Nov. 6, 1854; d. Reading, Pa., Mar. 6, 1932.
SOUTHE, PAUL, d. New York, Aug. 25, 1946 (58).
SPALDING, ALBERT, b. Chicago, Aug. 15, 1888; d. Great Barrington, Mass., May 26, 1933.
SPENCER, ELIZABETH, b. St. Louis, ab. 1875; d. Montclair, N. J., Apr., 1930.
SPENCER, HARRY, b. Washington, Feb. 14, 1875; d. Washington, Aug. 29, 1946.
SPENCER, LEONARD GARFIELD, b. Washington, Feb. 12, 1867; d. New York, Dec. 15, 1914.
SPROSS, CHARLES GILBERT, b. Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Jan. 6, 1874.
SQUIRE, J. H., d. London, Sept. 18, 1956 (77).
STAIGERS, DEL, d. North Hollywood, July 12, 1950 (52).
STANLEY, AILEEN, b. Chicago, ab. 1897.
STANLEY, FRANK C., b. Orange, N. J., Dec. 29, 1868; d. Orange, Dec. 12, 1910.
STANLEY, HELEN, b. Cincinnati, Feb. 24, 1889.
STEPT, SAM H., b. Odessa, Russia, Sept. 18, 1897.
STEVENSON, ELISE, b. Liverpool, Feb. 9, 1878.
STEWART, CAL, b. near Charlotte Court House, Va., 1856; d. Chicago, Dec. 7, 1919.
STILES, VERNON, d. Los Angeles, Dec. 10, 1947 (67).
STRAIGHT, CHARLEY, b. Chicago, Jan. 16, 1891; d. Chicago, Sept. 21, 1940.
SUNDELIUS, MARIE, b. Karlsstad, Sweden; d. Boston, June 26, 1958 (77).
SYLVA, MARGUERITE, b. Brussels; d. Glendale, Calif., Feb. 20, 1957 (82).
TALLY, HARRY, b. Lee County, Va., June 30, 1866; d. Ocean Park, Calif., Aug. 16, 1939.
TAMAGNO, FRANCESCO, b. Turin, Italy, 1851; d. Varese, Italy, Aug. 31, 1905.
TEYTE, MAGGIE, b. Wolverhampton, England, Apr. 17, 1889.
TETRAZZINI, LUISA, b. Florence, June 29, 1871; d. Milan, Apr. 28, 1940.
THIBAUD, JACQUES, b. Bordeaux, Sept. 27, 1880; d. Mt. Cemet, France, Sept. 3, 1953.
THOMAS, BOB—see Hare, Ernest.
THOMPSON, GEORGE L., b. New York, 1875; d. ?
THOMPSON, WILLIAM H., d. Chicago, July 24, 1945 (72).
THUNDER, HENRY GORDON, b. Philadelphia, Dec. 15, 1865; d. Philadelphia, Mar. 19, 1958.
TIBBETT, LAWRENCE, b. Bakersfield, Calif., Nov. 16, 1896; d. New York, July 15, 1960.
TIFFANY, MARIE, b. Chicago, ab. 1888; d. ?
TILLEY, HERBERT C., JR., d. Rye, N. Y., Mar. 27, 1956 (64).
TILLEY, VESTA, b. Worcester, England; d. London, Sept. 16, 1952 (88).
TILLOTSON, MERLE—see Alcock, Merle.
TRIX, HELEN, b. Newsmantown, Pa., Aug. 21, 1892 ?; d. New York, Nov. 18, 1951.
TUCKER, SOPHIE, b. Boston, Jan. 13, 1884.
TURNER, JOHN C. ("HAPPY JACK"), d. Denver, Jan. 19, 1949 (50).
"UNCLE JOSH"—see Stewart, Cal.
VAN, BILLY B., b. Philadelphia; d. Newport, N. H., Nov. 16, 1950 (72).
VAN, GUS, b. Brooklyn, ab. 1892.
VAN BRUNT, WALTER, b. Brooklyn, Apr. 23, 1892.
VANCE, CLARICE, b. Louisville, Ky., Mar. 14, 1875; d. Napa, Calif., Aug. 24, 1961.
VAN DER VEER, NEVADA, b. Springfield Center, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1884; d. New York, Sept. 25, 1958.
VAN EPS, FRED, b. Somerville, N. J., Dec. 30, 1878; d. Glendale, Calif., Nov. 22, 1960.
VECSEY, ARMAND, b. Hungary; d. New York, Mar. 31, 1949 (70).
VICTORIA, VESTA, d. London, Apr. 7, 1951 (77).
VIRGO, WILFRED, b. England; d. Toronto, Mar. 5, 1951 (80).
WALLACE, JOSEPH (BAN-JO), d. Jamaica, N. Y., May 18, 1961 (79).
WALLER, THOMAS "FATS," b. New York, May 21, 1904; d. Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 15, 1943 (39).
WALSH, ARTHUR L., b. New Jersey, d. New York, Dec. 13, 1947 (51).
WANGEMANN, A. THEODORE E., b. Berlin, Feb. 13, 1855; d. Bath Beach, L. I., Sept. 2, 1906.
WARING, TOM, d. Stroudsburg, Pa., Dec. 29, 1960 (57).
WATEROUS, HERBERT L., b. Flint, Mich.; d. Woodstock, N. Y., Aug. 28, 1947 (78).
WATKINS, BILLY, d. Queens Village, N. Y., Sept. 3, 1946 (57).
WEBSTER, FRANK—see Campbell, Albert.
WELLS, JOHN BARNES, b. Ashley, Pa., Oct. 17, 1880; d. Roxbury, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1935.
WERRENATH, REINALD, b. Brooklyn, Aug. 7, 1883; d. Plattsburg, N. Y., Sept. 12, 1953.
WESTON, AL H., d. 1946, Revere, Mass. (79).
WESTPHAL, FRANK, b. Chicago, June 15, 1889; d. Bridgeport, Nov. 23, 1948.
WHEELER, ELIZABETH, b. Kokomo, Ind., July 20, 1875.
WHEELER, FREDERICK, b. Boone, N. Y., Oct. 10, 1877; d. Yonkers, N. Y., Aug. 7, 1951.
WHEELER, WILLIAM, b. Shawano, Wis., July 13, 1879.
WHELAN, ALBERT, b. Australia; d. London, Feb. 19, 1961 (85).
WHITE, JOSEPH M., b. New York, Oct. 14, 1891; d. New York, Feb. 28, 1959.
WHITE, LEE ROY (LASSES), b. Wills Point, Tex., 1885; d. Hollywood, Dec. 16, 1949.
WHITEHILL, CLARENCE, b. Marengo, Iowa, Nov. 5, 1871; d. New York, Dec. 18, 1933.
WHITEHOUSE, FRED, b. New York, June 14, 1895; d. Brooklyn, 1955 (70).
WHITLOCK, BILLY, b. England, 1874; d. London, Jan. 26, 1951.
WHITNEY, EDWIN M., b. Parma City, N. Y., Mar. 17, 1877; d. New York, June 5, 1957.
WIEDOEFT, RUDY, b. Detroit, Jan. 3, 1893; d. Flushing, N. Y., Feb. 18, 1940.
WILBUR, JOHN—see Meyer, John.
WILDER, MARSHALL P., b. Sept. 19, 1859; d. ?
WILLEKE, WILLEM, b. 's-Gravenhage, Holland, Sept. 29, 1879; d. Pittsfield, Mass., Nov. 26, 1950.
WILLIAMS, BERT, b. New Providence, Bahama Islands, 1876; d. New York, Mar. 4, 1922.
WILLIAMS, BILLY, b. Melbourne, Australia, 1877; d. England, Mar., 1915.
WILLIAMS, EVAN, b. Mineral Ridge, O., Sept. 7, 1867; d. Akron, O., May 24, 1918.
WILSON, AL H., b. Mar. 3, 1868; d. ?
WILLS, NAT M., b. Fredericksburg, Va., July 11, 1873; d. Woodcliff, N. J., Dec. 9, 1917.
WINSCH, LOUIS J., d. Philadelphia, May 5, 1950 (66).
WRIGHT, HORACE, b. May 14, 1876.
YAW, ELLEN BEACH, b. Boston, N. Y., Sept. 14, 1869; d. West Covina, Calif., Sept. 9, 1947.
YOUNG, JOHN, b. New York, 1870; d. New York, 1954.
YOUNG, VICTOR, b. Bristol, Tenn., Apr. 8, 1889.
ZENATELLO, GIOVANNI, b. Verona, Italy, Feb. 22, 1879; d. New York, Feb. 11, 1949.
ZENTAY, MARY, b. Budapest, July 30, 1897; d. ab. 1922.
ZEROLA, NICOLA, b. Naples, 1876; d. New York, July 21, 1937.
ZIMBALIST, EFREM, b. Rostoff-on-Don, Russia, Apr. 9, 1889.
ZOELLNER, JOSEPH, SR., b. Brooklyn, Feb. 2, 1862; d. Los Angeles, Jan. 24, 1950.

ADDENDA

These names came to light after this directory was in page form. They are included here, so that the directory may be as nearly complete and accurate as possible, as of this date.

- AMATO, PASQUALE, b. Naples, Mar. 21, 1878; d. Jackson Heights, N. Y., Aug. 12, 1942.
BERLINER, EMIL, b. Hanover, Germany, May 20, 1851; d. Washington Aug. 3, 1929.
ROMAINE, MARGARET, b. Ogden, Utah, Sept. 23, 1892.
SCOTTI, ANTONIO, b. Naples, Jan. 25, 1866; d. Naples, Feb. 26, 1936.

Many artists listed in the accompanying directory attended this banquet given by the old Victor Talking Machine Co. in Hotel Shelburne, Atlantic City, in June, 1917. Left to right: Josef Pasternak; Mrs. Fritz Kreisler; Mr. Kreisler; Marguerite Dunlap; Sam Rous (S. H. Dudley); Mrs. John S. Macdonald; Reinald Werrenath; Mrs. Giovanni Martinelli; Mr. Martinelli; Amelita Galli-Curci; Calvin Child; Louise Homer; an unidentified man; Olive Kline; John S. Macdonald (Harry Macdonough); a sister of Louise Homer; Marquis Luigi Curci; Mrs. Sam Rous; Giuseppe de Luca; Mrs. Pasternak; Mrs. De Luca.

WHERE IT ALL STARTED—If it had not been for Thomas A. Edison's invention of the phonograph, there would never have been a directory of recording artists. This scene was taken in the Edison National Memorial at West Orange, N. J., where the inventor's desk is on display. In the photo are Thomas J. Young, Jr., then a Shrine Potentate in Roanoke, Va.; Mrs. Young; Mrs. George E. Stringfellow; and Mr. Stringfellow, who was Assistant Rabbon of the National Shrine. Mr. Stringfellow is an Edison employee.

Birthplace of the "Dean of Ballad Singers," Harry McClaskey, who, as Henry Burr, became the most popular of all pioneer recording tenors. He was born January 15, 1882, in this house on Armstrong St., in St. Stephen, New Brunswick, Canada. The house is now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Donald Williams. The tenor, who died in 1941, also made records under the names of Irving Gillette, Harry McClaskey, Alfred Alexander, and Harry Haley.

—Photo by the Harvey Studios, St. Stephen, N. B., Canada

CORRECTIONS

We list names on which we have made slight changes. (Some of the press run was already off when we discovered these corrections.) We are rerunning the items in question, just in case your listing does not show the changes.

DAWSON, PETER, b. Adelaide, South Australia, Jan. 31, 1882; d. Sydney, Aus., Sept. 27, 1961.

LAZZARI, CAROLINA, b. Milford, Mass., Dec. 26, 1891; d. 1946.

LYONS, DARIUS, b. St. Paul, Minn., ab. 1870; d. ?

McCLASKEY, HARRY—see Burr, Henry.

MURRAY, PETE, b. New York, Mar. 28, 1875; d. Dec. 29, 1941.

PORTER, STEVE, b. Buffalo, N. Y., 1864; d. New York, Jan. 13, 1936.

SASSOLI, ADA, b. Bologna, Sept. 25, 1887; d. Rome, Dec. 3, 1946.

SHEET MUSIC FOR SALE

OLD POPULAR SONGS. I buy and sell. Big list 10c. — Dean Snyder, 739 San Fernando Bldg., Los Angeles 13, Calif. my6637

SHEET MUSIC, 1900 and up. Over 300. Send for free list. All $1 each.—Ric Verdi Antiques, 854 Taunton Ave., East Providence, Rhode Island. d6867

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 20c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver 5, Colo. s12698

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

CYLINDER PHONOS. Concert, Grand, Triumphs, etc. Cylinder records, also 5" records. Reproducers, recorders, and parts. Many horns, large, small, flowered. Early Disc phonographs, Berliner, Zonophone, Victor, etc. German Disc music boxes. All items in perfect condition, from my collection. — Neumann, Miller, 410 W. Lomita, Glendale 4, Calif. d6867

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS, outside horn disc phonographs, records, parts, bought, sold. Record list 75c each.—Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. ap120821

ATTENTION! Antique cylinder & disc phonographs bought, sold, repaired. Repairs done on all makes & models, parts replaced, reproducers bought, sold, repaired. I will buy anything in this line. Large list of what I have for sale for stamp. Many rare and hard to find machines in stock. Almost everything in this line available. All machines and parts are perfect. No Junk. — Antique Phonograph Service, c/o Lloyd Whitlock, 114 State St., Tel. 2-4985, Brewer, Maine. d38611

Rare Phonographs: Edison, Columbia, Victors and many others. Records, horns, horn cranes, reproducers, parts and repairs. Send 25c for list. — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3426

CYLINDER & DISC horn type phonographs, records, catalogs, horns, reproducers, roller organs, Hurdy Gurdys, player pianos bought, sold, exchanged, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond 31, Va. ja6468

PHONOGRAPHS WANTED

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs, old disc phonographs with outside horns. Old record catalogs, books. $7 and up for cylinder reproducers (part that holds the needle). — Thomas Pollard, 4109 Soquel Dr., Soquel, Calif. ja3694

FAVORITE Pioneer Recording ARTISTS

Conducted by
JIM WALSH

Peter Dawson

PART I

By JIM WALSH

FOREWORD: The most remarkable career in the history of sound recording has been ended by death. Peter Dawson died in Sydney, Australia, on September 27, 1961, at the age of 79, several months after this article had been completed and submitted to HOBBIES.

In order to avoid extensive rewriting and revision of proofs, I have decided to give this sorrowful information at the beginning of this book-length series, then to permit the monthly installments to appear with few, if any, changes from the way they were originally written. Thus, if anything in the biography gives the impression that Dawson is still alive, the reader will know that he died after the articles were written.

I should also mention that when the series was originally done, I did not know that Mrs. Dawson, whose maiden name was Annie Mortimer Noble, had died in 1953. The 1958 edition of the British "Who's Who" says Mr. and Mrs. Dawson were married in 1905.

If this date is correct, the marriage occurred after Dawson began making records in 1904, and some of his recollections about his wife having provided him with bus fare to the Edison Bell studios must be incorrect. I refer in the body of the biography to discrepancies in the singer's accounts of how his recording career began.

It is a source of grief to me that I shall not be able to have copies of HOBBIES containing this account of Dawson's remarkable career mailed to the great bass-baritone. But it is a pleasure to dedicate the series to my friend of long standing, Quentin Riggs, an Oklahoma City resident, who has been urging me for years to write about Dawson.

Quentin, who recently visited me after working two years for the U. S. State Department in Saudi Arabia, has now been transferred to Sydney, Australia, the city in which Peter Dawson died. Since Dawson ranked high among his favorite recording artists, Quentin had been looking forward with anticipatory happiness to meeting and talking with his idol. But "it was not so to be."

Even in far-off Australia, however, Quentin will read, and I hope, enjoy these articles.

Roger, Gray, Nipper, Petey, and Percy the Pitiful Persian, my cats, and I are looking forward to his next visit when he gets a leave of absence in 1963.

JIM WALSH, October 4, 1961

I. Process of Incubation

In one of their unrefined but undeniably mirth-arousing recorded blackface comedy skits, Ernie Hare admonishes Al Bernard: "Never calculate upon your juvenile poultry before the proper process of incubation has been fully materialized."

Ernie's esoteric way of warning against counting your chickens before they are hatched reminds me that many novelists have said the physical labor of book writing is preceded by a period of incubation during which the author accumulates a stock of ideas and the shape and substance of the book gradually take form.

My experience of producing these biographical sketches is like that of the novelists'. After toying, often for years with the thought that I should tell the life history of some pioneer recording artist, the time comes when a sardonically observant little man, with a voice of thunder, who seems to be crouching in the back of my head, commands: "Get busy and write about So-and-So!" Moralists, I believe, have given that imperious little man the name of Conscience.

Once the incubation period is "fully materialized," I can hardly wait to impose on my typewriter. So it is now with Peter Dawson. During all the 20 years I have been writing for HOBBIES I have felt I should tell the story of the great Australian bass-baritone.

Always, though, there had been a restraining belief that I didn't yet have sufficient information to do the subject justice. Then, after I had finally assembled enough material for a book, the sheer bulk of reference matter made me put off tackling the job.

But today, the Still, Small Voice is Shouting that the proper process of incubation has been fully materialized, and it is time to put on paper the life story of the man who has had the most remarkable of all recording careers.

I am tingling with that familiar urge to begin, and know I shall not return to normal until my "juvenile poultry" have left the incubator and the Peter Dawson chickens have come home to roost. (As you will see later, Peter himself used to be a chicken fancier).

So now to the story of the cherished singer whose name is the same as that of a popular brand of Scotch whisky. As a lifelong total abstainer, I have not tasted Peter Dawson whisky or any other alcoholic beverage, and never knowingly shall, but I never tire of Dawson's records, which I'm sure stimulate me more wholesomely than any intoxicant could.

The Australian-born singer has long been one of my greatest admirations, as is proved by the fact that the full name of my beloved cat, Petey, is Peter Dawson Walsh. And I think a good argument could be presented that he has been the most important recording artist in the phonograph's 84-year history—not excluding Caruso or even Elvis Presley!

II. Unique Career

Since Peter Dawson's records have had their chief sale in the British Empire, he obviously is not so well known in the United States as in his native Australia, or in England, which was his home during the most active part of his recording career.

The question may then arise, "Why write about him for predominantly American readers?" Even though some of his records, notably his Edison cylinders, had good sales on this side of the Atlantic.

That question is partly answered by the statement already made that Peter Dawson has had the most remarkable of recording careers. And the statement may be amplified by several quotations from The Gramophone, the English publication which, since 1923, has been at the head of all periodicals devoted to recorded music.

Take this, for instance, from the issue of December, 1947. I should explain that Dawson had returned to Australia in 1939 and during the following eight years, in which World War II had been fought and won, had not been heard on the concert stage in England:

"A most important issue marking the return of Peter Dawson, whom we have not heard since 1939. His gramophone career dates back to 1904 . . . and thereafter month by month he regaled us with that wonderful voice. Moreover, this is more than just a sentimental occasion. 'Fret-Foot' is in the style of the Barrack Room Ballads, and we know that the name McCall is only the disguise which veiled Mr. Dawson for so long as the composer of 'Boots.' This is a fine song about ships, while the reverse ('Walk Down the Road') can be taken as a sequel to Pat Thayer's 'I Travel the Road,' for so long a best-selling Dawson. . ."

In the March, 1949, Gramophone, "Oliver King" reviewed a Peter Dawson record with organ accompaniment by Herbert Dawson, who presumably is no relation:

A pretty Roanoke, Va., girl, Catherine Butler, laughingly admires the huge envelope in which the Peter Dawson Series was mailed to HOBBIES.

"Peter Dawson, grandest of the great concert singers of any period of recording, has done 'Wandering the King's Highway' in rousing style on H. M. V. B9739, with 'The Dreamer,' quite the opposite type, with fine organ accompaniment by Herbert Dawson. I've been listening to Peter Dawson's records from the earliest to the latest, and he remains top of the tree for sheer ease, fluency and perfection of diction. That is real achievement—and it has been so for 45 years."

Peter Dawson was a mere 67 when Oliver King (Brian Rust) penned those eulogistic lines!

A little more than a year later, in May, 1950, King wrote:

"On H. M. V. B9913, we find Peter Dawson, 69 this year and sounding as young as the best of them, in 'That Lucky Old Sun' and 'The Cry of the Wild Goose.' These would be good from anyone half Peter Dawson's age; from a man who was recording long before even some of today's 'veterans' were born, they are miraculous."

Moving up to comparatively recent times—March, 1956, we find W. A. Chislett saying:

"My last record must surely rank as one of the most remarkable of all time. When I first saw it I assumed it to be a dubbing; but nothing of the sort, it is a new recording—by Peter Dawson. I do not think that any other artist, singer or otherwise, has succeeded in spanning the whole gamut of record-making. My first Peter Dawson record was a cylinder. . . . He made 78 r.p.m. discs by the hundred both by the acoustic and electrical processes, and now we hear him on a microgroove 45EP, one side of which, 'Mandalay Scene,' was recorded binaurally and heard by visitors to the Radio Show last year. Unfortunately, this present disc offers us only monaural sound. The other song is 'Clancy of the Overflow.' . . . Mr. Dawson is still a model to other singers in the matter of diction and many men young enough to be his grandsons might well try to emulate him in steadiness."

Peter Dawson was 74 when those complimentary lines saw print. In December, Chislett chose Dawson's record as one of the six most outstanding of the year, saying:

"I cannot omit Peter Dawson's historic H. M. V. 7EG8159. He is the only singer to have covered the whole gamut of recording, from cylinder to microgroove."

Present-day admirers of fine voices and impeccable singing who are unacquainted with what Dawson has done, should get H.M.V. long-playing record No. DLP1180, issued in 1958, which contains dubbings of his most popular 78 rpm discs, including the biggest seller of all, 'The Floral Dance.' Here is what Mr. Chislett said about it in the May, 1958, Gramophone:

"The dates of the original recordings of 10 songs by Peter Dawson, 'My Life of Song,' are not given, but they cover a pretty long period. They are uniformly well dubbed. Many to whom Peter Dawson is only a name and who are too young to have heard him in the flesh will, I hope, welcome this disc. No one has ever made more records than he did and no other singer has spanned the complete history of recording. His first records were two-minute cylinders and his most recent a stereo tape (as yet unissued.) His versatility is almost unique and the way his voice has lasted is a tribute to the soundness of his production. The titles are 'A Bachelor Gay,' 'The Cobbler's Song' from 'Chu Chin Chow,' 'In a Monastery Garden,' 'Phil the Fluter's Ball,' 'On the Road to Mandalay,' 'Waiaata Poi,' 'The Floral Dance,' 'The Mountains o' Mourne,' 'Waltzing Matilda,' and 'The Trumpeter.'"

Dawson, incidentally says he recorded "The Cobbler's Song," to meet an emergency need, at 10 minutes notice. He was handed a copy of the sheet music, glanced at it, and 10 minutes later had made the record, which has always been considered one of his best. In sales it has ranked second only to "The Floral Dance."

Coming now to only the day before yesterday, we find this reference in the January, 1961, Gramophone:

"At the head of this month's vocal solos are two dubbings from 78's which will have nostalgic memories for many. Peter Dawson is unique. He is the only man, so far as I know, who has covered the whole gamut of recording from the two-minute cylinder to tape. In 'Peter Dawson Requests' on H. M. V. 7EG8623, he takes us back to the ballad, and when well sung on the right occasion how much better many of them are than is generally admitted today! The four requests are 'I Travel the Road' (recorded January, 1932), 'Old Father Thames' (March, 1933), 'The Smugglers' and 'Song and Boots' (July, 1929)."

In the February, 1961, issue, Edward Greenfield, commenting on Owen Brannigan's singing of two Handel arias, says:

"The semiquavers are appallingly difficult for a bass to articulate clearly, but, as it happened, I had Peter Dawson's old disc by me, and there you have an altogether different standard of precision, not to mention a superb top F at the end. This, and other Dawson/Handel performances, would make a fine LP reissue."

The February Gramophone is the latest I have received as this page is typed, but most likely March and succeeding issues will have other references to the stalwart bass-baritone, and there probably will be more reissues of his old records.

So now, I imagine, you understand why I consider it time well spent to write about Peter Dawson, even though, as far as I know, he never sang in the States or even visited our shores. He not only achieved the longest recording career of any artist, interrupted only by military service during World War I and a brief return to Australia at the War's end, but he was a consummate artist. (During his absence from England in the years 1939 to 1947 he did some recording for H.M.V.'s Australian branch).

It is a privilege to outline the story of such a distinguished artist and such an amazing career.

III. Australian Boyhood—Arrival in London

Not many of the gifted men and women whom I have chronicled have written an autobiography, but Peter Dawson told his life story in a book, "Fifty Years of Song," published in England in 1951. I have found it a valuable source of information, but only a relatively small part of the total space is devoted to an account of his recording career.

So far as record making goes, my account will be more comprehensive than Dawson's own narration. I shall even at times correct erroneous statements he made, relying on his memory.

The Roanoke, Va., Times had this photo made for use with a feature story about Quentin Riggs (right), to whom the Peter Dawson Biography is dedicated. Jim Walsh, author of the series, and Riggs, are holding a copy of HOBBIES. The newspaper story told of how their friendship began through Riggs' fondness for Walsh's writings. Riggs, whose home is in Oklahoma City, is now working for the U. S. State Department in Sydney, Australia, where the late Peter Dawson lived before his death last September.

—Photo by Hank Daniel

But I wish to acknowledge with grateful thanks the help that "Fifty Years of Song," published by Hutchinson and Co., of London, at a price of 15 shillings ($2.10) and presumably still in print, has been to me. I thank Quentin Riggs for my copy, which he sent to me when he was on military service abroad.

Peter Dawson, of Scotch descent, was born in Adelaide, South Australia, January 31, 1882. By a coincidence which I hadn't previously observed, I am typing the pages of this first installment on the night of January 31, 1961—the day on which the almost fabulous singer became 79 years of age.

Peter's father had been a sailor and was a strict disciplinarian of his five sons and four daughters. Peter was the youngest of the boys. On giving up the sea, the elder Dawson established an iron-working business in Adelaide. The firm is still in business, but now operates a canning factory in Sydney.

As a small boy, Peter played "The Blue Bells of Scotland" by ear on a violin at an East Adelaide public school entertainment. He gave what he says was an excruciating performance.

His mother he describes as a sweet singer of Scotch songs, and his talented sisters played, among them the violin, piano, and organ. The boy's first public appearance as a singer was made at the age of eight at a social given in the College Park Congregational Church at Adelaide. His sister Agnes played the accompaniment, but alas! little Peter, whose voice was later to captivate audiences totaling millions, forgot the words.

He did better in his teens. At 17 he joined the choir of St. Andrew's church and took lessons from the late C. J. Stephens. He was 19 when he won first prize for a bass solo at a competition held in Ballarat.

During this time he was working for his father and learning the plumbing business from 7:30 in the morning to 5 in the afternoon. The time from 6:30 to 7 a.m., with an hour in the evening, was reserved for singing practice.

After winning his Ballarat honors, Peter began to obtain occasional local concert engagements. Stephens then persuaded his father that the youth should go to England for training by Sir Charles Santley, a distinguished baritone whose early H. M. V. records (some with "ghost voices" at the end) are hard to find and prized by collectors.

Dawson's brother Jim agreed to go with him on what in those days seemed an endless trip, by boat, from Australia to England. No flying across that yawning Pacific void in a few hours at the turn of the century.

They had meant to go in 1901, but Peter caught typhoid fever and the trip wasn't made until a year later. The brothers left on the S. S. Afric, and Peter took a cabin trunk, which he made in 1900, and kept all his life. They arrived in England on an important day in British history.

